

AMERICAN ARCHIVES:

Fourth Series.

CONTAINING

A DOCUMENTARY HISTORY

OF

THE ENGLISH COLONIES IN NORTH AMERICA,

FROM

THE KING'S MESSAGE TO PARLIAMENT, OF MARCH 7, 1774,

TO

THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

BY

THE UNITED STATES.

VOLUME I.

PUBLISHED BY M. ST. CLAIR CLARKE AND PETER FORCE,

UNDER AUTHORITY OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS, PASSED ON THE SECOND OF MARCH, 1833.

WASHINGTON, DECEMBER, 1837.

American Archives:

CONSISTING OF

A COLLECTION OF AUTHENTICK RECORDS, STATE PAPERS, DEBATES, AND LETTERS AND OTHER NOTICES OF PUBLICK AFFAIRS,

THE WHOLE FORMING

A DOCUMENTARY HISTORY

OF

THE ORIGIN AND PROGRESS OF THE NORTH AMERICAN COLONIES;

OF THE

CAUSES AND ACCOMPLISHMENT OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION;

AND OF

THE CONSTITUTION OF GOVERNMENT FOR THE UNITED STATES,

TO

THE FINAL RATIFICATION THEREOF.

IN SIX SERIES.

FIRST SERIES.

From the Discovery and Settlement of the North American Colonies, to the Revolution in England, in 1688.

SECOND SERIES.

From the Revolution in England, in 1688, to the Cession of Canada to Great Britain, by the Treaty at Paris, in 1763.

THIRD SERIES.

From the Cession of Canada, in 1763, to the King's Message to Parliament, of March 7th, 1774, on the Proceedings in North America

FOURTH SERIES

From the King's Message, of March 7th, 1774, to the Declaration of Independence, by the United States, in 1776.

FIFTH SERIES.

From the Declaration of Independence, in 1776, to the Definitive Treaty of Peace with Great Britain, in 1783.

SIXTH SERIES

From the Treaty of Peace, in 1783, to the final ratification of the Constitution of Government for the United States, proposed by the Convention, held at Philadelphia, in 1787.

PROCEEDINGS, PAPERS, AND DEBATES OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS AND HOUSE OF COMMONS, ON MEASURES RELATING TO THE AMERICAN COLONIES, DURING THE SEVENTH SESSION OF THE THIRTEENTH PARLIAMENT OF GREAT BRITAIN

I. THE KING'S MESSAGE, OF SEVENTH MARCH, 1774.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

FRIDAY, March 4th, 1774.

THE Earl of Dartmouth acquainted the House "That "his Majesty had given directions, that the several Papers "received from America, relating to the Disturbances there,
"with regard to the importation of Tea, should be laid "before the House; and that the same will be delivered
"on Monday next."

MONDAY, March 7th, 1774.

The Earl of Dartmouth acquainted the House, "That "he had a Message from his Majesty, under his Royal sign "manual, which his Majesty had commanded him to deli"ver to this House."

And the same was read by the Lord Chancellor, and is as follows; (videlicet,)

GEORGE R.

His Majesty upon information of the unwarrantable practices which have been lately concerted and carried on in North America, and, particularly, of the violent and outrageous proceedings at the Town and Port of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, with a view to obstructing the Commerce of this Kingdom, and upon grounds and pretences immediately subversive of the Constitution thereof, hath thought fit to lay the whole matter before his two Houses of Parliament, fully confiding, as well in their zeal for the maintenance of his Majesty's authority, as in their attachment to the common interest and welfare of all his Dominions, that they will not only enable his Majesty effectually to take such measures as may be most likely to put an immediate stop to the present disorders, but will also take into their most serious consideration, what farther regulations and permanent provisions may be necessary to be established for better securing the execution of the Laws, and the just dependence of the Colonies upon the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain. G. R.

The said Message was then read again by the Clerk.

The Earl of Dartmouth, (by his Majesty's command,) laid before the House copies of all Letters, &c., received from America, relating to the Disturbances there with regard to the importation of Tea, together with a list thereof;
which was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Massachusetts Bay.

No. 1. Extract of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson
to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 4th November, 1773, received 17th December, enclosing,

No. 2. Copy of a Letter to Thomas and Elisha Hutchinson, delivered at their house in Boston, 2d November, 1773.

No. 3. Copy of a printed Paper, posted up in the Town of Boston, on the 3d November, 1773.

No. 4. Copy of a Narrative.

No. 5. Copy of a Narrative.

No. 6. Copy of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Milton, near Boston, 6th November, 1773; received 25th December, enclosing,

No. 7. Copy of a Letter from Mr. Richard Clarke and Company, and Benjamin Faneuil and Compa- ny, to John Hancock, Esquire, dated 4th Novem- ber, 1773.

No. 8. Copy of a Vote of the Town Meeting at Boston, the 5th November, 1773.

No. 9. Copy of a Letter from Thomas Hutchinson, Junior, to John Hancock, Esquire; (no date.)

No. 10. Extract of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson
to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 15th November, 1773; received 3d January, 1774. -

No. 11. Copy of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 2d of December, 1773; received 27th January, 1774, enclosing,

No. 12. Copy of a Petition of Richard Clarke and Sons, Benjamin Faneuil, and Thomas and Elisha Hutchinson; and of the Proceedings of the Council thereupon.

No. 13. Extract from the Massachusetts Gazette, of the 26th November, 1773.

No. 14. Copy of a Paper printed at Boston, dated 1st December, 1773.

No. 15. Copy of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson
to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 15th December, 1773; received 2d February, 1774.

No. 16. Copy of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson
to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 17th December, 1773; received 27th January, 1774.

No. 17. Copy of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson
to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 20th December, 1773; received 14th February, 1774.

No. 18. Extract of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson
to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 24th December, 1773, received 14th February, 1774, enclosing,

No. 19. Extract of the Minutes of the Council of the Massachusetts Bay, on the 21st December, 1773.

No. 20. Extract of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 4th January, 1774; received 13th February.

New-York.

No. 21. Extract of a Letter from Major General Haldi- mand to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 3d of November, 1773; received 10th December.

No. 22. Extract of a Letter from Major General Haldi-
mand to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 28th
December, 1773; received 4th February, 1774.

No. 23. Extract of a Letter from Major General Haldi-
mand to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 5th
January, 1774; received 5th February.

No. 24. Copy of a Paper referred to in Major General
Haldimand's Letter of the 5th January, 1774.

No. 25. Extract of a Letter from Major General Haldi- mand to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 2d February, 1774; received 2d March.

No. 26. Copy of a Letter from Governour Tryon to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 3d November, 1773;
received 10th December, enclosing.

No. 27. Copy of a printed Paper, intituled, "The Alarm, No. 1," dated New-York, 6th October, 1773.

No. 28. Copy of a printed Paper, intituled, "The Alarm, No. 2," dated New-York, 9th of October, 1773.

No. 29. Extract from a printed Paper, intituled, "The Alarm," dated New-York, 19th October, 1773.

No. 30. Copy of a Letter from Governour Tryon to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 1st December, 1773; received 10th January, 1774, enclosing,

No. 31. Memorial of the Agents of the East India Company, praying that the Tea shipped by the Company, may, on its arrival, be taken under the protection of Government.

No. 32. Minutes of Council relative to the Tea shipped by the East India Company.

No. 33. Copy of a Letter from Governour Tryon to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 3d January, 1774; rec'd 5th Feb 1774

No. 34. Copy of a Letter from Governour Tryon to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-York, 5th January, 1774; received 5th February, enclosing,

No. 35 Extract from the Minutes of the Council of New-York.

South Carolina.

No. 36 Extract of a Letter from Lieutenant Governour Bull to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 24th December, 1773; received. 28th January, 1774.

New-Hampshire.

No. 37. Extract of a Letter from Governour Wentworth, to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated New-Hampshire, 17th December, 1773; received 2d March, 1774, enclosing,

No. 38. Notification of the Selectmen of the Town

No. 39. Resolves of Portsmouth, in New-Hampshire, respecting the Teas.

Admiralty.

No. 40. Copy of a Letter from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated the 20th January, 1774; received the 21st, enclosing,

No. 41. Copy of a Letter from Rear Admiral Montagu to Philip Stephens, Esqr., Secretary of the Admiralty, dated Boston, 8th December, 1773.

No. 42. Copy of a Letter from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 27th January, 1774; received the same day, enclosing,

No. 43. A copy of a Letter from Rear Admiral Montagu to Philip Stephens, Esqr., Secretary of the Admiralty, dated Boston, 17th December, 1773.

War Office.

No. 44. Copy of a Letter from Lord Viscount Barrington to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated War Office, 28th January, 1774; received 29th, enclosing,

No. 45. Copy of a Letter from the Honourable Alexander Leslie, Lieutenant Colonel of the Sixty-Fourth Regiment of Foot, to Lord Viscount Barrington, dated Castle William, December 6, 1773.

No. 46. Extract of a Letter from Ditto to Ditto, dated 17th December, 1773.

East India Company.

No. 47. Copy of a Note from the Chairman of the East India Company to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 20th December, 1773; received 21st, enclosing,

No. 48. Account of Tea exported by the East India Company to his Majesty's Colonies in North America, with the quantities, and to whom consigned.

No. 49. Copy of a Note from the Chairman of the East India Company to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 23d December, 1773; received 25th, enclosing,

No. 50. Extract of a Letter dated Boston, 18th October,

No. 51. Extract of a Letter from New-York, dated

No. 52. Extract of a Letter from New-York, dated 5th November, 1773.

No. 53. Copy of a Letter relative to advices received from Philadelphia and New-York, dated 21st De-

No. 54. Copy of a Letter relative to advices received from Philadelphia, dated 21st December, 1773.

No. 55. Copy of a Letter relative to the exportation of Tea to Boston, dated 21st December, 1773.

No. 56. Copy of a Letter relative to the exportation of Tea to South Carolina.

No. 57. Copy of a Letter relative to the exportation of Tea to New-York.

No. 58. Copy of a Note from the Chairman of the East India Company to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 24th December, 1773; received 25th, enclosing,

No. 59. Extract of a Letter from Philadelphia, dated 5th October, 1773.

No. 60. Extract of two Letters from Philadelphia, dated October 5th and 30th, 1773.

No. 61. Copy of a Note from the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the East India Company to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 10th January, 1774; received 15th, enclosing,

No. 62. Copy of a Letter from the East India Company's Agents at New-York to the Court of Directors.

No. 63. Copy of the Memorial of Henry White and others, Merchants, to the Governour of New-York.

No. 64. Copy of a Letter from an Agent of the East India Company to his Correspondents in London, dated Boston; 15th November, 1773.

No. 65. Copy of a Letter from an Agent of the East India Company to his Correspondent in London, dated Boston, November, 1773.

No. 66. Copy of a Letter from an Agent of the East India Company to the Chairman, dated Boston, 13th November, 1773.

No. 67. Copy of a Note from the Chairman of the East India Company to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 21st January, 1774; received 25th, enclosing,

No. 68. Copy of a Letter signed "Anglo Americanus," to the East India Company, dated Boston, 17th December, 1773.

No. 69. Copy of a Note from the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the East India Company to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 26th January, 1774; received the same day No. 70. Copy of a Note from the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the East India Company to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 26th January, 1774; received 27th, enclosing,

No. 71. Copy of a Letter to the Delaware Pilots and to Captain Ayres, dated Philadelphia, 27th November, 1773.

No. 72. Declaration of Messrs. James and Drinker, Agents for the East India Company, at Philadelphia.

No. 73. Postscript to the Pennsylvania Gazette, of 24th December, 1773.

No. 74. Copy of a Letter from Messrs. James and Drinker to the Directors of the East India Company, dated Philadelphia, 28th December, 1773.

No. 75. Copy of a Letter from Messrs. "Thomas and Isaac Wharton, Jonathan Brown, and Gilbert Barkley, to the East India Company, dated Philadelphia, 28th December, 1773.

No. 76. Copy of a Note from the Chairman of the East India Company to the Earl of Dartmouth; received 3d February, 1774.

No. 77. Copy of a Letter from Thomas and Elisha Hutchinson, Richard Clarke and Sons, and Benjamin Faneuil, to the Directors of the East India Company, dated 2d December, 1773.

No. 78. Copy of a Letter from Ditto to Ditto, dated 17th December, 1773.

No. 79. Copies of two Letters from Messrs. Smith, Leger, and Greenwood, to the Secretary of the East India Company, dated 4th and 18th December, 1773.

No. 80. Copy of a Note from the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the East India Company to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 9th February, 1774; received 10th, enclosing,

No. 81. Copy of a Letter from Henry White, Abram Lott, and Company, and Pigou and Booth, to the Directors of the East India Company, dated New-York, 27th December, 1773.

No. 82. Copy of a Letter from Henry White, and others, to Captain Benjamin Lockyer, of the Ship Nancy, dated New-York, 27th December, 1773.

No. 83. Copy of a Note from the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the East India Company to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 15th February, 1774; received 16th, enclosing,

No. 84. Questions proposed by Francis Rotch, an owner, and James Hall, master, of the Ship Dartmouth, with the Answers of the Consignees.

No. 85. Questions proposed by James Bruce, master of the Ship Eleanor, with the Answers of the Consignees.

No. 86. Copy of a Letter from Mr. Rotch, owner of the Ship Dartmouth, to Richard Clarke and Sons, &c., dated Boston, 6th January, 1774.

No. 87. Copy of a Letter from Richard Clarke and Sons, and Benjamin Faneuil, Jun., to the Directors of the East India Company, dated Castle William, January 7th, 1774.

No. 88. Copy of a Letter from Richard Clarke and Sons, and Benjamin Faneuil, Jun., to the East India Company, dated January 7th, 1774.

No. 89. Copy of a Letter from Mr. Mitchell, Secretary to the East India Company, to John Pownall, Esqr., dated 16th February, 1774; received 17th, enclosing,

No. 90. Copy of a Memorial of the East India Company to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated 16th February, 1774.

Treasury.

No. 91. Copy of a Letter from Grey Cooper, Esqr., Secretary of the Treasury, to John Pownall, Esqr., dated 7th March, 1774, enclosing,

No. 92. Copy of a Letter from Mr. Mather, acting as Secretary to the Commissioners of the Customs in America, dated 7th October, 1773, to John Robinson, Esqr., Secretary to the Lords of the Treasury; received 14th February, 1774.

No. 93. A copy of a Letter from the Commissioners of the Customs in America, to the Lords of the Treasury, dated Boston, 4th January, 1774; received 14th February, 1774, enclosing,

No. 94. Copy of a Letter from the Collectors and Comptroller of the Customs at Bosion, to the Commissioners of the Customs there, dated 17th December, 1773.

No. 95. Copy of a Letter from Ditto to Ditto, dated 23d December, 1773.

No. 96. Copy of a Letter from Ditto to Ditto, dated 31st December, 1773.

No. 97. Copy of a Protest of James Bruce, James Bruce, Jun., and John Finney.

No. 98. Do. of Hezekiah Coffin and others.

No. 99. Do. of Francis Rotch and others.

No. 100. Depositions of Samuel Hunt and others.

No. 101. Do. Of Thomas Rick and others.

No. 102. Do. of William Elliot and others.

No. 103. Do. of Alexander Hodgson.

No. 104. Do. of James Bruce and others.

No. 105. Report of Arthur Savage.

No. 106. Do. of Robert Parker.

No. 107. Memorial of Francis Rotch.

No. 108. Do. of James Bruce.

No. 109. Do. of Hezekiah Coffin.

Ordered, That the said Papers do lie on the table.

Ordered, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, "To return his Majesty the thanks of this House for his Majesty's gracious Message, and for the communication his Majesty hath been graciously pleased to make to this House, of several Papers relative to the present state of Some of his Majesty's Colonies in North America."

"To assure His Majesty that this House, truly sensible that the peace and good government of the Colonies, and the preventing any obstructions there to the Commerce of this Kingdom, are objects of their most serious attention, will enter upon the consideration of these Papers with art earnest desire to make such provisions as, upon mature deliberation, shall appear necessary and

"expedient for securing the just dependence of the said Colonies upon the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain, and for enforcing a due obedience to the Laws of this Kingdom throughout all his Majesty's Dominions."

Ordered, That the said Address be presented to his Majesty by the Lords with White Staves.

Ordered, That the Papers delivered this day by the Earl of Dartmouth, (by his Majesty's command,) together with his Majesty's most gracious Message, be taken into consideration on Thursday, sevensnight; and that the Lords be summoned.

FRIDAY, March 11, 1774.

The Earl of Dartmouth, (by his Majesty's command,) laid before the House more Papers from America, relating to the Disturbances there with regard to the importation of Tea, together with a list thereof,

Which was read by the Clerk, as follows:

No. 1. Extract of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 28th January, 1774; received 8th March, enclosing,

No. 2. Extract from the Boston Gazette, of 27th January, 1774.

Ordered, That the said Papers do lie on the table, and that they be taken into consideration on Thursday next.

WEDNESDAY, March 16, 1774.

The House being moved, "That the consideration of "the several Papers laid before this House (by his Majesty's command,) relating to Disturbances in America, and also "his Majesty's most gracious Answer in relation thereto, "be adjourned till to-morrow sevensnight; and that the "Lords be summoned."

The same was objected to. After short debate, the question was put thereupon. It was resolved in the Affirmative.

WEDNESDAY, March 12, 1774.

Ordered, That the consideration of the several Papers laid before this House (by his Majesty's command,) relating to the Disturbances in America; and also his Majesty's most gracious Message in relation thereto, which stands appointed for to-morrow, be adjourned till Monday next; and that the Lords be summoned.

WEDNESDAY, March 30, 1774.

Ordered, That all the Lords who have been present this day, be appointed a Committee to inquire into the several Proceedings in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, in opposition to the sovereignty of his Majesty, in his Parliament of Great Britain, over that Province; and also what has passed in this House relative thereto, from the 1st of January, 1764.

Ordered, That the several Papers laid before this House relating to Disturbances in the Colony of the Massachusetts Bay, be referred to the said Committee; and the said Committee is hereby empowered to send for Persons, Papers, and Records.

Their Lordships, or any five of them, to meet to-morrow, in the Prince's lodgings, near the House of Peers; and to adjourn as they please.

The Lords present, who formed the Committee, were:

The Duke of Gloucester; Lord Apsley, Lord High Chancellor; Earl of Gower, Lord President; Earl of Hertford, Lord Chamberlain.

Dukes: Beaufort, Ancaster, Chandos, Montagu.

Earls: Suffolk, Denbigh, Westmoreland, Stanford, Sandwich, Doncaster, Rochford, Abercorn, Loudon, March, Marchmont, Stair, Roseberry, Dartmouth, Macclesfield, Waldegrave, Asburnham, Bucks, Hardwicke, Fauconberg, Ilchester, Northington, Spencer, Hillsborough.

Viscounts: Montague, Townshend, Falmouth.

Hon: Frederick Cornwallis, Archbishop of Canterbury; Richard Terrick, Bishop of London; Edmund Keene, Bishop of Ely; Sir William Asburnham, Bart., Bishop of Chichester; John Hume, Bishop of Salisbury; John Green, Bishop of Lincoln; Charles Moss, Bishop of St. David's; Edmund Law, Bishop of Carlisle; John Hinchcliffe, Bishop of Peterborough; William Markham, Bishop of Chester.

Lords: Abergavenny, Willoughby, Br., Cathcart, Cadogan, King, Godolphin, Montfort, Edgcombe, Sandys, Bruce, Walpole, Mansfield, Lyttelton, Wycombe, Scarsdale, Boston, Pelham, Camden, Sundridge.

THURSDAY, April 14, 1774.

The Earl of Buckinghamshire reported from the Committee pointed to inquire into the several Proceedings in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, in opposition to the sovereignty of his Majesty in his Parliament of Great Britain, over that Province, and also what has passed in this House relative thereto, from the 1st of January, 1764, "That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the House" be moved, That an humble Address be presented to his "Majesty, that he would be graciously pleased to give "directions that there be laid before this House, copies or "extracts of all Letters and Papers which have been received by his Majesty's Secretaries of State, or the Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, from the Governour, "Lieutenant Governour, or other Officers in his Majesty's "service in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England, containing advices of any proceedings in the "said Province in opposition to his Majesty's sovereignty "in his Parliament of Great Britain, over the same, from "the 7th of July, 1766, which have not been already laid "before the House."

Which Report, being read by the Clerk, was agreed to by the House.

And the House being moved accordingly-- Ordered, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, "That he would be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House, copies or "extracts of all Letters and Papers which have been received by his Majesty's Secretaries of State, or the Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, from the Governour, "Lieutenant Governour, or other Officers in his Majesty's "service in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England, containing advices of any proceedings in the "said Province in opposition to his Majesty's sovereignty "in his Parliament of Great Britain, over the same, from "the 7th of July, 1766, which have not been already laid "before the House."

FRIDAY, April 15, 1774.

The Lord Chamberlain reported, "That the Lords with "White Staves had (according to order) waited on his Majesty with their Lordships' Address of yesterday; and "that his Majesty was pleased to say 'he would give "directions accordingly."

The Earl of Dartmouth, (by his Majesty's command,) laid before the House, the several Papers in their Lordships' Address of yesterday, relating to the Disturbances in America, together with a list thereof; which was read by the Clerk, as follows:

No. 1. Extract of a Letter from Governour Bernard to the Lords of Trade, dated Boston, 7th July, 1766.

No. 2. Extract of a Letter from Governour Bernard to the Earl of Shelburne, dated Boston, 7th February, 1767, with enclosures.

No. 3. Extract of a Letter from Governour Bernard to the Earl of Shelburne, dated Boston, 21st February, 1767.

No. 4. Extract of a Letter from Governour Bernard to the Earl of Shelburne, dated Boston, 21st March, 1768.

No. 5. Extract of a Letter from Governour Bernard to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated Boston, 30th of May, 1768.

No. 6. Answer of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay, to the Governour's Message, the 30th June, 1768.

No. 7. Printed account of the Associations at Boston, and the Proceedings in consequence thereof.

No. 8. Extract of a Letter from Sir Francis Bernard, Baronet, to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated Boston, the 1st of June, 1769.

No. 9. Extract of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated Boston, 11th July, 1769, with an enclosure.

No. 10. Copy of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated Boston, 27th March, 1770, with an enclosure.

No. 11. Extracts of Letters from Governour Hutchinson to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated Boston, 27th April, and 21st May, 1770.

No. 12. Extract of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson, to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated Boston, 6th July, 1771; with a copy of his Message to the House of Representatives, and of the Answer of the said House.

No. 13. Copy of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated Boston, 28th November, 1771, with enclosures.

No. 14. Extract of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated Boston, 29th May, 1772, with an enclosure.

No. 15. Extract of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 23d October, 1772.

No. 16. Copy of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 30th October, 1772, with enclosures.

No. 17. Copy of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 3d November, 1772.

No. 18. Printed copy of the Votes and Proceedings of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Town of Boston.

No. 19. Extract of a Letter from Governour Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 22d February, 1773.

No. 20. Printed copy of the Speeches of Governour Hutchinson to the General Assembly of the Massachusetts Bay, with the Answers of the Council and House of Representatives.

No. 21. Copy of Petition and Remonstrance from the House of Representatives of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, 14th July, 1772.

No. 22. Copy of Petition to the King from the House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay, dated 6th March, 1773.

No. 23. Copy of a Letter from Govern our Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 14th February, 1774; received 5th April, enclosing,

No. 24. Copy of Governour Hutchinson's Speech to the Council and House of Representatives, and their Answer.

No. 25. Copy of Requisition from the House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay, to the Judges of the Superiour Court.

No. 26. Copy of a Remonstrance of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay, against the Chief Justice.

No. 27. Copy of Vote of the Council and House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay, for adjourning the Superiour Court; not consented to by the Governour.

No. 28. Copy of Governour Hutchinson's Answer to the Remonstrance of the House of Representatives against the Chief Justice.

Ordered, That the said Papers be deferred to the Committee appointed to inquire into the several proceedings in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, in opposition to the sovereignty of his Majesty in his Parliament of Great Britain over that Province; and also what has passed in this House relative thereto, from the 1st of January, 1764.

WEDNESDAY, April 20, 1774.

The Earl of Buckinghamshire reported from the Lords' Committee, appointed to inquire into the several Proceedings in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, in opposition to the sovereignty of his Majesty in his Parliament of Great Britain over that Province; and also what has passed in this House relative thereto, from the 1st day of January, 1764, as follows:

That in obedience to your Lordships' commands, the Committee have met, and taken into consideration the matters to them referred; and having attentively read and considered the several Papers which have been laid before the House, relative to the Proceedings in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, in opposition to the sovereignty of his Majesty in his Parliament of Great Britain over that Province; and having also carefully inspected the Journals of the House, from the 1st day of January, 1764, to the present time, they find that, on the 2d day of April, 1764, a Bill was brought up from the Commons to your Lordships, intituled, "An Act for granting certain Duties in the British Colonies and Plantations

Report from Committee appointed to consider or disturbances in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay.

Journals, April 2, 1764.

"in America; for continuing and amending, and making perpetual, an Act, passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late Majesty, King George the Second, intituled 'An Act for the better securing and encouraging the Trade of his Majesty's Sugar Colonies in America;' for applying the produce of such Duties, and of the Duties to arise by virtue of the said Act, towards defraying the expenses of defending, protecting, and securing, the said Colonies and Plantations; for explaining an Act, made in the twenty-fifth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, intituled 'An Act for the Encouragement of the Greenland and Eastland Trades, and for the better securing the Plantation Trade;' and for altering and disallowing several Drawbacks on Exports from this Kingdom, and more effectually preventing the clandestine conveyance of Goods to and from said Colonies and Plantations, and improving and securing the Trade between the same and Great Britain."

That this Bill passed the House on the 4th of April, and received the Royal assent on the following day.

The Committee having perused the Report of the Board of Trade, of the 11th day of December, 1764, and the Papers laid before his Majesty therewith, find in the said Papers the strongest assertions by the Assembly of the Massachusetts Bay, of their sole right to pass laws, particularly of taxation; and of their resolution to invite the other Colonies to combine with them in measures to prevent the King, in his Parliament, from passing any such laws; for instance, in a letter to Mr. Mauduit, then Agent of the Province, which was drawn up by a Committee of the House of Representatives, and afterwards approved by the House, they used the following expression: "The silence of the Province should have been imputed to any cause, even to despair, rather than be construed into a tacit cession of their rights, or an acknowledgement, of a right in the Parliament of Great Britain to impose Duties and Taxes upon a People who are not represented in the House of Commons;" and in the same letter they avowed and authenticated the doctrines advanced in a certain pamphlet, intituled, "The Rights of the British Colonies asserted and proved;" written by James Otis, Esq.; which pamphlet, amongst other things, says, "That the imposition of taxes, whether on trade or on land, on houses or ships, on real or personal, fixed or floating property, in the Colonies, is absolutely irreconcilable with the rights of the Calvinists, as British subieets, and as men."

The Committee find that, on the 28th day of February, 1765, a Bill was brought from the Commons, intituled, "An Act for granting and applying Stamp Duties and other Duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America; towards further defraying the expenses of defending, protecting, and securing the same; and for amending such parts of the several Acts of Parliament relating to the Trade and Revenues of the said Colonies and Plantations, as direct the manner of determining and recovering the penalties and forfeitures therein mentioned."

That the said Bill received the Royal assent on the 22d of the same month.

That on the 17th day of December, his Majesty declared, in his most gracious Speech from the Throne, "That the matters of importance which had lately occurred in some of his Colonies in America, were the principal cause of his Majesty's assembling his Parliament sooner than was usual in times of peace."

It appears to the Committee, from the votes of the House of Representatives of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, of the 6th of June, 1765, that they came to a Resolution, "That it was highly expedient there should be a meeting, as soon as might be, of Committees from the Houses of Representatives or Burgesses, in the several Colonies on the American Continent, to consult on their then present circumstances, and the difficulties to which they were reduced by the operation of the late Acts of Parliament, for levying Duties on the Colonies, and to consider of a general Address to his Majesty and the Parliament, to

"implore relief; and that letters should be forthwith prepared and transmitted to the respective Speakers of the several Assemblies, to invite them to accede to this proposition;" and further, that on the 8th of June, they did actually elect three persons to be their Committees: and also voted £450 to bear their expenses.

Your Committee find, in a letter from the Governor to the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, dated August 15th, 1765, an account of a violent riot at Boston, in resistance to a law passed by the Legislature of Great Britain, in which an attack was made upon Mr. Oliver, Distributer of Stamps, and carried to the length of pulling down and destroying his houses, manifesting a resolution, if they could have found him, of putting him to death; upon which occasion the backwardness and indisposition of the Council to support the peace and good order of Government, were very apparent. Also, in another letter from the Governor, dated August 31st, 1765, to the said Board of Trade, they find that the mob attacked the house of Mr. Storey, Register of the Admiralty, which they demolished; they also took all his books and papers, amongst which were the Records of the Court of Admiralty, and burnt them, and searched about for him, with an intent to murder him; they also pillaged the house of Mr. Hallowell, Comptroller of the Customs. But their most violent proceeding was against the Lieutenant Governor, whose house, plate, books, and manuscripts, to a very great value, they totally destroyed. And, in this great extremity, the Council being, as the Governor observes, dependent upon the people, refused even to concur with him in his proposition of giving notice to General Gage of the then situation of the town of Boston.

It is remarkable that this commotion entirely arose out of the town of Boston; for though it was given out that many People out of the country were concerned in this affair, upon inquiry, it was found that such persons living out of Boston as were seen in the crowd, were there merely as spectators.

In Governor Bernard's letter to the Board of Trade, of October 12th, 1765, he says, "That the real authority of the Government is at an end; some of the principal ringleaders in the late riots, walk the streets with impunity; no Officers dare attack them; no Attorney General prosecute them; no Witness appear against them; and no Judges sit upon them."

And during the general disorder, the Governor thought it necessary for some companies of the Militia to be mustered, with the unanimous advice of the Council, but that the Militia refused to obey his orders.

And we find that so little attention was paid to an Act of the British Legislature, by the Council and House of Representatives, that they resolved in a joint Committee, on the 25th of October, 1765, that it should and might be lawful to do business without Stamps, notwithstanding the Act of Parliament to the contrary.

On the 14th day of January, 1766, upon the meeting of the Parliament, after the recess at Christmas, his Majesty was pleased to declare himself in a most gracious Speech from the throne, in the following terms:

"My Lords and Gentlemen: When I met you last, I acquainted you that matters of importance had happened in America, which would demand the most serious attention of Parliament.

"That no information which could serve to direct your deliberations in so interesting a concern might be wanting, I have ordered all the Papers that give any light into the origin, the progress, or the tendency, of the Disturbances which have of late prevailed in some of the Northern Colonies, to be immediately laid before

"No time has been lost, on the first advice of these Disturbances, to issue orders to the Governors of my Provinces, and to the Commanders of my Forces, in America, for the exertion of all the powers of the Go-

Ibid. June 8th and 20th, 1765.

No. 21. Governor Bernard's Letter, Aug. 15th, 1765, to the Lords Commissioners for Trade and plantations.

No. 22. Do. August 31st 1765. Governor Bernard to the Lords of Trade.

No. 34. Governor Bernard's letter to the Earl of Halifax, Castle William, August 15th and 16th, 1765.

No. 63. Governor Bernard's letter to the Board of Trade, October 12th, 1765.

No. 76. Governor Bernard's letter to Mr. Secretary Conway, Boston November 25, 1765.

No. 71. Extract of a letter from Governor Bernard to J. Pownall, Esq. dated Boston, Oct. 26, 1765.

Resolutions of the Council and House of Representatives, Oct. 25, 1765.

Journals, January 14th, 1766.

December 11th, 1764. No 2. Representation of the Board of Trade to his Majesty.

No. 2. Extracts from the print'd votes of the House of Representatives of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, 1st, 8th, 11th, and 13th June, 1764.

No. 2. Otis' book from page 57 to the end of the book Journals February 28, 1765.

December 17th.

No. 17. Votes of the House of Representatives, June 6th, 1765.

"vernment in the suppression of riots and tumults, and in "the effectual support of lawful authority.

"Whatever remains to be done on this occasion, I com"mit to your wisdom, not doubting but your zeal for the "honor of my Crown, your attention to the just rights and "authority of the British Legislature, and your affection
"and concern for the welfare and prosperity of all my "People, will guide you to such sound and prudent resolu"tions as may tend at once to preserve those constitutional "rights over the Colonies, and to restore to them that "harmony and tranquillity which have lately been inter"rupted by riots and disorders of the most dangerous na"ture."

In the dutiful Address which was voted the same day, the House assure his Majesty, "of their hearty concur"rence with his Majesty's most salutary intentions; that "they would exert their utmost endeavours to assert and "support his Majesty's dignity and honor, and the legisla"tive authority of this Kingdom over its Colonies; and "that they would take into their consideration the most "proper methods to provide for the restoration of tranquil"lity to those Colonies which had been disturbed by such "violent and dangerous commotions."

Upon the same day all the Papers relating to Journals, 1765. the information and advices received from Ame- rica, of the riots and tumults there, were laid before the House.

More Papers relating to America were laid
January 22. before the House, which, together with the other Papers, were referred to a Committee of the whole House for Tuesday, the 28th.

More Papers were laid before the House,
January 27. and referred to the said Committee.

The Committee met, and after several ad-
January 28. February 10. jourments, on the 10th of February, following, the Chairman reported several Resolutions, which were agreed to by the House, as follows:

"1. Resolved, That the King's Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons of Great Britain, in Parliament assembled, had, hath, and of right ought to have, full power and authority to make Laws and Statutes of sufficient force and validity to bind the Colonies and People of America, subjects of the Crown of Great Britain, in all cases whatsoever.

"2. Resolved, That it appears to this Committee, that Tumults and Insurrections of the most dangerous nature, have been raised and carried on in several 9f the North American Colonies, in open defiance of the Power and Dignity of his Majesty's Government, and in manifest violation of the Laws and Legislative authority of this Kingdom.

"3. Resolved, That it appears to this Committee that the said Tumults and Insurrections have been encouraged and inflamed by sundry Votes and Resolutions, passed in several of the Assemblies of the said Provinces, derogatory to the honor of his Majesty's Government, and destructive of the legal and constitutional dependency of the said Colonies on the Imperial Crown and Parliament of Great Brit- tain.

"4. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, to desire that his Majesty would be graciously pleased to give instructions to the Governors of the several Provinces, where the above mentioned Tumults and Insurrections have happened, that they should, in his Majesty's name, require of the Assemblies of the said Provinces, to make proper recompense to those who have suffered in their persons or properties, in consequence of the aforesaid Tumults and Insurrections; and to assure his Majesty that this House will, upon this and all occasions, support the lawful authority of his Crown, and the rights of Parliament.

"5. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that all his Majesty's subjects, residing in the said Colonies, who have manifested their desire to comply with, or to assist in, carrying into execution, the Act for laying a duty on Stamps, or any other Act of Parliament, in the British Colonies in North America, have acted as dutiful and loyal subjects, and are therefore entitled to, and will assuredly have, the favor and protection of this House."

"Ordered, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, pursuant to the fourth Resolution."

On the 5th of March, a Bill was brought March 5th.
from the Commons, intituled, "An Act for the "better securing the Dependency of his Majesty's Domin"ions in America upon the Crown and Parliament of "Great Britain."

Which Bill received the Royal assent on the 18th of the same month.

And also a Bill intituled, "An Act to repeal an Act made "in the last session of Parliament intituled, "An Act for "granting and applying certain Stamp Duties, and other du"ties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America;
"towards further defraying the expenses of defending, pro"tecting, and securing the same; and for amending such "parts of the several Acts of Parliament relating to the "Trade and Revenues of the said Colonies and Planta"tions, as direct the manner of determining and recover"ing the penalties and forfeitures therein mentioned."

Which Bill received the Royal assent on the March 18th.
18th of March.

Whilst the Bill for repealing the Stamp Act was under deliberation, petitions from the Merchants of the city of Bristol, from the Merchants of Glasgow, from Edward Montague, Agent for the Colony of Virginia, and from the Merchants of the city of London, in favor of the said repeal, were received and read.

On the 2d of June, a Bill was brought from June 2d.
the Commons, intituled, "An Act for indemni"fying persons who have incurred certain penalties inflicted "by an Act of the last session of Parliament, 'for granting "certain Stamp Duties in the British Colonies and Plan"tations in America;' and for making valid all instruments "executed or enrolled there on unstamped paper, vellum,
"or parchment."

Which Bill received the Royal assent on the 6th of the same month.

It appears by a letter from Governor Ber- nard to the Earl of Shelburne, dated Decem- ber 24th, 1766, that the Governor, by advice of the Council, ordered the Mutiny Act and three other Acts to be printed by the Printer of the Laws, in the interval of the adjournment of the Assembly. Two companies of Artillery being driven on shore by distress of weather, and the said Act of Parliament having been consulted, the Council advised the Governor to order the Commissary to supply them with what they demanded under the Act, which was done. Upon the meeting of the Assembly a Message was sent to the Council, and carried by five members, to inquire "by what "authority Acts of Parliament were registered amongst "the laws of that Province; and whether they knew of "any Act (meaning of Assembly) requiring the registering "of Ordinances (their term for Acts of Parliament) which "their Legislature never consented to."

The Committee find that, on the 12th of March, 1767, the Lord Wycombe (by his Majesty's command) laid before the House copies of letters, &c., from his Majesty's Governors in America, which were ordered to lie on the table.

That on the 3d of April more copies of letters from his Majesty's Governors in America, were laid before the House, and ordered to lie on the table.

That on the 14th of May, it was ordered that an humble Address should be presented to his Majesty, "That he would be graciously pleased to "give directions that there might be laid before this House
"copies of all Reports made to or by the Commissioners "of Trade and Plantations, together with all Orders and "Proceedings made or had by the Secretaries of State, or "his Majesty's Privy Council, relating to the Bill passed "by the Governor, Council, and Assembly of the Massa- chusetts Bay, for granting compensation to the sufferers,
"and of free and general pardon, indemnity, and oblivion
"to the offenders in the late times, from the time of the "receipt of the said Bill."

That on the 18th day of May, pursuant to May 18th.
the said Address, the Lord Wycombe laid before the House, a copy of the Report of the Committee of Council, &c., which papers were ordered to lie on the table.

That on the same day it was ordered, that an humble Address should be presented to his Majesty, "That he "would be graciously pleased to give directions, that there

No. 115.
Extract of a letter from Gov.
Bernard, to the Earl of Shel- burne, Boston,
Dec. 24, 1766.

Journals,
March 12th.
1767.

April 3d.

May 14th.

"might be laid before this House, copies of such precedents as had been, or might be found, of Orders in Council, declaring Acts of Assembly in America, to be null, illegal, or void; together with Reports of the several Attorneys, and Solicitors General, or either of them, in similar cases, read at the Council Board on the 9th instant."

That on the 22d of May, the Lord Wycombe, (by his Majesty's command,) laid before the House copies of such precedents as had been found, of Orders in Council, declaring Acts of Assemblies in America to be null, illegal, and void; together with Reports of the several Attorneys, and Solicitors General, or either of them, in similar cases.

Which Papers were ordered to lie on the table; and from a perusal of them we find that several Acts of different Colonies have been, from time to time, declared by his Majesty in Council, to be null, illegal, and void.

That on the 15th of June a Bill was brought up from the Commons intituled, "An Act to enable his Majesty to put the Customs and other Duties in the British Dominions in America, and the execution of the laws relating to Trade there, under the management of Commissioners to be appointed for that purpose, and to be resident in the said Dominions."

Which Bill received the Royal assent on the 29th of the same month.

That on the 18th of June a Bill was brought up from the Commons, intituled, "An Act for granting certain Duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America; for allowing a drawback of the duties of Customs upon the exportation from this Kingdom of coffee and cocoa nuts, of the produce of the said Colonies or Plantations; for discontinuing the drawbacks payable on china earthen ware, exported to America; and for more effectually preventing the clandestine running of goods in the said Colonies and Plantations."

Which Bill received the Royal assent on the 29th of June.

The Committee find that, on the meeting of the Assembly of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, on the 28th of January, 1767, a Message was sent to the Governor from the House of Representatives desiring to be informed, "Whether any provision had been made at the expense of that Government for the King's Troops lately arrived in the harbour of Boston;" and that after having had the Minutes of Council (by which it expressly appeared that the provision for the Artillery companies at the Castle, was made in pursuance of the then late Act of Parliament) laid before them, they replied that, "In giving orders, with the advice of the Council, for making provision for the Artillery companies at the Castle the Governor had acted in an essential point against the plain intention of the Charter, by which alone, and that only, according to such Acts as are or may be in force within this Province, the Governor and Council were authorized to issue money out of the Treasury; adding, "That it was still more grievous to them to find the Governor stating, as the foundation of the proceeding, a late Act of Parliament, which to them appeared as great a grievance as the Stamp Act, which took away the unalienable right of freedom from all Taxation, but such as they should voluntarily consent to and grant."

Governor Bernard was obliged in his Rejoinder, 14th and 18th February, 1767, carefully to avoid giving the Act of Parliament as the foundation of the provision made: he would otherwise not have had the concurrence of the Council; for though the greater part, he believed, had a due respect for Acts of Parliament, not one of them would have dared to avow it in that instance, and at that time.

The Committee find that, on the 2d of March, 1768, a Bill was brought up from the Commons, intituled, "An Act for the more easy and effectual recovery of the Penalties and Forfeitures inflicted by the Acts of Parliament, relating to the Trade or Revenues of the British Colonies and Plantations in America."

Which Bill received the Royal assent on the 8th of the same month.

It appears to the Committee, that by a circular letter from the House of Representatives of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, addressed to all the Assemblies upon the Continent of North America, they desired the assent of those Assemblies to their sentiments and proceedings; acquainting them, that they had represented to his Majesty that the Acts of Parliament of Great Britain, imposing duties upon that Province, with the sole and express purpose of raising a Revenue, are infringements of their natural constitutional rights, and desired them to point out any thing further that might be necessary to carry their system into execution.

In this year the Assembly; at the election of the Council, left out all the Crown Officers, which measure had been before adopted, in the years 1766 and 1767.

In the beginning of May, 1768, subscriptions were made, and Associations entered into, for the non-importation of goods from Great Britain; but this last measure was at that time defeated by the merchants in the other Colonies refusing to concur in it.

On the 9th day of May, 1768, regular seizure was made by the Collector and Comptroller of the Customs, of the sloop Liberty, belonging to Mr. Hancock, of the town of Boston, which occasioned a most violent tumult; the Collector and Comptroller, with the son of the Collector, were attacked by a numerous and outrageous mob, who beat and abused them in a most cruel manner; and in the night attacked their houses, broke the windows, seized on a boat belonging to the Collector, which they carried away in triumph, and afterwards burnt. The Commissioners of the Customs expecting the same treatment, the riot still continuing, thought it prudent to retreat for safety till midnight with their families, to the houses of some persons in the neighbourhood; and afterwards, upon conviction that their lives were in danger, took refuge on board his Majesty's ship the Romney, then in the harbour of Boston; and for their further security, from thence into Castle William. During the time of this, their perilous situation, they applied several times by letter to the Governor and Council for protection, but could procure no assistance whatsoever; and were finally told, in a letter from Governor Bernard, dated June 13th, that "After several hours deliberation of the necessity of taking some measures to preserve the peace of the town, and what those measures should be, the Council had come to a resolution that, as there appeared to be no immediate danger of further violence, they were of opinion that it would be best to refer this matter to the consideration of a Committee of both Houses, and that therefore the Governor at present could not let them know what kind of aid and protection they might expect to receive." The consequence of which was, that they received no protection whatsoever. The disorder and confusion remained in this state unnoticed till the 22d July, when the Governor moved the Council to take into consideration some measures for restoring vigor and firmness to Government; but on the 29th of July, the Council made a reply to what had been proposed to them by the Governor, in which they state, "That the disorders which happened were occasioned by the violent and unprecedented manner in which the sloop Liberty had been seized by the officers of the Customs."

In consequence of this disorderly state at Boston, two regiments having been set thither from Hallifax, in order to support the execution of the civil power, and preserve the peace of the town, strict orders were given, and repeated to the troops, not to quarrel with the townsmen, by whom they complained they had been frequently ill treated and insulted.

On Monday, the 5th of March, 1768, at nine at night, the alarm bells were rung, as in cases of fire: the fire said to be in Kings street, and the People thereby led thither, where, finding the alarm false, they joined a multitude who had been braving two companies at the gates of their barrack, and threatened with death the centinel who was posted at

No. 151 and 152. Circular letter contained in Gov. Bernard's to E. Shelburne, dated Boston, Feb. 18th, 1768.

No. 317. Gov. Bernard's letter to Lords of Trade July 1766, and letters to Earl Shelburne.

No. 321. Gov. Bernard's of 30th May, 1768, and May 30th, 1767.

No. 152. Sir Francis Bernard's letter of 21st March, to E. Shelburne; also No. 207, No. 173. Copy of a Memorial of the Commissioners of the Customs to the Lords of the Treasury, June 16th, 1768 also No. 162.

No. 204. Journals of the Council. 27th and 20th July, 1768.

No. 283. Narrative of the late Transaction, at Boston.

Message from the House of Representatives to Governor Bernard, enclosed in a private Letter to Earl Shelburne, dated Boston, Feb. 11th and 18th, 1767, also 1.9.

No. 116. Extract of a letter from Gov. Bernard to Earl Shelburne, Boston, 14th and 18th Feb. 1767.

Journals March 2d, 1768.

the custom house, where the King's treasure was lodged. The centinel being surrounded was forced to retreat, and call for aid, which brought Captain Preston, Captain of the day, with a party from the main guard, to extricate him. That officer used his utmost endeavours to prevent mischief, notwithstanding which, the rioters by blows and every act of aggravation, drew upon themselves the fire of several of the soldiers, by which some persons unfortunately were killed; and upon the Governor's offering to obtain the Commanding Officer's consent to remove one of the regiments to the Castle, and to station the other so as no opportunity of disputes with the townsmen should remain, the Council insisted that both regiments should go, giving for a reason that the People would most certainly drive out the troops, and that the inhabitants of other towns would join with Boston in it; and several of them declared, that they did not judge from the general temper of the People only, but they knew it to be the determination, not of a mob, but of the generality of the principal inhabitants; in consequence of which both regiments were accordingly removed.

In the Petition presented to the Governor by several People of consideration, in pursuance of a resolution of a town meeting, held at that time, they disavow the Legislative authority of this country, and assert that it would be better for them to struggle against it, than tamely to relinquish their rights.

And the Assembly absolutely refused, by a great majority, to rescind their former order of sending circular letters to the other Colonies, though they had received a positive requisition from the Crown to that purpose.

An Association was entered into the beginning of August, when most of the merchants of Boston entered into and subscribed an agreement, that they would not send for, or import, any kind of goods or merchandise from Great Britain, some few articles of necessity excepted, from the 1st of January, 1769, to the 1st of January, 1770; and that they would not import any tea, paper, glass, or painters colours, until the Act, imposing duties on those articles, should be repealed.

"It was also voted in a town meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of Boston, September 12th, that the levying money within that Province, for the use and service of the Crown, in other manner than the same is granted by the great and general Court or Assembly of the Province, was in violation of the said Royal Charter, and the same was also in violation of the undoubted natural rights of subjects, declared in the aforesaid Act of Parliament, (meaning the Act of Succession,) freely to give and grant their own money for the service of the Crown, with their own consent in person, or by Representatives of their own free election.

They also voted that, as the Governor did not think proper to call a general Court for the redress of their (supposed) grievances, the town should then make choice of a suitable number of persons to act for them as a Committee in Convention, with such as might he sent to join them from the several towns in that Province, in order that such measures might be consulted and advised as his Majesty's service, and the peace and safety of his subjects in the Province, might require.

They also voted that, as there was at that time a prevailing apprehension in the minds of many, of an approaching war with France, in order that the inhabitants of that town might be prepared in case of sudden danger, that those of the said inhabitants who might at that time be unprovided, should be, and thereby were, requested duly to observe at that time the law of the Province, whereby it is required that every listed soldier and other householder, (except troopers, who by law, are otherwise to be provided,) shall always be provided with a well fixed firelock, musket, accoutrement, and ammunition, as in the said law is particularly mentioned, to the satisfaction of the commissioned officers of the company.

They also voted that a letter should be written to the several towns in the Province, as follows:

"Gentlemen: You are already too well acquainted with the melancholy and very alarming circumstances to which this Province, as well as America in general, is now reduced; taxes, equally detrimental to the commercial interests of the Parent Country and her Colonies, are imposed on the People without their consent; taxes designed for the support of the civil Government in the Colonies, in a manner clearly unconstitutional, and contrary to that in which, till of late, Government has been supported by the free gift of the People in the American Assemblies or Parliaments; as also for the maintenance of a large standing army, not for the defence of the nearly acquired Territories, but for the old Colonies, and in time of peace. The decent, humble and truly loyal applications and petitions from the Representatives of this Province, for the redress of these heavy and very threatening grievances, have hitherto been ineffectual, being assured from authentic intelligence that they have not yet reached the Royal ear. The only effect of transmitting applications hitherto perceivable, has been a mandate from one of his Majesty's Secretaries of State to the Governor of this Province, to dissolve the General Assembly, merely because the late House of Representatives refused to rescind a resolution of a former House, which implied nothing more than a right in the American subjects to unite in humble and dutiful petitions to their gracious Sovereign, when they found themselves aggrieved. This is a right naturally inherent in every man, and expressly recognised at the glorious revolution, as the birth-right of an Englishman.

"This dissolution you are sensible has taken place. The Governor has publicly and repeatedly declared that he cannot call another Assembly; and the Secretary of State for the American Department, in one of his letters, communicated to the House, has been pleased to say, "That "proper care will be taken for the support of the dignity of "Government," the meaning of which is too plain to be misunderstood. The concern and perplexity into which these things have thrown the People, have been greatly aggravated by a late declaration of his Excellency Governor Bernard, that one or more regiments may be expected in this Province.

"The design of these troops is in everyone's apprehension, nothing short of enforcing, by military power, the execution of Acts of Parliament, in the forming of which the Colonies have not, and cannot have, any constitutional influence. This is one of the greatest distresses to which a free People can be reduced.

"The town which we have the honor to serve, have taken these things, at their late meeting, into their most serious consideration: and as there, is in the minds of many a prevailing apprehension of an approaching war with France, they have passed the several votes which we transmit to you, desiring that they may be immediately laid before the town, whose prudentials are in your care, at a legal meeting, for their candid and particular attention.

"Deprived of the counsels of a General Assembly in this dark and difficult season, the loyal People of this Province will, we are persuaded, immediately perceive the propriety and utility of the proposed Committee of Convention, and the sound and wholesome advice that may be expected from a number of gentlemen chosen by themselves, and in whom they may repose the greatest confidence, must tend to the real service of our most gracious Sovereign. and the welfare of his subjects in this Province, and may happily prevent any sudden and unconnected measures, which, in their present anxiety, and even agony of mind, they may be in danger of falling into.

"And it is of importance that the Convention should meet as soon as may be; so early a day as the 22nd of this instant, September, has been proposed for that purpose; and it is hoped, the remotest towns will by that time, or as soon after as conveniently may be, return their respective Committees.

"Not doubting but you are equally concerned with us, and our fellow citizens, for the preservation of our invaluable rights, and for the general happiness of our country, and that you are disposed, with equal ardour, to exert yourselves in every constitutional way for so glorious a purpose."

The Committee observe, that it does not appear to them that any steps were taken to suppress these measures, or

No. 283.
Captain Preston's case.

Lieut. Gov. Hutchinson, to the Earl of Hillsborough, Boston, 12th March, 1774.

No. 169.
Petition of the town of Boston, to Governor Bernard. June 14th, 1768, also No. 167.

No. 189.
Answer of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts, to the Governor, June 30, 1768.

No. 207.
Sir Francis 9th Aug., 1768, to Earl Hillsborough.

No. 214
Proceedings at the town meeting, at Boston, September 12th 1768.

No. 215.
Circular from the Select Men of Boston September 14th, 1768.

that they were noticed* of by the Council, or any of the Civil Magistrates.

The Committee think it necessary here to insert the following extracts.

Journals, November 8, 1768. The first extract is from his Majesty's most gracious Speech from the Throne, on the 8th day of November, 1768:

"At the close of the last Parliament, I expressed my "satisfaction at the appearances which then induced me to "believe, that such of my subjects as had been misled in "some parts of my Dominions, were returning to a just "sense of their duty; but it is with equal concern that I "have since seen that spirit of faction which I had hoped "was well nigh extinguished, breaking out afresh in some of "my Colonies in North America, and in one of them, pro- "ceeding even to acts of violence, and of resistance to the "execution of the law; the capital town of which Colony "appears, by late advices, to be in a state of disobedience to "all law and Government, and has proceeded to measures "subversive of the Constitution, and attended with circum- "stances that manifest a disposition to throw off their de- "pendence on Great Britain. On my part I have pur- "sued every measure that appeared to be necessary for "supporting the Constitution, and inducing a due obedience "to the authority of the Legislature. You may rely upon "my steady perseverance in these purposes; and I doubt "not but that, with your concurrence and support, I shall be "able to defeat the mischievous designs of those turbulent "and seditious persons, who, under false pretences, have "but too successfully deluded numbers of my subjects in "America, and whose practices, if suffered to prevail, cannot "fail to produce the most fatal consequences to my Colonies "immediately, and in the end, to all the Dominions of my "Crown."

November 8th. The second extract is from your Lordships dutiful Address to his Majesty on his said most gracious Speech:

"We feel the most sincere concern, that any of our fel- "low subjects in North America, should be misled by fac- "tious and designing men, into acts of violence, and of "resistance to the execution of the law, attended with cir- "cumstances that manifest a disposition to throw off their "dependence upon Great Britain. At the same time that "we shall be always ready to contribute to the relief of any "real grievance of your Majesty's American subjects, we "most unfeignedly give your Majesty the strongest assuran- "ces, that we shall ever zealously concur in support of such "just and necessary measures, as may best enable your "Majesty to repress that daring spirit of disobedience, and "to enforce a due submission to the laws; always consider- "ing that it is one of our most essential duties to maintain "involute the supreme authority of the Legislature of "Great Britain over every part of the Dominions of your "Majesty's Crown."

The third extract is from his Majesty's most gracious Answer to your Lordships Address:

November 10th. "Your zealous concurrence in every measure "that can bring relief to my People is well known "to me, nor do I doubt of the attention that you will always "give to any real grievances of my American subjects. "The strong assurances I receive from you at the same "time of your determination to vindicate the just Legisla- "tive authority of Parliament over all the Dominions of "my Crown, deserve my warmest approbation.

November 15th. The Committee find that on the 15th of November, the Lord Harwich acquainted the House, "That he had received his Majesty's commands "to lay before the House, Papers relating to the late Dis- "turbances in America; and that the same would be laid "before the House in a few days."

November 28th. That accordingly, on the 28th of November, the Lord Harwich laid before the House. copies of all Letters, &c., relating to the late Proceedings of the Colony of the Massachusetts Bay, together with a list thereof, which was read by the Clerk.

December 15th. That on the 15th of December, the House came to the following resolutions:

"1. Resolved, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the votes and resolutions, and proceedings of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay, in the months of January and February last, respecting several late Acts of Parliament, so far as the said votes, resolutions, and proceedings, do import a denial of, or to draw into question; the power and authority of his Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in Parliament assembled, to make laws and statutes of sufficient force and validity to bind the Colonies and People of America, subjects of the Crown of Great Britain, in all cases whatsoever, are illegal, unconstitutional, and derogatory of the rights of the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain.

"2. Resolved, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the resolution of the said House of Representatives of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in January last, to write letters to the several Houses of Representatives of the British Colonies on the Continent, desiring them to join with the said House of Representatives of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in Petitions which do deny, or draw into question the right of Parliament to impose duties and taxes upon his Majesty's subjects in America; and in pursuance of the said resolution, the writing such letters in which Certain late Acts of Parliament, imposing duties and taxes, are stated to be infringements of the rights of his Majesty's subjects of the said Province, are proceedings of a most unwarrantable and dangerous nature, calculated to inflame the minds of his Majesty's subjects in the other Colonies; tending to create unlawful combinations, repugnant to the laws of Great Britain, and subversive of the Constitution.

"3. Resolved, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That it appears that the town of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, has for some time past been in a state of great disorder and confusion; and that the peace of the said town has at several times been disturbed by riots and tumults of a dangerous nature, in which the officers of his Majesty's Revenue there have been obstructed by acts of Violence in the execution of the laws, and their lives endangered:

"4. Resolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That it appears that neither the Council of the said Province of Massachusetts Bay, nor the ordinary Civil Magistrates, did exert their authority for suppressing the said riots and tumults.

"5. Resolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That in these circumstances of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, and of the town of Boston, the preservation of the public peace, and the due execution of the laws became impracticable without the aid of a military force to support and protect the Civil Magistrates, and the Officers of his Majesty's Revenue.

"6. Resolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the declarations, resolutions, and proceedings, in the town meeting at Boston; on the 14th of June, and 12th of September, were illegal and unconstitutional, and calculated to excite sedition and insurrection in his Majesty's Province of Massachusetts Bay.

"7. Resolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the appointment at the town meeting, on the 12th of September, of a Convention to be held in the town of Boston, on the 22d of that month, to consist of Deputies from the several towns and districts in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, and the issuing a precept by the Selectmen of the town of Boston, to each of the said towns and districts for the election of such Deputies, were proceedings subversive of his Majesty's Government, and evidently manifesting a design in the inhabitants of the said town of Boston, to set up a new and unconstitutional authority, independent of the Crown of Great Britain.

"8. Resolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the elections, by several towns and districts in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, of Deputies to sit in the said Convention, and the meeting of such Convention in consequence thereof, were daring insults offered to his Majesty's authority, and audacious usurpations of the powers of Government."

It was then ordered, "That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, to return his Majesty thanks for "the communication which he has been pleased to make "to his Parliament, of several Papers relative to public

*Sic.

"transactions in his Majesty's Province of Massachusetts Bay" To express our sincere satisfaction in the measures "which his Majesty has pursued for supporting the Constitution, and inducing a due obedience to the authority of the Legislature.

"To give his Majesty the strongest assurances that we "will effectually stand by and support his Majesty in "such further measures as may be found necessary to maintain the Civil Magistrates in a due execution of the laws "within his Majesty's Province of Massachusetts Bay.

"And as we conceive that nothing can be more immediately necessary either for the maintenance of his Majesty's authority in the said Province, or for the guarding "his Majesty's subjects therein from being further deluded "by the arts of wicked and designing men, than to proceed in the most speedy and effectual manner for bringing to condign punishment the chief authors and instigators of the late disorders, to beseech his Majesty that "he will be graciously pleased to direct his Majesty's "Governor of Massachusetts Bay to take the most effectual methods for procuring the fullest information that can "be obtained, touching all treasons or misprison of treason "committed within his Government, since the 30th of "December last, and to transmit the same, together with "the names of the persons who were most active in the "commission of such offences, to one of his Majesty's "principal Secretaries of State, in order that his Majesty "may issue a special commission for inquiring of, hearing, "and determining the said offences within this Realm, "pursuant to the provisions of the statute of the thirtieth "year of the reign of King Henry the Eighth, if his "Majesty shall, upon receiving the said information, see "sufficient ground for such a proceeding."

And a Message was sent to the House of Commons, to carry down the said Resolutions and Address, and desire their concurrence thereto.

On the 20th January, 1769, Lord Harwich, (by his Majesty's command,) laid before the House, more copies of letters relating to America, which were ordered to lie on the table.

On the 9th of February, the Resolutions and Address, sent to the Commons on the 15th of December last, for their concurrence, were returned agreed to, with some amendments, which were read and agreed to, and notice thereof sent to the Commons; and the said Address was ordered to be presented to his Majesty by both Houses.

On the 14th of February, the Lord Chancellor reported his Majesty's Answer to the said Address, as follows:

"My Lords and Gentlemen: The sincere satisfaction "you express in the measures which I have already taken, "and the strong assurances you give of supporting me in "those which may be still necessary, to maintain the just "legislative authority, and the due execution of the laws, "in my Province of Massachusetts Bay, give me great "pleasure.

"I shall not fail to give those orders which you recommend, as the most effectual method of bringing the authors "of the late unhappy disorders in that Province, to condign punishment."

Which Address and Answer were ordered to be printed.

It doth not appear to the Committee that the censure of the proceedings in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, and of the conduct of the Council and other Civil Magistrates, expressed by both Houses of Parliament, in their Resolutions, and their approbation of the measure of sending troops thither to support and produced the Magistrates, and the Officers of the Revenue, produced the good effect that might reasonably have been hoped for. A disposition to deny the authority, and resist the laws of the supreme Legislature, continued still to prevail, not only in flagitious publications in the daily newspapers, but also in a variety of violent and unwarrantable resolutions and proceedings of those merchants and others, who had subscribed to the agreements for non-importation of goods from Great Britain.

Meetings of the Associates were represented to have been held, in as regular a manner as any other meeting authorized by the Constitution.

Committees were appointed to examine the cargoes of all vessels arriving from Great Britain; and regular votes and resolutions of censure were passed in those meetings upon all such as refused to concur in those unlawful Associations; their names were published in the public newspapers as enemies to their country; and the mandates and decrees of those Committees* meet with a respect and obedience denied to the constitutional authority of Government.

In some cases goods imported from Great Britain were locked up in ware-houses, under the care of these Committees, in order to prevent their being sold; and, in one or two instances, they were re-shipped to Great Britain.

On the 31st of May, 1769, the General Court met at the court house at Boston, pursuant to his Majesty's writs, and the first step the Assembly took, before they proceeded on any other business, was to send a Message to the Governor, asserting that the having ships in the harbor, and troops in the town of Boston, was inconsistent with their dignity and freedom; and, therefore, that they had a right to expect that he would give orders for the removal of the forces, by sea and land, from that port, and from the gates of the city, during the session of the Assembly; and, at the same time, the House came to several resolutions to the same effect as the declarations contained in their Message to the Governor.

The Governor having in reply to their Message, acquainted them "That he had no authority over his Majesty's "ships in that port, or his troops in that town, nor could "give any orders for the removal of them," they then proceeded to the election of Counsellors, in which, election not only the Lieutenant Governor, and other officers of Government were excluded, but also several other gentlemen who had been of the former Council, and who (the Governor represents) shewed a disposition to support the King's Government, to acknowledge the authority of Parliament, and to preserve the People from a Democratic despotism, and were otherwise distinguished by their integrity and ability.

On the 13th of June, the Assembly sent an Answer to the Governor's Message, of the 31st of May, in which he had told them that he had no authority over the King's ships or troops. In this Answer they assert that "By the "principles of the Constitution, the Governor of that Colony has the absolute military command; that the sending "a military force there to enforce the execution of the laws, "is inconsistent with the nature of Government, and the "spirit of a free Constitution; that the unwillingness of a "People in general, that a law should be executed, was a "strong presumption of its being an unjust law; that it "could not be their law, as the People must consent to "laws before they can be obliged, in conscience, to obey "them."

It appears by a vote of the Assembly, on the 8th of July, that they have declared that all trials for treason, misprison of treason, or for any felony or crime whatever, committed or done in that Colony, ought of right to be had and conducted within the courts of the Colony; and that the seizing any person or person's, residing in that Colony, suspected of any crime whatsoever, committed therein, and sending such person or persons to places beyond the sea to be tried, is highly derogatory of the rights of British subjects, as thereby the inestimable privilege of being tried by a Jury from the vicinage, as well as the liberty of summoning and producing witnesses on such trials, will be taken away from the party accused.

On the 6th of April, 1770, a Bill was brought up from the House of Commons to your Lordships, intituled, "An Act to repeal so much of "an Act, made in the seventh year of his present Majesty's "reign, intituled, 'An Act for granting certain Duties in "the British Colonies and Plantations in America; for "allowing a drawback of the duties of customs upon the "exportation from this Kingdom, of coffee and cocoa-nuts, "of the produce of the said Colonies or Plantations; for "discontinuing the drawbacks payable on china earthen

the proceedings
in consequence thereof Page 5
to 24.

No. 324.
Vide Sir Francis
Bernard's letters 1st June, and 17th June, 1769.

No. 325.
Extract of Gov.
Bernard's letter to Earl of Hillsborough,
1st, 7th and 11th
July, 1769, enclosing the Resolutions of the House of Representatives, of the 8th July.

Vide Resolves and Addresses of both Houses of Parliament, in Feb. 1769.

Vide Printed account of the Assn

*Six.

Apr 6th 1770

"wine, exported to America; and for more effectually preventing the clandestine running of goods in the said 'Colonies and Plantations;' as relates to the Duties upon 'glass, red lead, white lead, painters' colours, paper pasteboards, millboards, and scaleboards, of the produce or 'manufacture of Great Britain, imported into any of his 'Majesty's Colonies in America; and also to the discontinuing the drawbacks payable on china earthen ware, 'exported to America; and for regulating the exportation 'thereof."

Which Bill received the Royal assent on the 12th of April.

April 30th.

On the 30th of April, it was ordered "That 'an humble Address should be presented to his 'Majesty, that he would be graciously pleased to give 'directions that there be laid before this House, copies of 'all narratives of any disputes or disturbances which have 'happened between his Majesty's troops, stationed in 'North America, and the inhabitants of any of his Majesty's Colonies there, since the 24th day of June last, 'received by the Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury, and of his Majesty's Secretaries of State, or any other 'public officers, together with copies of all orders and instructions sent to the Governors, Lieutenant Governors, 'Deputy Governors, Presidents of the Council of any of 'his Majesty's Colonies in North America, or to the 'Commander-in-chief of his Majesty's forces, or any officer, civil, or military, within the same, relative to such 'disputes or disturbances."

May 4th.

And that on the 4th of May, the Lord Harwich, (by his Majesty's command,) laid before the House, several Papers relating to the late Disturbances in America, pursuant to an Address to his Majesty, for that purpose, on the 30th of April last, together with a list thereof; which were ordered to lie on the table.

May 7th.

The Committee find that, on the 7th of May, the Lord Harwich, laid before, the House, (by his Majesty's command,) a Narrative of the late transactions at Boston, and the case of Captain Thomas Preston, of the twenty-ninth Regiment of Foot, which had been transmitted to his Lordship, from the War Office; and the same were ordered to lie on the table.

May 14th.

On the 14th of May it was ordered, that an humble Address should be presented to his Majesty, that he would be graciously pleased to give directions, that there be laid before this House, copies of the Earl of Hillsborough's letter of the 13th of May, 1769, to the Governors of the several Colonies of North America; together with the Speeches of the Governors, referring to the said letter, and the Answers of the Assemblies to the same, so far as they have been received.

May 15th.

And on the 15th, the Lord Harwich laid before the House, by his Majesty's command, copies of the Earl of Hillsborough's letter of the 13th of May, 1769, to the Governors of the several Colonies of North America; together with the Speeches of the Governors, referring to the said letter, and the Answers of the Assemblies to the same, so far as they have been received; together with a list thereof; which were ordered to lie on the table; and the same with the other American Papers presented in this Session, were also ordered to be taken into consideration on Friday next; and the Lords summoned.

No. 326.
Lieutenant Governor Hutchinson's letter, to Earl of Hillsborough, dated March 27, 1770.

The Committee find by Lieutenant Governor Hutchinson's letter of the 27th of March, 1770, that when the troops were in the town, the Commissioners of the Customs were sensible they could have no dependence upon them, for if any riot had happened, no Civil Magistrate that he knew would have employed them in suppressing it; those who, from a principle, would have been disposed to it, refusing, and giving this reason, that they must immediately after have left the country; and that just the same principles prevailed with respect to the troops, which were said to be unconstitutional, although established by an Act of Parliament, it being alleged that it was an Act which did not bind Colonists.

No. 327.
Vide, Lieutenant Governor Hutchinson's letter to Earl of Hillsborough, of 27th April, and 21st May, 1770.

Lieutenant Governor Hutchinson, in his letter to the Earl of Hillsborough, of the 27th April, 1770, complains, that he has never been able to obtain the advice or consent of the Council to any proposal made for discounte-nancing the usurpation of the powers of Government by the town of Boston. That he had used the negative powers given him by Charter, in excluding Mr. Hancock from being Speaker pro tempore, and Mr. Cushing from the office of Commissary General, to which offices they had been elected; but adds, that this was doing but little, as he could not remove any of those who were actually in office, some of whom were more inflammatory than any out of office; he further says, that they were then attempting to compel all the importers, of what they call contraband goods, to send them back, and that he was not sure they would not succeed; that all goods which they have not enumerated are called contraband. That tea from Holland may lawfully be sold; that it is a high crime to sell any from England. That Mr. Hancock offered to send one or more of his ships back, and to lose the freight; that several of the importers pleaded that they should be utterly ruined; but the Boston zealots had no bowels, and gave for answer, "That if a ship was to bring in the plague, nobody would doubt what was necessary to be done with her; but the present case is much worse than that." In the same letter the Lieutenant Governor observes, "That the Boston principles obtain more and more in the remote parts of the Province, and the Representatives of seven-eighths of the town appear, in the present session, to be favourers of the non-importation measures. That their internal distresses may, in a course of years, force them to desist, but that the distress at present, and it may be for some time to come, lies principally upon the friends to Government, who run the risk of importing goods, and then are compelled, by the ruling power, to keep them unsold, or to ship them back; that he made an attempt that day to prevail upon a merchant of the first estate and character, to induce him to promote an Association, but to no purpose; and that he gave him for answer, 'that, until Parliament made provision for the punishment of the confederacies, all would be ineffectual, and the associates would be exposed to popular rage.' He observed further, 'that the last year, when the King's speech, and the Addresses of the Lords and of the House of Commons first came to them, the heads of the opposition were struck with terror, and the seditious newspaper writers laid aside their pens for five or six weeks, but as soon as the apprehension of vigorous measures ceased, their fears were over, and they became more assuming and tyrannical than before, and although the terror was not so great the present year, yet it was visible; but now, that they expect nothing will be done, they are recovering their spirits, knowing there is no newer within the Government to restrain them.

The resistance to the custom-house officers still continued to manifest itself upon every occasion, in consequence of which, on the 18th of May, 1770, a tideman of the customs, who had seized a small coasting vessel belonging to Connecticut, and a low casks of sugar, for breach of the Acts of Trade, in the evening was seized, stripped, and carried about the town, three or four hours, besmeared with tar, and then covered with feathers, and followed by a great number of disorderly People.

The Committee do not find in your Lordship's Journals of the years 1771 and 1772, any material proceedings relative to the matter to them referred.

Though in the year 1771, things remained tolerably quiet in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, yet the disposition to disavow the authority of Parliament, occasionally broke out in the House of Assembly and town meetings; accordingly, in an Answer from the House of Representatives to a Message from the Governor, on the 5th of July, 1771, they say, that "They know of no Commissioners of his Majesty's Customs, nor of any revenue his Majesty has a right to establish in North America; that they know and feel a tribute levied and extorted from those, who, if they have property, have a right to the absolute disposal of it."

At the same time, the disposition to import goods in defiance of the laws of Revenue and Trade, and to support such iniquitous practices, by insults and open violences upon the officers whose duty it is to carry the said laws into execution, broke out upon many occasions; and, as usual, the

No. 327.
Letter from Lieutenant Governor Hutchinson to Earl of Hillsborough, May 21st. 1770.

No. 328.
Lieutenant Governor Hutchinson to Earl of Hillsborough, July 6th, 1771.

No. 429.
Lieutenant Governor Hutchinson to Earl of Hillsborough, November 28th 1771.

Magistrates declined giving their assistance and support, though applied to for that purpose; which appears in the case of Arthur Savage, Comptroller of his Majesty's Customs at Falmouth, who was forcibly taken out of his house in the night, by several persons disguised and armed with pistols and other dangerous weapons, who put him in the utmost danger of his life, and not only obliged him to divulge the name of the person who had lodged an information, but also to swear to the truth of his information, declaring at the same time, that, if he discovered who they were, they would take his life; and that upon his application to the Justices, who were then sitting, they declined the examination of the evidence he brought to prove the fact.

Things remained much in the same state in the year 1772. The continued ill temper of the People at Boston was manifested by their instructions to their Representatives.

Upon the news of his Majesty's granting salaries to the Justices of the Supreme Court, the most inflammatory pieces were published in the newspapers, and the Selectmen of Boston ordered a meeting to consider of measures upon that occasion; which meeting voted an Address to the Governor, in which they say, "That, the freeholders and other inhabitants of the town of Boston, legally assembled in Faneuil Hall, beg leave to acquaint his Excellency, that a report has prevailed, which they have reason to apprehend is well grounded, that stipends are affixed to the offices of the Judges of the Superior Court of judicature, &c., of this Province, whereby they are become independent of the grants of the General Assembly for their support, contrary to the ancient and invariable usage.

"That this report has spread an alarm among all considerate persons who have heard of it, in town and country, being viewed as tending rapidly to complete the system of their slavery, which originated in the House of Commons of Great Britain, assuming a power and authority to give and grant the moneys of the Colonists without their consent, and against their repeated remonstrances. And as the Judges hold their places during pleasure, this establishment appears big with fatal evils so obvious, that it is needless to trespass on your Excellency's time in mentioning them."

The Town Meeting afterwards appointed a Committee of Correspondence, to write circular letters to all the towns in the Province, to induce them to unite in measures upon that occasion, which Committee met on the 2d of November. 1772, and made a report, containing several resolutions contradictory to the supremacy of the British Legislature; and after setting forth, that all men have a right to remain in a state of nature, as long as they please, they proceed to draw a report upon the natural rights of the Colonists, as men, christians, and subjects, and form a list of infringements and violations of their rights; one of the first of which contains an assertion, that the British Parliament have assumed the powers of legislation for the Colonies in all cases whatsoever, without obtaining the consent of the inhabitants, which is ever essentially necessary to the rightful establishment of such a legislation.

They also consider it as an infringement of their rights, that a number of new officers, unknown to the Charter, have been appointed to superintend the revenues; whereas the great and general Court or Assembly of that Province had the sole right of appointing all civil officers, excepting only such officers, the election and constitution of whom is in the said Charter expressly excepted, among whom these officers are not included.

They likewise complain of it as a grievance, that his Majesty has been pleased to apply £1500 sterling, annually, out of the American revenue, for the support of the Government of this Province, independent of the Assembly; and that the Judges of the Superior Court, as also the King's Attorney and Solicitor General, are to receive their support from, what they call, this grievous-tribute; which they say, will, if accomplished, complete their slavery.

Six hundred copies of this report were circulated in the towns of the Province, with a pathetic letter addressed to the inhabitants, who are called upon not to doze any longer, or sit supinely in indifference, whilst the iron hand of oppression is daily tearing the choicest fruits from the fair tree of liberty.

On the 6th of May a Message was brought from the House of Commons to your Lordships, with a Bill, intituled, "An act to allow a drawback of the duties of Customs on the exportation of Tea to any of his Majesty's Colonies or Plantations in America; to increase the deposit on Bohea tea to be sold at the East India Company's sales; and to empower the Commissioners of the Treasury to grant licences to the East India Company to export tea, duty free;" which Bill received the Royal assent on the 10th of May.

It appears to the Committee in the Answer of the Council to the Governor's Speech, at the opening of the session, that they declare "They are of opinion that the Parliament cannot, constitutionally, levy taxes, in any form, on his Majesty's subjects in that Province."

And the House of Representative upon the same occasion, declare, that if there have been in any late instances a submission to Acts of Parliament, it has been, in their opinion, rather from inconsideration, or a reluctance at the idea of contending with the Parent State, then from a conviction or acknowledgment of the supreme legislative authority of Parliament.

The Committee of Correspondence appear to have used their utmost endeavours to work up the minds of the People, not only for their own, but also the Southern Governments, to prevent the importation of Teas from the East India Company, and accordingly on the 3d of November, 1773, a mob of about five hundred persons, committed several outrageous acts of violence, against the persons to whom it was expected the Tea in question would be consigned, insisting that they should engage and promise not to receive or sell it; that if they did, they would be voted enemies to their country, and must expect to be treated as such hereafter. They then forced open the doors of the ware-houses of Mr. Clark, and tore them off the hinges, and entered with great violence, attempting to force their way up to the counting-house, but were driven back by the persons who were in it.

A Committee then of the freeholders and other inhabitants attended Messrs. Thomas and Elisha Hutchinson, supposed to be two of the consignees, and requested them to resign their appointment, and upon their refusing, voted their answer unsatisfactory. Governor Hutchinson did every thing in his power, without the Council, for the preservation of the peace and good order of the town, and thought that if he had the aid the Council might have given, his endeavors would have been more effectual.

On the 7th November, 1773, a large number of People beset the house of Mr. Hutchinson, but not finding him at home, proceeded to Mr. Clark's, another of the consignees, where they committed great disorders; broke the glasses and frames of the windows, and did considerable damage. After this riot the Governor immediately summoned a Council, and laid before them the necessity of some measures being taken; but the Council declined advising or directing any measures for landing the Tea; suggesting, that they then would of course advise* to a measure for procuring the payment of the duty, and therefore be advising to a measure inconsistent with the declared sentiment of both Houses in the last winter session of the General Court, which they apprehend to be altogether inexpedient and improper.

After the arrival of a ship loaded with Tea, a meeting of the People of Boston, and the neighbouring towns, was held, on the 29th of November, and continued, by adjournment, till next day, when a motion was made and agreed

*Sic.

No. 330.
Gov. Hutchinson to Earl Hillsborough, May 29, 1772, and the Boston Gazette of May 23th,

No. 331.
Gov. Hutchinson to Earl of Dartmouth, October 23d, 1772.

No. 332.
Address, October 23, 1772.

No. 333.
Governor Hutchinson to Earl of Dartmouth, November 3, 1772, with the printed account of the Votes and proceedings of the town of Boston, 2d November, 1772.

No. 334.
Printed votes and proceedings of the freeholders and inhabitants of Boston, in a Town Meeting November 20th. 1772.

Journals, 6th May, 1773.

No. 336.
Answer of the Council to Gov. Speech January 25th, 1773, Journal of House of Representatives.

No. 336
House of Representatives answer to Governors Speech, Jan 26, 1773.

Extract of a letter from Hutchinson to Earl of Dartmouth 4th November 1773, with four enclosures, 296, 297, 298, 299.

No. 302.
Copy of a vote of the town Nov 15th 1773

No. 368 Copy of a paper printed at Boston, dated Dec. 1st, 1773, enclosed in Gov Hutchinsons letter of December 2, 1773.

No. 304.
Extract of a letter from Gov. Hutchinson to Earl of Dartmouth, Boston, Nov. 15th, 1773

No. 305, 306.
Copy of a letter from Gov Hutchinson to Dartmouth

Boston 2d Dec. 1773, enclosing a copy of the Petition of Richard Clark and Son, Benjamin Fancuil, & Thomas & Elisha Hutchinson, and of the proceedings of the Council to, nem. con., that the Tea should be not only sent back, but that no duty should be paid thereon.

No. 308
Copy or a paper printed at Boston, 1st 1773 in Gov. Hutchinson letter of 2d Dec. 1773.

It was also voted, nem. con., that Mr. Rotch, owner of the vessel, and Captain Hall, the master of the ship, at their peril, should not suffer any of the Tea to be landed; it was also voted, that Gov. Hutchinson's conduct, in requesting the Justices of the Peace to meet to suppress all riots and unlawful assemblies, carried a designed reflection upon the People there met, and was solely calculated to serve the views of Administration. They afterwards voted that the Tea brought by Captain Hall, should be returned, by Mr. Rotch, to England, in the same bottom in which it came; it was also voted, nem. con., that six persons should be appointed to give due notice to the towns in the country, when they should be required so to do upon any important occasion.

They also resolved, that if any person or persons should hereafter import any Tea from Great Britain, or if any master or masters of any vessel or vessels in Great Britain, should take the same on board to be imported to that place, until the said unrighteous Act should be repealed, he or they should be deemed by that body an enemy to his country, and that they would prevent the landing and sale of the same, and the payment of any duty thereon, and that they would effect the return thereof to the place from whence it came.

They also resolved that these their votes be printed, and sent to England, and all the sea ports in the Province. Before they separated they voted that their brethren in the country should be desired to give their assistance upon the first notice that should be given.

After the dissolution of this Assembly of the People, what is called the Committee of Correspondence, called in Committees of other towns, or other persons to join with them, kept up a military watch and guard every night, to prevent the landing any Tea, and appeared to be the Executioners of the resolves and orders passed at the aforesaid Assembly.

The consignees having retired to the Castle, the owner of the first ship that arrived was the principal person applied to, and he was sent for repeatedly by these Committees, and was frequently required to send back the ship with the Teas; he pleaded, "That he could not get a clearance at the custom-house, nor a pass for the Castle; and that if he should be able to get his ship out of the harbour, both ship and cargo would be forfeited in every part of the King's dominions." This was not thought satisfactory, and the next morning another Assembly of the People met and chose a Moderator. At this meeting it was determined, that Mr. Rotch, the owner of the ship, should demand at the custom-house, a clearance of the Teas for England, which was done the 15th, when the Collector and Comptroller refused to grant it.

He then was obliged to demand a permit from the Naval Office to pass the Castle; afterwards he was sent to the Governor to apply to him for the permit, who soon satisfied him that no permit could be granted until the vessel was regularly cleared. He returned to town that evening and reported this answer to the meeting. Immediately whereupon numbers of the People cried out a mob! a mob! left the house, repaired to the wharfs where three of the vessels lay aground, having on board three hundred and forty chests of Tea, and in two hours time it was totally destroyed. A sufficient number of People for doing the work were disguised, and these were surrounded by numbers, as well of the inhabitants of Boston, as of other towns.

The Committee observe, that many persons of consideration in the town of Boston took the lead in the proceedings of this meeting, for whose names they beg leave to refer your Lordships to the papers themselves.

On the 4th of March, 1774, the Earl of Dartmouth, acquainted the House, "That his Majesty had given directions that the several Papers received from America, relating to the Disturbances there, with regard to the Importation of Tea, should be laid before the House; and that the same would be delivered on Monday next."

The "Earl of Dartmouth acquainted the House "That "he had a Message from his Majesty, under his Royal sign manual, which his Majesty had commanded him to deliver to this House.

And the same was read by the Lord Chancellor, and is as follows; (videlicet:)

"GEORGE R.

His Majesty, upon information of the unwarrantable practices which have been lately concerted and carried on in North America, and particularly of the violent and outrageous proceedings at the town and port of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, with a view to obstructing the commerce of this Kingdom, and upon grounds and preterites immediately subversive of the Constitution thereof, hath thought fit to lay the whole matter before his two Houses of Parliament, fully confiding as well in their zeal for the maintenance of his Majesty's authority, as in their attachment to the common interest and welfare of all his Dominions, that they will not only enable his Majesty effectually to take such measures as may be most likely to put an immediate stop to the present disorders, but will also take into their most serious consideration what farther regulations and permanent provisions may be necessary to be established for better securing the execution of the laws, and the just dependence of the Colonies upon the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain.

G. R."

The Earl of Dartmouth, also, (by his Majesty's command,) laid before the House, copies of all letters, &c., received from North America, relating to the Disturbances there with regard to the Importation of Tea, with a list thereof.

It was ordered, that an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, "To return his Majesty the thanks of this House for his Majesty's gracious Message, and for the communication his Majesty hath been graciously pleased to make to this house of the several Papers relative to the present state of some of his Majesty's Colonies in North America."

"To assure his Majesty, that this House, truly sensible that the peace and good Government of the Colonies, and the preventing any obstructions there to the commerce of this Kingdom, are objects of their most serious attention, will enter upon the consideration of these Papers with an earnest desire to make such provisions as, upon mature deliberation, shall appear necessary and expedient for securing the just dependence of the said Colonies upon the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain, and for enforcing a due obedience to the laws of this Kingdom throughout, all his Majesty's dominions."

And the said Papers and his Majesty's most gracious Speech were likewise ordered to be taken into consideration on Thursday sevensnight, and the Lords summoned.

On the 11th of March, the Earl of Dartmouth (by his Majesty's command), laid before the house more Papers from America, relating to the Disturbances there with regard to the Importation of Tea, together with a list thereof; and the same was read, and ordered to lie on the table; and to be taken into consideration on Thursday next.

On the 26th March, a Message was brought from the House of Commons, with a Bill intituled, "An act to discontinue, in such manner, and for such time, as are therein mentioned, the landing and discharging, lading or shipping, of goods, wares, and merchandise, at the town and within the harbour of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America."

On the 28th of March, a Petition of Mr. Sayer, and others, natives of America, was presented and read, praying the said Bill may not pass into a law; which was ordered to lie on the table. Then the House took into consideration the several Papers in his Majesty's most gracious Message; and the said Bill was read a second time and committed.

On the 30th of March, a Petition of William Bollan, Esq., Agent for the Council of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, was presented to the House and read; and he was called in, and heard at the bar; and being withdrawn, the said Bill was read a third time and passed nem. diss.; and received the Royal assent on the following day.

No. 309.
Copy of a letter
from Gov. Hut- chinson to Earl of Dartmouth,
Boston, Dec.
15th, 1773.

No. 310.
Copy of a letter
from Gov. Hut- chinson to Earl of Dartmouth,
Boston, Dec.
17th 1773.

No. 298.
Copy of a narrative in Gov.
Hutchinson's letter of Nov.
4th, 1773.

Journals 4th
March, 1774.

March 11th.

March 25th.

March 28th.

March 30th.

No. 316.
Letter from Governor Hutchinson to Earl of Dartmouth, Boston, 28th January, 1774.

It appears to the Committee, that on the 25th of January a great number of rioters in the town of Boston, committed a most inhuman act of violence upon the person of John Malcolm, a preventive officer for the port of Falmouth, in Casco Bay, who had lately seized a vessel in that port for want of a register; no complaint of irregularity was made against him, but it was thought proper by the above rioters to punish him by tarring and feathering him, (but without stripping him,) and carrying him about in derision. This unfortunate man having afterwards been frequently hooted at in the streets, was provoked on the 25th, by a tradesman, who, he alleged, had several times before affronted him, to strike him with his cane; in consequence of which a warrant was issued against him, but the constable not being able to find him, a mob gathered about his house in the evening, and having broke his windows, he pushed through the broken window with his sword, and gave a slight scratch to one of the assailants; soon after which the mob entered his house, lowered him by a rope from an upper chamber into a cart, tore his clothes off; tarred his head and body, feathered him, and dragged him through the main street into King Street, from thence to Liberty Tree, and from thence to The Neck, as far as the gallows, where they whipt him, beat him with sticks, and threatened to hang him. Having kept him under the gallows above an hour, they carried him back in the same manner, to the extremity of the north end of the town, and returned him to his own house so benumbed by the cold, having been naked near four hours, and so bruised, that his life was despaired of. It appears that none but the lowest class of the people were suspected of having been concerned in it; and that Mr. Malcolm having for some time before been threatened by the populace with revenge for his flee and open declarations against the late proceedings, had occasionally indiscreetly given them provocation.

No. 339.
Governor Hutchinson to Earl of Dartmouth, Boston, February 14th, 1774, and enclosures.

The House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay, on the 1st of February, required the Chief Justice Oliver, and the four Judges of the Superior Court to declare, whether they would receive the grants of Assembly for their salaries, or accept their support from the Crown, and were answered by the four Judges, (they being fearful of making themselves objects of popular resentment, one of their number having been previously brought over to that consent,) "that they would receive their salaries from the Province; "but by the Chief Justice, "that he would "continue to accept his support from the "Crown." On the 11th of February, they remonstrated to the Governor, "That the said "Chief Justice Peter Oliver, having received "his salary and reward out of the revenue unjustly and unconstitutionally levied and exacted from the American Colonies, and being determined "to continue to receive it, contrary to the known sense "of the body of the People of the Province, had thereby "proved himself an enemy to its Constitution, placed "himself under an undue bias, and rendered himself disqualified to hold his office any longer." And not having procured his removal from the Governor in consequence of their remonstrance, they passed a vote to adjourn the Superior Court, which, by law, is to be held on the 15th of February, to the 22d of that month, to which the Governor refused his assent, and complains that he now considers himself as acting altogether on the defensive, avoiding his consent where he cannot justify it, destitute of any aid from any part of the Legislature or Executive Powers of Government in maintaining order, when the breach of it is caused, or pretended to be caused by such Acts of Parliament, or such exercise of his Majesty's authority, as the People are taught by their leaders to call grievances.

No. 342.
Copy of a Remonstrance of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay against the Chief Justice.

Which Report being read by the Clerk,

Ordered, that the said Report be printed.*

* In the Spring of 1774, I sat out with Mr. and Mrs. Izard, to make a tour of France and Italy: but previous to my going, I drew up a piece, entitled "A True State of the Proceedings in the Province of Massachusetts Bay," which has been attributed to Dr. Franklin, because it was left with him, as agent, to have it printed. The purpose of it was to remove the unjust and injurious impressions made by a Report of a Committee of the House of Lords, on the same subject. — Arthur Lee, Vol. I, p. 262.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

March 7th, 1774.

The Lord North acquainted the House, that he had a Message from his Majesty to this House, signed by his Majesty; and he presented the same to the House; and it was read by Mr. Speaker, (all the members of the House being uncovered,) and is as followeth, viz:

GEORGE R.

His Majesty, upon information of the unwarrantable practices which have been lately concerted and carried on in North America, and particularly of the violent and outrageous proceedings at the town of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, with a view of obstructing the commerce of this Kingdom, and upon grounds and pretences immediately subversive of the constitution thereof, have thought fit to lay the whole matter before his two Houses of Parliament, fully confiding as well in their zeal for the maintenance of his Majesty's authority, as in their attachment to the common interest and welfare of all his Dominions, that they will not only enable his Majesty effectually to take such measures as may be most likely to put an immediate step to the present disorders, but will also take into their most serious consideration what further regulations and permanent provisions may be necessary to be established, for better securing the execution of the laws, and the just dependence of the Colonies upon the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain.

G. R.

The Lord North presented to the House, by his Majesty's command, copied of the same Papers that were this day communicated to the House of Lords. [See folio 5-10.]

Mr. Rice then rose, and after remarking on the very critical situation of the whole Continent of North America, and enlarging on the imminent necessity there was for vindicating the controlling right of the British Legislature over the Colonies,* moved, "That an humble Address be "presented to his Majesty, to return his Majesty the thanks "of this House, for his Majesty's most gracious Message, "and for the communication his Majesty hath been graciously pleased to make to this House, of the several "Papers relative to the present state of some of his Majesty's Colonies in North America.

To assure his Majesty, that this House will, without "tion his Majesty's most gracious Message, together with "the Papers accompanying the same; and will not fail to "exert every means in their power, in effectually providing "for objects so important to the general welfare, as maintaining the due execution of the laws, and securing the "just dependence of his Majesty's Colonies upon the "Crown and Parliament of Great Britain."

* The presentment of the Papers was accompanied with a comment upon them, and particularly those that related to the transactions at Boston, in which the conduct of the Governor was described and applauded; and that of the prevailing faction represented in the most atrocious light. It was said that he had taken every measure which prudence could suggest, or good policy justify, for the security of the East India Company's property, the safety of the consignees, and the preserving of order and quiet in the town. Every civil precaution to prevent the mischief that followed had been used in vain. His Majesty's Council, the Militia, and the corps of Cadets, had been all separately applied to, for their assistance in the preservation of the public peace, and the support of the laws, but all without effect: they refused or declined doing their duty. The Sheriff read a Proclamation to the faction, at their town meeting, by which they were commanded to break up their Assembly; but the Proclamation was treated with the greatest contempt, and the Sheriff insulted in the grossest manner.

That he had it undoubtedly in his power, by calling in the assistance of the naval force which was in the harbor, to have prevented the destruction of the Tea; but that as the leading men in Boston had always made great complaints of the interposition of the army and navy, and charged all disturbances of every sort to their account, he with great prudence and temperance, determined from the beginning to decline a measure which would have been so irritating to the minds of the People; and might well have hoped, that by this confidence in their conduct, and trust reposed in the civil power, he should have calmed their turbulence, and preserved the public tranquillity.

Thus, said the Ministers, the People of Boston were fairly tried. -- They were left to their own conduct, and to the exercise of their judgments, and the result has given the lie to all their former professions. They are now without an excuse, and all the powers of Government in that Province, are found insufficient to prevent the most violent outrages. The loyal and peaceable People of a mercantile town. (as they affect to be peculiarly considered,) have given a notable proof to the world of their justice, moderation, loyalty, and affection, for the Mother Country, by wantonly committing to the waves a valuable commodity, the property of another loyal mercantile body of subjects, without the pretence of necessity, even supposing that their opposition to the payment of the duties could justify such a plea; as Lord Clare said, he agreed with the honorable gentleman, and hoped he should find this measure carried through with unanimity; he should therefore second the motion.

Mr. Dowdeswell. I would be very far from offering any thing on the present occasion, which might wear the most distant appearance of opposition, or a desire to impede measures of such high consideration. Nevertheless, I cannot consent to give my voice, by any means, for what I am convinced in my soul is wrong; and though I do not mean to divide the House on any particular opinion I may entertain on the subject, I wish to have it understood, that I do not approve of the present hasty, ill-digested mode of proceeding.

Governor Pownall. I think the motion for an Address extremely proper, as it can mean no more than to return thanks to his Majesty for the present communication.

Mr. Edmund Burke then moved, that the entries in the Journal of the House, of the 8th day of November, 1768, of so much of his Majesty's most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, and the Address of this House thereupon, as relates to the state of his Majesty's Government in North America, might be read:

And the same was read accordingly.

Mr. Burke also moved, that the entry in the Journal of the House, of the 9th day of May, 1769, of so much of his Majesty's most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, as relates to the state of his Majesty's Colonies in North America, might be read:

And the same was read accordingly.

Mr. Burke also moved, that the entries in the Journal of the House, of the 9th day of January, 1770, of so much of his Majesty's most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, and the Address of this House thereupon, as relates to the state of his Majesty's Government in North America, might be read:

And the same was read accordingly.

Mr. Burke also moved, that the entries in the Journals of the House, of the 13th day of November, 1770, of so much of his Majesty's most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, and the Address of this House thereupon, as relates to the state of his Majesty's Colonies in America, might be read:

And the same was read accordingly.

He next desired the Clerk to search for the supposed Resolutions that were entered into by the House, in obedience and conformity to this communication from the Throne; and none being to be found, he resumed his speech: Sir, (addressing himself to the Clerk,) I am thoroughly satisfied of your integrity and assiduity in the discharge of the station you now fill; but however high you they had nothing to do but to adhere to their own Resolutions, of non-consumption, effectually to evade the revenue laws.

It was concluded upon the whole, that by an impartial review of the Papers now before them, it would manifestly appear, that nothing could be done, by either civil, military, or naval officers, to effectuate the re-establishment of tranquillity and order in that Province, without additional Parliamentary powers to give efficacy to their proceedings. That no person employed by Government, could in any act, however common or legal, fulfil the duties of his office or station, without its being immediately exclaimed against by the licentious, as an infringement of their liberties. That it was the settled opinion of some of the wisest men, both in England and America, and the best acquainted with the affairs of the Colonies, that in their present state of Government, no measures whatsoever could be pursued that would, in any degree, remedy those glaring evils, which were every day growing to a more enormous and dangerous height. That Parliament, and Parliament only, were capable of re-establishing tranquillity among those turbulent People, and of bringing order out of confusion. And that it was therefore incumbent on every member to weigh and consider with an intention suitable to the great importance of the subject, the purport of the Papers before them, and totally laying all prejudices aside, to form his opinion upon the measures most eligible to be pursued, for supporting the supreme legislative authority, the dignity of Parliament, and the great interests of the British Empire.

This is the substance of what was urged by the Ministry upon the subject when they presented the Papers; but, as things were to be brought to a crisis with the Colonies, and very strong measures were resolved upon, it was apprehended that the merchants would be affected, and make some opposition. To prevent this, all the public papers were systematically filled with writings on this subject, painting the misconduct of the Colonies in the strongest colours, and in particular, urging the impossibility of the future existence of any trade to America, if this flagrant outrage on commerce should go unpunished.

These, with many other endeavours to the same end, were not without an effect. The spirit raised against the Americans became as high and as strong as could be desired, both within and without the House. In this temper a motion was made for an Address to the Throne.— Ann. Regis.

may stand in my estimation, I would much sooner suppose you guilty of some fatal negligence, which, now leaves us at a loss for those proceedings, than presume the House to have so far forgot its duty to its Sovereign, its country, and its constituents, as to omit what was so strongly recommended to its consideration from the Throne, as well as what was in its nature so essential to our most important interests. And even you, Sir, (to the Speaker,) I should not hesitate to charge as guilty of some improper conduct on this occasion, sooner than the House.

Mr. Solicitor General. The honorable gentleman over the way has endeavored to entertain us with an epigram, but it wants one of its most essential requisites, it seems rather too long. Foregoing therefore the wit, which here comes in somewhat unseasonably, I should imagine that the grand object we ought to labor to accomplish, on the present occasion, would be unanimity. The voice of this House should be that of one man. It is not what this Administration has done, what that has omitted, or the mixed errors of a third, that we are now to consider. It is not this man's private opinion, or that man's; the particular sentiments of this side of the House, or the other. We are arrived at a certain point, and the question now is, in what manner we shall think proper to act. The proposed Address by no means precludes us from giving our opinions freely, when the matter comes properly before us, accompanied by the necessary information. When this information is properly digested, let us proceed coolly and with deliberation. We cannot yet determine, whether the dependence insisted on in the Message, may be proper to be vindicated or asserted. We cannot even say but it may be entirely relinquished. We do not pretend to judge what sort or degree of connection may be necessary to be kept up for our mutual benefit. It perhaps may be prudent to grant them other charters, to enlarge those they already have, or to enter into commercial regulations different from those which at present bind them.

Mr. Edmund Burke. The learned gentleman, who has now held forth with so much ingenuity, and so great an appearance of candor, has left his epigram liable to the same objection which he made to mine; it is not short enough. Besides, he forgets to enumerate one of the qualities which distinguish an epigram, and which mine had: it, I think, carried a sting with it. The learned gentleman suggests (and I presume he speaks from authority) that the several Governments in America may be new-modelled; that connections different from those already existing may be formed, and commercial regulations, planned on another scale, take place. But I will venture to inform him, that an English Government must be administered in the spirit of one, or it will that moment cease to exist. As soon, I say, as the civil Government of those Colonies shall depend for support on a military power, the former will that moment be at an end. The spirit of English legislation is uniform, permanent, and universal; it must execute itself, or no power under heaven will be able to effect it.— [Here Mr. Burke entered into an historical detail of the weakness and violence, the ill-timed severity and lenity, the irresolution at one time, and the invincible obstinacy at another, the arrogance and meanness of the several Administrations, relative to their conduct towards the Americans for the last seven years. He observed, with some degree of severity, on the act of political indemnity, proposed by the learned gentleman, and his endeavors to confound all parties, as equally involved in the cause of the present confusions now prevailing in that country, contending that all dissensions, occasioned by the attempt to levy a tax there, gave way to perfect tranquillity on the repeal of the Stamp Act.]

Lord George Germain. The honorable gentleman who spoke last has taken great pains to expose the conduct of different Administrations, and to extol those who advised the repeal of the Stamp Act. For my part, however great the abilities and good intention of those gentlemen might have been, I was of opinion, that it should not be repealed, and voted accordingly. It is now contended, that that measure produced the desired effect, and that on its passing every thing was peace and tranquillity. I know the contrary was the case, and we had evidence at your bar which proved, that the Americans were totally displeased, because in the preamble to the repeal, we asserted our right to enact laws of sufficient force and authority to bind them. I am, on the whole, fully convinced, that the present situation of affairs in that country, would have never been, and that the People there must and would have returned to their obedience, if the Stamp Act had not been unfortunately repealed.

General Conway. I by no means agree with the noble Lord in any one argument he has made, or conclusion he has drawn from them. I attribute the very disagreeable situation we are now in to the weakness of our counsels, and to a series of misconduct. The noble Lord attributes the present distracted state of that country to the repeal. I believe he has neither fully attended to the immediate effects of that measure, nor to those which have followed from a contrary conduct, or he could never have given such a judgment. The operation of both are known, and I leave the House to judge, which was the healing and which the distracting measure.

Colonel Barré. I shall agree with the motion for an Address as a mere matter of course, not holding myself engaged to a syllable of its contents. A right honorable gentleman near me, (Mr. Dowdeswell,) has very fully proved on a former occasion, that our present peace establishment is a ruinous one; and that it eats up that fund which should be appropriated towards relieving our burdens or preparing for a war. I have the most authentic information, however improbable it may appear, that the expense of our military at this moment, exceeds that of France. These may be matters well worthy of our consideration in the course of our proceedings. It may induce us to make a very considerable saving in that service.

The motion for the Address was then agreed to.

Ordered, That the Address be presented to his Majesty by such members of this House as are of his Majesty's most honorable Privy Council.

II. THE BOSTON PORT BILL.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 7, 1774.

Ordered, That his Majesty's most gracious Message [folio 32,] together with the Papers this day presented to the House, [folio 5 - 10] by the Lord North, be taken into consideration on Friday morning next.

FRIDAY, March 11, 1774.

The Lord North presented to the House, by his Majesty's command:

No. 1. Extract of a Letter from Governor Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 28th January, 1774; received 8th March, inclosing,

No. 2. Extract from the Boston Gazette, of the 27th January, 1774.

Together with a list of said Papers.

And the said list was read.

Ordered, That the said Papers be taken into consideration at the same time that the Papers presented to the House by the Lord North, upon Monday last, are ordered to be taken into consideration.

The order of the day being read, for taking into consideration his Majesty's most gracious Message of Monday last, together with the Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon Monday last, and this day, by his Majesty's command,

The House proceeded to take the same into consideration. And his Majesty's most gracious Message was again read by Mr. Speaker, all the members of the House being uncovered. And the said Papers were also read.

Ordered, That his Majesty's said most gracious Message, together with the said Papers, be taken into further consideration upon Monday morning next.

MONDAY, March 14, 1774.

A Petition of William Bollan, Esq., Agent for the Council of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England, was presented to the House, and read, setting forth, that the English American Colonies were deduced and planted by the adventurers and settlers, at their expense, in foreign inhospitable lands, acquired by their vigorous efforts, made under the authority of their princes, granted with the encouragement proper for this spirited and noble enterprise; and that the several princes, by whose authority the Colonies were established, and the numerous nobles and other worthy persons, of whom several were men of the greatest accomplishments, endowed with the wisdom proper for obtaining and preserving Empire, by whose advice, aid, and concurrence, they were undertaken and advanced, were so far from understanding that these adventurers and settlers, who by their travail, expenses, labors, and dangers, should enlarge the public dominion, should thereby, contrary to natural justice, lessen their public liberties; that, from the many letters patent Royal, made and passed for obtaining and regulating new dominion, and the whole history of their settlement, it manifestly appears, it was the intent of all parties, that the settlers, and their posterity, should enjoy the same; whereupon, they became adventurers; and, inspired by their confidence therein, with their long and quiet enjoyment of their public rights, overcoming difficulties, perils, and hardships, inexpressible and innumerable, they raised the King's American Empire out of a dreary and dangerous wilderness, with so great and continual increase of commerce, that of late years it hath given employment unto two-thirds of the British shipping, with a comfortable support to no small part of the inhabitants of Great Britain, and great addition to the dignity and strength of its Naval Empire; and that, by the statute law of this Kingdom, it is clearly supposed, and in effect fully declared, that the Colonists were well entitled to the English right, and the lands they inhabit free; and that the Acta Regia of Queen Elizabeth and her successors, whereby the acquests of new dominion were made and established, and security given to the adventurers, planters, and their descendants, of the perpetual enjoyment of their public liberties, having, as the Petitioner presumes, never been laid before the House, nor the Colonies ever yet had any opportunity to ascertain and defend their invaluable rights, and the House, as the Petitioner is advised, now having under their consideration the state of the Northern Colonies, the Petitioner therefore prays, that he may be permitted to appear, and lay before the House, authentic copies of the proper Acta Regia, and to support the matters herein contained, in a manner suitable to their nature, and to the inclinations of the House.

Ordered, That the said Petition do lie upon the table.

The order of the day then being called for, the House was silent for a few minutes, when Mr. Cornwall rose, and moved that the gallery be cleared. This occasioned a vehement debate. Colonel Barré said, that if the motion was insisted on, the ladies would be obliged to withdraw. Mr. C. Fox was of the same opinion. Mr. Jenkinson contended, if it was proper to shut the gallery on Friday, against strangers, it was much more so then. Mr. T. Townshend desired that the standing order might be read, which being complied with, he observed, that it contained no exceptions, for the order recited that all strangers should be taken into custody. Mr. Grenville remarked, that it was easily seen from what quarter the present motion originated, as he could perceive that applications had been making ever since the House met, for the purpose now intended to be carried into execution, though the authors did not choose to appear publicly in it themselves.

The majority of the House did not seem to approve of the motion, when it was first made; but the interference of the Speaker at length turned the scale, and not only the gallery but all the rooms and avenues leading to it, were cleared about four o'clock.

As soon as the House had resumed its former tranquillity, it was Ordered, That the order of the day, for taking into consideration his Majesty's most gracious Message of Monday last, together with the Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 7th and 11th days of this instant, March, (by his Majesty's command,) be now read:

And the said order being read accordingly,

The House proceeded to take the same into further consideration.

And his Majesty's said most gracious Message was again read by Mr. Speaker, (all the members of the House being uncovered.) Upon which,

Lord North rose. He said it contained two propositions: the one to enable his Majesty to put an end to the present disturbances in America, the other to secure the just dependence of the Colonies on the Crown of Great Britain. His Lordship observed, that the present disorders originated in Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay; and hoped that the method he should propose to the House would be adopted. He should confine himself particularly to those disturbances which had been created since the 1st of December. He said, that it was impossible for our commerce to be safe, whilst it continued in the harbour of Boston, and it was highly necessary that some port or other should be found for the landing of our merchandise where our laws would give full protection; he therefore hoped that the removal of the custom-house officers from the town of Boston, would be thought a necessary step; and that the consequence of that would produce one other proposition, which would be, the preventing any shipping from endeavouring to land their wares and merchandise there, by blocking up the use of that harbour; he said he should move for leave to bring in a Bill for those two purposes. He observed, that this was the third time the officers of the customs had been prevented from doing their duty in the harbour of Boston; he thought the inhabitants of the town of Boston deserved punishment; he said, perhaps it may be objected, that some few individuals may suffer on this account who ought not; but where the authority of a town had been, as it were, asleep and inactive, it was no new thing for the whole town to be fined for such neglect; he instanced the city of London, in King Charles the Second's time, when Dr. Lamb was killed by unknown persons, the city was fined for such; and the case of Edinburgh, in Captain Porteous's affair, when a fine was set upon the whole; and also at Glasgow, when the house of Mr. Campbell was pulled down, part of the revenue of that town was sequestered to make good the damage. He observed, that Boston did not stand in so fair a light as either of the three before mentioned places, for that Boston had been upwards of seven years in riot and confusion, and associations had been held against receiving British merchandise so long ago. He observed that proceedings were openly carried on in the beginning of last November, to the 17th of December, denying the force or efficacy of the laws of this country, to be exerted in the harbour of Boston; that during the above time, there was not the least interposition offered by the inhabitants of the town; that at their public meetings, they had regularly given orders for nightly watches to be appointed, consisting of a large body of persons, which were to prevent the landing of the tea. As the merchandise of Great Britain, this surely was highly criminal, and a direct opposition to the execution of an Act of Parliament; and as the tea belonging to the India Company had remained twenty days in the harbour, without a clearance, they were afraid lest it should be seized by the custom-house officers, and by that means landed; they therefore destroyed it on the 20th day. That this appeared to be a violent and outrageous proceeding done to our fellow subjects, by a set of People, who could not, in any shape, claim more than the natural privilege of trading with their fellow subjects. That Boston had been the ringleader in all riots, and had at all times shown a desire of seeing the laws of Great Britain attempted in vain, in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay. That the act of the mob in destroying the tea, and other proceedings, belonged to the act of the public meeting; and that though other Colonies were peaceable and well inclined towards the trade of this country, and the tea would have been landed at New York without any opposition; yet, when the news came from Boston, that the tea was destroyed, Governor Tryon, from the advice of the People, thought that the face of things being changed since that account was sent, it would be more prudent to send the tea back to England, than to risk the landing of it. His Lordship observed that Boston alone was to blame for having set this example, therefore Boston ought to be the principal object of our attention for punishment. He proposed one clause to the Bill, which, he said, would prevent the Crown from restoring the re-establishment, till full satisfaction was made to the East India Company for the loss of their tea. He said, he did not propose it by way of tax, but by way of restitution to the injured, who were our own subjects; and to let it go forth to the world, that the Parliament of Great Britain will protect their subjects and their property; that the Crown, by that clause, will not even then be obliged to restore the custom-house, unless his Majesty is thoroughly convinced that the laws of this country will be better observed in the harbour of Boston for the future; this restitution entirely depended upon Boston, alone. He should be happy to have those, who had been the promoters of these disturbances in Boston found out, and that they might be obliged to make good the damage to the East India Company; but as those persons are unknown to us, Boston will, no doubt, endeavour to find out such persons, or pass acts of their own Assembly, to levy such money in the most equitable and just manner. We have only to request it for the East India Company. He said that this Bill was not all he meant to propose; that other parts, of more nice disquisition, will remain for the future consideration of Parliament. There, perhaps, might be other methods proposed that were better than this; but he had as yet found out none that deserved a preference. Some persons had proposed that the fishery might be taken away; but this, he observed, would affect the Colony at large. Others proposed the Straits trade; and this would be liable to the same objection. No method of punishment ever came from him, but with great regret: he therefore hoped for that unanimity in a vote of this sort, which would give strength to the measure. It had been said, that we owed this proceeding of the Americans to our own ill conduct in taxing and repealing; but if gentlemen would recollect, when the Stamp Act passed, there was hardly a dissenting voice; and when it was repealed, it had the consent of a great majority of that House; that the doctrine then laid down was, that external duties were our right, internal taxes theirs; that when the repeal of the Stamp Act took place here, the clamour raised against that Act in America had subsided; that the non-importation agreements, it was true, were not remedied, because they ceased of themselves. It was my fate, he said, to propose the repeal of the duties laid on in 1767, and to continue the Tea Duty only. The reason was, I thought, the non-importation agreements would break up of themselves; which was afterwards the case. It was proposed by some, that the Tea Duty should be taken off; it was urged by others, that it would then become a monopoly of the East India Company; nor did I think the giving up the duty to the East India Company of consequence enough to venture the struggle of the Legislative authority of this country. If they could sell tea cheaper than any other People, they would certainly have the market to themselves. His Lordship observed, that at Boston we were considered as two independent States; but we were no longer to dispute between legislation and taxation, we were now to consider only whether or not we have any authority there; that it is very clear we have none, if we suffer the property of our subjects to be destroyed. He hoped that all would agree with him, both peers, members, and merchants, to proceed unanimously to punish such parts of America as denied the authority of this country. We must, he said, punish, control, or yield to them. He did not wish to molest without an offence given; he therefore proposed this measure to day; and observed, if such conduct was followed, it would tend to cement two countries, as important to the one as the other; he therefore moved, "That leave be given to bring in a "Bill for the immediate removal of the officers concerned "in the collection and management of his Majesty's duties

"and customs from the town of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America; and to discontinue the landing and discharging, lading and shipping, of goods, wares, and merchandise, at the said town of Boston, or within the harbour thereof."

When Lord North sat down, there was a perfect silence for some minutes.

Mr. Grosvenor got up to second the motion, and condemned very much the proceedings of Boston; he said, they were all entirely owing to the repeal of the Stamp Act.

Governor Johnstone desired to know, if it was to be left to the Crown, to what part of America the custom-house should be removed?

Lord North said, a clause was intended to be inserted in the Bill to leave that matter to the Crown.

Mr. Dempster observed, that should this indemnification to the East India Company take place by way of tax, it would be collected over America, and thereby injure the property of People who had been entirely innocent of this affair; that when he spoke formerly so much about taxation in general, he meant not as to the right which we had, but only as to the prudence and policy of the measure.

Mr. Sawbridge got up to speak, but the noise of the House being great for the question, he sat down, he said, till gentlemen had done coughing, and the House had done calling for the question; that though he could not be heard now, he should sit coolly till he could. The House being little silent, he said, he always gave his genuine opinion, and he was now, and always had been, of such opinion, that this country had no right to tax America; that it might be said by some People here, that America is not represented; that if this country had a right to take a single shilling out of an American's pocket, they have a right to take the whole. He then sat down a second time, the House being noisy, and said though he could not be allowed to speak long, he could sit long; and observed, that this destruction of the tea was entirely done by a mob unarmed; and that if a requisition was to be sent to Boston to make satisfaction to the India Company he made no doubt but what it would be complied with. He said, he was against the motion.

Mr. Byng said, he only meant to ask the noble Lord one question, whether this measure was not preventing the English ships from trading there, and a punishment on ourselves?

Mr. R. Fuller said, the Bill brought in would shew whether it was a punishment upon A or B; that he should therefore reserve his opinion until he saw the Bill.

Mr. Dowdeswell rose, upon which the House thought the debate would continue; he said, he was of opinion they were going to do very great mischief, and should think it his duty to give that opinion in this early stage of the Bill: he said, this Bill was to punish the town of Boston: why will you punish Boston alone? Did not other towns send your tea back to England, and refuse the landing? Have they committed no offence? He asked, if there was any evidence of a general concurrence of the inhabitants of Boston; he said, the examples of punishment the noble Lord had mentioned, were not similar to the present case; that the counties being obliged by law to make good the loss between sun and sun, was an old established law, not made for a particular purpose; that this Bill would be an ex-post-facto law; that the case of a corporation was different from the present; the corporation chose their own officers, the magistrates of the town of Boston were chosen by the Province at large. Would the House nor hear what Boston had to say in its defence? Would the House condemn without evidence, in the absence of the parties? He should trouble the House no more at present; he thought they were going to do a wrong act, nor could he think, that the cases of London, Edinburgh, or Glasgow, could at all be brought as examples of punishment in this case. He disapproved much of the Bill, and said, he should give a negative to it.

Mr. Cavendish approved of the proposition; but hoped, if the merchants of this country could any way be injured by it, that time would be given them to come and petition.

Captain Phipps said, he felt no reason to imagine that any opposition to the Bill at Boston could be effectual: that it was no new tiring to direct and order a port for the reception of the trade of America; that harbours were in great plenty there; that all authority had been trampled upon in that country for many years; that if our subjects could not trade to Boston, they must go where they could trade with safety; that he did not attribute the disturbances to the Stamp Act, or the repeal of it. When he was in that country, he thought that that Act might have been put in execution; that the repeal might be proper. He imagined, one of the provisions that would be adopted by the House, would be to repeal the Declaratory Act, which, he said, was the most absurd and unconstitutional Act ever passed. Let America alone, and it would return of itself to obedience, and do not let us search for trifling taxes, by way of experiment, to try our power; the moment they see that taxation is not for effectually collecting of money, but for experiment only, they will always oppose you.

Lord G. Cavendish said, he was not sure but the object before the House would be prejudicial to our trade; that he looked to the mutual interest of the two countries; that they were united by proper measures, and, he hoped, they would be kept so; he wished that no idle ideas of superiority might prevail, for that country which is kept by power, is in danger of being lost every day.

Colonel Barré said, he was urged to rise to discharge his duty in not giving a silent vote upon the occasion. The proposition before the House, he could not help giving his hearty affirmative to; that he liked it, harsh as it was; be liked it for its moderation; and argued, that the noble Lord's (North) conduct would be of the same stamp throughout. He said, I think Boston ought to be punished, she is your eldest son. [Here the House laughed, and some members observed by him, that he would be a proper person to direct the admission of Irish members into the House, as he had hinted a day before that office for Mr. Rigby.] After the House had laughed heartily, he said, I mean your daughter, she is a noble prop; she gave herself that form of constitution she now has; cherish and support her. He wished to see an unanimous vote in the onset of this business; that when Boston saw this measure was carried by such a consent, they would the more readily pay the sum of money to the East India Company; that he hoped, if they did, that the Crown would mitigate the rest of their punishment; if the Crown went further, perhaps they could not do it without, as Governor Tryon observed, at the muzzle of your guns; that we had given America limited and prescribed means to acquire wealth; that he hoped they would leave the rest of the matter to themselves; that he had often thought, in the coolest hours, that America ought not to be taxed by this country. Endeavour, says he, to take the power of taxing out of their Assemblies, and it will be strongly opposed; the meant not to stick to experimental taxes; the tax of the Stamp Act was made to please this side [meaning Mr. Grenville's friends] of the House. Go, says he, to some great request at once, and if they wont comply with it, try then your power. You have been paying £4,000,000, for doing of nothing, only for teasing and scratching; I wish to see a fair decided line at once; I dont, says he, see any appearance of war at present; now is your time to try, in a civilized manner, your power over the Americans; other of your enemies are not in a condition to take part with them. I am not in office, that my advice can be taken; if I was, I should give it freely. If office comes to me, it comes as an atonement for repeated and unmerited affronts. I shall at all times speak the language of a free and disinterested member.

The motion of Lord North, for leave to bring in the Bill was then agreed to; and Lord North, Mr. Onslow, Mr. Charles Townshend, Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Solicitor General, Mr. Rice, Mr. Cooper, and Mr. Robinson, were ordered to prepare and bring in the same.

Ordered, That the further consideration of the Message and Papers be referred to a Committee of the whole House.

Resolved, That this House will, on Friday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to consider of the said Message and Papers.

FRIDAY, March 18, 1774.

The Lord North presented to the House, according to order, a Bill for the immediate removal of the Officers concerned in the collection and management of his Majesty's duties of Customs, from the town of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America; and to discontinue the landing and discharging, lading and shipping, of goods, wares, and merchandise, at the said town of Boston, or within the harbour thereof: and the same was received; and read the first time.

Resolved, That the Bill be read a second time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a second time upon Monday next.

A motion was made, and the question being put, that the said Bill be printed?

It passed in the Negative.

The order of the day being read, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to take into further consideration his Majesty's most gracious Message of Monday, the 7th day of this instant, March, together with the Papers which were presented to the House, by the Lord North, upon the 7th and 11th days of this instant, March, by his Majesty's command;

Resolved, That this House will, upon Wednesday morning next, resolve itself into the said Committee.

MONDAY, March 21, 1774.

The Bill was read a second time, and committed to a Committee of the whole House.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Wednesday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, upon the said Bill.

WEDNESDAY, March 23, 1774.

The order of the day, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the whole, on the Message and Papers, was discharged, and the Message together with the Papers, was referred to the Committee of the whole House, to whom the Bill for the immediate removal of the officers concerned in the collection and management of his Majesty's duties of Customs, from the town of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America; and to discontinue the landing and discharging, lading and shipping, of goods, wares, and merchandise, at the said town of Boston, or within the harbour thereof, is committed.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee of the whole, on the said Bill.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the Chair of the Committee.

Mr. Faller said, he intended to make an alteration in the Bill, by first substituting a fine before the blocking up the port; he should therefore propose, that the words "from and after," be left out, in order to insert one of his own. He said, that Boston was a port of the greatest consequence to this country of any existing; that the Bill before them was totally unprecedented; for that the case of Edinburgh, Glasgow, and others, that had been mentioned, was not in the least similar; that the penalty of blocking up their ports was too severe for the first offence; that when the nation came to know the contents of this Bill, he was sure they would be dissatisfied with it; that the Bostonians, upon the first resistance, will tell you they will not remit the money which they owe you; that nothing but confederacies would spring up among them; that he was strongly of opinion, that this Bill could not be carried into execution without a military force; that if we sent over a small number of men, the Boston militia would immediately cut them to pieces; that if we sent over a larger number, six or 7,000, the Americans would debauch them; and that by these means we should only hurt ourselves. I would begin, said he by an amercement; nor would I wish this Bill to take place, until they had refused the payment of it. He should apprehend, that about £15,000 would make amends to the East India Company, and would in some measure be a relief to poor Malcolm (the custom-house officer, who had been tarred and feathered.) It was always a rule in law, he said, where damages are done by unknown persons, that the community should be made to pay; he therefore wished that the House would adopt the proposition he had made.

Mr. Herbert opposed the measure which Mr. Fuller proposed. He said, the proposition would by no means relieve us, but throw us into greater difficulties; the Bostonians would certainly resist the payment of the fine; that we must then have recourse to this method. The measure proposed was still more likely to be resisted than the Bill, because the fine would be laid on all America, which would induce others to join in the opposition, who before were not concerned in it. He said, the Americans were a strange set of People, and that it was in vain to expect any degree of reasoning from them; that instead of making their claim by argument, they always chose to decide the matter by tarring and feathering; that the method now proposed in the Bill would become more a punishment by their refusal than by their compliance; that the Americans alone were the persons by whose behaviour the lenity or severity of the measure was to be proved: he therefore should agree to the Bill, in preference to the amendment proposed.

Lord North opposed the amendment. He said, however great his obligations were to the eandour and public spirit of the honorable gentleman who made the motion, yet he differed much from him in the amendment proposed. His lordship observed, that though the honorable gentleman had said it was the first offence, yet upon recollection he was very sure he would not be of that opinion, as the People at Boston had begun many years ago to endeavour to throw off all obedience to this country; that, indeed, this was the first time that Parliament had proceeded to punish them. He said, I am by no means an enemy to lenient measures, but I find that resolutions of censure and warning will avail nothing; we must therefore proceed to some immediate remedy; now is our time to stand out, to defy them -- to proceed with firmness, and without fear; they will never reform until we take a measure of this kind. Let this Bill produce a conviction to all America, that we are in earnest, and that we will proceed with firmness and vigour; that conviction will be lost, if they see us hesitating and doubting. It will be enough to shew that Great Britain is in earnest. The merchandise now will be landed at Marblehead, in the port of Salem, which is putting Boston about seventeen miles from the sea with respect to foreign trade. This restriction will be continued as long as they persist in their proceedings; it will operate severely or mildly against them, according to their behaviour; if they are obstinate, the measure will be severe; if not, mild. I believe that Boston will not immediately submit to a fine, nor to the intention of the present Bill, unless it comes attended with a mark of resolution and firmness that we mean to punish them, and assert our right; it is impossible to suppose but some of our own People may in some degree suffer a little, but we must compare those temporary inconveniences with the loss of that country, and its due obedience to us; they bear no comparison; and the preference must certainly be given to the latter. The honorable gentleman tells us, that the Americans will not pay their debts due to this country, unless we comply with their disposition. I believe things will remain much in the same state as they did upon a like occasion; they threatened us with the same thing if we did not repeal the Stamp Act; we repealed that Act, and they did not pay their debts. If this threat is yielded to, we may as well take no remedy at all; their threats will hold equally good to the fine proposed by the honorable gentleman, as to the operation of this Bill. I hope we every one feel, that it is the common cause of us all, and such an unanimity will go half way to their obedience to this Bill. The honorable gentleman tells us, that the Act will be a waste piece of paper, and that an army will be required to put it in execution. The good of this Act is, that four or five frigates will do the business without any military force; but if it is necessary, I should not hesitate a moment to enforce a due obedience to the laws of this country. The situation of the troops in that country has been such, that no magistrate or civil officer of the peace has been willing to call forth their strength on proper occasions; it will become us to find out some method whereby the military force may act with effect, and without bloodshed, in endeavouring to support and maintain the authority of Great Britain; but I hope that this Act will not, in any shape, require a military force to put it in execution: the rest of the Colonies will not take fire at the proper punishment inflicted on those who have disobeyed your authority; we shall then be nearly in a situation, that all lenient measures will be at an end if they do; but if we exert ourselves now with firmness and intrepidity, it is the more likely they will submit to our authority. If the consequences of their not obeying this Act are likely to produce rebellion, those consequences belong to them, and not to us: it is not what we have brought on, but what they alone have occasioned; we are only answerable that our measures are just and equitable. Let us continue to proceed with firmness, justice, and resolution: which, if pursued, will certainly produce that due obedience and respect to the laws of this country, and the security of the trade of its People, which I so ardently wish for.

Mr. Gascoigne said he differed much from the proposition made by Mr. Fuller, as an amendment to the Bill. Will gentlemen consider what sort of Acts of Assembly the Bostonians have lately passed? They have sent over one law, to be approved of by his Majesty, for the raising and purchasing twelve pieces of brass cannon; these, he said, were to be produced against the present proposition of amendment. Do these proceedings look with a peaceable eye to the proposition of his honorable friend? It is not, says he, the acts of tarring and feathering only that shew their displeasure to persons who have offended them; they have other modes of punishment, which they make use of by way of argument and reason; the house of any person with whom they are displeased, they immediately daub over with excrement and tar, by which means the whole family is obliged to quit it. These People, he was afraid, would hardly ever be brought to reason; for the moment a person offered to attic, the reply was, either tarring, feathering, or daubing the house. The Bill before them now, he apprehended, would bring these tarring and feathering casuists to a little better reason; nor did he imagine that a military force would be in the least necessary: as their meetings were chiefly made up of merchants, the prescribing limitations to their trade would be the only way to bring such merchants to their senses.

Mr. Montague (second son of Lord Sandwich) rose for the first time in the House. He said, that it was usual to begin by making some sort of apology to the House as a virgin orator; that he should, for the present, wave that custom, but should venture what little he had to say with as much propriety and decency as he was able. He said, he was the youngest member in the House, and therefore, might more properly lay his thoughts before the House, in order that they might hereafter be corrected by men more able, and of greater experience; and that he might at last be induced to give his vote at least rectified with some sanction of authority. He expatiated much on the load of debt which this country had incurred on obtaining America in Germany; that we had spilt the dearest and best blood we had in the attainment of it; that it had been the result and deliberation of our Councils to obtain the possession of it by any means, and at any risk whatsoever; that it had been the darling object of this country, ever since we possessed it, to cherish and nourish it as the main prop and support of the constitutional body of Great Britain; that after all these struggles for the possession of such a jewel in the crown of this country, it would be madness, it would be folly indeed to the last extremity, were we not to pursue the most determined conduct to preserve it; the giving up that gem which we have so carefully and so diligently polished, or neglecting to enforce that due obedience, and cultivate the friendship, would be as it were an actual surrender of all our right and claim. He spoke much upon the indulgence that had been shewn to the Colonies by the mother country, and observed, that we had received nothing in return but contempt of Government. Was this filial friendship? Was this that debt of gratitude which was owing to this country? Or was this that bond of mutual connection which ought to have subsisted between the mother country and its Colonies? He said, he looked upon the unity of legislation to be as essential to the body politic, as the Deity was to religion; that the disorders abroad had entirely been owing to our weak Councils at home, and condemned much the tame, unmanly proceedings of Government towards the Americans. whose acts of the Americans call now loudly for that power and that interposition which has been so long, and with so much danger to this country withheld. Let us now proceed, and consider what it is most prudent to do in the present situation of things, rebus sic stantibus. Let us consider whether the Bill before us will not be the most proper method that can be adopted. The Bill, he said, would operate as a restorative and palliative; but if the amendment was adopted, which was proposed by the honorable member, it would indeed produce a punishment, the sting of which Great Britain would in some measure feel. He expatiated also upon gentlemen in that House, who had been clamorous against the measures of Government, with a view to make themselves popular: he termed them a faction, whose very existence had arose merely as it were from the vilest excrement of the earth. He begged pardon for having detained the House so long; as they had been so kind and indulgent to him in the attention which they shewed, he would conclude with giving his hearty approbation to the Bill, as it bore on its face those distinguishing lines which ought to be the true characteristic of every British Minister, moderation and courage.

Mr. Byng. I rise, Sir, to speak my mind upon this Bill. Whatever principles I have hitherto adopted, be they right, or be they wrong, I have always adhered to; and as I live with such opinions, I hope I shall die in them. Men's characters are known after their death, and to have steadily adopted one uniform set of principles, from which I have not deviated, I hope will not be deemed factious. This Bill will prevent all importation of goods to Boston, and thereby create that association in the Americans which you have so much wished to annihilate. You are not punishing the Bostonians; you are punishing the English merchants. They, Sir, would petition this House; but they might petition it in vain. I am against both the amendment and the Bill itself; I therefore propose, that after the words, "not to import goods," the words "except of British merchants," be inserted.

Mr. Stanley said, that the place where trade and merchandise could not be landed in safety was not a port; it was therefore proper that some other port should be found out where the subjects of this country might land their merchandise in safety. I think, said he, the Bill which is now before you, as far as it can convey punishment will be unavoidable; something must be done; an immediate remedy must be had, and I think, none can be adopted so free from objection as the Bill before you.

Mr. Dempster said, that he knew of no Act to which he gave his hearty consent in a more willing manner than to that which was for the repeal of the Stamp Act; he said, our disorders had arisen from our attempts to tax the Americans by that odious Act; he was very sure the destruction of America would be certain if we should offer to tax it. Have we not, said he, given an extent of power to his Majesty, to prevent the port of Boston from ever being reinstated if the King should think proper? What limit or line is drawn to define when it will be proper, right, and just, that the port of Boston should be reinstated? He said, the dignity of Parliament was by no means concerned in the disputes with our Colonies; and that we should treat them as our children, nourish and protect them.

Lord North rose to explain. When he mentioned the threats of Boston were not to be depended upon at the repeal of the Stamp Act, he said, he did not mean to rip up wantonly the mention of the repealing the Stamp Act; that he begged to be understood in that light, only to shew, that the threats of Boston, at that time, in not paying their debts, unless the Stamp Act was repealed, were not always to be depended upon.

Mr. Ward said, he was surprised to hear that we were not now to tax America; that he was equally surprised not to find that unanimity which he expected upon the present Bill; that he himself was much against the repeal of the Stamp Act; that he had presented four petitions from his Constituents in favour of the repeal, but, that he, at the same time, told them he must be against them. He approved, he said, of this Bill, because there was no other resource left; that we were drove to the wall. He disapproved, he said, of the amendment.

Mr. Jenkinson. I think Great Britain right; I commend much the measure of the Stamp Act, and, as the honorable gentleman, (Mr. Grenville), who was the author of that Act, has been much praised and commended for another Bill, (the Election Bill,) I beg leave to throw in my hearty approbation of my honorable friend for the Stamp Act. What, said he, is to become of all your trade, if the proceedings of the Bostonians are to become a precedent to the rest of the Colonies; we have gone into a very expensive war for the attainment of America: the struggle we shall now have to keep it, will be but of little expense.

General Conway observed, that the right honorable gentleman who spoke last, had spoken with some degree of warmth, which the present debate, he apprehended, did not at all call for. I will just say one very short word, he said, in favour of the Bill. I am particularly happy in the mode of punishment that is adopted in it, but I disclaim any thing in the debate that tends to call up old sores, or create anger. I was much for the repeal of the Stamp Act, and am not ashamed to own it; nor do I think that that measure was the reason of these disorders.

Mr. R. Fuller said, we all agree, that the Bostonians ought to be punished, but we differ in the mode of it. He did not insist any farther.

The debate ended, and the blanks were filled up in the Bill. It was then read.

On the question upon the clause, which vests the power in the Crown to restore the port,

Mr. Charles Fox said, he should give it his negative, as it was trusting the Crown with that power which Parliament were afraid to trust themselves with; and if he did not succeed in his negative to this clause, he should object to the clause following, which seemed to militate against the measure adopted in this, as a restraint was then laid upon the Crown until the East India Company were made satisfaction. This Bill, he said, was calculated for three purposes; the first for securing the trade, the second for punishing the Bostonians, and the third for satisfaction to the East India Company. He said, the first clause did not give a true and exact distinction by what means, and at what period, the Crown was to exercise that power vested in it; he thought that application for relief should come to Parliament only, and that the power of such relief should not be lodged in the Crown. The quarrel, he said, was with Parliament, and Parliament was the proper power to end it; not that, said he, (in a kind of sneer) there is any reason to distrust his Majesty's Ministers, that they will not restore the port when it shall be proper; but I want to hear the reason why this clause should be so left in the judgment of the Crown, and the next clause should be so particularly granted with such a guard upon his Majesty, to prevent him from restoring the port until the East India Company shall be fully satisfied.

Captain Phipps said, that nothing surely was so proper as to allow the Crown that power which always had been attributed to it, that of mercy; his Majesty cannot deprive the People of a port without the leave of Parliament, but he may certainly give one; as to the power being lodged in the Crown, of restoring the port upon proper contrition, it is highly proper, and not in Parliament, for Parliament may not be sitting at the time when the trade of Boston ought to be restored; that power which has a right to give a port, has also a power of appointing quays and wharfs; if the power was not lodged in the Crown, quays and wharfs might be made at places totally inconvenient to the custom-house officers, and thereby prevent the collection of his Majesty's revenue.

Lord North. The test of the Bostonians will not be the indemnification of the East India Company alone, it will remain in the breast of the King, not to restore the port until peace and obedience shall be observed in the port of Boston. I am ready to admit a clause to secure those wharfs and quays which are now in use, to be the same when the port shall be restored. He observed, he had been charged with changing his opinion; that the declaration which he had made tended chiefly to the punishment of the Bostonians, and that the Bill particularly adhered to the views of making the India Company satisfaction. He believed the House would do him the justice to say, that he had declared both those measures to be his intention at the first setting out of the business, as well as to restore the trade to a proper footing; that he hoped he had never deviated from them, notwithstanding what the honorable gentleman, (Mr. Fox) had charged him with; that he should never be ashamed, at any time, to give up his opinion upon good grounds; it would be the height of obstinacy not to do it, when he saw any good reasons to guide his opinion to better judgment.

Mr. Van said, he agreed to the flagitiousness of the offence in the Americans, and therefore was of opinion, that the town of Boston ought to be knocked about their ears, and destroyed. Delenda est Carthago: said he, I am of opinion you will never meet with that proper obedience to the laws of this country, until you have destroyed that nest of locusts.

Colonel Barré said, he had very little thoughts of troubling the Committee upon this clause, but for an expression which fell from an honorable gentleman under the gallery, delenda est Carthago. I should not have risen, said he, had it not been for those words. The Bill before you is the first vengeful step that you have taken. We ought to go coolly to this business, and not trouble our heads with who passed, or who repealed the Stamp Act, or other taxes. We are to proceed rebus sic stantibus. the proposition made ye I thought a moderate one, though I must confess I hate the word fine; it is a tax, and as long as I sit here among you, I will oppose the taxing of America. This Bill, I am afraid, draws in the fatal doctrine of submitting to taxation; it is also a doubt by this Bill, whether the port is to be restored to its full extent. Keep your hands out of the pockets of the Americans, and they will be obedient subjects. I have not a doubt, but a very small part of our strength will, at any time, overpower them. I think this Bill a moderate one; but I augur that the next proposition will be a black one. You have not a loom nor an anvil but what is stamped with America; it is the main prop of your trade. Parliament may fancy that they have rights in theory, which I will answer for, they can never reduce to practice. America employs all your workmen here: nourish and protect it, that they may be supported.

The clause objected to by Mr. Charles Fox, passed in the Affirmative without any division, but one or two negatives being given against it.

The Committee then rose.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had gone through the Bill, and made several amendments thereunto.

The amendments were agreed to by the House; and several amendments were made by the House to the Bill.

Ordered, That the Bill with the amendments be engrossed.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read the third time, to-morrow morning, if the said Bill shall be then engrossed.

THURSDAY, March 24, 1774.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read the third time, to-morrow at twelve of the clock.

FRIDAY, March 25, 1774.

Mr. Crosbie offered to present a Petition of William Bollan, Esq., (styling himself agent) for and in behalf of the Council of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, and likewise of himself and the other inhabitants of the town of Boston.

And a motion being made, that the said Petition be brought up; it produced a short, but warm debate.*

And the question being put, the House divided; yeas 40, nays 170.

So it passed in the Negative.

A Petition of several Natives of North America, was presented to the House, and read; setting forth,

* In the progress of the Bill, opposition seemed to collect itself, and to take a more active part. Mr. Bollan, the agent of the Council of Massachusetts Bay, presented a Petition, desiring to be heard for the said Council, and in behalf of himself and other inhabitants in the town of Boston. The House refused to receive the Petition. It was said that the agent of the Council was not agent for the Corporation, and no agent would be received from a body corporate, except he were appointed by all the necessary constituent parts of that body - besides, the Council was fluctuating, and the body by which he was appointed could not be then actually existing.

This vote of rejection was heavily censured. The opposition cried out at the inconsistency of the House, who but a few days ago received a Petition from this very man in this very character; and now, only because they choose to exert their power in acts of injustice and contradiction, totally refuse to receive any thing from him, as not duly qualified. Were not the reasons equally strong against receiving the first as the second Petition? But what, they asserted, made this conduct the more unnecessary and outrageous, was, that at that time the House of Lords were actually hearing Mr. Bollan on his Petition, as a person duly qualified, at their bar. Thus said they, this House is at once in contradiction to the other and to itself. As to the reasons given against his qualification, they are equally applicable to all American agents; none of whom are appointed as the Minister now required they should be - and thus the House cuts off all communication between them and the Colonies, whom they are affecting by their acts. - Ann. Regis.

That the Petitioners, being natives of his Majesty's Dominions in America, and deeply interested in every proceeding of the House, which touches the life, liberty, or property, of any person or persons in the said Dominions; and that the Petitioners conceive themselves and their fellow subjects entitled to the rights of natural justice, and to the common law of England, as their unalienable birthright; that they apprehend it to be an inviolable rule of natural justice, that no man shall be condemned unheard; and that according to law, no person or persons can be judged without being called upon to answer, and being permitted to hear the evidence against them, and to make their defence; and that it is therefore with the deepest sorrow they understand that the House is now about to pass a Bill, to punish with unexampled rigour, the town of Boston, for a trespass committed by some persons unknown, upon the property of the East India Company, without the said town being apprized of any accusation brought against them, or having been permitted to hear the evidence, or to make their defence; and that the Petitioners conceive such proceedings to be directly repugnant to every principal of law and justice; and that, under such a precedent, no men, or body of men in America, could enjoy a moment's security; for if judgment be immediately to follow an accusation against the People of America, supported even by persons notoriously at enmity with them, the accused, unacquainted with the charge, and, from the nature of their situation, utterly incapable of answering and defending themselves, every fence against false accusation will be pulled down; justice will no longer be their shield, nor innocence an exemption from punishment; and representing to the House, that the law in America ministers redress for any injuries sustained there; and they can most truly affirm, that it is administered in that country with as much impartiality as in any other part of his Majesty's Dominions; in proof of this, they appeal to an instance of great notoriety, in which, under every circumstance that could exasperate the People, and disturb the course of justice, Captain Preston and his soldiers had a fair trial, and favourable verdict. While the due course of law holds out redress for any injury sustained in America, they apprehend the interposition of Parliamentary power to be full of danger, and without any precedent. If the persons who committed this trespass are known, then the East India Company have their remedy against them at law; if they are unknown, the Petitioners conceive that there is not an instance, even in the most arbitrary times, in which a city was punished by Parliamentary authority, without being heard, for a civil offence not committed in their jurisdiction, and without redress having been sought at common law. The cases which they have heard adduced, are directly against it. That of the King against the city of London, was for a murder committed within its walls, by its citizens, in open day; but even then, arbitrary as the times were, the trial was public, in a court of common law; the party heard, and the law laid down by the Judges was, that it was an offence at the common law to suffer such a crime to be committed in a walled town, tempore diurno, and none of the offenders to be known or indicted. The case of Edinburgh, in which Parliament did interpose, was the commission of an atrocious murder within her gates, and aggravated by an overt act of high treason, in executing, against the express will of the Crown, the King's laws. It is observable, that these cities had, by charter, the whole executive power within themselves; so that a failure of justice necessarily ensued from the connivance in both cases; however, full time was allowed them to discharge their duty, and they were heard in their defence. But neither has time been allowed in this case; nor is the accused heard; nor is Boston a walled town, nor was the act committed within it; nor the Executive power in their hands, as it is in those of London and Edinburgh; on the contrary, the Governor himself holds that power, and has been advised by his Majesty's Council to carry it into execution; if it has been neglected, he alone is answerable; if it has been executed, perhaps at this instant, while punishment is inflicting here on those who have not been legally tried, the due course of law is operating there, to the discovery and prosecution of the real offenders; and the Petitioners think themselves bound to declare to the House, that they apprehend a proceeding of executive rigour and injustice will sink deep in the minds of their countrymen, and tend to alienate their affections from this country; and that the attachment of America cannot survive the justice of Great Britain, and that, if they see a different mode of trial established for them, and for the People of this country, a mode which violates the sacred principles of natural justice, it must be productive of national distrust, and extinguish those filial feelings of respect and affection which have hitherto attached them to the Parent State. Urged therefore by every motive of affection to both countries, by the most earnest desire, not only to preserve their own rights and those of their countrymen, but to prevent the dissolution of that love, harmony, and confidence between the two countries, which were their mutual blessing and support, beseech the House not to pass the Bill.

Ordered, That the said Petition do lie upon the table.

The order of the day being read, the Bill was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. Charles Fox, then proposed as an amendment to the Bill, to leave out the following clause: -

"And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That whenever it shall be made to appear to his Majesty in his Privy Council, that peace and obedience to the laws shall be so far restored in the said town of Boston, that the trade of Great Britain may safely be carried on there, and his Majesty's customs duly collected, and his Majesty in his Privy Council shall adjudge the same to be true, it shall and may be lawful for his Majesty, by proclamation or order of Council, to assign and appoint the extent, bounds and limits, of the port or harbour of Boston, and of every creek or haven within the same, or in the islands within the precincts thereof; and also to assign and appoint such and so many open places, quays, and wharfs, within the said harbour, creeks, havens, and islands, for the landing, discharging, lading and shipping, of goods, as his Majesty, his heirs, or successors, shall judge necessary and expedient; and also to appoint such and so many officers of the customs therein, as his Majesty shall think fit; after which it shall be lawful for any person or persons to lade or put off from, or discharge and land upon, such wharfs, quays and places, so appointed within the said harbour, and none other, any goods, wares, and merchandise, whatever. Provided always, That if any goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be laden or put off from, or discharged or landed upon, any other place than the quays, wharfs, or places, so to be appointed, the same, together with the ships, boats and other vessels, employed therein, and the horses or other cattle, and carriages, used to convey the same, and the person or persons concerned or assisting therein, or to whose hands the same shall knowingly come, shall suffer all the forfeitures and penalties imposed by this or any other Act, on the illegal shipping or landing of goods."

And the question being put, that the said clause stand part of the Bill?

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Mr. Fox objected to another clause: he had objected to these two clauses in the Committee. He said, he now made his objections, in order that it might appear on the Journals that somebody did object to them. He then moved as a further amendment to the Bill, to leave out the following clause: -

"Provided, also, And it is hereby declared, and enacted, that nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed, to enable his Majesty to appoint such port, harbour, creeks, quays, wharfs, places, or officers, in the said town of Boston, or in the said bay, or islands, until it shall sufficiently appear to his Majesty, that full satisfaction hath been made by or on behalf of the said town of Boston, to the United Company of the East Indies, for the damage sustained by the said Company, by the destruction of their goods sent to the said town of Boston, on board certain ships or vessels as aforesaid, and until it shall be certified to his Majesty in Council, by the Governor or Lieutenant Governor of the said Province, that reasonable satisfaction hath been made to the officers of his Majesty's revenue, and others, who suffered by the riots and insurrections above mentioned, in the month of November."

And the question being put, that those words stand part of the Bill?

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

On the question, that this Bill do Pass:

Mr. Dowdeswell said, he rose to give his dissent to passing the same into a law; that he had not the least degree of timidity in rising to oppose it; that he always thought the proposition totally unjust and unfair. By the Bill, a person is to understand, that the commerce of all his Majesty's subjects is interrupted; and, said he, I cannot give my assent to it, until I hear the complaints from the different manufactures of iron, leather, wool, &c., and the merchants of this country, which complaints, I imagine, the hurry of passing this Bill totally prevents. It is not, says he, that any other goods are interrupted in the port of Boston, but those which are charged with a duty from hence. Look to the consequences of this Bill; you are contending for a matter which the Bostonians will not give up quietly. I remember, said he, when it was held a doctrine in this House, by persons of great and extensive knowledge, that we had no right to tax America. There is now no such opinion; the question was then, "Whether with the profits which we receive from all our manufactures exported hence, it would be a wise measure to tax America?" What is the reason, said he, that you single out Boston for your particular resentment? Have there been no other towns in America which have disobeyed your orders? Has not Philadelphia, New York, and several other Provinces, sent back their tea? Has not the East India Company suffered nearly as much damage from the tea being sent back, as indeed where they have landed it? Charlestown is the only place where they have suffered the tea to be landed; and what have they done? They have put it into a damp cellar, and the whole has become rotten and useless. You find yourselves much at a loss about this Bill, and are hurt, because the innocent are likely to be involved in the same punishment with the guilty. You are now going to censure them, in the same manner as was done in the case of Edinburgh and Glasgow, where the People at large were to suffer for the neglect of their Magistrates. There is a great difference between the Magistrates of Edinburgh, and those of Boston; those at Edinburgh are chosen by the People; those at Boston are not; they are appointed by the Council, and the Council are elected by the Province at large. You are going to appoint a new port, where there are neither sufficient wharfs, quays, or ware-houses for carrying on business. You hereby punish the British merchants much more severely than the People of Boston. The folly and childishness of carrying on such a project is certainly very evident. All that you have effected, is to carry your merchandise seventeen miles further from the town of Boston, so that the Bostonians shall be obliged to be at an additional expense in conveying their merchandise from the port of Salem by land. You ask why the Americans do not pay their debts? If you stop the exports, you will of course stop the payment of those debts. Now, Sir, let us consider how this Bill is founded upon principles of justice; if Parliament continually passes Bills, sometimes to punish the person, at other times the places, you will, by and by, have your hands fully employed; you will soon inflame all America, and stir up a contention you will not be able to pacify. The passing this Bill in a week or so, does not give time to the injured persons in America to petition this House for redress. I rejoice, that you have at least had one petition from the natives of America residing in this country: the language of that petition bears the face of a well written, unanswerable argument; it is no common petition: it is the strong and pathetic language that tells their own feelings, and those of their fellow subjects in America. I wish to hear some arguments offered against what is contained in it, for it will be said, both here and in America, that such reasons and arguments deserve an answer.

"Mr. Welbore Ellis said, he did not rise to answer the honorable gentleman to the first part of what he advanced, being arguments which had, in a former debate, been urged and sufficiently replied to. He said this behaviour of the Americans was the most direct opposition to the laws of this country that could possibly be conceived. If this country, said he, has not a right to pass a tax on America, they have no right to pass any law whatsoever relative to it. The present Bill confirms no tax; it enacts none; it imposes none; the tax upon tea was introduced to prevent tea being smuggled into that country. The honorable gentleman (Mr. Dowdeswell) has said, this Bill was unjust and unwise. I differ much from him, and think it both just and wise. This Bill makes it expedient for them to do their duty, and puts the Bostonians upon the inquiry to find out who were the parties that committed this riot; the persons or magistrates in the town, not inquiring into the proceedings, are much to blame, and I cannot think this Bill in the least unwise. Can it, Sir, be unwise, unless it is unwise to maintain the authority of this country, and to punish those who have been the aggressors against its laws? The honorable gentleman, he said, had mentioned that others were guilty, and why were they not punished? There is, said he, a different degree of crime in each of them, and some are more to blame than others. It is treason in the Bostonians, and can only be deemed a high crime and misdemeanor in the others; but, in my mind, it appears to be wise, first to single out Boston as the principal ringleader of the whole disturbance, and begin this punishment there, in order to see what effect the proceedings will have; I therefore think this Bill wise, prudent, and just.

Mr. Edmund Burke. I trouble you, Sir, in the last stage of this Bill, because I would not appear petulant when my objections run to the whole of it. I never knew any thing that has given me a more heart-felt sorrow than the present measure. This Bill is attempted to be hastened through the House in such a manner, that I can by no means assent to it; it is to be carried by force and threats into execution; and you have even refused to hear Mr. Bollan, the agent, declaring him to be no agent for Massachusetts Bay, or not properly authorized by them to present such petition; you have not now one left in England to be heard in behalf of any of the Colonies; the only obstruction that this Bill has had, has been owing to its own vis inertie; but persons who oppose this Bill, are immediately put to the same kind of punishment in the public Papers which offenders in America are. Look, Sir, into the public Papers, you will see Cinna, and a thousand other Roman names, throwing out their invectives, and tarring and feathering all those who dare oppose the Bill. I suppose I shall reap my share for this opposition: but, Sir, at all events, I will enter my protest against this Bill, and will mount my little palfrey, and speak of the injustice which the Bill contains with the greatest confidence. The grievance which is stated in the Papers before you on the table appears to be an universal resistance from all America against any goods or merchandise that shall be loaded with taxes. - He desired that that part of General Haldiman's letter, declaring the resolution of the Americans not to submit to receive goods with duty upon them, might be read; he read the extract he had made in his place; he said, the whole meeting in the town of Boston consisted of six or seven hundred men of the first rank and opulent fortune in the place; that the proceedings were conducted with the utmost decency. He said, this was not a meeting of mean persons, but that the acts of resistance were all countenanced by universal consent. Observe, said he, that the disturbances are general; shew me one port in all America where the goods have been landed and vendid; the distemper is general, but the punishment is local, by way of exchange. Whether it will be effectual or not, I do not know; but, Sir, let me paint to this House the impropriety of a measure like this; it is a remedy of the most uncertain operation; view but the consequence, and you will repent the measure; give orders at once to your Admirals to burn and destroy the town; that will be both effectual, proper, and moderate, and of a piece with the rest of your proceedings, eventus tristis. One town in proscription, the rest in rebellion, can never be a remedial measure for general disturbances. Have you considered whether you have troops and ships sufficient to enforce an universal proscription to the trade of the whole Continent of America? If you have not, the attempt is childish, and the operation fruitless. Only, Sir, see the consequence of blocking up one port; for instance, that of Virginia Bay; which, if you do, you will destroy the tobacco trade, and thereby bring, as it were, a certain ruin on your own merchants at Glasgow and Edinburgh. This Bill has been thought a vigorous, but not a rigorous punishment. It is my opinion that you might even punish the individuals who committed the violence, without involving the innocent: I should approve much of that; but, Sir, to take away the trade from the town of Boston, is surely a severe punishment. Would it not be a rigorous measure to take away the trade of the Thames for instance, and direct the merchandise to be landed at Gravesend? I call this Bill most unjust, for is it not fundamentally unjust to prevent the parties who have offended from being heard in their defence? Justice, Sir, is not to be measured by geographical lines nor distances. Every man, Sir, is authorized to be a magistrate, to put a stop to disturbances which he perceives to be committed against his Majesty's peace; but did you expect that the People who were not present at such disturbances, would be equally punished for not aiding and assisting in putting an end to those riots which they never saw or heard of? This, Sir, is surely the doctrine of devils, to require men to be present in every part of America wherever a riot happens: but this Bill involves those who have never in the least been guilty; and then you again say, that the disturbances which did happen ought to have been immediately put a stop to by the People of Boston, and that they were bound to preserve the good order of the town; but, Sir, I have too much reverence for the image of God to conceive that the honorable gentleman (Mr. Welbore Ellis) does really and truly imbibe such a doctrine. He then read part of Colonel Leslie's letter, No. 45, wherein the Colonel said, that neither the Governor, nor the Council, nor any of the custom-house officers, have ever yet applied to me for any assistance; if they had, I could most certainly have put a stop to all their riot and violences, but not without some bloodshed, and firing upon their town, and killing many innocent People. Why, Sir, did not the Governor at once send for this assistance? Was it contrary to, or do you think he would have broke through his instructions, if he had endeavoured, by such ways and means, to preserve the public peace, and prevent violences from being committed? The fault of this Governor ought not to be the means of punishment for the innocent. You have found that there was no Government there. Why did not the Governor exercise his authority? Why did not the ships execute their duty? What was the reason they did not act? Why is not Mr. Hancock, and the chief People, who are known, punished, and not the innocent involved with the guilty in one universal calamity? You, surely, Sir, cannot have power to take away the trade of a port, and call it privilege! Why was not your force that was present applied to quell the disturbances? How came they to be so feeble and inactive? How are you sure that the orders and frigates which you now send will act better? I cannot think this, by any means, a prudent measure, in blocking up one port after another; the consequence will be dreadful, and I am afraid destructive; you will draw a foreign force upon you, perhaps, at a time when you little expect it; I will not say where that will end; I will be silent upon that head, and go no further; but think, I conjure you, of the consequence. Again, Sir, in one of the clauses of the Bill you proscribe the property of the People to be governed and measured by the will of the Crown. This is a ruinous and dangerous principle to adopt. There is an universal discontent throughout all America, from an internal bad Government. There are but two ways to govern America; either to make it subservient to all your laws, or to let it govern itself by its own internal policy. I abhor, the measure of taxation where it is only for a quarrel, and not for a revenue; a measure that is teasing and irritating without any good effect; but a revision of this question will one day or other come, wherein I hope to give my opinion. But this is the day, then, that you wish to go to war with all America, in order to conciliate that country to this; and to say that America shall be obedient to all the laws of this country. I wish to see a new regulation and plan of a new legislation in that country, not founded upon your laws and statutes here, but grounded upon the vital principles of English liberty.

Mr. Grey Cooper said, he could not agree in the doctrines laid down by the honorable gentleman who spoke last, that the Bill was unjust or unwise; it was, in his opinion a temporate and prudent law, to preserve the trade of this country, and protect the peace of America; he was sorry to find that honorable gentleman in particular should be upbraiding Government for not making use of military force; nor should he have expected that such a proposition would have come from him. It has been said that the Americans cannot be heard in their own defence before this measure takes effect. Look at the papers on the table, where you see the resolutions of their public meetings ordered to be sent over here, that we might be acquainted with them. After such a defiance, can it be expected, that they would come over here to be heard, and say any thing at your bar but what they had already told you, and sent to you expressly in the papers on your table, where they refuse a direct obedience to all your laws? It is asked again, Sir, whether the individuals are not to be punished when they are found out? I apprehend, Sir, that this measure by no means excuses the guilty persons from being brought to punishment. The Black Act of this cotuntry is a hundred are fined in the penalty of £200 for not suppressing the offences mentioned in that Act, such as cutting down trees, breaking banks, and other misdemeanors. The whole hundred, in this case, are not present at the commission of the crime, yet they are punished for it; nor does that fine excuse the criminal from being particularly punished, where the aggressor can be found out. The Bill before you is a law for the protection of trade; it is a mild measure, if they obey it; if they oppose it, the result of it will only make the punishment. The resolves at Boston I consider as direct issue against the Declaratory Act; they clearly proved a determined resolution in the Americans to oppose every law of this country; but the Bostonians alone have carried into execution what others have only resolved. This Bill, Sir, I look upon to be the act of a father chastising his son on one line, and restoring the trade and peace of America on the other, and therefore I highly approve of the measure.

Mr. Anthony Bacon said there was not a port in New-England but what had sufficient ware-houses for the reception of all the merchandise of Great Britain.

Governor Pownall said, that he had always been of opinion, that internal taxes could not legally be laid, but that he agreed in external ones; that there wanted a revision of the general laws relating to America; he said he wished that the Tea Duty was repealed, but he did not think this the proper time or season to adopt the measure. There ought also to be a review of the Governments; the Americans have a real love for Government; they love order and peace, [here the House laughed;] he said, I do aver that they love peace, for I look upon this to be the act of the mob, and not of the People, and wait but a little it will regulate itself.

The Lord Advocate said. the question had been very fully argued, and he should give his hearty affirmative to the Bill.

Lord John Cavendish spoke a few words against the Bill, and said, he should give his negative to its passing in its present form.

Mr. T. Townshend spoke also against the Bill, and said, he should be against its passing into a law.

Mr. Sawbridge said, the offence of destroying the tea was done in the night time, and not tempore diurno; that this was an ex-post-facto law, and that the law of the Black Act, which had been mentioned, was not in force before the offence was committed; that as far as that, or any other precedent participated of this law, so far they were most iniquitous; that it was an act of cowardice in the Minister to come to Parliament to ask for that which had been allowed, and was in the power of the Crown to order and direct: he meant, he said, the removal of the custom-house officers, and other things mentioned in that Act, the preservation of the peace, and the executive authority in that country. All these might have been done by the Crown, without applying to Parliament, but the Minister was timorous of proceeding himself, and wanted to skulk behind the protection of the Legislature.

Lord North said, he rose to explain himself, and was sorry to commit an offence to the House at that hour of the night, and especially as it would be to the disturbance of the neighbourhood, who are totally innocent, [alluding to the charge that had been made by Mr. Sawbridge, that the innocent People in the town of Boston would suffer equally with the offenders;] nor am I, Sir, ashamed, at any time to take shelter under the Legislature. The honorable gentleman says, the Minister might do certain things, which are to be enacted in that Bill, without application to Parliament, such as changing the custom-house officers, ordering the peace to be preserved, and a better regulation of internal Government to take place; but that they could not block up a port, or make it illegal for the landing, lading, and shipping of goods in any place heretofore granted, without the aid of Parliament. I will not undertake to say what will be the consequence or event of this measure; I am strongly of opinion it will be salutary and effective; but I will say, that it was not in the power of the Minister to sit still and take no measure. I believe, Sir, that no prosecution in that country, according to its present form of Government, will be effectual; I was therefore much for adopting the measure proposed. It certainly may be right to direct a prosecution against those individuals who may be found offenders; but can the honorable gentleman be of opinion, from what he has seen and read from the papers on the table, that any obedience will be paid to such a prosecution, or that it will be in the least degree effective? This measure will certainly not excuse the individual offenders, any more than the fine upon a county, between sun and sun, will excuse the person who committed the robbery. This is no ex-post-facto law; they committed the offence of destroying the tea, knowing and declaring at the same time, the law which they offended against. The Committee of Boston, Sir, gave the directions for the destruction of the tea, and have declared their resolution of resistance to the obedience of our laws; yet we are desired to hear them; to hear those very persons who have declared to you, and to all the world, that they intended this violence against the law; therefore, it is said, Sir, by some honorable gentlemen in this House, that we ought not to proceed in this measure till we have heard these very People, who are the great offenders, say at your bar, in their defence, that Great Britain has no authority to tax them: they can make no other plea; they can make no other declaration than what they have already done; but, Sir, we must adopt the measure, let what will be the consequence. I hope and conclude it will be a happy one. Is this then the best measure in the present case? It certainly is: I hear of none other preferable, or I would adopt it. It is to tell America, that you are in earnest. If we do not mean totally to give up the matter in question, we must assert our right at this time, while we can, whilst it is in our power. Instead of our treating America like a foreign enemy, America has treated us like one; disavowing our authority, and declaring against all obedience to the laws of Great Britain. We are threatened again, by one honorable gentleman, lest a foreign enemy should, in this emergency, start up - he stopped short, and said he would say no more upon that head. I suppose he meant that this foreign enemy would lay hold of America during our contest; Time of peace, Sir, is the only season for adopting regulations. This is the crisis, then, in which that contest ought to be determined. Another honorable friend of mine is for repealing the Tea Duty. I am of opinion, Sir, that repealing any measure whatever, at this moment, would stamp us with a degree of timidity, and would produce a totally different effect from what I expect this measure will do.

Governor Johnstone, I find so much difficulty in pronouncing my sentiments at any time, that unless the House is kindly disposed to hear me at this late hour, I shall patiently sit down, because I am conscious it will require their greatest indulgence, to enable me to express myself in a manner worthy of their attention. A modesty becoming my situation prevented me from offering my opinion before, when I saw men of so much superior ability rising from the beginning of the debate.

It may appear arrogant in a member so inferior, as I confess myself to be, to offer objections to a Bill so extensive in its consequences, under every consideration, especially after it must have been so maturely considered, in every article, by men so distinguished by their talents, and high stations in office, besides the general applause which has followed the Bill in its rapid progress through this House: nevertheless, though naturally diffident of my opinion, when I had the good or bad fortune (I don't know which to term it) of prognosticating to the Chairman of the East India Company the consequences of sending this tea, on their own account, to America, and that the event has literally fulfilled my words, as it is well known to some members now in my eye, it makes me more confident in warning the House of what I apprehend will be the consequences of this Bill.

I told the Chairman of the East India Company, first in conversation, on asking my opinion, and afterwards by letter, that the evidence might appear in the progress of things; that I conceived the East India Company exporting tea, on their own account, was, under every consideration of their situation, and institution, WRONG, but, under the present discontents and disputed matters of Government in America, CRIMINALLY ABSURD because they were presenting themselves as the butt in the controversy, where they would probably come off with the loss of the whole. The event has justified my prediction; for whatever repayment the Company may obtain from the town of Boston, under these cruel coercive measures now proposed, (the effect of which I still doubt,) yet the Company must remain great losers, even if the other Provinces, equally culpable, are made to refund the loss arising from their conduct, because it was not supplies of cash, at a distant period, the Company wanted, but an IMMEDIATE SUPPLY, to answer a temporary exigency, which a combination of the enemies of the country had produced.

I now venture to predict to this House, that the effect of the present Bill must be productive of a General Confederacy, to resist the power of this country. It is irritating, tempting nay, inviting men to those deeds by ineffectual expedients, the abortions of an undecisive mind, incapable of comprehending the chain of consequences which must result from such a law. I am not one of those who believe that distant Provinces can be retained in their duty by preaching or enchantments; I believe that FORCE or POWER, conducted with WISDOM, are the means of securing regular obedience under every establishment; but that such force should never be applied to any degree of rigour, unless it should carry the general approbation of mankind in the execution. However much such approbation may prevail at the particular moment in this House, it is impossible to believe the sense of Great Britain, or the sense of America, can go to the punishing a particular town, for resisting the payment of the Tea Tax, which is universally odious throughout America, and is held in ridicule and contempt by every thinking man in this country. The question of taxing America is sufficiently nice to palliate resistance, if the subject had never been litigated in this country; but after the highest characters in this State had declared against the right of this country to impose taxes on America, for the purpose of revenue; after the general voice of the Senate had concurred in repealing the Stamp Act, upon that principle; after those men, who had maintained these doctrines, had been promoted by his Majesty to the first stations in the administration of civil and judicial affairs, there is so much mitigation to be pleaded in favor of the Americans from those circumstances (allowing them in an error at present) that every man must feel the height of cruelty, by enforcing contrary maxims, with any degree of severity, at first, before due warning is given.

It is in vain to say Boston is more culpable than the other Colonies. Sending the ships from thence, and obliging them to return to England, is a more solemn and deliberated act of resistance than the outrage committed by persons in disguise in the night, when the ship refused to depart. That of blocking up the harbour of Boston, to prevent the importation of British manufactures, or the exportation of goods, which are to pay for them, is a measure equally as absurd as if the Parliament here, upon the resistance which was made to their resolution, by the riots at Brentford, and other disturbances in the county of Middlesex, had decreed by way of punishment, that the freeholders should have been prohibited from sowing of wheat. For whose benefit do the inhabitants of Boston toil and labour? The springs in the circle of commerce bear so nicely on each other, that few men can tell by interrupting one, the degree and extent to which the rest may be exposed. By excluding the importation of molasses, and the exportation of that spirit which is distilled at Boston, the whole Guinea trade will be affected, and in consequence, the sugar trade, that depends upon it. In extending this kind of punishment to the other Colonies, every one must see the danger; and yet, if it can be approved for one, the same arguments will hold good to approve or reject it respecting the other; but let any man figure to himself the consequences to this country, if a similar punishment was applied to the Colony of Virginia; £300,000 a year diminution in revenue, besides the loss of all the foreign contracts, and perhaps of that beneficial trade forever. Notwithstanding, the general approbation Which has been given to this Bill, and the loud applauses which have been re-echoed to every word of the noble Lord in explaining it, yet no man will be bold enough to say, that this partial punishment is a remedy for the general disease. And yet without knowing what is to follow, no man can be vindicated (even supposing the Bill right in part.) for giving his assent to it. Those gentlemen who are in the secrets of the Cabinet, and know how assuredly every proposition from them is adopted by this House, may be excused for their sanguine acclamations in favour of the measure, but the general mass, who must be equally ignorant with myself, of what is to follow, can have no excuse for giving their assent so readily for punishing their fellow subjects in so unprecedented a manner, and their eager zeal serves only to shew how ready they are to obey the will of another, without exercising their own judgment in the case. If the Government of this country is resisted in America, my opinion is, instead of removing the seat of Government in the Colony, and forcing the elements to bend to our will, (which is impossible) that an effectual force should be carried to the heart of the Colony resisting, to crush rebellion in the bud, before a General Confederacy can be formed. In the present case we abandon the Government, and drive the inhabitants to despair, leaving the multitude a prey to any ambitious spirit that may arise. For my own part, I am convinced, from experience in the Colonies, that good Government may be conducted there upon rational grounds, as well as in this country; but the power and means of governing, rewards and punishments, are taken from your supreme executive Magistrate in every sense, and then you are surprised that all order and obedience should cease. The Colonies can only be governed by their Assemblies, as England by the House of Commons; the Patent Offices, as well as those in the Customs, which were formerly given at the recommendation of the Governors, to men supporting Government, and residing in the Provinces, are now in reversion three or four lives deep, to men living in this country. The command of the military, which was another great source of respect and obedience, is likewise taken from the Governor: so that in truth he remains an insignificant pageant of state, fit only to transmit tedious accounts of his own ridiculous situation: or, like a Doctor of the Sorbonne, to debate with his Assembly about abstract doctrines in Government.

I am far from wishing to throw any blame on Governor Hutchinson, or to condemn him, like the town of Boston, unheard. The absence of the man and the general clamour against him, will restrain me from saying many things respecting his conduct, which appear reprehensible; but I cannot admit a passage in the speech of a noble Lord to pass unnoticed. His Lordship alleges, "That the Governor "could not apply to the Admiral in the harbour, or to the "Commanding Officer of the troops in the castle, for the "protection of the custom-house officers, as well as teas in "question, without the advice of his Council." But I beg leave to inform the noble Lord, as I served in that station myself that there is a volume of instructions to every Governor on this subject, whereby he is commanded under the severest penalties, "To give all kind of protection to trade "and commerce, as well as to the officers of his Majesty's "Customs, by his own authority, without the necessity "of acting through his Council." Nor can I conceive a possible excuse for the destruction of those teas, while two men-of-war lay in the harbour, without the least application having been made to the Admiral for protection, during so long a transaction.

The first essential point in those disputes which are now likely to become so serious by the weakness of Administration, in this country, in following no connected plan, either of force or of favour, but constantly vibrating between the two, is to put ourselves in the right, and for this purpose I would recommend the immediate repeal of the Tea Duty, which can be vindicated upon no principles, either of commerce or policy. Men may allege this would be giving up the point; but if we have no better points to dispute upon, I am ready to yield the argument. Raising taxes in America for the purpose of revenue, I maintain to be unnecessary and dangerous. A Stamp Act, as a measure of police, varied for the different Governments, and leaving the revenue raised thereby to be appropriated by the respective Legislatures, I hold to be a measure of the highest efficacy, for maintaining a due obedience to the authority of this country, and prolonging that dependence for ages to come. How far it can be executed, after what has already passed, I am rather diffident, but of this I am certain, that in case Great Britain is deprived of executing a measure of that nature, which by pervading every transaction, secures the execution in itself, she has lost one of the greatest engines for supporting her influence throughout the Empire without oppression. Some men who are for simplifying Government to their own comprehensions, will not allow they conceive that the supreme legislative authority shall not be paramount in all things, and taxation being fully comprehended in legislation, they argue, that the power of the one must necessarily follow that of the other; and yet we find mankind possessed of privileges which are not to be violated in the most arbitrary countries. The Province of Languedec is a striking example in refutation of the doctrines respecting taxation, which are held by such narrow observers. The Kingdom of Ireland in another instance in our dominions. There is not one argument which can apply for exempting Ireland from taxation by the Parliament of Great Britain, that does not equally protect the Colonies from the power of such partial judges. Every man should now call to his remembrance by what obstinate infatuation Philip II, came to lose the United Provinces. Can it be supposed that in a nation so wise as Spain was at that time, that no man perceived the injustice and futility of the measure in dispute? But I can easily suppose, from the pride of authority, where our vanity is so much flattered, that no man durst venture a proposition for receding from that cruel measure, after it had been resisted by violence.

These are the general heads.

The particular objections to the Bill are, first for continuing the punishment, "until satisfaction shall be made "to the India Company," without stating the amount, or what that satisfaction shall be. Next, "until peace and "good order shall be certified to be restored," when it is impossible, as to the subject in dispute, that such certificate can ever be granted, because the custom-house officers are removed, and all trade and commerce prohibited. The numerous disputes and litigations which must necessarily arise in carrying this law into execution, on contract made by parties before they could be apprized of it, and the despatch of ships in harbour, under the limited time, without any exception for the desertion of seamen, or wind and weather, is altogether melancholy to consider! The power given to the Admiral or Chief Commander, to order the ships returning from foreign voyages, to such stations as he shall direct, is wild, vexatious, and indefinite. That of permitting his Majesty to alter the value of all the property in the town of Boston, upon restoring the port, by affixing such quays and wharfs as he only shall appoint, for landing and shipping of goods, is liable to such misrepresentation and abuse, that I expect to see every evil follow the exercise of it, and it must create infinite jealousies and distraction among the People.

I am therefore of opinion, that this Bill, both from the principle and manner in which it has been passed, and from forerunning the general regulations that are intended, and which ought at least to accompany it, instead of quieting the disturbances in Boston, it will promote them still further, and induce the inhabitants to cut off all communication with your ships of war, which may be productive of mutual hostilities, and most probably will end in a GENERAL REVOLT.*

To the Printer of the NORFOLK INTELLIGENCER.

Remarks on Governor Johnstone's Speech in the House of Commons.

SIR: - Political debates, from the misguided rage of the Speakers, often rise to an enormous height; indeed, it requires a long course of experience to determine the real interest of the State in every important point that occurs. The loudest cavillers against the measures of Government after running their splendid career, become lordly effigies of State, and exhibit a striking portrait of the complexion of the times. In the British annals, the transformation of violent zealots for public liberty into its most inveterate enemies, clearly proves that the gilded top for which ambition pants, has an irresistible attraction;

Mr. Sawbridge said, he rose again, just to blame the Minister for being timid in doing his duty without the authority of Parliament. He was very certain, he said, that there were three things in the Bill; that there was this, and this, and this thing, which the Minister might have done without skulking behind the Legislative authority for shelter; that indeed the fourth, of stopping up their port, he believed it was proper to apply to Parliament for; but he was very certain that this, and this, and this, might have been done without the aid of Parliament.

Lord North. Sir, I have been formerly blamed for being the only ostensible Minister of this country. I am now charged with not coming forth and doing the duty of an acting Minister without applying to Parliament. I never, Sir, am ashamed to have the sanction and direction of Parliament as the rule and guide of my conduct; but, Sir, if I had done, as the honorable gentleman who spoke last, wishes me to have done, this, and this, and this, I had done nothing, unless I had come to Parliament for that, and that, then the main object, what the honorable gentleman thinks I ought to have come to Parliament for, and without that, he allows I should do nothing; but however he may wish me to have done this, and this, and this, of my own head as a Minister, the honorable gentleman, (fond as he is, and always has been, of prerogative,) would have disagreed to my proceeding, and objected against it.

The Bill was then Passed without a division.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

SATURDAY, March 26, 1774.

A Message was brought up from the House of Commons, by Mr. Cooper, and others,

With a Bill intituled, "An Act to discontinue, in such

but the douceurs of the Court have been dealt with so cautious a hand of late, and so accurate an inspection into the merits of the candidates, that many officious pretenders have retired into the vale of discontent, dispirited, unbefriended, and defeated; common observers do not readily trace the various transactions and refinements which the patriotic character undergoes before it can be ripened into modern maturity; a retrospect into certain promotions will confirm the truth of this assertion, and it is as demonstrable to the full, that the twinges of the political gout are as severe and incurable as the corporal.

I shall now, Sir, with steady attention garble those passages in the honorable gentleman's speech, which never would have attracted lily notice, but for the influence it serves to have laid over the minds of some very narrow connoisseurs here. It is with the strictest deference to the sage politicians in this part of the world, that I offer a few remarks. I will then first warn those who entertain so high an opinion of it, to weigh maturely the arguments it contains; they will then find other doctrines blended with those they so warmly adopt, rather unfavourable to the sticklers for a commonwealth. The elegant modesty of his exordium would have merited applause, had we not discerned its excessive decline through the whole course of the debate. He is not unacquainted with the elaborate logic of the ancients, nor insensible that eloquence on all subjects, has strong pretensions to literary esteem, for he aims at profound sagacity in developing the principles of moral philosophy.

"I now venture to predict to this House, that the effect of the present Bill must be productive of a General Confederacy to resist the power of this county. It is irritating, tempting, nay! inviting men to those deeds by ineffectual expedients, the abortions of an undecisive mind, incapable of comprehending the chain of consequences which must result from such a law. I am not one of those, who believe that distant Provinces can be retained in their duty, by preaching or enchantments; I believe that force or power, conducted with wisdom, are the means of securing regular obedience under every establishment; but that such force should never be applied to any degree of rigour, unless it shall carry the general approbation of mankind in the execution."

If the melancholy prospect of affairs, heightened by alarms from the Indians on the frontiers, presents to our view, evident symptoms of commercial decline here, which is the greatest mart for trade in the Colony; "I cannot imagine, that thinking men would be so mad, as to form a general revolt. If courts of justice agree to annihilate themselves, it must be wholly, cannot be conditionally. Can this consist with the loyalty and good manners we profess for the Prince, or that virtuous fortitude which combines society in an indissoluble union? Can acts of injustice obtain the sanction of unanimous consent? How abstracted and refined is the gentleman's reasoning, to anticipate the general approbation of mankind, as if in an ingenious combination of speculative sentiments, could destroy that dispensing power which is the master-wheel, or that discerning policy which is interwoven in the frame of all Governments. He goes on -

"But after the highest characters in the State had declared against the right of this country, to impose taxes on America for the purpose of raising a revenue; after the general voice of the Senate had concurred in repealing the Stamp Act, upon that principle, after those men who had maintained these doctrines had been promoted by his Majesty, to the first stations in the administration of civil and judicial affairs; there is much mitigation to be pleaded in favour of the Americans from those circumstances, (allowing them in an error at present,) that every man must feel the height of cruelty by enforce-

"manner, and for such time as are therein mentioned, the landing and discharging, lading or shipping, of goods, wares, or merchandise, at the town, and within the harbour of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America;" to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The said Bill was read the first time:

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a second time, on Monday next, and the Lords be summoned.

MONDAY, March 28, 1774.

The Lord Wycombe presented to the House, the following Petition of Stephen Sayer, and others, Natives of America;

The same was read by the Clerk, as follows:

To the Right Honorable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament assembled, the humble Petition of several Natives of America, sheweth:

That your Petitioners, being Natives of his Majesty's Dominions in America, are deeply interested in every proceeding of this right honorable House, which touches the life, liberty, or property, of any person or persons in the said Dominions.

That your Petitioners conceive themselves and their fellow subjects to be entitled to the rights of natural justice, and to the common law of England, as their unalienable birthright; that they apprehend it to be an invariable rule of natural justice, that no man shall be condemned unheard; and that, according to law, no person or persons can be judged without being called upon to answer, and being permitted to hear the evidence against them, and to make their defence.

That it is therefore with the deepest concern, they understand that there is now before this right honorable House, a Bill of Pains and Penalties, to be inflicted on the

"ing maxims with any degree of severity at first, before due warning is given."

When men grow adepts in the theory of rebellion, and form schemes to emancipate themselves from the control of the laws; when they consider all requisitions from Britain, as unjust, all acts of Parliament as tyrannical, the mode of punishment must be extraordinary; the levy of one pound irritates as much as one thousand; and as to the conduct of certain members in the House of Commons, I cannot think their principles impeachable, who advise the promotion of the patriotic zealots, if their preferment could restore the peace and harmony of the State. I do not mean to impeach the member's knowledge of agriculture; yet, I think the comparison relative to sewing wheat bears a very far-fetched analogy to the Bostonians punishment. Most of the remarks relative to the event of the Act, are too vague to afford any insight to the most prying observer. How are the People to cloth and support themselves during the execution of his Quixotte schemes? He is confounded in his own ingenious doubts, and leaves the arduous task of unravelling all to the good natured world. But what gleams of consolation do they derive from the following assertions: "If the Government of this country is resisted in America, my opinion is, instead of removing the seat of Government in the Colony, and forcing the elements to bend to our will, (which is impossible,) that an effectual force should be carried to the heart of the Colony resisting, to crush rebellion in the bud, before a General Confederacy can be formed." So that you see this great man is not an invincible proselyte to moderate measures, but would chastise in cases of urgent necessity.

Can tumultuous meetings remedy the defects of law? Is there not a discretionary power in the civil police to summon the posse comitatus? Has it not been deemed strictly legal in Britain, to strengthen that body by military aid, on great emergencies? But when men, in high offices of civil trust, connived at the base resolves of an immaculate body of select citizens; the Governor could not consistently with his duty interfere, without infringing those rights they pretended they met to secure; had he taken any steps at all, he must have suppressed the whole meeting; and their heart-felt groans for expiring liberty would have re-echoed to the inmost recess of his palace. His interposition would not have been official, and they never would have allowed the greatness of the emergency to supersede the force of their chartered rights. His reasons for repealing the Tea Duty, are exceedingly futile; he thinks it cannot be vindicated; a dogmatical assertion, of a similar stamp and spirit with the rest. His remarks upon inherent privileges are ridiculous. Can any charter grant destroy the Fabric of that Government which, gave it birth; at any rate, the precedent would be far more ignominious for Great Britain to yield to America, than America to testify her allegiance to Britain. The disputes and litigations which the Bostonians have brought upon themselves, they must abide by the consequences of. They have baffled the expediency of the wisest laws; such crimes are heinous, and richly deserve capital punishment. If the People of Boston act with discretion, they may receive continual improvements in trade; let them comply in time, and earnestly seize this grand criterion, to distinguish their real, from their pretended friends, and the happy consequences resulting from such a timely avowal of their allegiance, and cemented by the constant practice of virtue and good manners, will discover a firm zeal for their Prince, a virtuous fortitude in themselves, and be an eternal memorial of that discerning policy which is the essential character of a free and loyal People.

OBSERVATOR.

Norfolk Borough, June 30th, 1774.

town of Boston, for a trespass, committed by some persons unknown, upon the property of the East India Company, without the said town having been apprized of any accusation being brought against them, or permitted to hear the evidence, if there be any, and to make their defence.

That the Bill takes away immediately from the inhabitants of the town, the use of property, to the amount of several hundred thousand pounds, vested in quays, wharfs, stores &c. That it will restrain many thousands of his Majesty's subjects from subsisting themselves and their families, by their usual employments; that it will punish the innocent for the guilty; and even should all the reparation required by the Bill be made, the restoration of that property, or any part of it, is suffered to depend solely upon the will of the Crown.

Your Petitioners conceive such proceeding to be directly repugnant to every principle of law and justice; and that under such a precedent, no man, or body of men, could enjoy a moment's security; for if judgment be immediately to follow an accusation, the accused, unacquainted with the charge; and debarred from defending themselves, every fence against false accusation will be pulled down, justice will no longer be a shield, nor innocence an exemption from punishment.

Your Petitioners beg leave to represent, that the law in America, ministers redress for any injury sustained there; and they can most truly affirm, that it is administered in that country with as much impartiality, as in any other part of his Majesty's Dominions. In proof of this, they appeal to an instance of great notoriety, in which, under every circumstance that could exasperate the People, and disturb the course of justice, Captain Preston and his soldiers had a fair trial, and a favourable verdict. The due course of law thus manifestly holding out redress, they cannot but consider the interposition of Parliamentary power to be as unnecessary, as it is arbitrary and unjust.

Your Petitioners conceive, that this right honorable House, being the supreme judicature of this Nation, are too well acquainted with the inviolable rules of justice, to require any further objections to the Bill against the town of Boston, now under consideration.

They therefore trust and pray, that this right honorable House will not pass a Bill which is to condemn and punish persons unheard, and therefore deprived of that privilege, which every principle of justice, and every practice of law, allows to the meanest individual: the privilege of hearing and controverting the evidence against him, and maintaining his innocence.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

Signed,

Stephen Sayer,	John Peronneau,
William Lee,	Peeke Fuller,
Benjamin Franklin,	Edward Fenwicke,
William Middleton,	William Middleton, Jun.
Henry Laurence,	Thomas Pinckney,
Ralph Izard,	William Hasel Gibbs,
Isaac Motte,	Thomas Bromfield,
John Ellis,	Joshua Johnston,
Hugh Williamson,	John Hobson,
Thomas Barker,	Daniel Bowley,
John Boylston,	John Alleyne,
Arthur Lee,	William Blake,
Thomas Ruston,	John Ballendine,
Philip Neyle,	J. Williams.
Edward Bancroft,

Ordered, That the said Petition do lie on the table.

The order of the day being read, for taking into consideration the several Papers laid before this House, (by his Majesty's command,) relating to Disturbances in America; and also his Majesty's most gracious Message in relation thereto; and for the Lords to be summoned:

And the said Papers were accordingly read by the Clerk.

Then the order of the day being read, for the second reading of the Bill, and for the Lords to be summoned:

The said Bill was accordingly read the second time.

It was moved "to commit the Bill," which being objected to;

After long debate, the question was put thereon? It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Ordered, That the said Bill be committed to a Committee of the whole House.

Ordered, That the House be put into a Committee upon the said Bill to-morrow, and the Lords be summoned.

TUESDAY, March 29, 1774.

The order of the day being read, the House was put into a Committee of the whole, upon the Bill.

The Bill was supported by the Lords Mansfield, Gower, Littleton, Weymouth, and Suffolk; it was opposed by the Dukes of Richmond, and Manchester, the Marquis of Rockingham, and the Lords Temple, Shelburne, Camden, and Stair; but the principal arguments were between the Lords Mansfield and Camden.

After some time, the House was resumed:

And the Lord Boston reported from the Committee, "That they had gone through the Bill, and directed him to report the same to the House, without any amendment."

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a third time to-morrow, and that the Lords be summoned.

WEDNESDAY, March 30, 1774.

The Earl of Stair presented to the House a Petition of William Bollan, Esq., Agent for the Council of the Province of Massachusetts Bay.

The same was read by the Clerk as follows:

To the Right Honorable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament assembled, the Petition of William Bollan, Esq., Agent for the Council of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, most humbly sheweth:

That the "Bill for the immediate removal of the officers concerned in the collection and management of his Majesty's duties of Customs, from the town of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America; and to "discontinue the landing, discharging, lading, and shipping, "of goods, wares, and merchandise, at the said town of Boston, or within the harbour thereof," at present depending under consideration of this right honorable House, contains various provisions proposed to be enacted, inconsistent with the ancient and just rights, lawful possessions, usual comforts of life, and common social benefits, with other important interests of the Petitioner's constituents, long held in amicable conjunction with other inhabitants of Boston, and the Province, and the other Colonies, and the most desirable connection with innumerable persons employed in manufactures, trade, and navigation, in Great Britain, whereby they have been well maintained, and prospered; and moreover, with the general circulation of American commerce, from which so great benefits are daily received by this Kingdom, in various ways.

That the merchants of Boston were not partakers of the offence committed in the late destruction of the tea there, nor of any other act of violence; nevertheless, if the present Bill be enacted, they will become the chief sufferers, together with numerous British merchants and manufacturers.

Wherefore your Lordships Petitioner humbly prays that he may be heard before this right honorable House, in order to prevent these provisions from passing to be enacted.

W. Bollan,

Which done,

The said Mr. Bollan was called in, and heard at the bar, against the said Bill.

He is directed to withdraw. Then the said Bill was read the third time.

The question was put, "whether this Bill shall Pass?" It was resolved in the Affirmative, Nemine Dissentiente.

THURSDAY, March 31, 1774.

His Majesty being seated on the Throne, adorned with his Crown and regal ornaments, and attended by his officers of State, (the Lords being in their robes,) the Commons with their Speaker, attending; the Royal assent was pronounced severally, by the Clerk's Assistant, to thirty-nine Bills, beginning with the Boston Port Bill.

The following Petition of the Natives of America, then in London, was presented to the King, on the morning of the 31st of March, before he went to the House of Lords:

To the King's most excellent Majesty, the humble Petition of several Natives of America, sheweth:

That your Majesty's Petitioners are natives of your Dominions in America, and bear most true and cordial allegiance to your Majesty's Royal person and family.

That allegiance and protection being reciprocal, your Petitioners look up to your Majesty for protection under the common law of the land, which is their birth-right.

That, according to law, no man can be condemned to punishment without being called upon to answer, nor without an opportunity of hearing the evidence against him, and defending his innocence. That in violation of this law, and of every principle of natural justice, a Bill is now offered for the Royal assent, calculated to inflict pains and penalties, with unexampled severity, upon your Majesty's loyal town of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay; the said town being unapprized of the proceedings, and not heard in its defence; that such Bill, if it receive your Majesty's assent, will immediately take away from the inhabitants of the town of Boston the use of property to the amount of several hundred thousand pounds, vested in quays, wharfs, store-houses, &c.; will restrain many thousands of your Majesty's subjects from procuring subsistence for themselves and their families, by their ordinary occupations; may endanger the community, by violent commotions from so many men rendered desperate, by being deprived of their daily bread; and, what cannot but do the last violence to the Royal justice, will punish the innocent for the guilty.

Your Majesty's Petitioners most humbly represent, that this Bill is the more unjust, as the trespass it is meant to punish, has not been prosecuted in the Courts of common law in America, where only according to law and the constitution, it is cognizable. That the interposition of this Bill is as totally unnecessary as the mode of it is unjust; because, your Majesty's Courts in America, are open to the redress of any injury sustained there; and justice is so little liable to perversion, that under every impression of popular prejudice, Captain Preston and others had, in this your Majesty's Province of the Massachusetts Bay, a fair trial, and a favorable verdict.

Your Majesty's Petitioners do therefore humbly pray, that your Majesty will be most graciously pleased to suspend your Royal assent to a Bill, calculated to condemn and punish their countrymen unheard, and form a precedent, which will take away every security and protection, under the law, from all your Majesty's subjects in America.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Wiliam Lee,	Walter Izard,
B. Franklin,	Edward Fenwicke,
John Ellis,	Thomas Pinckney,
H. Laurence,	William Middleton, Jun.
William Blake,	John Boylston,
Robert Izard,	John Ballendine,
Charles Fuller,	John Ward,
Isaac Motte,	Jos. Johnston,
Thomas Barker,	John Hobson,
William Middleton,	Daniel Bowley,
Thomas Ruston,	John Perronneau,
Peeke Fuller,	Arthur Lee,
Joh. Williams,	Joel Poinsett,
Robert Izard, Jun.,	William H. Gibbs,
Phikip Neyle,	James Marshall.
J. F. Grimke,

Anno Decimo Quarto Georgii III. Regis.

An Act to discontinue in such Manner, and for such Time as are therein mentioned, the landing and discharging, lading or shipping of Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, at the Town and within the Harbour of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America.

Whereas dangerous commotions and insurrections have been fomented and raised in the town of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England, by divers ill-affected persons, to the subversion of his Majesty's Government, and to the utter destruction of the public peace, and good order of the said town; in which commotions and insurrections certain valuable cargoes of teas, being the property of the East India Company, and on board certain vessels lying within the bay or harbour of Boston, were seized and destroyed: and whereas in the present condition of the said town and harbour, the commerce of his Majesty's subjects cannot be safely carried on there, nor the Customs payable to his Majesty duly collected; and it is therefore expedient that the officers of his Majesty's Customs should be forthwith removed from the said town; may it please you Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advise and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the first day of June, 1774, it shall not be lawful for any person or persons whatsoever, to lade or put, or cause or procure to be laden or put, off or from any quay, wharf, or other place, within the said town of Boston, or in or upon any part of the shore of the bay, commonly called the Harbour of Boston, between a certain headland or point, called Nahant Point, on the eastern side of the entrance into the said bay, and a certain headland or point called Aldertou Point, on the western side of the entrance into the said bay, or in or upon any island, creek, landing place, bank, or other place, within the said bay, or headlands, into any stlip, vessel, lighter, boat, or bottom, any goods, wares, or merchandise, whatsoever, to be transported or carried into any other country, province, or place, whatsoever, or into any other part of the said Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England; or to take up, discharge, or lay on land, or cause or procure to be taken up, discharged, or laid on land, within the said town, or in or upon any of the places aforesaid, out of any boat, lighter, ship, vessel, or bottom, any goods, wares, or merchandise, whatsoever, to be brought from any other country, province, or place, or any other part of the said Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England, upon the pain of forfeiture of the said goods, wares, and merchandise, and of the said boat, lighter, ship, vessel, or other bottom, into which the same shall be put, or out of which the same shall be taken, and of the guns, ammunition, tackle, furniture, and stores; in or belonging to the same; and if any such goods, wares, or merchandise, shall within the said town, or in any the places aforesaid, be laden or taken in from the shore into any barge, hoy, lighter, wherry, or boat, to be carried on board any ship or vessel outward bound to any other country or province, or other part of said Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England, or be laden or taken into such barge, hoy, lighter, wherry, or out of any ship or vessel coming and arriving from any other country or province, or other part of the said Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England, such barge, hoy, lighter, wherry, or boat, shall be forfeited and lost.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any wharfinger, or keeper of any wharf, crane, or quay, or their servants, or any of them, shall take up or land, or knowingly suffer to be taken up or landed, or shall ship off, or suffer to be waterborne, at or from any of the aforesaid wharfs, cranes, or quays, any such goods, wares, or merchandise; in every such case, all and every such wharfinger, and keeper of such wharf, crane, or quay, and every person whatsoever who shall be assisting, or otherwise concerned in the shipping or in the loading or putting on board any boat or other vessel, for that purpose, or in the unshipping such goods, wares, and merchandise, or to whose hands the same shall knowingly come after the loading, shipping or unshipping thereof, shall forfeit and lose treble the value thereof, to be computed at the highest price which such sort of goods, wares, and merchandise, shall bear at the place where such offence shall be committed, at the time when the same shall be so committed, together with the vessel and boats, and all the horses, cattle and carriages, whatsoever made use of in the shipping, unshipping, landing, removing, carriage, or conveyance of any of the aforesaid goods, wares, and merchandise.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any ship or vessel shall be moored or lie at anchor, or be seen hovering within the said bay, described and bounded as aforesaid, or within one league from the said bay so described, or the said headlands, or any of the islands lying between or within the same, it shall and may be lawful for any Admiral, Chief Commander, or commissioned officer, of his Majesty's fleet of ships of war, or for any officer of his Majesty's customs, to compel such ship or vessel to depart to some other port or harbour, or to such station as the said officer shall appoint, and to use such force for that purpose as shall be found necessary; and if such ship or vessel shall not depart accordingly, within six hours after notice for that purpose given by such person as aforesaid, such ship or vessel, together with all the goods laden on board thereon, and all the guns, ammunition, tackle and furniture, shall be forfeited and lost, whether bulk shall have been broken or not.

Provided always, That nothing in this Act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to any military or other stores for his Majesty's use, or to the ships or vessels whereon the same shall be laden, which shall be commissioned by, and in the immediate pay of, his Majesty, his heirs and successors; nor to any fuel or victual brought coastways from any part of the Continent of America, for the necessary use and sustenance of the inhabitants of the said town of Boston; provided the vessel wherein the same are to be carried, shall be duly furnished with a cocket and let-pass, after having been duly searched by the proper officers of his Majesty's customs at Marblehead, in the port of Salem, in the said Province of Massachusetts Bay; and the same officer of his Majesty's Customs be also put on board the said vessel, who is hereby authorized to go on board, and proceed with the said vessel, together with a sufficient number of persons, properly armed, for his defence, to the said town or harbour of Boston; nor to any ships or vessels which may happen to be within the said harbour of Boston, on or before the the first day of June, 1774, and may have either laden or taken on board, or be there with intent to load or take on board, or to land or discharge any goods, wares, and merchandise, provided the said ships and vessels do depart the said harbour within fourteen days after the first day of June, 1774.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That all seizures, penalties, and forfeitures, inflicted by this Act, shall be made and prosecuted by any Admiral, Chief Commander, or commissioned officer, of his Majesty's fleet, or ships of war, or by the officers of his Majesty's Customs, or some of them, or by some other person deputed or authorized, by warrant from the Lord High Treasurer, or the Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury, for the time being, and by no other person whatsoever; and if any such officer, or other person authorized as aforesaid, shall directly or indirectly, take or receive any bribe or reward, or connive at such lading or unlading, or shall make or commence any collusive seizure, information, or agreement, for that purpose, or shall do any other act whatsoever, whereby the goods, wares, or merchandise, prohibited as aforesaid, shall be suffered to pass either inwards or outwards, or whereby the forfeitures and penalties inflicted by this Act may be evaded, every such offender shall forfeit the sum of five hundred pounds for every such offence, and shall become incapable of any office or employment, civil or military; and every person who shall give, offer, or promise, any such bribe or reward, or shall contract, agree, or treat with, any person, so authorized as aforesaid, to commit any such offence, shall forfeit the sum of fifty pounds.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the forfeitures and penalties inflicted by this Act shall and may be prosecuted, sued for, and recovered, and be divided, paid, and applied, in like manner, as other penalties and forfeitures inflicted by any Act or Acts of Parliament, relating to the trade or revenues of the British Colonies, or Plantations in America, are directed to be prosecuted, sued for, or recovered, divided, paid and applied, by two several Acts of Parliament, the one passed in the fourth year of his present Majesty, intituled "An Act for granting certain Duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America; for continuing, amending, and making perpetual, an Act, passed in the sixth year of the Reign of his late Majesty King George the Second, intituled, An Act for the better securing and encouraging the trade of his Majesty's Sugar Colonies in America; for applying the produce of such duties, and of the duties to arise by virtue of the said Act, towards defraying the expense of defending, protecting, and securing, the said Colonies and Plantations; for explaining an Act made in the twenty-fifth year of the Reign of King Charles the Second, intituled, An Act for the encouragement of the Greenland and Eastland Trades, and for the better securing the Plantation Trade; and for altering and disallowing several drawbacks on exports from this Kingdom, and more effectually preventing the clandestine conveyance of goods to, and from, the said Colonies and Plantations, and improving and securing the trade between the same and Great Britain;" the other passed in the eighth year of his present Majesty's Reign, intituled, "An Act for the more easy and effectual recovery of the penalties and forfeitures inflicted by the Acts of Parliament, relating to the trade or revenues of the British Colonies and Plantations in America."

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That every charter party bill of loading, and other contract, for consigning, shipping, or carrying any goods, wares, and merchandise, whatsoever, to or from the said town of Boston, or any part of the bay or harbour thereof, described as aforesaid, which have been made or entered into, or which shall be made or entered into, so long as this Act shall remain in full force, relating to any ship which shall arrive at the said town or harbour, after the first day of June, 1774, shall be, and the same an hereby declared to be, utterly void, to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That whenever it shall be made to appear to his Majesty, in his Privy Council, that peace and Obedience to the laws shall be so far restored in the said town of Boston, that the trade of Great Britain may be safely carried on there, and his Majesty's customs duly collected, and his Majesty, in his Privy Council, shall adjudge the same to be true, it shall and may be lawful for his Majesty, by Proclamation, or Order of Council, to assign and appoint the extent, bounds and limits, of the port or harbour of Boston, and of every creek or haven within the same, or in the islands within the precinct thereof; and also to assign and appoint such and so many open places, quays, and wharfs, within the said harbour, creeks, havens, and islands, for the landing, discharging, lading, and shipping of goods, as his Majesty, his heirs, or successors, shall judge necessary and expedient; and also to appoint such and so many officers of the Customs therein, as his Majesty shall think fit; after which it shall be lawful for any person or persons to lade or put off from, or to discharge and land upon, such wharfs, quays, and places, so appointed, within the said harbour, and none other, any goods, wares, and merchandise, whatsoever.

Provided always, That if any goods, wares or merchandise, shall be laden or put off from, or discharged or landed upon, any other place than the quays, wharfs, or places, so to be appointed, the same, together with the ships, boats, and other vessels employed therein, and the horses, or other cattle and carriages used to convey the same, and the person or persons concerned or assisting therein, or to whose hands the same shall knowingly come, shall suffer all the forfeitures and penalties imposed by this or any other Act on the illegal shipping or landing of goods.

Provided also, And it is hereby declared and enacted, that nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed, to enable his Majesty to appoint such port, harbour, creeks, quays, wharfs, places, or officers, in the said town of Boston, or in the said bay or islands, until it shall sufficiently appear to his Majesty, that full satisfaction hath been made by or on behalf of the inhabitants of the said town of Boston, to the United Company of merchants of England, trading to the East Indies, for the damages sustained by the said Company, by the destruction of their goods sent to the said town of Boston, on board certain ships or vessels, as aforesaid; and until it shall be certified to his Majesty, in Council, by the Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, of the said Province, that reasonable satisfaction hath been made to the officers of his Majesty's Revenue and others, who suffered by the riots and insurrections above mentioned, in the months of November and December, in the year 1773, and in the month of January, in the year 1774.

And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That if any action or suit shall be commenced, either in Great Britain or America, against any person or persons, for any thing done in pursuance of this Act of Parliament, the defendant or defendants, in such action or suits, may plead the general issue, and give the said Act, and the special matter in evidence, at any trial to be had thereupon, and that the same was done in pursuance and by the authority of this Act; and if it shall appear so to have been done, the jury shall find for the defendant or defendants; and if the plaintiff shall be nonsuited, or discontinue his action, after the defendant or defendants shall have appeared; or if judgment shall be given upon any verdict or demurrer against the plaintiff, the defendant or defendants shall recover treble costs, and have the like remedy for the same as defendants have in other cases by law.

III. BILL FOR THE BETTER REGULATING THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PROVINCE OF MASSACHUSETTS BAY.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 25, 1774.

Resolved, That this House will this day, after the House shall have proceeded upon the other orders of the day, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to take into further consideration his Majesty's most gracious Message of Monday, the 7th day of this instant, March, together with the Papers which were presented to the House by Lord North, upon the 7th and 11th days of this instant, March, by his Majesty's command.

Ordered, That the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 28th day of November and 7th day of December, 1768, and the 20th day of January, 1769; and also the several Papers presented to the House by Mr. Vice Chamberlain, upon the 7th day of May, 1770, fi'om No. 1, to No. 9, inclusive, relating to his Majesty's Colonies, in North America, be referred to the said Committee.

Ordered, That the Paper, intituled "Massachusetts Bay Charter, granted by King William and Queen Mary," in the third year of their reign," which was presented to the House upon the 22d day of January, 1740, be referred to the said Committee.

MONDAY, March 28, 1774.

Resolved, That this House will immediately resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to take into further consideration his Majesty's most gracious Message of Monday, the 7th day of this instant, March, together with the Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 7th and 11th days of this instant, March, by his Majesty's command.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the said Committee.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the Chair of the Committee.

Lord North rose and said, he meant now to open the plan of the Bill which he proposed to bring in; and as it might very well be understood by gentlemen in that House, from the Papers relating to America, that then laid before them, that an executive power was wanting in that country, and that it was highly necessary to strengthen the magistracy of it; that the force of the civil power consisted in the posse comitatus; and when it is considered, said his Lordship, that the posse are the very People who have committed all these riots, little obedience to the preservation of the peace is to be expected from them. There appears to be a total defect in the constitutional power throughout. If the democratic part shows that contempt of obedience to the laws, how is the Governor to execute any authority vested in him? If he wants any magistrate to act, whom he knows will be willing to execute the laws, he has not the power of appointing one, nor of removing one that will not act; the Council have alone that power, whose dependence is on the democratic part of the constitution. It appears that the Civil Magistrate has been for a series of years; uniformly reactive; there is something radically wrong in that constitution, in which no magistrate for such a number of years, has ever done his duty in such a manner as to force obedience to the laws, If the Governor issued a proclamation, there was hardly found a magistrate to obey it; the Governor, of his own authority, can do nothing; he cannot act, or give out any order, without seven of the Council consenting; the authority of that Government is in so forlorn a situation that no Governor can act; and, where there is such a want of civil authority, can it be supposed that the military, be their ever So murderous, can be of the least service? For I shall always consider that a military power, acting under the authority and controul of a Civil Magistrate, is part of the constitution; but the military alone ought not, and cannot act without the controul of the Civil Magistrate. How was it possible for the military to maintain good Government When they were not called upon by the civil authority? I propose, in this Bill, to take the executive power from the hands of the democratic part of Government; I would propose, that the Governor should act as a Justice of Peace, and that he should have the power to appoint the officers throughout the whole civil authority, such as the sheriffs, provost, marshal, &c. - The Chief Justice and Judges of the Supreme Court excepted. I would have them only removable by his Majesty, under his sign manual, and upon good representations made here. Every gentleman will naturally see the impropriety of such irregular assemblies; or town-meetings, which are now held in Boston; I would have them brought under some regulation, and would not suffer them to be held without the consent of the Governor, unless upon the annual election of certain Officers, which it is their province to choose. Their juries are improperly chosen; I think a degree of regulation highly necessary; I am always ready and open to hear those matters discussed, and inclined to alter my opinion, when I hear better reasons for adopting any other mode of putting the civil magistracy of that country upon a good footing; but until the executive power is free, it cannot act; our regulations here are of no import, if you have nobody in that country to give them force. Some immediate, as well as permanent remedy, must be adopted. I therefore propose the present Bill, which I apprehend will effectually purge that constitution of all its crudities, and give a degree of strength and Spirit to the civil magistracy, and to the executive power. I therefore move you, Sir, "That leave be given to bring in "a Bill for the better regulating the Government of the "Province of Massachusetts Bay. "I propose that this Bill shall be brought in, and lie upon the table, for the inspection of the House and gentlemen who wish to make the propriety of such a Bill the measure of their conduct:

Mr. Byng said, that he could not be at all surprised at hearing that the Governor of Boston had no power, when he had not a single place in his gift. It was now become a fashion, he said, to give away those places of emolument to men of this country, with reversions to one, two, or three sons; to men who had never been of the least public service to this country, in his apprehensions, [meaning Mr. Bradshaw.] Whilst places continue to be given away to men of this country, the emoluments of which arise from the labour and sweat of an American brow; it will undoubtedly, and very properly, totally annihilate the power of any supreme officer in that country. Men look up to their superiors, and obey their directions according to the emoluments received from them; and when once their is no dependence in it, there will be no obedience.

Sir F. Norton (Speaker) said, he only got up to know, whether there was to be an Assembly left to the Americans or not? For he was not able to say, from what he had heard from the noble Lord, whether the Assembly was to be annihilated or not.

Lord North assured the right honorable member, that there would be nothing in this Bill that affected either the Assembly or the Council in their legislative power.

Mr. Stephen Fox. Can there be any thing so necessary to alter as that Government which can neither govern nor manage itself? The People of Boston have behaved in a most outrageous manner, militating against every principle of law and justice, combating against its own constitutional power, and totally subverting every idea of order and regularity. Would you let these men go on in the chaos of disturbance? Would you wish them to proceed so precipitately to their destruction without once lending the aid of your deliberations to rescue them from the self-conceived and false opinions which they have imbibed. I hope, Sir, this House will lend its advice, and endeavour to save these hot-headed Americans, not by violent measures but by firm and manly proceedings.

Lord George Germain. It may not be improper, Sir, I hope, to throw out a little upon this occasion, and to ask for further information, to know whether this is to be the extent of the proposition with regard to the salutary measures that are to be made and taken in this Committee, during this whole Session; if so, Sir, I should be glad to give my poor opinion, and add my mite of preservation to that country. I could have wished that the noble Lord, when he was forming this scheme of salvation to this country, would have, at least, considered that there were other parts of the internal Government necessary to be put under some regulation. I mean particularly the internal Government of the Province of Massachusetts Bay. I wish to see the Council of that country on the same footing as other Colonies. There is a degree of absurdity, at present, in the election of the Council. I cannot, Sir, disagree with the noble Lord, nor can I think he will do a better thing, than to put an end to their town meetings. I would not have men of a mercantile cast every day collecting themselves together, and debating about political matters; I would have them follow their occupations as Merchants, and not consider themselves as Ministers of that country. I would also wish, that all corporate powers might be given to certain People in every town, in the same manner that Corporations are formed here; I should then expect to see some subordination, some authority and order. I do not know by what power those are to be formed, but I wish that they may be formed by some. Again, Sir, I think that the method of Grand Juries ought to be much attended to; they are now chosen for life, and have a yearly salary, and these are the men to whom your life and property is entrusted. Your People know to whom to make application, when law and justice are wished to be subverted by favour and affection. Your Petty Juries are elected annually, so many persons in each town; to these men offenders know how to apply; and when any riot happens between the military power and the People of the town, the Jury, being taken principally out of that town, the power of life and death of the offender is lodged in those who are offended. These juries, I think, require great regulation; they are totally different from ours, and in my idea, carry with them not only the highest degree of absurdity, but are subject to be led aside to commit the highest and most palpable enormities against justice and the laws of the land. I would not wish to protract the noble Lord's Bill, by lengthening it out to a degree which he does not wish it to go, nor to oppose the measures which he has already adopted. I would wish to bring the constitution of America as similar to our own as possible. I would wish to see the Council of that country similar to a House of Lords in this. I would wish to see chancery suits determined by a Court of Chancery, and not by the Assembly of that Province. At present their Assembly is a downright clog upon all the proceedings of the Governor, and the Council are continually thwarting and opposing any proposition he may make for the security and welfare of that Government. You have, Sir, no Government, no Governor; the whole are the proceedings of a tumultuous and riotous rabble, who ought, if they had the least prudence, to follow their mercantile employment, and not trouble themselves with politics and Government, which they do not understand. We are told by some gentlemen, oh! do not break the charter; do not take away their rights that are granted to them by the predecessors of the Crown; whoever, Sir, wishes to preserve such charters, without a due correction and regulation; whoever, Sir, wishes for such subjects, I wish them no worse than to govern them. Put this People, Sir, upon a free footing of Government; do not let us be every day asserting our rights by words, and they denying our authority, and preventing the execution of our laws. Let us, Sir, persevere in refining that Government which cannot support itself, and proceed on in the manner we have begun, and I make no doubt but, by a manly and steady perseverance, things may be restored from a state of anarchy and confusion, to peace, quietude, and a due obedience to the laws of this country.

Lord North. I thank the noble Lord for every proposition he has held out; they are worthy of a great mind, and such as ought to be adopted; and indeed I cannot say that at present there is any objection to what is proposed being regulated at some future period; if any thing can tend to the relief of the present distresses in America, it is the unanimity of this House, and of men of such abilities as the noble Lord, in the projection of measures necessary to be taken. Every proposition the noble Lord has mentioned coincides with my mind; I see the propriety of them, and I would wish to adopt them. It is not my proposition to close this Committee before other measures may be offered, which, for any thing I know, may have a degree of preference to those I have this day proposed. I, for my part, Sir, shall think of the propositions made, and receive them to be canvassed by greater wisdom and abilities than mine. I am clear, with the noble Lord, that the constitution of this charter ought not to prevent Parliament from interfering to regulate those matters in America, which the indigested measures of their charter have, perhaps, precipitately been, in some degree, a means of preventing the peace and quietness of that country from being restored.

Mr. Phipps got up, but the House being noisy, he was not much attended to.

Mr. Pownall used much the same kind of arguments he had done in the former debates, and gave a judicious account of the Government of America. He concluded with giving to the Americans the character of a conscientious, good, religious, peaceable set of People, and said that there was not in all his Majesty's Dominions a more respectable set of persons existing.

Lord North's motion was then agreed to; and

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that he was directed by the Committee to move the House that leave be given to bring in a Bill for the better regulating the Government of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay in North America.

Ordered, That leave be granted to bring in the Bill; and that Sir Charles Whitworth, the Lord North, Mr. Attorney General, and Mr. Solicitor General, do prepare and bring in the same.

FRIDAY, April 15, 1774.

The Lord North presented to the House, according to order, a Bill for the better regulating the Government of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America: and the same was received.

Lord North, on presenting the Bill, (after the breviat was read, containing the propositions which in moving for the Bill, he had mentioned as the ground of it, with this addition and alteration, "that the nomination of the Council should be by the Crown,") said, in this Bill there would be no negative voice in the Council; nor was the Lieutenant Governor and Secretary to be of the Council, unless nominated by his Majesty; that the Council would have much the same power as before, except the nomination of judicial officers; that he had altered the mode of choosing of juries, from the hints that were thrown out the other day in the debate by a noble Lord, (George Germain;) that the principle on which our juries were formed seemed to be highly approved of, and that of the juries of America disapproved of; that he had now adopted the mode of choice as near the method of choosing the juries in England as possible; that this was a regulation of a very nice kind; and if gentlemen did not like to have it made part of the present Bill, it might be separated and made a Bill of itself.

Mr. R. Fuller gave notice, that he intended to move for a Committee to inquire into the Tea Duty on Thursday next, to see whether or not it was possible to repeal that Act before the present one took place.

Mr. Dempster desired to ask the noble Lord, by whom the Governors and Judges were appointed formerly, and by whom paid?

Lord North said, the Judges were paid by the Crown; and that their salaries were to accrue out of the duties chargeable on the tea.

Mr. Dowdeswell said, he was unwilling to let the day pass without some observations on the Bill, as it was brought in upon a different plan to what it was moved. He observed, that Government had now received sufficient advice for regulating their conduct, and coming to some decision about what was proper to be done; but the further they went, the worse they were; that the House had now a Bill before them, which was calculated to destroy the charter of the Province of Massachusetts Bay; that if, indeed, we were now to make a new charter for governing and regulating the number of emigrants that are daily going to America, we should, perhaps, make it in a different manner, and suit it more to the disposition of the times: but I wish, said he, to see no new charter granted. The Americans have laboured with unwearied industry, and flourished for near fourscore years under that democratic charter; they have increased their possessions, and improved their lands to a pitch we could not have expected, and we have reaped the benefit of their labour, yet you are now going to destroy that very charter which has subsisted to the mutual benefit of both countries; the charter which they have, breathes a spirit of liberty superiour to any thing either of the former or present times. It was granted in King William's time, and is more adapted to the spirit of a free people, than any charter that can possibly be framed by any Minister now; but, I hope, before this Bill passes, that you will, at least, recollect yourselves in a cool, dispassionate manner, and look upon Americans as your children, and call them by whatever name you will, rebellious or disobedient, that you will consider, at the same time, that they are froward children, that there are also peevish parents, and that the ill-humour and disposition of a child is oftentimes brought about by the petulant obstinacy of a foolish parent. The ridiculous doctrine that parents are apt to instil into their children, of "you shall do it - you shall do it," is oftentimes the means of enforcing the same disposition in the child, of "I wont." I hate that absurd obstinacy, of "you shall," and, "I wont," between parent and child. You are not now contending for a point of honour; you are struggling to obtain a most ridiculous superiority, to which I hardly know a name bad enough to stamp it with. The regulations which you are going to enact, will be so inadequate and so improper a remedy, that, in my opinion, it would be better to give up the whole, than to correct in such a violent and imprudent manner; let me at least advise temper in your proceedings, and that whatever is done, may not be effected with rigour and severity.

Governor Pownall rose to give the House an account of the mode in which juries were chosen in America; the House at first did not much attend, but his extensive knowledge in American affairs, soon drew that attention to what he said, which his abilities so justly deserved. He gave an account in what manner the Council were chosen heretofore; that they were elected by the whole Legislature, and not (as had been mistakenly represented) by the People at large; that the Selectmen were a kind of Aldermen, much the same as those in Corporations in England; that about forty were chosen in each town, after which the remaining ones were generally appointed as persons proper to serve upon juries, from which five or six people were taken, as occasion required; that the Grand Juries were struck off from capital men who were appointed for that purpose. He said great inconvenience would arise from the town meetings not being held without the consent of the Governor; that all business of a municipal nature was done at a town meeting; that these towns were, in many places, three hundred miles from the Capital, and that business must stand still in many instances, in these towns, till the Governor's consent could be obtained. He concluded with expressing a wish that the laws of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, as far as related to the present Bill, might be laid before the House.

The Bill was then read the first time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a second time upon this day sevensnight.

Ordered, (on the motion of Mr. Dowdeswell;) That such a number of copies of the said Bill be printed, as shall be sufficient for the use of the members of the House.

TUESDAY, April 19, 1774.

Resolved, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, that he will be graciously pleased to give directions, that there be laid before this House, a copy of an Act of the General Court of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, made in the fourth year of the reign of King William and Queen Mary, entituled, "An Act for regulating of "Townships, choice of Town Officers: and setting forth "their powers;" and also copies of all other Acts of the General Court of the said Province, for the regulation of Townships and Town Meetings.

Resolved, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, that he will be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House, a copy of an Act of the General Court of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, made in the seventh year of the reign of King William the Third, for summoning, returning, and regulating the choice of Grand and Petty Juries; together with copies of all other permanent or temporary Acts of the said General Court, relative thereto.

Ordered, That the said Addresses be presented to his Majesty by such members of this House as are of his Majesty's most honorable Privy Council.

Resolved, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, that he will be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House: -

Extract of a Letter from Governor Bernard to the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, dated Boston, 7th July, 1766.

Extract of a Letter from Governor Bernard to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated Boston, 30th May, 1768.

Extract of a Letter from Governor Hutchinson to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated Boston, 6th July, 1771; with copy of his Message to the House of Representatives, and of the Answer of the said House.

Extract of a Letter from Governor Hutchinson to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated Boston, 29th May, 1772.

Extract of a Letter from Governor Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 22d February, 1773.

Copies of the Speeches of Governor Hutchinson to the General Assembly of the Massachusetts Bay, with the Answers of the Council and House of Representatives.

Copy of a Petition and Remonstrance from the House of Representatives of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, of the 14th July, 1772.

Copy of a Petition to his Majesty from the House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay, dated 6th March, 1773.

Ordered, That the said Address be presented to his Majesty by such members of this House as are of his Majesty's most honorable Privy Council.

THURSDAY, April 21, 1774.

The Lord North presented to the House, pursuant to their Address to his Majesty: -

No. 1. Extract of a Letter from Governor Bernard to the Lords of Trade, dated Boston, 7th July, 1766.

No. 2. Extract of a Letter from Governor Bernard to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated Boston, 30th May, 1768.

No. 3. Extract of a Letter from Governor Hutchinson to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated Boston; 6th July 1771; with a copy of his Message to the House of Representatives, and the Answer of the said House:

No. 4. Extract of a Letter from Governor Hutchinson to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated Boston, 29th May, 1772; with an "Enclosure.

No 5. Extract of a Letter from Governor Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 22d February, 1773.

No. 6. Printed. Copy of the Speeches of Governor Hutchinson to the General Assembly of the Massachusetts Bay, with the Answer of the Council and House of Representatives.

No. 7. Copy of a Petition and Remonstrance to the King, from the House of Representatives of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, dated 14th July, 1772.

No. 8. Copy of a Petition to the King, from the House of Representatives of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, dated 6th March, 1773.

Together with a List of said Papers; and the said List was read.

Ordered, that the said Papers do lie upon the table, to be perused by the members of the House.

FRIDAY, April 22, 1774.

The Order of the Day, for the second reading of the Bill, was read.

Mr. Fuller said, he did not rise to make any debate, for he was not enabled as yet to form any opinion whether the Bill before the House was a proper one or not; as copies of the charters which had been ordered, were not yet laid before the House, he would venture to say that no man knew the constitution of that Government; it was, therefore, impossible for him to say, in what manner he would correct and amend it.

Sir George Savile said, he had not troubled the House before on the occasion, but he could not help observing, that the measure now before the House was a very doubtful and dangerous one; doubtful as to the matter and propriety of regulation, and dangerous as to its consequence; that charters by Government were sacred things, and are only to be taken away by a due course of law, either as a punishment for an offence, or for a breach of the contract, and that can only be by evidence of the facts; nor could he conceive that in either of those cases there could be any such thing as proceeding without a fair hearing of both parties.

This measure before us seems to be a most extraordinary exertion of Legislative power. Let us suppose a lease granted to a man, wherein was a covenant, the breach of which would subject him to a forfeiture of his lease - would not a court of justice require evidence of the fact? Why, then, will you proceed different from the line which is always observed in courts of justice. You are now going to alter the charter, because it is convenient. In what manner does the House mean to take away this charter, when in fact they refuse to hear the parties, or to go through a legal course of evidence of the facts? Chartered rights have, at all times, when attempted to be altered or taken away, occasioned much bloodshed and strife; and whatever persons in this House may have advanced, that they do not proceed upon this business but with trembling hands, I do also assure them that I have shewn my fears upon this occasion, for I have run away from every question, except one, to which I gave my negative. I do not like to be present at a business which I think inconsistent with the dignity and justice of this House; I tremble when I am, for fear of the consequences; and I think it a little extraordinary that Mr. Bollan should be admitted to be heard as an American Agent in the House of Lords, when in the House of Commons he was refused. I believe it is true, that the facts set forth in his petition to this House, were different from those which he presented to the House of Lords; in one declaring himself an inhabitant of Boston, and in the other omitting it. I cannot conceive it possible to proceed on this Bill upon the small ground of evidence which you have had.

Mr. Welbore Ellis. I must rise, Sir, with great diffidence, when I differ from the honorable gentleman who spoke last, whose abilities are so eminently great; but I think, that chartered rights are by no means those sacred things which never can or ought to be altered; they are vested in the Crown, as a prerogative, for the good of the People at large; if the Supreme Legislature find that those charters so granted, are both unfit and inconvenient for the public utility, they have a right to make them fit and convenient: wherever private property is concerned, the Legislature will not take it away without making a full recompense; but wherever the regulation of public matter is the object, they have a right to correct, control, or take it away as may best suit the public welfare. The Crown may sometimes grant improper powers with regard to Governments that are to be established - will it not be highly proper and necessary that the Legislature, seeing in what manner the Crown has been ill-advised, should take it into their consideration, and alter it, as far as necessary? It is the Legislature's duty to correct the errors that have been established in the infancy of that constitution, and regulate them for the public welfare. Is a charter, not consistent with the public good, to be continued? The honorable gentleman says much bloodshed has been occasioned by taking away or altering of chartered rights; I grant it; but it has always been where encroachments have been made by improper powers, and the attack has been carried on by improper powers. He also says, this form of Government in America ought not to be altered without hearing the parties; the papers on your table, surely, are sufficient evidence what they have to say in their defence. Look only into the letter dated the 19th of November, 1773, wherein the Governor applied to the Council for advice, and they neglected giving it to him; and also wherein a Petition was presented to the Council by certain persons who applied for protection to their property during these disturbances; the Council, without giving any answer, adjourned for ten days, and the Governor was not able to do any thing himself without their opinion. Look again, Sir, into the resolution which the Council came to when they met again, stating the total insufficiency of their power. This, surely, Sir, is an evidence competent to ground this bill upon. We have now got no farther than just to alter these two parts, as stated by themselves. Surely, Sir, that form of Government which will not protect your property, ought to be altered in such a manner as it may be able to do it.

General Conway. What I intend to say, will not delay the House long. [The House being rather noisy, the General said, I beg leave once more to say a short word.] I am very sure what I intend to say will little deserve the attention of the House, but the subject is of that importance, that it requires it. The consequence of this Bill will be very important and dangerous. Parliament cannot break into a right without hearing the parties. The question, then, is simply this: have they been heard? What! because the Papers say a murder has been committed, does it follow they have proved it? 'Audi alteram partem' is a maxim I have long adhered to; but it is something so inconsistent with Parliamentary proceedings not to do it, that I am astonished at it. The Council are blamed, because they did not give that advice to the Governor which he wanted. I think, Sir, the Governor might have acted alone, without their assistance. Gentlemen will consider, that this is not only the charter of Boston, or of any particular part, but the charter of all America. Are the Americans not to be heard? Do they not choose to consent and agree about appointing an agent? I think there is no harm, upon this occasion, in stretching a point; and I would rather hear Mr. Bollan as an agent of America (though he is a little irregular in his appointment) sooner than leave it to be said, that this Bill passed without it. The House being vociferous, he said, I am afraid I tire the House with my weak voice; if that is the case, I will not proceed, but I do think, and it is my sincere opinion, that we are the aggressors and innovators, and not the Colonies. We have irritated and forced laws upon them for these six or seven years last past. We have enacted such a variety of laws, with these new taxes, together with a refusal to repeal the trifling duty on tea; all these things have served no other purpose but to distress and perplex. I think the Americans have done no more than every subject would do in an arbitrary state, where laws are imposed against their will. In my conscience, I think, taxation and legislation are in this case inconsistent. Have you not a Legislative right over Ireland? And yet no one will dare to say we have a right to tax. These Acts, respecting America, will involve this country and its Ministers in misfortunes, and I wish I may not add, in ruin.

Lord North. I do not consider this matter of regulation to be taking away their charters in such manner as is represented; it is a regulation of Government to assist the Crown; it appears to me, not to be a matter of political expediency, but of necessity. If it does not stand upon that ground, it stands on nothing. The account which has just now been read to you is an authentic paper, transmitted to Government here, shewing that the Council refused, in every case, their assistance and advice; and will this country sit still, when they see the Colony proceeding against your own subjects, tarring and feathering your servants; denying your laws and authority; refusing every direction and advice which you send? Are we, Sir, seeing all this, to be silent, and give the Governor no support? Gentlemen say, let the Colony come to your bar, and be heard in their defence; though it is not likely that they will come, when they deny your authority in every instance. Can we remain in this situation long? We must, effectually, take some measure to correct and amend the defects of that Government. I have heard so many different opinions in regard to our conduct in America, I hardly know how to answer them. The honourable gentleman, who spoke last, formerly blamed the tame and insipid conduct of Government; now he condemns this measure as harsh and severe. The Americans have tarred and feathered your subjects, plundered your merchants, burnt your ships, denied all obedience to your laws and authority; yet so clement, and so long forbearing has our conduct been, that it is incumbent on us now to take a different course. Whatever may be the consequence, we must risk something; if we do not, all is over. The measure now proposed, is nothing more than taking the election of Counsellors out of the hands of those people, who are continually acting in defiance and resistance of your laws. It has also been said by gentlemen - send for the Americans to your bar - give them redress a twelve-month hence. Surely, Sir, this cannot be the language that is to give effectual relief to America; it is not I say, again, political convenience, it is political necessity that urges this measure: if this is not the proper method, shew me any other which is preferable, and I will postpone it.

Sir George Yonge. It appears to me, Sir, that it is unanswered and unanswerable, what has been advanced by the honourable gentleman who spoke second, that the parties should be heard, though even at a twelvemonth hence. Nothing, Sir, but fatal necessity can countenance this measure. No body of men ought to be proceeded against without being heard, much less ought the regulation of a whole Government to take place, without the parties attending in their defence against such alterations.

Governor Johnstone. I see, Sir, a great disposition in this House to proceed in this business without knowing any thing of the constitution of America; several inconveniences will arise if the Sheriff is to be appointed by the Governor; the jury will of course be biased by some influence or other; special juries will be most liable to this. [Here the Governor gave an account of the different riots which had happened in England, and compared them with what he called the false account of those from America.] I impute, says he, all the misfortunes which have happened in America, to the taking away the power of the Governor. No man of common sense, can apprehend that the Governor would ever have gone for two or three days in the country during these disturbances, if he had had the command of the military power. The natural spirit of man would be fired, in such a manner, as to actuate him to show resistance; but in this Governor no power was lodged. I disapprove much of the measure which is before us, and I cannot think but its consequences will be prejudicial.

Mr. C. Jenkinson. I rise, Sir, only to observe, that if the Colony has not that power within itself to maintain its own peace and order, the Legislature should, and ought to have. Let me ask, Sir, whether the Colony took any step, in any shape, to quell the riots and disturbances? No, they took none. Let me ask again, whether all the checks and control that are necessary, are not put into the commission of the Governments? Much has been said about hearing the parties, and taking away this chartered right; I am of opinion, that where the right is a high political regulation, you are not in that instance bound to hear them; but the hearing of parties is necessary where private property is concerned. It is not only in the late proceedings, but in all former, that they have denied your authority over them; they have refused protection to his Majesty's subjects, and in every instance disobeyed the laws of this country; either let this country forsake its trade with America, or let us give that due protection to it which safety requires.

Mr. Harris. I cannot see, Sir, any reason for so wide a separation between America and England as other gentlemen are apt to think there ought to be; that country, Sir, was hatched from this; and I hope we shall always keep it under the shadow of our wings. It has been said, no representation, no taxation. This was the system formerly adopted, but I do not find it authorized in any book of jurisprudence, nor do I deem it to be a doctrine either reasonable or constitutional. I insist upon it, they are bound to obey both the Crown and Parliament. The last twelve years of our proceedings have been a scene of lenity and inactivity. Let us proceed and mend our method, or else I shall believe, as an honorable gentleman has observed, that we are the aggressors.

Sir Edward Astley. If we have had a twelve years' lenity and inactivity, I hope we shall not now proceed to have a twelve years' cruelty and oppression. By the resolution and firmness which I perceive in tire House, it seems to indicate a perseverance in the measure now proposed, which I deem to be a harsh one, and unworthy of a British Legislature.

Mr. Ward found fault with the charter being left too much, as to the execution of its powers, in the People, and he could not think that the Legislature was doing any thing which it had not a right to do, as he had looked upon all charters to be granted with a particular clause in it, expressing that it should not be taken away but by the Parliament.

Governor Pownall. Sir, the few words that I shall trouble the House with on this occasion, will be directed simply to facts, and to the rectifying some matters of fact respecting the constitution of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, which some gentlemen, on both sides the House, seem to me to have mistaken, and to have mis-stated.

As to opinions, I shall never more trouble the House with mine on this subject. While the affairs of America remained on that ground, that opinions might operate on measures of policy, I never withheld mine, poor as they may have been - I always avowed them openly and publicly. In this House I delivered my sentiments explicitly and directly. It was my duty so to do - I consider it as of perfect obligation; and I hope I have fulfilled that duty. I could not but think it a matter of imperfect obligation, even to obtrude my sentiments, and the best information that I could give, in other places, out of this House. I hope I have not there exceeded my duty; I have expressed the same sentiments at all times, and have given the same opinion in what I have written to America. All tended to one point - the pointing out the grounds of reconciliation and peace.

The case at present ceases to be matter of opinion - it is come to action. The measure which you are pursuing will be resisted, not by force, or the effect of arms, as was said by an honorable gentleman on the late occasion, but by a regular united system of resistance.

I told this House, (it is now four years past,) that the People of America would resist the tax which lay then upon them - that they would not oppose power to your power, but that they would become impracticable, Have they not been so from that time to this very hour? I tell you now, that they will resist the measures now pursued, in a more vigorous way. You will find them prepared for such resistance, not by arms, but by a system of measures. The Committees of Correspondence in the different Provinces, are in constant communication - they do not trust the conveyance of the Post-Office - they have set up a constitutional courier, which will soon grow up to the superseding of your Post Office. As soon as intelligence of these affairs reach them, they will judge it necessary to communicate with each other. It will be found inconvenient and ineffectual so to do by letters - they must confer. They will hold a conference - and to what these Committees, thus met in Congress, will grow up, I will not say.

On the other point, should matters ever come to arms, you will hear of other officers than those appointed by your Governors. When matters once come to that it will be, as it was in the late civil wars of this country, of little consequence to dispute who were the aggressors - that will be merely matter of opinion. It is of more consequence at this moment so to act - to take such measures - that no such misfortune may come into event.

I hope the House will excuse my trespassing on their patience it is the last time that I shall speak on this subject. If, however, the knowledge which my situation must necessarily have supplied me with, can enable me to be of any use in matter of information, on any points which come before you, I shall constantly attend in my place, and in my place be ready to answer to any questions on such matter, as any gentleman may wish to receive information upon; as far as I may be able to inform him; and in this light I beg leave to state, that although by the charter of the Province of Massachusetts Bay the Governor is obliged to take with him, not simply the advice, but the consent of the Council, in the nomination of judges and other civil officers, yet it is from the power of the Governor's commission held under the broad seal, that all the commissions in the Province are derived; and cease with the determination of that commission. All those officers, except the Attorney General, even the Sheriffs, which an honorable gentleman had conceived not to be so, and which the present proposed Bill directs to be appointed and removed by the Governor, are according to the powers and privileges of the present charter, appointed by the Governor in Council. The difference is, that in those Governments which are established by the King's patent commissions, the whole act of appointment is in the Governor which act, indeed, he is by his instructions directed to do in the Act. He is the sole efficient: he may advise with the Council, but he is not bound to take their consent - he is not incompetent to the act, without their consent. His commission gives him full power to act if he acts without the advice of his Council, he does, indeed, break through his instructions, and may incur his Majesty's displeasure; but yet the appointment is good to all intents and purposes. The first is the act of legal power, derived from the commission; the second, is a matter prudential, with which the mode of the act is properly and wisely accompanied.

In the charter under consideration, the matter of instruction was made a component part of the act by which the Council were made a component part of the Governor, and so far forth of the supreme executive magistrate. This I have always thought to be an original and radical blunder. If the Bill, as it was first proposed, had gone no farther than to the remedy of this error, I think there could not have been a reasonable objection to it but of that I shall say no more now - I have already given my opinion on that point.

Another gentleman (misled by a construction which some Governors have made of their powers) thinks that the Council are so much, in all cases of Government, a part of the supreme executive magistrate, that if they refuse to act with the Governor, he cannot do any act of Government either civil or military. I know of no Act in which they are constituted such part, but in the case of the nomination of civil officers. In every other, the Governor, both by the charter and by his commission is, perfect and complete, supreme executive magistrate. I am sure I can speak from fact; I have, as Governor, without communion of power with the Council, done every civil act of Government, which the King, actuating the powers of the Crown, does here within the Realm. And as to the military, if it had been my misfortune to have been Governor in these times, and if the interposition of the military had been necessary, I would not have applied to them for their aid I would have sent them an order. I am sure there is no officer within the Province would have dared to have disobeyed it. They must have obeyed. The power to give such order is, both by the charter and the commission (which are both under the broad seal,) in the Governor, as Commander-in-chief; and I know of no revocation of it, but by the mere letter of a Secretary of State, which could have no effect; but which was at the same time one of the most dangerous measures ever taken.

Upon this ground, supposed to be the fact, that the Council are part of the executive magistrate, it is alleged as matter of crime against them, that they refused to act with the Governor at the time of the late riots; by which the powers of Government were suspended, the power of the charter misused, so that the Governor could not act; but as I have shewn that this is not the fact, the allegation of crime vanishes: yet I must own, and I must say, that as it is always for the benefit of the public, that the Governor should advise with, and have the advice of his Council that as it is always of benefit to Government, that he should take with him and be supported by the authority of his Council, and, especially, in this Province, where the authority of the country is of more solid effect than in any other - the Council, and every member of it, are highly blameable, are, indeed, inexcusable, whenever they refuse to advise, whenever they withhold their authority from the aid and support of Government. I do not know whether they be not liable to censure in refusing their assistance, as they are by the charter expressly called Assistants; but surely their conduct was inexcusable, when, instead of assisting, they sought and took occasion in the midst of these disturbances, to bring forward as an act of Council, a report fraught with all the matters of contest and dispute, which were the very grounds taken as principles by the People engaged in the disturbances. Thus far as to matter of fact; as to matter of opinion, I shall not trouble the House with it. [The few words afterwards spoken by way of explanation, were so far from signifying that the People were going to rebel, that they were expressly spoken to obviate that misapprehension of what had been said.]

Mr. Rigby. Upon my word, Sir, what was just now said is very worthy the consideration of this House; and if, from what the honourable gentleman says, it is true, and I believe he is well informed, it appears that America is preparing to arm; and that the deliberations of their town-meetings tend chiefly to oppose the measures of this Country by force. He has told you, Sir, that the Americans will appoint other officers than those sent by Government to command their troops. He has told you that a Post-Office is established on their account from town to town, in order to carry their treacherous correspondence firm one to another. He has told you, the Post-Office revenue will soon be annihilated. If these things are true, Sir, I find we have been the aggressors, by continually doing acts of lenity for these twelve years last past. I think, Sir, and speak out boldly when I say it, that this country has a right to tax America; but, Sir, it is matter of astonishment to me, how an honourable gentleman, (General Conway) can be the author or bringer in of a Declaratory Law over all America, and yet saying at one and the same time, that we have no right to tax America! If I were to begin to say that America should not be taxed, and that these measures were not proper, I would first desire my own Declaratory Law to be repealed; but being of opinion that the Americans are the subjects of this country, I will declare freely, that I think this country has a right to tax America; but I do not say I would put any new tax on at this particular crisis; but when things are returned to a peaceable state, I would then begin to exercise it. And I am free to declare my opinion, that I think we have a right to tax Ireland, if there was a necessity so to do, in order to help the mother country. If Ireland was to rebel and resist our laws, I would tax it. The mother country has an undoubted right and control over the whole of its Colonies. Again, Sir, a great deal has been said concerning requisition. Pray, in what manner is it to be obtained? Is the King to demand it? Or are we, the Legislative power of this country, to send a very civil, polite gentleman over to treat with their Assembly? How and in what manner is he to address that Assembly? Is he to tell the Speaker of it, that we have been extremely ill-used by our neighbours, the French; that they have attacked us in several quarters; that the finances of this country are in a bad state; and, therefore, we desire you will be kind enough to assist us, and give us some money? Is this to be the language of this country to that; and are we thus to go cap in hand? I am of opinion, that if the Administration of this country had not been changed soon after the passing of the Stamp Act, that tax would have been collected with as much ease as the land tax is in Great Britain. I have acted, with regard to America, one consistent part, and shall continue in it till I hear better reason to convince me to the contrary.

Governor Pownall to explain. I apprehend. I have been totally misunderstood. I did not assert the Americans were now in rebellion, but that they are going to rebel; when that comes to pass, the question will be, who was the occasion of it. Something has been said relative to requisition: I think I gave several instances wherein the same had been complied with in time of war.

Mr. Charles Fox. I am glad to hear from the honorable gentleman who spoke last, that now is not the time to tax America: that the only time for that is, when all these disturbances are quelled, and they are returned to their duty; so, I find, taxes are to be the reward of obedience; and the Americans, who are considered to have been in open rebellion, are to be rewarded by acquiescing to their measures. When will be the time when America ought to have heavy taxes laid upon it? The honorable gentleman (Mr. Rigby) tells you, that that time is when the Americans are returned to peace and quietness. The honorable gentleman tells us also, that we have a right to tax Ireland, however, I may agree with him in regard to the principle, it would not be policy to exercise it; I believe we have no more right to tax the one than the other. I believe America is wrong in resisting against this country with regard to its Legislative authority. It was an old opinion, and I believe a very true one, that there was a dispensing power in the Crown, but whenever that dispensing power was pretended to be exercised, it was always rejected and opposed to the utmost, because it operated to me, as a subject, as a detriment to my property and liberty; but, Sir, there has been a constant conduct practised in this country, consisting of violence and weakness, I wish those measures may not continue; nor can I think that the Stamp Act would have been submitted to without resistance, if the Administration had not been changed: the present Bill before you is not what you want; it irritates the minds of the People, but does not correct the deficiencies of that Government.

Sir Gilbert Elliot said, there was not the least degree of absurdity in taxing your own subjects, over whom you declared you had an absolute right; though that tax should through necessity, be enacted at a time when peace and quietness were the reigning system of the times: you deplete you have that right, where is the absurdity in the exercise of it?

Sir Richard Sutton read a copy of a letter relative to the Government of America, from a Governor in America to the Board of Trade, showing, that at the most quiet times, the disposition to oppose the laws of this country were strongly engrafted in them, and that all their actions conveyed a spirit and wish for independence. If you ask an American who is his master, he will tell you he has none, nor any Governor, but Jesus Christ. I do believe it, and it is my firm opinion, that the opposition to the measures of the Legislature of this country, is a determined prepossession of the idea of total independence.

The Bill was then read a second time.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Wednesday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, upon the Bill.

MONDAY, April 25, 1774.

Mr. Gascoigne presented to the House, pursuant to their Address to his Majesty: -

No. 1. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the fourth year of the reign of King William and Queen Mary, intituled "An Act for regulating of townships, choice of town officers, and setting forth their power."

No. 2. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the sixth year of the reign of King William and Queen Mary, intituled, "An Act to enable towns, villages, and proprietors in common and undivided lands, &c., to sue and be sued."

No. 3. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the fifth year of the reign of Queen Anne, intituled "An Act for a new choice of town officers, on special occasions."

No. 4. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the ninth year of the reign of Queen Anne, intituled "An Act directing the levying and collecting of county and town assessments."

No. 5. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the second year of the reign of King George the Fourth, intituled, "An Act for the better regulating of town and proprietary meetings. "

No. 6. Extract of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the first year of the reign of King George the Second, intituled, "An Act in addition to an Act for highways."

No. 7. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the seventh and eighth years of the reign of King George the Second, intituled, "An Act in explanation of, and farther addition to, an Act, intituled, "an Act for regulating of townships, choice of town officers, and setting forth their power.' "

No. 8. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the sixteenth year of the reign of King George the Second, intituled, "An Act in further addition to an explanation of an Act, intituled, 'an Act for regulating townships, choice of town officers, and setting forth their power.' "

No. 9. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the twenty-ninth year of the reign of King George the Second, intituled, "An Act for reviving and continuing sundry laws, that are expired, or near expiring. "

No. 10. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the thirtieth year of the reign of King George the Second, intituled, "An Act in further addition to an Act, intituled, 'an Act for regulating of townships, and choice of town officers, and setting forth their power.' "

No. 11. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the first year of his present Majesty's reign, intituled "An Act for the better regulating districts within this Province."

No. 12. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the second year of his present Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for reviving and continuing sundry laws, that are expired, or near expiring."

No. 13. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the seventh year of his present Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for reviving and continuing sundry laws, that are expired, or near expiring."

No. 14. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the tenth year of his present Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for reviving and continuing sundry laws, that are expired, or near expiring."

No. 15. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the twelfth year of his present Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for regulating town-meetings in the town of Danvers."

No. 16. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the seventh year of the reign of King William the Third, intituled, "An Act for Grand Jurors serving at the Quarter Session of the Peace, and punishing defaulters of Jurors attendance."

No. 17. Extract of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the seventh year of the reign of King William the Third, intituled, "An Act for holding of Courts of General Session of the Peace, and ascertaining the times and places for the same."

No. 18. Extract of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the eleventh year of the reign of King William the Third, intituled, "An Act for the establishing of Inferior Courts of Common Pleas, in the several counties of this Province,"

No. 19. Extract of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the eleventh year of the reign of King William the Third, intituled "An Act for establishing a Superior Court of Judicature, Court of Assize, and General Gaol Delivery, within this Province."

No. 20. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the twelfth year of the reign of King William the Third, intituled, "An Act relating to the office and duty of a Coroner."

No. 21. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the third year of the reign of King George the First, intituled, "An Act for the more effectual preventing default in the appearance of Jurors."

No. 22. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the twenty-third year of the reign of King George the Second, intituled, "An Act for the better regulating the choice of Petit Jurors."

No. 23. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the thirtieth year of the reign of King George the Second, intituled, "An Act for the "better regulating the choice of Petit Jurors."

No. 24. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the thirtieth year of the reign of King George the Second, intituled, "An Act in addition "to an Act intituled, 'An Act for the better regulating the "choice of Petit Jurors.'"

No. 25. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the thirty-third year of the reign of King George the Second, intituled, "An Act for the better "regulating the choice of Petit Jurors."

No. 26. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the thirty-third year of the reign of King George the Second, intituled, "An Act in addition "to an Act, intituled, 'An Act for the better regulating the "choice of Petit Jurors.'"

No. 27. Copy of an Act passed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in the seventh year of his present Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for reviving and continu- "ing sundry laws, that are expired, or near expiring."

Together with a list of the said Papers.

And the said list was read.

Ordered, That the said Papers do lie on the table to be perused by the members of the House.

WEDNESDAY, April 27, 1774.

Ordered, That the order of the day, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, upon the Bill; be now read.

And the said order being read accordingly,

Ordered, That the Paper, intituled "Massachusetts Bay Charter; granted by King William and Queen Mary, "in the third year of their reign, "which was presented to the House upon the twenty-second day of January, 1740, be referred to the said Committee.

Ordered, That the several Papers which were presented to the House upon Monday last, by Mr. Gascoigne, be referred to the said Committee.

Ordered, That the several Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 7th and 11th days March last, and the 15th and 21st days of this instant, April, be referred to the said Committee.

Then the House resolved itself into the said Committee. Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth took the Chair of the Committee. Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had gone through the Bill, and made several amendments thereunto; which they had directed him to report, when the House will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be received to-morrow morning.

THURSDAY, April 28, 1774

The order of the day, for receiving the Report was read; and

A Petition of William Bollan, Esq., styling himself Agent for the Council of his Majesty's Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New-England, being offered to be presented to the House, by Mr. Dowdeswell, which Petitioner, he said, desired that the Bill for regulating the Civil Government, and the Bill for the more Impartial Administration of Justice, might not pass into a law, until he should have time to receive an answer from the above Province to letters he had sent.

Mr. Dowdeswell said; after the part I have taken in the progress of these affairs, and the direct manner in which I have expressed myself on former occasions, I shall have the less to trouble the House with on this occasion. The petition I have now brought up is, in the matter of its request reasonable, that I cannot persuade myself the House will reject it. I should wish the affair might be seriously considered. What is the present stage of your progress? You are carrying through an Act that is to work a total change in the chartered constitution of a free country, in order to prevent riots and an improper conduct in the mob of that country; and lest in carrying that Act into execution, you meet with a resistance that you expect, (and in that very expectation prove that they may resist without the imputation of an unexpected crime,) you bring in another to regulate the trial of offenders, by which you destroy the trial by jury, and drag the People across the Atlantic to give evidence in Westminster Hall: regulations, the flagrancy of which has been sufficiently exposed, and branded in the manner they deserve. The Agent of the Province, alarmed at so weighty a resentment, and so cruel a punishment on the constitution and liberty of his country, for the evil actions of the scum of the People, presents a petition to you. What is the purport of it? Only to pray you to suspend your judgment until he can receive instructions from his constituents; - that is, he begs a whole country may not be condemned without a single person authorized by it to appear in its defence. Now, Sir, I think the prayer of this petition so perfectly reasonable, that it appears impossible to be rejected out of the Court of Inquisition. It is no inquiry whether your measure is just or not; - we may admit it to be, in our opinions, just, proper, and political; and yet assert the necessity of bearing the Province before you condemn it to a severe punishment. I will not say it is wrong to act thus - I say it is impossible - common justice - the feelings of mankind; condemn it.

Sir George Savile spoke ably on the same side of the question, as did Mr. Burke, Mr. T. Townshend, &c., who all urged how highly cruel it was to pass a law against any body of People, without hearing either them, or their Agent, in their defence.

To the arguments of the above gentlemen, Lord North, made the following reply:

I do not rise with a design to attempt answering every objection that ingenuity can frame against the measure. The most ingenious man will never be able to sketch a plan, however simple, to which objections may not be started. The only point at present before us is, should we delay passing these Acts, in order to hear what the town of Boston can say, in defence of themselves. Is there or is there not propriety in such a delay? I reply, that it would be absurd; the fact of their crimes is authenticated; we want no fresh proofs; no gentleman has expressed any doubts; we should therefore wait to hear how they might exculpate themselves (that is, the Council and Assembly) and lay the blame on the mob possibly; we should suspend our measures, to know what recompense they would make; we should stop to hear their concessions. Are the friends of these acts every moment to recall to the minds of their opposers, the sentiments they were full of at the opening of the business? "Go to the bottom of the evil, or let it "alone; no more palliatives. "So, Sir, if the town of Boston makes concessions and recompenses, our business is done, and our purpose answered. Very far from it - these Bills are not brought in for one or the other: they are to prevent such horrid evils in future; to regulate the constitution on the plan of other Colonies, that flourish under their constitution as much as Boston with its anarchy, and to indemnify the legal executors of your decrees. View the affair in this light, and all your objections fall. Let the whole Colony appear at your bar, and every argument they can use, every concession they can make, will all be relative to the past, not to the future. These Bills Sir, have much more useful and more necessary destination, the prevention of future evils. Should we now delay the progress of this important business, in order to go back into our old system of palliatives, under the pretence of hearing what arguments may be used in defence of the most atrocious actions?

The motion was also very strongly opposed by Mr. Wedderburne, Mr. Dyson, &c.

The House was moved, that the Proceedings of the House, of the 14th day of March last, on receiving the Petition of William Bollon, Esquire, Agent for the Council of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New-England, might be read:

And the same were read accordingly.

And the question being but, that the Petition be brought up?

The House divided; Yeas, 32; Nays, 95.

So it passed in the Negative.

The House was moved, that the entry in the Journals of the House, of the 9th of November, 1696, of the proceedings of the House, in relation to the Bill for attainting Sir John Fenwick, Baronet, of High Treason, might be read:

And the same was read accordingly.

The House was moved, that the entries in the Journals of the House, of the 19th day of March, 1722, of the proceedings of the House, in relation to the Bills for inflicting certain pains and penalties upon John Plunkett and George Kelly, alias Johnson, might be read:

And the same were read accordingly.

The House was also moved, that the entry in the Journals of the House, of the 22d day of March, 1722, of the proceedings of the House, in relation to the Bill for inflicting certain pains and penalties upon Francis Lord Bishop of Rochester, might be read:

And the same was read accordingly.

Then a motion being made, and the question being put, that the Report of the Committee of the whole House, be received this day four months,

It passed in the Negative.

Ordered, That the said Report be now received.

Sir Charles Whitworth accordingly reported the amendments of the Committee, which were all agreed to by the House except one.

A clause was then added to the Bill authorizing the Court, where an action is depending, to grant a view, upon application of either of the parties.

Another clause was offered, to be added to the Bill, that no Sheriff shall continue in office longer then one year; and no Sheriff, or Under Sheriff, shall continue more than two years successively.

And the said clause was once read, and, with leave of the House, withdrawn.

Then an amendment was made, by the House, to the Bill.

Ordered, That the Bill, with the amendments, be engrossed.

FRIDAY, April 29, 1774.

Ordered, That the Bill for the better Regulating the Government of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America, be read the third time upon Monday morning next, if the said Bill shall be then engrossed.

MONDAY, May 2, 1774.

Sir George Savile presented a Petition of several Natives of America, to the House, which was read; setting forth, -

That the Petitioners are, again constrained to complain to the House of two Bills, which if carried into execution, will be fatal to the Rights, Liberties, and Peace of all America, and that the Petitioners have already seen, with equal astonishment and grief, proceedings adopted against them, which in violation of the first principles of justice, and of the laws of the land, inflict the severest punishments, without bearing the accused: Upon the same principle of injustice, a Bill is now brought in, which, under the profession of better regulating the Government of the Massachusetts Bay, is calculated to deprive a whole Province, without any form of trial, of its chartered rights, solemnly secured to it by mutual compact between the Crown and the People. The Petitioners are well informed, that a charter so granted, was never before altered, or resumed, but upon a full and fair hearing; that therefore the present proceeding is totally unconstitutional, and sets an example which renders every charter in Great Britain and America utterly insecure; the appointment and removal of the Judges, at the pleasure of the Governor, with salaries payable: by the Crown, puts the property, liberty, and life, of the subject, depending upon judicial integrity, in his power. The Petitioners perceive a system of judicial tyranny deliberately at this day imposed upon them which from the bitter experience of its intolerable injuries, has been abolished in this country. Of the same unexampled and alarming nature is the Bill, which, under the title of a more impartial administration of justice in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, empowers the Governor to withdraw offenders from justice in the said Province; holding out to the soldiery an exemption from legal prosecution for murder; and, in effect, subjecting that Colony to military execution. The Petitioners entreat the House to consider what must be the consequence of sending troops, not really under the control of the civil power, and unamenable to the law, among a People whom they have been industriously taught, by the incendiary arts of wicked men, to regard as deserving of every species of insults and abuse; the insults and injuries of a lawless soldiery are such as no free People can long endure; and the Petitioners apprehend, in the consequences of this Bill, the horrid outrages of military oppression, followed by the desolation of civil commotions. The dispensing power which this Bill intends to give to the Governor, advanced as he is already, above the law, and not liable to any impeachment from the People he may oppress, must constitute him an absolute tyrant; that the Petitioners would be utterly unworthy of their English ancestry, which is their claim and pride, if they did not feel a virtuous indignation at the reproach of disaffection and rebellion, with which they have been cruelly aspersed; they can with confidence say, no imputation was ever less deserved; they appeal to the experience of a century, in which the glory, the honour and the prosperity, of England, has been, in their estimation, their own; in which they have not only borne the burden of Provincial wars, but have shared with this country in the dangers and expenses of every national war; their zeal for the service of the Crown, and the defence of the General Empire, has prompted them whenever it was required, to vote supplies of men and money, to the utmost exertion of their abilities; the journals of the House will bear witness to their extraordinary zeal and services during the last war, and that but a very short time before it was resolved here to take from them the right of giving and granting their own money. If disturbances have happened in the Colonies, they entreat the House to consider the causes which have produced them, among a People hitherto remarkable for their loyalty to the Crown, and affection for this Kingdom. No history can show, nor will human nature admit of, an instance of general discontent, but from a general sense of oppression. The Petitioners conceived, that when they had acquired property under all the restraints this Country thought necessary to impose upon their commerce, trade, and manufactures, that to property was sacred and secure; they felt a very material difference between being restrained in the acquisition of property, and holding it, when required under those restraints at the disposal of others: they understand subordination in the one, and slavery in the other; the Petitioners wish they could possibly perceive any difference between the most abject slavery, and such entire subjection to a Legislature, in the constitution of which they have not a single voice, nor the least influence, and in which no one is present on their behalf; they regard the giving their property by their own consent alone, as the unalienable right of the subject, and the last sacred bulwark of constitutional liberty. If they are wrong in this they have been misled by the love of liberty, which is there dearest birthright, by the most solemn statutes, and the resolves of this House itself, declaratory of the inherent right of the subject, by the authority of all great constitutional writers, and by the uninterrupted practice of Ireland and America, who have ever voted their own supplies to the Crown, all which combine to prove that the property of an English subject, being a freeman or a freeholder, cannot be taken from him but by his own consent. To deprive the Colonies therefore of this right is to reduce them to a state of vassalage, leaving them nothing they can call their own, nor capable of any acquisition but for the benefit of others. It is with infinite and inexpressible concern, that the Petitioners see in these Bills. and in the principles of them, a direct tendency to reduce their countrymen to the dreadful alternative of being totally enslaved, or compelled into a contest the most shocking and unnatural, with a Parent State, which has ever been the object of their veneration and their love. They entreat the House to consider, that the restraints which examples of such severity and injustice impose are ever attended with the most dangerous hatred, in a distress of mind, which cannot be described. The Petitioners conjure the House not to convert that zeal and affection, which have hitherto united every American hand and heart in the interest of England, into passions the most painful and pernicious; most earnestly they beseech the House, not to attempt reducing them to a state of slavery, which the English principles of liberty, they inherit from their mother country, will render worse than death; and therefore praying the House will not, by passing these Bills, overwhelm them with affliction, and reduce their countrymen to the most abject state of misery and humiliation, or drive to the last resources of despair.

FOURTH SERIES,

Ordered, That the said Petition do lie upon the table.

The order of the day, for the third reading of the Bill, was read;

A motion was made, and the question being put, that the said Bill be now read a third time?

Mr. Dunning. There seems to me to be a system of tyranny adopted throughout the whole of the three Bills which have been brought into this House, one of which is passed, and the other two are now under consideration. While the first proposition stood single, I mean the Boston Port Bill, I did not think it of sufficient magnitude to oppose it, till it was followed by these two others. It now appears to me, that the inhabitants of Boston are much in the same condition as prisoners surrendering at discretion, as it is in the power of the Minister to allow or disallow the restoration of its port and trade. [He then gave a long history to the House of the manner in which the Bills had been moved for and brought in; he animadverted on the contents of the three Bills, and commented on the preamble of the Bill now before the House.] I have not, said he, heard of, nor do I see any overt act of treason stated in the preamble of this Bill, so as to authorize the severe punishments which it enacts: we are now, I find, in possession of the whole of that fatal secret, which was intended as a corrective for all the disturbances in America; lint it does not appear to be either peace or the olive-branch - it is war, severe revenge, and hatred, against our own subjects. We are now come to that fatal dilemma, "resist, and we will cut your throats; submit, and we will tax you" - such is the reward of obedience. There appears to me nothing of a system or plan throughout the whole that has been adopted or intended, because the Bills have been so altered, in the Committee, that there is scarce a word remaining of the original plan, if there was any; the preamble of the Bill now before us seems to have a presumption of open resistance, of which no proof has as yet been had, or appeared at your bar, so as to countenance such an assertion; if indeed, that military guard, which was appointed by the town, had been employed in the manner as the preamble mentions, it might then have been deemed an open resistance, but nothing of that kind happened; the whole resistance that was made was by a few of the mob, urged on by the impetuosity of riot and disturbance. Had any thing appeared that bore the least similarity to treason or rebellion, my honorable and learned friend would have told us that it was treason, and I will give them credit for their willingness upon such an occasion; but if there was treason, there were traitors, and they would have been known and punished; and if not known, they would at least have been inquired after; but as no inquiry has yet been set on foot, I will be bold to say, there was neither treason nor traitors. We seem to be in a strange condition, not knowing whom we have to deal with, nor in what manner to act. If gentlemen will look into the charter, it will be seen that the Governor complained without cause of the want of power; it was the ignorance of the Governor; he had power, but did not know it; and I think that the gentlemen who had the planning of these Boston Bills, have made alterations in the Government of Massachusetts Bay, without the previous ceremony of knowing the old one. There must be, and certainly is, a complete legislative power vested in the Assembly of the Province, to have given this power to the Governor, had the charter been deficient, I mean for the preservation of peace and good order. [He spoke a long time to prove that the constitution of Massachusetts Bay, was in no manner defective, but that the defect was owing to some unknown cause; and, said he, to what I profess I do not know.] When I talk of the Minister, I mean to speak with all due respect to the noble Lord, though I do not consider him as the immediate actor of all this. I know not the age, the person, or the sex, but that I may not be wrong, I will use the language of Acts of Parliament, which I imagine will comprehend, and will say, he, she, or they; to that person or persons alone do I mean to address myself. Let me ask, said he, whether these mischiefs arising from the charter, are peculiar to Massachusetts Bay? Are there no deficiencies in others? Yet it is said an alteration is necessary to make the charter conformable to the Royal Government. Now, do you know that when you have altered it, it will not be dissimilar to many of the others, when the ignorance of the Government of one Province appears to me to be as great in those who are to alter it, as in the others. I find great fault, Sir, that the whole of this arrangement is to be under the direction of the Crown; and that the whole civil and military power of that country is to be totally at the disposal of the Ministers of this. I really think the motto of this Bill should have been Tua Cæsar ætas. He then went through the different clauses of the Bill, objecting principally against the prisoners being brought over here, as contained in the last Bill; and that difficulties would arise which would convince gentlemen who had a concern in the management of these affairs, that what they had done had tended to disunite the affections of the American subjects from this country; and, instead of promoting peace, order, and obedience, would produce nothing but clamour, discontent, and rebellion.

Sir William Meredith said, that if necessity gave a right to tax America, the state of our finances at the close of the last war fully justified the Stamp Act. That he acknowledged the supremacy of Great Britain over America; but that the Legislature of a free country must not, in taxation, or any other act of power, deprive the subject of his right to freedom in person and property. The security an Englishman has in property consists in this, that no tax can be imposed upon him but by the very members of Parliament who pay the tax themselves, equally with all those on whom they impose it; that no man had any thing he could call his own, if another could take his property, and use it, either for his advantage, or in order to prevent the diminution of his own fortune; but that such taxes only might be raised as were consequential to regulations of trade - such were port duties. That a tax similar to that upon tea was imposed by the 25th of Charles II., since that time upon molasses, and other articles, which the Americans had acquiesced in. That he (Sir William) never approved the tax upon tea; had opposed it, as he would always oppose the taxation of America. But now, that the Americans had not only resisted the Act of Parliament, but laid violent hands on the merchants' property, it was high time to regulate the course of justice, so that our merchants might trade thither with security. That the present Regulation Bills went no farther. That they established the trial by Jury in America the same as in England; whereas the juries were now appointed according to the mere will and pleasure of the Selectmen, some of whom had been forward in committing those excesses that occasioned the present uneasinesses. That the Council was now appointed by the Assembly, and could controul every act of the Governor; the execution therefore of every law enacted by the British Parliament, was at their option; but that all executive power must be subservient to the legislative, otherwise the Legislature itself would be a mere cypher. We must therefore either relinquish at once the right of enacting laws, or take the execution of them out of the hands of those that have denied our authority to make them. That we had better break at once all connections with America, than encourage our merchants to trade thither without the full protection of the laws of their country, both in securing their effects, and in obtaining redress for such injuries as they may sustain.

Mr. Stanley. These Bills certainly affect the interior policy of America, and are intended for the better regulation of its internal Government. Whatever may be the opinion of that propriety of regulation with the American, I know not; but their submission to the laws of some country is necessary, as I cannot conceive the independence of an American Colony to exist, whilst the balance of power remains in Europe, supported and protected by armies and navies. These People must resort to some State, and it must be to a Protestant one; and were they to unite themselves with any other State than this, they would meet with a yoke and burden which they would not wish to bear. It is said by some, that this is driving them to a state of slavery; by others, that this proceeding will be ineffectual. As to the latter, if we do not go far enough, we are certainly on the right side; but I cannot sit still, and see with indifference the authority of this country submitting to every indignity they shall offer us. There are but two ways of governing mankind, by force, or by consent. Mankind are to be governed by legal power, acting by prescribed rules of law and justice; and a measure established on this doctrine, deserves the concurrence of the House. [Here he gave a long account of the rise of the American Government, and shewed, that an inattention to it, in its infancy, had induced the Americans so to think of themselves, as to throw the Government into a wild democracy; that it was not till after the Restoration that any degree of attention was paid them: He then read an extract from some old papers, shewing that the Americans had, so long ago as King William's time, refused obedience to the prerogative in many instances.] America, says he, is not now to be governed as it might be a hundred years ago; and how is it possible that the Council should, in any shape, have power, when it appears, that if any person, of moderate passions towards the degree of respect or authority to this country, is chosen of the Council, and is inclined to assist the Governor, he has always soon after been displaced? Let me ask gentlemen, if the property of the subjects of this country had been injured in France, would they have thought it a prudent conduct to have sat still and done nothing? I had much rather that this dispute had passed nine years ago, but I would rather meet the attack now than nine years hence; and I should blame myself much if, by any vote of mine, I should separate so valuable a Province from this country.

Mr. T. Townshend. The importance of this subject, and the melancholy consequences which are likely to ensue, deserve the serious attention of this House. I am not in a hurry to adopt the opinion of Administration, but I should be the lowest wretch upon earth if I suffered private opinion to be smothered. I was determined to give support to the most plausible method that was proposed, and I will say, as to this method, Si quid novisti rectius istis, candidus imperti, si non, his utere mecum. I am much averse to the meddling with charters, but when I see the inconveniencies that arise from the town-meetings, I don't think myself unreasonable in wishing to adopt an amendment, I think the Juries are properly altered, according to the constitution of this country, nor have I any objection to men being brought over to England to be tried, if it is impossible to find men of cool disposition and proper temper to try them in that country; and if I see this Bill left to the execution of the abilities of General Gage, I fear not the success of it. I remember, Sir, that men who were the most violent in opposition to the Stamp Act, at the time it was agitating, afterwards, when they found it was likely to pass, were applying for Stampmaster's places. I wished much Sir, to have coupled this measure with another; I mean the repeal of the Tea Tax, which we might have done without showing the least timidity, but shall content myself with giving my affirmative to the present Bill before you.

Colonel Barré. The question now before us is, whether we will chuse to bring over the affections of all our Colonies by lenient measures, or to wage war with them? I shall content myself with stating - [Here he gave a long history in what manner Mr. Grenville, as an able financier, wished to search for means to liberate this country from its load of debts] that when the Stamp Act was repealed, it produced quiet and ease: was it then in the contemplation of any sober, honest mind, that any other tax would be laid on for at least a century? He blamed the late Mr. C. Townshend, with all his eloquence, for loading America with a tax; nor was he, said he, sufficiently cautious in choosing proper Commissioners for executing his trust; it was this which disgusted the inhabitants of Boston, and there has been nothing but riots ever since. It is the duty of the governing State to correct errors and wrong opinions. [Here he read several extracts of Mr. Dickinson's (of Philadelphia) book, entitled, "Farmer's Letters, "and from Mr. Otis's book, entitled "The Rights of the British Colonies."] You sent over troops, said he; in 1768, and in 1770 you were obliged to recall them. The People were fired at by a lawless soldiery, and seven or eight innocent persons were killed. They were carried about the town as victims of your revenge, to incite the compassion of the friends and relations of the deceased, and next morning you were forced to order the troops out of town. He condemned much the behaviour of Governor Hutchinson, as an accomplice in the present disturbances, and commended the behaviour of Governor Tryon, who, knowing that he could only land the tea at the muzzle of his guns, prudently sent it back to England. All other Colonies, he said, had behaved with nearly the same degree of resistance, and yet you point all your revenge at Boston alone; but I think you will very soon have the rest of Colonies on your back. You have blocked up the port of Boston; I supported you in that, and I think I have no great guilt on that head, as I thought it was a measure adopted to produce a compromise for the damage the East India Company had sustained. You propose, by this Bill, to make the Council of Boston nearly similar to those of the other Royal Governments; have not the others behaved in as bad a manner as Boston? And it is my opinion, that the office of Council, being chosen by the Crown, will become so odious, that you will not get a respectable man that dares to accept of it, unless you have the military officers for the Council, whom I think, in my conscience, will behave well. Let me ask again, what security the rest of the Colonies will have, that upon the least pretence of disobedience, you will not take away the Assembly from the next of them that is refractory. [Here he blamed the House very much for not receiving the petition of Mr. Bollan, who, he said, had corresponded with the new Council, and had been allowed and received at the public offices as Agent for the Colonies.] Why, said he, will you pretend to alter the charter of that constitution, of which you know not its present form of Government; for, he said, he had observed that the late Governor of Boston (Governor Pownall) had been, during the different stages in which the Bill had been debated, going from side to side of the House, to give information about the Government and its laws, many of which he remembered; some few the Governor had forgot. In France, Sir, it is a custom, said he, to judge upon one-sixth, seventh, or eighth, of a proof - the unfortunate Calas, of Thoulouse, was condemned upon eight hearsays, which in France amounted to a proof; but, surely, a British House of Commons will not condemn on such evidence i and I hope never to see Thoulouse arguments [here a member observed he meant too loose arguments] admitted as proof here. I do not know of any precedent for this Bill it is impossible to put it in execution - and I will tell the House a story that happened to us when we marched at Ticonderoga; "The inhabitants of that town looked upon the officers of the corps as men of superior beings to "themselves, and the youngest amongst them, I will "answer for it, was highly treated, and indulged by the "fair sex to the utmost of our wishes, even their wives "and daughters were at our service;"and if the same degree of civility prevails, think you that it is possible the execution of this Bill can ever be observed by your army? I was of the profession myself, and I beg leave to tell the House that I am no deserter from it. I was forced out of it by means which a man of spirit could not submit to. I take this opportunity to say again, that I am no deserter from my profession. [Here it was strongly imagined, that the Colonel meant to give a broad hint to Administration, that the line of his profession was not disagreeable to him.] I think this Bill is, in every shape, to be condemned; for that law which shocks Equity is Reason's murderer; and all the protection that you mean to give to the military, whilst in the execution of their duty, will serve but to make them odious; and what is so to others, will soon become so to themselves. I would rather see General Gage invested with a power of pardon, than to have men brought over here to be tried; and the state of the case upon the trial, I mean in America, would, I am sure, justify such pardon. You are, by this Bill, at war with your Colonies; you may march your troops from North to South, and meet no enemy; but the People there will soon turn out, like the sullen Hollanders, a set of sturdy rebels; a perpetual exertion of your authority will soon ruin you; therefore, let me advise you to desist. Let us but look a little into our behaviour. When we are insulted by France and Spain, we negotiate - when we dispute with our Colonies, we prepare our ships and our troops to attack them. It has been the language of a noble Lord, that when America is at our feet, we will forgive them, and tax them; but let me recommend lenient measures, and to go cap in hand to your subjects; if you do not, you will ruin them. The great Minister of this country (Lord Chatham) always went cap in hand to all: his measures were lenient and palliative; but we have now adopted another system, in one House of Parliament "we have passed the Rubicon," in the other "delenda est Carthago." [He gave a history here of the different state of finance in which France was; that it was superior in every degree to this country; that their establishments were lower in point of expense; and that France was more ready and fit to go to war than we were; and that during these troubles with our Colonies, France would not lie quiet;] - But I see nothing, said he, in the present measures but inhumanity, injustice, and wickedness; and I fear that the hand of Heaven will fall down on this country with the same degree of vengeance.

Mr. S. Fox. I rise, Sir, with an utter detestation and abhorrence of the present measures. It is asserted by many gentlemen, that these measures are adopted to keep up the regard of the People, but I can by no means acquiesce in that; all these Bills have no qualities relative to those lenient measures. As to the second Bill, it has a most wanton and wicked purpose; we are either to treat the Americans as subjects or as rebels. If we treat them as subjects, the Bill goes too far; if as rebels, it does not go far enough. They have never yet submitted, and I trust they never will. We have refused to hear the parties in their defence, and we are going to destroy their charter without knowing the constitution of their Government. I am utterly against such measures as these, which can tend to nothing but to raise disturbance and rebellion.

The Marquis of Carmarthen. I do not mean to trespass long at this hour of the night; but there is not a person in the world a stranger to the practices carried on in America, with a direct intention to throw off their dependance on this country. The opposition which they fomented, was not made on account of the tax, but a systematic measure of opposition to every pint of the law of this country. It might have been thought by sober-minded People, that the repeal of the Stamp Act would have brought them back to a sense of their duty: but, alas! Sir, it had a contrary effect. [He read an extract of a letter from Governor Bernard, setting forth, that "upon coercive measures being adopted in this country, the Americans seemed to give an acquiescence; but whenever lenient ones were the system of Administration, they have always been turbulent and riotous."] It has been observed, Sir, by an honorable gentleman (Colonel Barré) that a great Minister (Lord Chatham) proceeded upon cap-in-hand measures. I do not agree with him on that point, as I never heard that Minister celebrated for that part of his character. I always understood that his measures were deemed spirited and vigorous, and that he was the farthest man in the world from making use of cap-in-hand measures; his character was of a far different nature. But I refer the House to all the panegyrics that have been passed on that noble Lord, for confirming what I say. But, Sir, the time may soon come, when that noble Lord will have an opportunity, in the other House of Parliament, to adopt and make use of those cap-in-hand measures which the honorable gentleman has just now attributed to him, as a part of his character; but I strongly believe his system will be of a different kind.

Mr. St. John. I rise, Sir, to take up a few minutes of the House's time, and to make a few observations upon what has been said. It has been stated that this Bill is taking away all the rights of the Americans in one day, and that it is a total destruction of their charter. What is this, Sir, but a gross misrepresentation of Parliamentary proceedings? I hold it, Sir, imprudent to meddle with chartered rights, but in cases where the rights of that charter are exercised to the detriment and injury of the People. Sir, Parliament has saved America from the jaws of tyranny, by amending their constitution; and to say that we have no right to alter their Government for such purpose, appears to me the highest absurdity; we are perpetually altering and ameliorating our own constitution, upon emergencies; is there then no emergency at this present instant, when your officers are obliged to take shelter in your castle; when the magistrates refuse to execute their authority to keep the peace; when your ships are plundered, and your trade obstructed; and whenever a person endeavours to reform the constitution of that country, he incurs nought but pains and penalties? Is it no defect, that the inhabitants, when they meet to choose their officers of the town, that they determine upon points that go to the very vitals of the constitution? Not to correct these deficiencies in their constitution, but to give up the points which they contend for, would be a base surrender of the rights of posterity. It has been said, this law is partial, but that that partiality is applicable only to the People of Boston, who have been the ringleaders of the whole disturbances; that it is slow, I agree, because measures of this sort, when adopted on the line of security, proceed with an attentive step. But I cannot agree that the measure is hostile; if it is, it is hostility adopted for the prevention of bloodshed. Have we not been provoked to this from the manifold injuries which this country has received? It is not, Sir, the strength of America that we dread; they have neither men, army, nor navy. What then have we to fear - do we dread the loss of our trade? No, Sir, the avarice of the Americans will prevent that. They threaten us with not paying their debts; but I am afraid, if we give way to them, they will not allow that they owe us any: however, Sir, let us not proceed weakly nor violently, but with resolution and firmness. I approve of the system that is adopted; and with regard to a fair and impartial trial in that country, I think it not only improbable but impossible; I therefore wish well to the present Bill.

Mr. Byng. I am sorry, Sir, to find that we are not now proceeding in our judicial capacity, but in our legislative one; I could wish that we instilled into the measure more judgment, and less of our power. It is said this measure is adopted to prevent bloodshed; is it then that you send armies there for that purpose? It has been said, that Parliament has bowed its head to every Minister as often as measures have been adopted. It bowed when the Stamp Act was made! It braved when it was repealed! I wish, however, in this present instance, it would for once not be quite so civil. It has been said, that these Bills are for amending the constitution. Will gentlemen call that amendment a good one, which directs, that the Judges' places shall be at the disposal of the Crown? Surely not. It has been said, Sir, that there has been treason and traitors, but that the traitors are not known. There can be no treason without traitors, therefore endeavour to find out the traitors first, that they may be punished, to save the destruction of an innocent People. It has been urged, that this Bill is only for a short time; but the same argument that operates for its continuance for an hour, will operate equally for its perpetuity.

Mr. Rigby. I rise, Sir, only just to contradict an opinion which has been imbibed, that, in the debate the other day, I wished to tax Ireland. I only used it as an argument in my speech to tax America, but never expressed a hint that it was proper to tax it. It has also been observed, that I treated requisition in a ridiculous light; I did so; and I think any requisition to the Americans for their quota of their taxes, would be both ridiculous and ineffectual. But the honorable gentleman's (Mr. Barré) ideas of requisition, go no further than furnishing provision for a regiment. The honorable gentleman has taken three or four days to consider of my speech, in order to give it an answer. I say stand and deliver, to the Americans, just as much as I say to my constituents, when I give my vote to passing the Land Tax Bill; but the honorable gentleman was very desirous to have a fling at me. I desire, Sir, to support the present Ministry, because I regard them; because I have respect for their abilities and resolution. That great Minister, Sir, who has been so much famed for cap-in-hand measures, did make his country too big for any one, even himself, to govern. There is not a symptom that any of the People out of doors are displeased with our measures; but I am told quite the contrary. America, at this instant, is in a state of downright anarchy; let us give it a Government. I always, Sir, speak, when I like, and hold my tongue when I think proper; and whatever weight and force I may have been represented to have, connected with my friends, I would give it in support of the noble Lord; I would vote, Sir, for these measures, were I upon my oath, which seems now to be the fashionable Parliamentary test [alluding to those objections he always made to the oath of the Committee appointed to try controverted elections;] and whether I am upon my honour, or my oath, I will give a hearty concurrence to these measures.

General Conway. I would not take up the time of the House at this late hour of the night, but for a very short time. I never did maintain that Great Britain had no right to tax America; I said taxation and legislation had no connection; I allowed that we had an abstract right to tax Ireland, and also America, in the Declaratory Act; but I do not know the time when it will be proper and right so to tax. This measure will throw us into great difficulties, which I do not know when we shall get out of. The tax upon tea does nothing for our revenue, it is no object; as long as you continue the doctrine of taxing America, you will never be at rest, Where is this olive branch I have heard so much talk about? It is not to be found in these measures. I do not wish to see the military protected from the laws of their country; if they commit an offence, why not leave them open in the same manner as others are? I have said, "that we are the aggressors," and I say so still; after so many innovations of the Stamp Act, and other taxes, I am for cap-in-hand measures - for lenity and tenderness to the Americans. There is an universal right in persons to be heard at this Bar in judicial cases, when they apply for it; but I rise, Sir, only to lament what I cannot prevent; and that this spirit may be rightly directed, I do hope that the Americans will wait till better times; for I think it is better to have peace with America, and war with all the world, than be at war with America; because, if they are at peace with us, they will contribute to support us in time of war.

Lord G. Germain. I hope I shall be excused, Sir, for trespassing a few minutes on the House. I should be sorry to be a supporter of those measures, which are termed wicked and tyrannical; but as I cannot think that this Bill has any such designs, I shall readily adopt it. The trial of the military has been much objected to. What is it, Sir, but a protection of innocence? Will you not wish for that, Sir? America, at this instant, is nothing but anarchy and confusion. Have they any one measure but what depends upon the will of a lawless multitude? Where are the Courts of Justice? Shut up. Where are your Judges? One of them taking refuge in your Court. Where are your Council? Where is your Governor? All of them intimidated by a lawless rabble. Can these men expect a fair trial? No, Sir, at present they have no existence as any part of the executive power. It is objected, that the Judges receive their salaries from the Crown, and not from the People. It is to me a matter of surprise, that any gentleman could think seriously a moment, that this Government wanted no amendment. It has been said, give up the Tea Tax: Can you give up the Tea Tax, without the constitution? Support your supremacy, whatever you do; legislation cannot but be part of it. It has been observed, that we negotiated about Falkland's Island; I wish, Sir, we could negotiate with the Americans upon the same terms. If they would do as the Spaniards did, that is, disown the fact, and give up the point in question, we might then negotiate. The Americans, it is true, have made this claim several years, of exemption from taxation, but they have never yet carried it. Great Britain, is desired to be at peace with her Colonies, by an acquiescence in their claim; but do you call such a submission to be a peace? I really think the first Bill, for blocking up the port, is the only Bill of pains and penalties, when you deprive that port of its trade; and this was the Bill to which the honorable gentleman (Colonel Barré) gave his hearty concurrence. The Bill before you is not such a Bill: there are no pains nor penalties; their Government will be restored, and private property protected. It has been said, go to the King's Bench with this complaint, as in former times; but let me ask gentlemen, whether they can ameliorate or alter their charter? No, Sir, they can do nothing but say guilty or not guilty, by forfeiting their charter. It is incumbent on every man to give his opinion from his own breast upon this great occasion; but Sir, I cannot help once more condemning that mob of People, which, under the profession of liberty, carries dark designs in its execution; but my utmost wish is, that these measures, in their consequences, may turn out well, and contrary to what has been apprehended.

Mr. C. Fox. I take this to be the question - whether America is to be governed by force, or management? I never could conceive that the Americans could be taxed without their consent. Just as the House of Commons stands to the House of Lords, with regard to taxation and legislation, so stands America with Great Britain. There is not an American, but who must reject and resist the principle and right of our taxing them. The question then is shortly this: Whether we ought to govern America on these principles? Can this country gain strength by keeping up such a dispute as this? Tell me when America is to be taxed, so as to relieve the burthens of this country. I look upon this measure to be in effect taking away their charter; if their charter is to be taken away, for God's sake let it be taken away by law, and not by a legislative coercion: but I cannot conceive that any law whatever, while their charter continues, will make them think that you have a right to tax them. If a system of force is to be established, there is no provision for that in this Bill; it does not go far enough; if it is to induce them by fair means, it goes too far. The only method by which the Americans will ever think they are attached to this country, will be by laying aside the right of taxing. I consider this Bill as a bill of pains and penalties, for it begins with a crime, and ends with a punishment; but I wish gentlemen would consider, whether it is more proper to govern by military force, or by management.

Mr. Attorney General Thurlow. The form of the present law was adopted to give magistracy that degree of authority which it ought to be vested with for the execution of the laws; but this Bill carries with it no degree of severity, unless the pleasure of disobeying is greater than, that of the punishment. To say that we have a right to tax America, and never to exercise that right, is ridiculous, and a man must abuse his own understanding very much not to allow of that right. To procure the tax by requisition is a most ridiculous absurdity, while the sovereignty remains in this country; and the right of taxing was never in the least given up to the Americans. Their charter is mere matter of legislative power; and whoever looks into that charter, will see that no power whatever was meant to be given them so as to controul the right of taxation from Great Britain.

Mr. E. Burke. I have little to say, Sir, with liopes to convince the House, but what I have to offer, I shall do with freedom. It has been asserted, that the nation is not alarmed, that no petitions of discontent are received. How can persons complain, when sufficient time is not given them to know what you are about? We have now seen the whole of this great work; I wish all was good that it contained. I am afraid a long series of labours and troubles will succeed. The question that is before you is a great one; it is no less than the proscription of provinces, and cities, and nations, upon their trial; except that when the saints of God are to judge the world I do not know one of greater importance. I will endeavour to comply with the temper of the House, and be short in what I have to offer. [The House being noisy, several members going out, soon after which he got up and said,] I find, Sir, I have got my voice, and I shall beat down the noise of the House. Why did I compromise? [Here he produced the letters from Lord Hillsborough to the Americans, which declared, that his Majesty, or his Ministers, had not any intention of laying any further taxes on America.] He dwelt some considerable time on the words which the letter contained, as a sort of declaration to the Americans that they should not be taxed. If you govern America at all, Sir, it must be by an army; but the Bill before us, carries with it the force of that army; and I am of opinion; they never will consent without force being used. I have to protest against this Bill, because you refuse to hear the parties aggrieved. Consider what you are doing, when you are taking the trial over the Atlantic seas, three thousand miles to Great Britain; witnesses may be subpoenaed, and called upon by the prisoner, as many as he pleases. Let me, for God's sake, wish that gentlemen would think a little more that a fair trial may be had in America; and that while the King appoints the Judge, there is a degree of fairness that People should the Jury. Repeal, Sir, the Act which gave rise to this disturbance; this will be the remedy to bring peace and quietness, and restore authority; but a great black book, and a great many red coats, will never be able to govern it. It is true, the Americans cannot resist the force of this country, but it will cause wranglings, scuffling, and discontent. Such remedies as the foregoing, will make such disturbances as are not to be quieted.

Lord North arose to answer Mr. Burke. He desired leave to look at Lord Hillsborough's letter, as he had not a copy of it; and explained the passages in that letter very different from what Mr. Burke had: he read the words, "That neither the King, or any of his Ministers, wished to tax America." His Lordship observed, That this was not an expression that carried with it a denial of the right, but only a wish that no further taxes "should be laid on." A man, says he, is not factious, that says America may be taxed; the letter contains an opinion, that no further taxes, at that time, ought to be laid. I am sorry to hear a charge thrown out, that these proceedings are to deprive persons of their natural right. Let me ask of what natural right, whether that of smuggling, or of throwing tea overboard? Or of another natural right, which is not paying their debts? But surely this Bill does not destroy any of their civil rights? You have given them a Civil Magistrate and a Council, which they had not before; you have given the innocent man a fair trial in some Colony or other; and if he cannot get a fair trial in that country, the whole being in a distempered state of disturbance and opposition to the laws of the mother country, then, in that case, and in that only, he must be sent to Great Britain. All that these Acts profess to do, is to restore some order to the Province. None that admit the least degree of sovereignty, can possibly deny the provision of this Bill; it is not a military Government that is established, but the alteration of a civil one. I am sure that this is adopted as the best method at present; I do not say it will succeed, but I hope for the good consequences of it; and if the Massachusetts Bay is to be governed by management, this is the only remedy. By what means is authority to be maintained, but by establishing that authority from Parliament? I do not know, Sir, what is the proper time to lay a fresh tax on America; but this I know, that this is not the proper time to repeal one. We are now to establish our authority, or give it up entirely; when they are quiet, and return to their duty, we shall be kind, whether by repealing this tax, or what not, I cannot tell; but this I will answer, that when they are quiet, and have a respect for their mother country, their mother country will be good-natured to them.

Sir George Savile. I shall say not a word of preface at this late hour; I do not hold it improper to take this into consideration in a legislative capacity, in preference to a judicial one; but I hold this to be a principle of justice, that a charter which conveys a sacred right, ought not to be taken away without hearing the parties, either in a judicial or legislative way, which has not been done, but from their own declaration in the papers on the table, and which I, in my mind, do not think sufficient evidence.

Then the House divided:

Yeas, 239; Nays, 64.

So it was resolved in the Affirmative:

And the Bill was accordingly read the third time.

And after several amendments were made, the Bill was Passed.

Ordered, That Mr. Cooper do carry the Bill to the Lords, and desire their concurrence.

THURSDAY, May 12, 1774.

The Bill was returned from the House of Lords, with several amendments.

FRIDAY, May 13, 1774.

The House proceeded to take into consideration the amendments made by the House of Lords, which were severally agreed to.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

TUESDAY, May 3, 1774.

A message was brought up from the House of Commons, by Mr. Cooper and others:

With a Bill, intituled, "An Act for the better Regulating the Government of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England," to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The said Bill was read the first time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a second time on Friday next; and that the Lords be summoned.

Ordered, That the said Bill be printed.

FRIDAY, May 6, 1774.

The order of the day being read, the Bill was accordingly read a second time, and committed to a Committee of the whole House.

Ordered, That the House be put into a Committee upon the said Bill, on Monday next, and that the Lords be summoned.

MONDAY, May 9, 1774.

The order of the day being read, the House was accordingly adjourned during pleasure, and put into a Committee upon the Bill.

After some time, the House was resumed,

And the Lord Boston reported from the Committee, that they had gone through the Bill, and made several amendments thereto.

Ordered, That the said Report be received to-morrow.

TUESDAY, May 10, 1774.

The Lord Boston reported the amendments made by the Committee of the whole to the Bill;

And the amendments were severally agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said Bill, with the amendments, be read a third time to-morrow, and that the Lords be summoned.

WEDNESDAY, May 11, 1774.

Upon reading the Petition of several persons, Natives of America, whose names are thereunto subscribed, taking notice of two Bills depending in this House, the first, intituled, "An Act for the better Regulating the Government of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England;" and the other, intituled, "An Act for the impartial Administration of Justice in cases of persons questioned for any acts done by them in the execution of the law; or for the suppression of riots and tumults in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England;" and praying, "that the said Bills may not pass into a law,"

It is Ordered, that the said Petition do lie on the table.

Upon reading the Petition of William Bollan, Esquire, Agent for the Council of his Majesty's Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England, taking notice of a Bill depending in this House, intituled, "An Act for the better Regulating the Government of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England;" and praying, "this right honorable House will be pleased to suspend all other proceedings therein, until he can give the Council notice thereof, and they can prepare their defence, and give proper corporate authority for the regular defence of their corporate rights and privileges; and that he may be heard by their Lordships in support of this Petition;"

It is Ordered, that the said Petition do lie on the table.

Moved, "That Mr. Bollan be called in, and heard at the Bar?"

Which being objected to;

After debate,
The question was put thereupon?
It was resolved in the Negative.

The order of the day being read, for the third reading of the Bill, intituled, "An Act for the better Regulating the "Government of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, "in New England," and for the Lords to be summoned,

The said Bill was accordingly read the third time.

Moved, "That the Bill, with the amendments, do Pass?"

Which being objected to;

After long debate,*

The question was put, "whether this Bill, with the amendments, shall Pass?"

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Dissentient.

Because this Bill, forming a principal part in a system of punishment and regulation, has been carried through the House without a due regard to those indispensable rules of public proceeding, without the observance of which, no regulation can be prudently made, and no punishment justly inflicted. Before it can be pretended, that those rights of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, in the election of Counsellors Magistrates, and Judges, and in the return of Jurors, which they derive from their charter, could, with propriety, be taken away, the definite legal offence, by which a forfeiture of that charter is incurred, ought to have been clearly stated, and fully proved; notice of this adverse proceeding ought to have been given to the parties affected; and they ought to have been heard in their own defence. Such a principle of proceeding would have been inviolably observed in the courts below. It is not technical formality, but substantial justice. When therefore, the magnitude of such a cause transfers it from the cognizance of the inferior courts, to the high judicature of Parliament, the Lords are so far from authorized to reject this equitable principle, that we are bound to an extraordinary and religious strictness in the observance of it. The subject ought to be indemnified by a more liberal and beneficial justice in Parliament, for what he must inevitably suffer, by being deprived of many of the forms which are wisely established in the courts of ordinary resort, for his protection against the dangerous promptitude of arbitrary discretion.

2dly. Because the necessity alleged for this precipitate mode of judicial proceeding cannot exist. If the numerous land and marine forces, which are ordered to assemble in

* The Bill passed (the Commons) by a prodigious majority, after a debate which lasted with uncommon spirit for many hours. Equally warm debates attended the Bill in the House of Lords. The objections were nearly the same with those made in the House of Commons, with particular reflections upon the greater rapidity with which it was hurried through the House of Lords: and the peculiar impropriety in a court of justice, of condemning the Colony, and taking away its charter, without any form of process. The Lords in opposition, cried out against a Bill altering the constitution of a Colony without having so much as the charter containing the constitution so altered, laid before them. That the Bill had also altered the courts and the mode of judicial proceedings in the Colony, without an offer of the slightest evidence to prove any one of the inconveniences, which were stated in general terms in the preamble, as arising from the present mode of trial in the Province.

The absolute necessity of a powerful and speedy remedy for the cure of a Government, which was nothing but disorder, was, in substance, the principal reason alleged for the omission of inquiry and evidence, and the superseding the ordinary rules of judicial proceeding. Besides, the Ministerial Lords denied, that the process was of a penal nature; they insisted that it was beneficial and remedial, and a great improvement of their constitution, as it brought it nearer to the English model. This again was denied by the Lords of the minority, who said that the taking away of franchises granted by charters, had ever been considered as penal, and all proceedings for that purpose conducted criminally. Otherwise, it was said, nothing could be safe in any man's hands, the taking away of which another man might consider as beneficial. That a Council holding their places at the pleasure of the Crown, did not resemble the House of Lords; nor approach in any thing to the perfection of the British constitution.

The debate on the third reading was long, but the division only twenty to ninety-two. - Ann. Regis.

This Bill occasioned several long and warm debates. But the Lords still keeping their House shut, and not even admitting the members of the House of Commons, unless to deliver Bills, and then to depart immediately, it is not known that any account of these debates has been preserved any where.

At the beginning of the next Session, (which was the first Session of the fourteenth Parliament,) the Duke of Manchester recommended to the House a relaxation of the standing order, excluding all strangers from admission below the bar of the House; and also recommended the admission of the members of the House of Commons, as formerly. Both recommendations were agreed to; and from that time the debates of the Lords have been preserved. - Parl. Deb.

Massachusetts Bay, are not sufficient to keep that single Colony in any tolerable state of order, until the cause of its charter can be fairly and equally tried, no regulation in this Bill, or in any of those hitherto brought into the House, are sufficient for that purpose; and we conceive that the mere celerity of a decision against the charter of that Province, will not reconcile the minds of the People to that mode of Government, which is to be established upon its ruins 3dly. Because Lords are not in a situation to determine how far the regulations, of which this Bill is composed, agree or disagree with those parts of the constitution of the Colony that are not altered, with the circumstances of the People, and with the whole detail of their municipal institutions. Neither the charter of the Colony, nor any account whatsoever of its courts and judicial proceedings, their mode or exercise of their present powers, have been produced to the House. The slightest evidence concerning any one of the many inconveniences stated in the preamble of the Bill to have arisen from the present constitution of the Colony judicatures, has not been produced, or even attempted. On the same general allegations of a declamatory preamble, any other right, or all the rights, of this, or any other public body, may be taken away, and any visionary scheme of Government substituted in their place.

4thly. Because we think that the appointment of all the members of the Council, which by this Bill, is vested in the Crown, is not a proper provision for preserving the equilibrium of the Colony constitution. The power given to the Crown of occasionally increasing or lessening the number of the Council, on the report of Governors, and at the pleasure of Ministers, must make these Governors and Ministers masters of every question in that Assembly; and by destroying its freedom of deliberation, will wholly annihilate its use. The intention avowed in this Bill, of bringing the Council to the platform of other Colonies, is not likely to answer its own end; as the Colonies, where the Council is named by the Crown, are not at all better disposed to a submission to the practice of taxing for supply, without their consent, than this of Massachusetts Bay. And no pretence of bringing it to the model of the English constitution can be supported, as none of those American Councils have the least resemblance to the House of Peers, so that this new scheme of a Council stands upon no sort of foundation, which the proposers of it think proper to acknowledge.

5thly. Because the new constitution of judicature provided by this Bill, is improper and incongruous with the plan of the administration of justice in Great Britain. All the Judges are to be henceforth nominated, (not by the Crown,) but by the Governor; and all, except the Judges of the Superior Court, are to be removable at his pleasure, and expressly without the consent of that very Council which has been nominated by the Crown. The appointment of the Sheriff is by the will of the Governor only; and without requiring in the person appointed, any local or other qualification; that a Sheriff, a magistrate of great importance to the whole administration and execution of all justice, civil and criminal, and who, in England, is not removable even by the royal authority during the continuance of the term of his office, is by this Bill made changeable by the Governor and Council, as often, and for such purposes as they shall think expedient. The Governor and Council thus entrusted with powers with which the British constitution has not trusted his Majesty and his Privy Council, have the means of returning such a Jury, in each particular cause, as may best suit with the gratification of their passions and interests. The lives, liberties, and properties of the subject are put into their hands without controul; and the invaluable right of trial by Jury, is turned into a snare for the People, who have hitherto looked upon it as their main security against the licentiousness of power.

6thly. Because we see in this Bill the same scheme of strengthening the authority of the Officers and Ministers of State, at the expense of the rights and liberties of the subject, which was indicated by the inauspicious Act for shutting up the harbour of Boston. By that Act, which is immediately connected with this Bill, the example was set of a large important city, containing vast multitudes of People, many of whom must be innocent, and all of whom are unheard, by an arbitrary sentence, deprived of the advantage of that port, upon which all means of acquiring their livelihood did immediately depend. This proscription is not made determinable on the payment of a fine for an offence, or a compensation for an injury; but is to continue until the Ministers of the Crown shall think fit to advise the King in Council to revoke it. The legal condition of the subject (standing unattainted by conviction for treason or felony) ought never to depend upon the arbitrary will of any person whatsoever. This Act, unexampled on the records of Parliament, has been entered on the journals of this House, as voted nemine dissentiente, and has been stated, in the debate of this day, to have been sent to the Colonies, as passed without a division in either House, and therefore as conveying the uncontroverted universal sense of the nation. The despair of making effectual opposition to an unjust measure, has been construed into an approbation of it; an unfair advantage has been taken on the final question for passing that penal Bill, of the absence of those Lords who had debated it for several hours, and strongly dissented from it on the second reading, that period on which it is most usual to debate the principle of a Bill. If this proceeding were to pass, without aminadversion, Lords might think themselves obliged to reiterate their debates at every stage of every Bill which they oppose, and to make a formal division whenever they debate.

7thly. Because this Bill, and the other proceedings that accompany it, are intended for the support of that unadvised scheme of taxing the Colonies in a manner new and unsuitable to their situation and constitutional circumstances. Parliament has asserted the authority of the Legislature of this Kingdom, supreme and unlimited over all the members of the British Empire. But the legal extent of this authority furnishes no argument in favour of an unwarrantable use of it. The sense of the nation on the repeal of the Stamp Act was, that, in equity and sound policy, the taxation of the Colonies for the ordinary purposes of supply, ought to be forborn; and that this Kingdom ought to satisfy, itself with the advantages to be derived from a flourishing and increasing trade, and with the free grants of the American Assemblies, as being far more beneficial, far more easily obtained, less oppressive, and more likely to be lasting, than any revenue to be acquired by Parliamentary taxes, accompanied by a total alienation of the affections of those who were to pay them. This principle of repeal was nothing more than a return to the ancient standing policy of this Empire. The unhappy departure from it has led to that course of shifting and contradictory measures, which has since given rise to such continued distractions; by which unadvised plan, new duties have been imposed in the very year after the former had been repealed. These new duties afterwards in part repealed, and in part continued, in contradiction to the principles upon which those repealed were given up; all which, with many weak, injudicious, and precipitate steps, taken to enforce a compliance, have kept up that jealousy, which on the repeal of the Stamp Act was subsiding; revived dangerous questions, and graduallly estranged the affections of the Colonies from the mother country, without any object of advantage to either. If the force proposed should have its full effect, that effect we greatly apprehend may not continue longer than whilst the sword is held up. To render the Colonies permanently advantageous, they must be satisfied with their condition. That satisfaction we see no chance of restoring whatever measures may be pursued, except by recurring, in the whole, to the wise and salutary principles on which the Stamp Act was repealed.

Richmond,	Abingdon,
Effingham,	Rockingham,
Leinster,	Fitzwilliam,
Portland,	King,
Ponsonby,	Abergavenny.
Craven

A Message was sent to the House of Commons, by the former Messengers:

To return the said Bill, and acquaint them, that the Lords have agreed to the same, with some amendments to which their Lordships desire their concurrence".

MONDAY, May 16, 1774.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons, by Mr. Cooper and others:

To return the Bill, and to acquaint this House, that they have agreed to their Lordships amendments made thereto.

THURSDAY, May 19, 1774.

The following Petition from Natives of America, then in London, against the passage of the Bill, was presented to the King."

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty,

The Petition of several Natives of America, most humbly sheweth :

That your Petitioners, being your Majesty's most faithful subjects, are obliged to implore your gracions interposition, to protect them in the enjoyment of those privileges, which are the right of all your People.

Your Majesty's Petitioners have already seen with unspeakable grief, their earnest prayers rejected, and heavy penalties inflicted, even on the innocent among their countrymen, to the subversion of every principle of justice, without their being heard. By this alarming procedure, all property was rendered insecure; and they now see in two Bills, (for altering the Government of Massachusetts Bay, and the impartial administration of justice there,) the intended subversion of the two grand objects of civil society, and constitutional protection, to wit, Liberties and Life

Your Petitioners most humbly represent to your Majesty, that to destroy or assume their chartered rights, without a full and fair hearing, with legal proof of forfeiture; and the abrogating of their most valuable laws, which had duly received the solemn confirmation of your Majesty's Royal predecessors, and were thence deemed unchangeable without the consent of the People; is such a proceeding, as renders the enjoyment of every privilege they possess, uncertain and precarious. That an exemption of the soldiery from being tried in the Massachusetts Bay for murder, or other felony, committed upon your Majesty's subjects there, is such an encouragement for licentiousness, and incentive to outrage, as must subject your Majesty's liege People to continued danger.

Your Petitioners and their countrymen, have been ever most zealously attached to your Majesty's person and family. It is therefore, with inexpressible affliction that they see an attempt, in these proceedings against them, to change the principle of obedience to the Government, from the love of the subject towards their Sovereign, founded on the opinion of his wisdom, justice, and benevolence, into the dread of absolute power and laws of extreme rigour, insupportable to a free People.

Should the Bills above mentioned, receive your royal sanction, your Majesty's faithfid subjects will be overwhelmed with grief and despair.

It is therefore our earnest prayer, that your Majesty will be graciously pleased to suspend your royal assent, to the said Bills.

Stephen Sayre,	William H. Gibbs,
William Lee,	William Blake,
Arthur Lee,	Isaac Motte,
Edmund Jennings,	Henry Laurence,
Joshua Johnson,	Thomas Pinckney,
Daniel Bowley,	Jacob Read,
Benjamin Franklin,	John F. Grimke,
Thomas Busten,	Philip Neyle,
Edward Bancroft,	Edward Fenwicke,
Thomas Bromfield,	Edward Fenwicke, Jun.
John Boylston,	John Peronneau,
John Ellis,	William Middleton,
John Williams,	William Middleton, Jun.
John Alleyne,	Ralph Izard, Jun.
Ralph Izard,	William Heyward.

FRIDAY, May 20, 1774.

His Majesty being seated in the Throne, and the Commons attending with their Speaker, the royal assent to the Bill was pronounced by the Clerk's Assistant.

*A Speech intended to have been spoken on the Bill for Altering the Charters of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay.

It is of such great importance to compose or even to moderate the dissensions, which subsist at present between our unhappy country and her Colonies, that I cannot help endeavouring, from the faint prospect I have of contributing something to so good an end, to overcome the inexpressible reluctance I feel at uttering my thoughts before the most respectable of all audiences.

The true object of all our deliberations on this occasion, which I hope we shall never lose sight of, is a full and cordial reconciliation with North America. Now, I own, my Lords, I have many doubts whether the terrors and punishments, we hang out to them at present, are the surest means of producing this reconciliation. Let us at least do this justice to the People of North America, to own, that we can all remember a time when they were much better friends than at present to their mother country. They are neither our natural nor our determined enemies. Before the Stamp Act we considered them in the light of as good subjects as the natives of any county in England.

It is worth while to inquire by what steps we first gained their affection, and preserved it so long; and, by what conduct we have lately lost it. Such an inquiry may point out the means of restoring peace, and make the use of force unnecessary against a People, whom I cannot yet forbear to consider as our brethren.

It has always been a most arduous task to govern distant Provinces, with even a tolerable appearance of justice. The Viceroy and Governors of other nations are usually temporary tyrants, who think themselves obliged to make the most of their time; who not only plunder the People, but carry away their spoils, and dry up all the sources of commerce and industry. Taxation, in their hands, is an unlimited power of oppression: but in whatever hands the power of taxation is lodged, it implies and includes all other powers; Arbitrary taxation is plunder authorized by law: it is the support and the essence of tyranny; and has done more mischief to inankind, than those other three scourges from heaven, famine, pestilence, and the sword. I need not carry your Lordships out of your own knowledge, or out of your own Dominions, to make you conceive what misery this right of taxation is capable of producing in a Provincial Government. We need only recollect that our countrymen in India, have in the space of five or six years, in virtue of this right, destroyed, starved, and driven away, more inhabitants from Bengal, than are to be found at present in all our American Colonies; more than all

This Speech by the Bishop of St. Asaph, who voted against the Bill in the House of Lords, though not delivered in the House on that occasion, was written and published by him at the time. It is considered especially proper to insert it here, because none of the speeches, in the "long debate" on the question, have been preserved. His reasons for the publication, given in the Advertisement, are as follows: -

"The Author of the following speech might justify his manner of publishing it by very great authorities. Some of the noblest pieces of eloquence, the world is in possession of, were not spoken on the great occasions they were intended to serve, and seem to have been preserved merely from the high sense that was entertained of their merit.

"The present performance appears in public from humble but just motives: from the great national importance of the subject; from a very warm desire and some faint hope of serving our country, by suggesting a few of the useful truths which great men are apt to overlook.

"The Author has abstained most religiously from personal reflections, He has censured no man, and therefore hopes he has offended no man. He feels most sensibly the misfortune of differing from many of those whom he wishes to live and act with; and from some of as much virtue and ability as this kingdom affords. But there are also great authorities on the other side; and the greatest authority can never persuade him, that it is better to extort by force, what he thinks may be gained more surely by gentle means.

"He looks upon power as a coarse and mechanical instrument of Government, and holds the use of it to be particularly dangerous to the relation that subsists between a mother country and her Colonies. In such a case he doubts whether any point ought to be pursued, which cannot be carried by persuasion, by the sense of a common interest, and the exercise of a moderate authority. He thinks it unnecessary to lay down the limits of sovereignty and obedience, and more unnecessary to fight for them. If we can but restore that mutual regard and confidence, which formerly governed our whole intercourse with our Colonies, particular cases will easily provide for themselves. He acts the part of the truest patriot in this dangerous crisis, whether he lives at London or at Boston, who pursues sincerely the most lenient and conciliating measures; and wishes to restore the public peace by some better method than the slaughter of our fellow-citizens".

FOURTH SERIES.

those formidable numbers, which we have been nursing up for the space of two hundred years, with so much care and success, to the astonishment of all Europe. This is no exaggeration, my Lords, but plain matter of fact, collected from the accounts sent over by Mr. Hastings, whose name I mention with honour and veneration. And I must own, such accounts have very much lessened the pleasure I used to feel in thinking myself an Englishman. We ought surely not to hold our Colonies totally inexcusable for wishing to exempt themselves from a grievance which has caused such unexampled devastation; and, my Lords, it would be too disgraceful to ourselves, to try so cruel an experiment more than once. Let us reflect, that before these innovations were thought of, by following the line of good conduct which had been marked out by our ancestors, we governed North America with mutual benefit to them and ourselves. It was a happy idea that made us first consider them rather as instruments of commerce than as objects of Government. It was wise and generous to give them the form and spirit of our own constitution; an Assembly in which a greater equality of representation has been preserved than at home; and Councils and Governors, such as were adapted to their situation, though they must be acknowledged to be very inferior copies of the dignity of this House, and the majesty of the Crown.

But what is far more valuable than all the rest, we gave them liberty. We allowed them to use their own judgment in the management of their own interest. The idea of taxing them never entered our heads. On the contrary, they have experienced our liberality on many public occasions: we have given them bounties to encourage their industry, and have demanded no return but what every State exacts from its Colonies, the advantages of an exclusive commerce, and the regulations that are necessary to secure it. We made requisitions to them on great occasions, in the same manner as our Princes formerly asked benevolences of their subjects; and as nothing was asked but what was visibly for the public good, it was always granted; and they themselves did more than we expected. The matter of right was neither disputed, nor even considered. And let us not forget that the People of New England were themselves, during the last war, the most forward of all in the national cause; that every year we voted them a considerable sum, in acknowledgment of their zeal and their services; that in the preceding war, they alone enabled us to make the treaty of Aix la Chapelle by furnishing us with the only equivalent for the towns that were taken from our allies in Flanders; and that in times of peace, they alone have taken from us six times as much of our woollen manufactures, as the whole Kingdom of Ireland. Such a Colony, my Lords, not only from the justice, but from the gratitude we owe them, have a right to be heard in their defence; and if their crimes are not of the most inexcusable kind, I could almost say, they have a right to be forgiven.

But in the times we speak of, our public intercourse was carried on with ease and satisfaction. We regarded them as our friends and fellow-citizens, and relied as much upon their fidelity as on the inhabitants of our own country. They saw our power with pleasure; for they considered it only as their protection. They inherited our laws, our language, and our customs; they preferred our manufactures, and followed our fashions with a partiality that secured our exclusive trade with them, more effectually than all the regulations and vigilance of the custom-house. Had we suffered them to enrich us a little longer, and to grow a little richer themselves, their men of fortune, like the West Indians, would undoubtedly have made this country their place of education and resort. For they looked up to England with reverence and affection, as to the country of their friends and ancestors. They esteemed and they called it their home, and thought of it as the Jews once thought of the Land of Canaan.

Now, my Lords, consider with yourselves what were the chains and ties that united this People to their mother country, with so much warmth and affection, at so amazing a distance. The Colonies of other nations have been discontented with their treatment, and not without sufficient cause; always murmuring at their grievances, and sometimes breaking out into acts of rebellion. Our subjects at home, with all their reasons for satisfaction, have never been entirely satisfied. Since the beginning of this century we have had two rebellions, several plots and conspiracies; and we ourselves have been witnesses to the most dangerous excesses of sedition. But the Provinces in North America have engaged in no party, have excited no opposition; they have been utter strangers even to the name of Whig and Tory. In all changes, in all revolutions, they have quietly followed the fortunes and submitted to the Government of England.

Now let me appeal to your Lordships as to men of enlarged and liberal minds, who have been led by your office and rank to the study of history. Can you find in the long succession of ages, in the whole extent of human affairs, a single instance, where distant Provinces have been preserved in so flourishing a state, and kept at the same time in such due subjection to their mother country? My Lords, there is no instance, the case never existed before. It is perhaps the most singular phenomenon in all civil history; and the cause of it well deserves your serious consideration. The true cause is, that a mother country never existed before, who placed her natives and her Colonies on the same equal footing; and joined with them in fairly carrying on one common interest.

You ought to consider this, my Lords, not as a mere historical fact, but as a most important and invaluable discovery. It enlarges our ideas of the power and energy of good Government, beyond all former examples; and shews that it can act like gravitation at the greatest distances. It proves to a demonstration that you may have good subjects in the remotest corners of the earth, if you will but treat them with kindness and equity. If you have any doubts of the truth of this kind of reasoning, the experience we have had of a different kind will entirely remove them.

The good genius of our country had led us to the simple and happy method of governing freemen, which I have endeavoured to describe. Our Ministers received it from their predecessors, and for some time continued to observe it; but without knowing its value. At length, presuming on their own wisdom, and the quiet disposition of the Americans, they flattered themselves that we might reap great advantages from their prosperity by destroying the cause of it. They chose in an unlucky hour to treat them as other nations have thought fit to treat their Colonies; they threatened and they taxed them.

I do not now inquire whether taxation is matter of right; I only consider it as matter of experiment; for surely the art of government itself is founded on experience. I need not suggest what were the consequences of this change of measures. The evils produced by it were such as we still remember and still feel. We suffered more by our loss of trade with them, than the wealth flowing in from India was able to recompense. The bankruptcy of the East India Company, may be sufficiently accounted for by the rapine abroad and the knavery at home; but it certainly would have been delayed some years, had we continued our commerce with them in the single article of tea. But that and many other branches of trade have been diverted into other channels, any may probably never return entire to their old course. But what is worst of all, we have lost their confidence and friendship; we have ignorantly undermined the most solid foundation of our own power.

In order to observe the strictest impartiality, it is but just for us to inquire what we have gained by these taxes as well as what we have lost. I am assured that out of all the sums raised in America the last year but one, if the expenses are deducted, which the natives would else have discharged themselves, the net revenue paid into the Treasury to go in aid of the sinking fund, or to be employed in whatever public services Parliament shall think fit, is eighty-five pounds. Eighty-five pounds, my Lords, is the whole equivalent, we have received for all the hatred and mischief, and all the infinite losses this Kingdom has suffered during that year in her disputes with North America. Money that is earned so dearly as this, ought to be expended with great wisdom and economy. My Lords, were you to take up but one thousand pounds more from North America upon the same terms, the nation itself would be a bankrupt. But the most amazing and the most alarming circumstance is still behind. It is that our case is so incurable, that all this experience has made no impression upon us. And yet, my Lords, if you could but keep these facts, which I have ventured to lay before you, for a few moments in your minds (supposing your right of taxation to be never so clear) yet I think you must necessarily perceive that it cannot be exercised in any manner that can be advantageous to ourselves or them. We have not always the wisdom to tax ourselves with propriety; and I am confident we could never tax a People at that distance, without infinite blunders, and infinite oppression. And to own the truth, my Lords, we are not honest enough to trust ourselves with the power of shifting our own burthens upon them. Allow me, therefore, to conclude, I think, unanswerably, that the inconvenience and distress we have felt in this change of our conduct, no less than the ease and tranquillity we formerly found in the pursuit of it, will force us, if we have any sense left, to return to the good old path we trod in so long, and found it the way of pleasantness.

I desire to have it understood, that I am opposing no rights that our legislature may think proper to claim: I am only comparing two different methods of government. By your old rational and generous administration, by treating the Americans as your friends and fellow-citizens, you made them the happiest of human kind; and at the same time drew from them, by commerce, more clear profit than Spain has drawn from all its mines; and their growing numbers were a daily increasing addition to your strength. There was no room for improvement or alteration in so noble a system of policy as this. It was sanctified by time, by experience, by public utility. I will venture to use a bold language, my Lords; I will assert, that if we had uniformly adopted this equitable administration in all our distant Provinces as far as circumstances would admit, it would have placed this country, for ages, at the head of human affairs in every quarter of the world. My Lords, this is no visionary or chimerical doctrine. The idea of governing Provinces and Colonies by force is visionary and chimerical. The experiment has often been tried and it has never succeeded. It ends infallibly in the ruin of the one country or the other, or in the last degree of wretchedness.

If there is any truth, my Lords, in what I have said, and I most firmly believe it all to be true, let me recommend it to you to resume that generous and benevolent spirit in the discussion of our differences, which used to be the source of our union. We certainly did wrong in taxing them: when the Stamp Act was repealed, we did wrong in laying on other taxes, which tended only to keep alive a claim, that was mischievous, impracticable, and useless. We acted contrary to our own principles of liberty, and to the generous sentiments of our Sovereign, when we desired to have their judges dependent on the Crown for their stipends, as well as their continuance. It was equally unwise to wish to make the Governors independent of the People for their salaries. We ought to consider the Governors, not as spies entrusted with the management of our interest, but as the servants of the People, recommended to them by us. Our ears ought to be open to every complaint against the Governors; but we ought not to suffer the Governors to complain of the People. We have taken a different method, to which no small part of our difficulties are owing. Our ears have been open to the Governors and shut to the People. This must necessarily lead us to countenance the jobs of interested men, under the pretence of defending the rights of the Crown. But the People are certainly the best judges whether they are well governed; and the Crown can have no rights inconsistent with the happiness of the People.

Now, my Lords, we ought to do what I have suggested, and many things more, out of prudence and justice, to win their affection, and to do them public service. If we have a right to govern them, let us exert it for the true ends of Government. But, my Lords, what we ought to do, from motives of reason and justice, is much more than is sufficient to bring them to a reasonable accommodation. For thus, as I apprehend, stands the case. They petition for the repeal of an Act of Parliament, which they; complain of as unjust and oppressive; And there is not a man amongst us, not the warmest friend of Administration, who does not sincerely wish that act had never been made. In fact, they only ask for what we wish to be rid of. Under such a disposition of mind, one would imagine there could be no occasion for fleets and armies to bring men to a good understanding. But, my Lords, our difficulty lies in the point of honour. We must not let down the dignity of the mother country; but preserve her sovereignty over all the parts of the British Empire. This language has something in it that sounds pleasant to the ears of Englishmen, but is otherwise of little weight. For sure, my Lords, there are methods of making reasonable concessions, and yet without injuring our dignity. Ministers are generally fruitful in expedients to reconcile difficulties of this kind, to escape the embarrassments of forms, the competitions of dignity and precedence; and to let clashing rights sleep, while they transact their business. Now, my Lords, on this occasion can they find no excuse, no pretence, no invention, no happy turn of language, not one colourable argument for doing the greatest service, they can ever render to their country? It must be something more than incapacity that makes men barren of expedients at such a season as this. Do, but for once, remove this impracticable stateliness and dignity, and treat the matter with a little common sense and a little good humour, and our reconciliation would not be the work of an hour. But after all, my Lords, if there is any thing mortifying in undoing the errors of our Ministers, it is a mortification we ought to submit to. If it was unjust to tax them, we ought to repeal it for their sakes; if it was unwise to tax them, we ought to repeal it for our own. A matter so trivial in itself as the three-penny duty upon tea, but which has given cause to so much national hatred and reproach, ought not to be suffered to subsist an unnecessary day. Must the interest, the commerce, and the union of this country and her Colonies be all of them sacrificed to save the credit of one imprudent measure of Administration? I own I cannot comprehend that there is any dignity either in being in the wrong, or persisting in it. I have known friendship preserved and affection gained, but I never knew dignity lost, by the candid acknowledgment of an error. And, my Lords, let me appeal to your own experience of a few years backward, (I will not mention particulars, because I would pass no censures and revive no unpleasant reflections,) but I think every candid Minister must own, that Administration has suffered in more instances than one, both in interest and credit, by not chusing to give up points, that could not be defended.

With regard in the People of Boston, I am free to own that I neither approve of their riots nor their punishment. And yet if we inflict it as we ought, with a consciousness that we were ourselves the aggressors, that we gave the provocation, and that their disobedience is the fruit of our own imprudent and imperious conduct, I think the punishment cannot rise to any great degree of severity.

I own my Lords, I have read the report of the Lords Committees of this House, with very different sentiments from those with which it was drawn up. It seems to be designed, that we should consider their violent measures and speeches, as so many determined acts of opposition to the sovereignty of England, arising from the malignity of their own hearts. One would think the mother country had been totally silent and passive in the progress of the whole affair. I, on the contrary, consider these violences as the natural effects of such measures as ours on the minds of freemen. And this is the most useful point of view in which Government can consider them. In their situation, a wise man would expect to meet with the strongest marks of passion and imprudence, and be prepared to forgive them. The first and easiest thing to be done is to correct our own errors; and I am confident we should find it the most effectual method to correct theirs. At any rate let us put ourselves in the right; and then if we must contend with North America, we shall be unanimous at home, and the wise and the moderate there will be our friends. At present we force every North American to be our enemy; and the wise and moderate at home, and those immense multitudes, which must soon begin to suffer by the madness of our rulers, will unite to oppose them. It is a strange idea we have taken up, to cure their resentments by increasing their provocations: to remove the effects of our own ill conduct, by multiplying the instances of it. But the spirit of blindness and infat-uation is gone forth. We are hurrying wildly on without any fixed design, without any important object. We pursue a vain phantom of unlimited sovereignty, which was not made for man, and reject the solid advantages of a moderate, useful and intelligible authority. That just God, whom we have all so deeply offended, can hardly inflict a severer national punishment, than by committing us to the natural consequences of our own conduct. Indeed, in my opinion, a blacker cloud never hung over this island.

To reason consistently with the principles of justice and national friendship, which I have endeavoured to establish, or rather to revive what was established by our ancestors, as our wisest rule of conduct for the government of America, I must necessarily disapprove of the Bill before us; for it contradicts every one of them. In our present situation every act of the legislature, even our acts of severity, ought to be so many steps towards the reconciliation we wish for. But to change the Government of a People, without their consent, is the highest and most arbitrary act of sovereignty, that one nation can exercise over another. The Romans hardly ever proceeded to this extremity even over a conquered nation, till its frequent revolts and insurrections had made them deem it incorrigible. The very idea of it implies a most total abject and slavish dependency in the inferior State. Recollect that the Americans are men of like passions with ourselves. and think how deeply this treatment must affect them. They have the same veneration for their charters that we have for our Magna Charta, and they ought in reason to have greater. They are the title deeds to all their rights both public and private. What? my Lords, must these rights never acquire any legal assurance and stability? Can they derive no force from the peaceable possession of near two hundred years? And must the fundamental constitution of a powerful State be for ever abject to as capricious alterations as you may think fit to make in the charters of a little mercantile company, or the corporation of a borough? This will undoubtedly furnish matter for a more pernicious debate than has yet been moved. Every other Colony will make the case its own. They will complain that their rights can never be ascertained; that every thing belonging to them depends upon our arbitrary will; and may think it better to run any hazard, than to submit to the violence of their mother country, in a matter in which they can see neither moderation nor end.

But let us coolly inquire, what is the reason of this unheard of innovation. Is it to make them peaceable? My Lords, it will make them mad. Will they be better governed if we introduce this change? Will they be more our friends? The least that such a measure can do is to make them hate us. And would to God, my Lords, we had governed ourselves with as much economy, integrity, and prudence, as they have done. Let them continue to enjoy the liberty our fathers gave them. Gave them, did I say? They are coheirs of liberty with ourselves; and their portion of the inheritance has been much better looked after than ours. Suffer them to enjoy a little longer that short period of public integrity and domestic happiness, which seems to be the portion allotted by Providence to young rising States. Instead of hoping that their constitution may receive improvement from our skill in Government, the most useful wish I can form in their favour is, that heaven may long preserve them from our vices and our politics.

Let me add farther, that to make any changes in their Government, without their consent, would be to transgress the wisest rules of policy, and to wound our most important interests. As they increase in numbers and in riches, our comparative strength must lessen. In another age, when our power has begun to lose something of its superiority, we should be happy if we could support our authority by mutual good will and the habit of commanding; but chiefly by those original establishments, which time and public honour might have rendered inviolable. Our posterity will then have reason to lament that they cannot avail themselves of those treasures of public friendship and confidence which our fathers had wisely hoarded up, and we are throwing away. 'Tis hard, 'tis cruel, besides all our debts and taxes, and those enormous expenses which are multiplying upon us every year, to load our unhappy sons with the hatred and curses of North America. Indeed, my Lords, we are treating posterity very scurvily. We have morigaged all the lands; we have cut down all the oaks; we are now trampling down the fences, rooting up the seedlings and saplings, and ruining all the resources of another age. We shall send the next generation into the world, like the wretched heir of a worthless rather, Without money, credit, or friends; with a stripped, encumbered, and perhaps untenanted estate.

Having spoke so largely against the principles of the Bill, it is hardly necessary to enter into the merits of it. I shall only observe, that even if we had the consent of the People to alter their Government, it would be unwise to make such alterations as these. To give the appointment of the Governor and Council to the Crown, and the disposal of all places, even of the Judges, and with a power of removing them, to the Governor, is evidently calculated with a view to form a strong party in our favour. This I know has been done in other Colonies; but still this is opening a source of perpetual discord, where it is our interest always to agree. If we mean any thing by this establishment, it is to support the Governor and the Council against the People, i. e. to quarrel with our friends, that we may please their servants. This scheme of governing them by a party is not wisely imagined, it is much too premature, and at all events, must turn to our disadvantage. If it fails, it will only make us contemptible; if it succeeds, it will make us odious. It is our interest to take very little part in their domestic administration of Government, but purely to watch over them for their good. We never gained so much by North America as when we let them govern themselves, and were content to trade with them and to protect them. One would think, my Lords, there was some statute law, prohibiting us, under the severest penalties, to profit by experience.

My Lords, I have ventured to lay my thoughts before you, on the greatest national concern that ever came under your deliberation, with as much honesty as you will meet with from abler men, and with a melancholy assurance, that not a word of it will be regarded. And yet, my Lords, with your permission, I will waste one short argument more on the same cause, one that I own I am fond of; and which contains in it, what, I think, must affect every generous mind, My Lords, I look upon North America as the only great nursery of freemen now left upon the face of the earth. We have seen the liberties of Poland and Sweden swept away, in the course of one year, by treachery and usurpation. The free towns in Germany are like so many dying sparks, that go out one after another, and which must all be soon extinguished under the destructive greatness of their neighbours. Holland is little more than a great trading company, with luxurrious manners, and an exhausted revenue; with little strength and with less, spirit. Switzerland alone is free and happy within the narrow enclosure of its rocks and vallies. As for the state of this country, my Lords, I can only refer myself to your own secret thoughts. I am disposed to think and hope the best of Public Liberty. Were I to describe her, according to my own ideas at present, I should say that she has a sickly countenance, but I trust she has a strong constitution.

But whatever may be our future late, the greatest glory that attends this country, a greater than any other nation ever acquired, is to have formed and nursed up to such a state of happiness, those Colonies whom we are now so eager to butcher. We ought to cherish them as the immortal monuments of our public justice and wisdom; as the heirs of our better days, of our old arts and manners, and of our expiring national virtues. What work of art, or power, or public utility, has ever equalled the glory of having peopled a continent without guilt or bloodshed, with a multitude of free and happy commonwealths; to have given them the best arts of life and Government, and to have suffered them under the shelter of our authority, to acquire in peace the skill to use them. In comparison of this, the policy of governing by influence, and even the pride of war and victory, are dishonest tricks and poor contemptible pageantry.

We seem not to be sensible of the high and important trust which Providence has committed to our charge. The most precious remains of civil liberty, that the world can now boast of, are lodged in our hands; and God forbid that we should violate so sacred a deposit. By enslaving your Colonies, you not only ruin the peace, the commerce, and the fortunes of both countries, but you extinguish the fairest hopes, shut up the last asylum of mankind. I think, my Lords, without being weakly superstitious, that a good man may hope that heaven will take part against the execution of a plan which seems big, not only with mischief, but impiety.

Let us be content with the spoils and the destruction of the East. If your Lordships can see no impropriety in it, let the plunderer and the oppressor still go free. But let not the love of liberty be the only crime you think worthy of punishment. I fear we shall soon make it a part of our national character, to ruin every thing that has the misfortune to depend upon us.

No nation has ever before contrived, in so short a space of time, without any war or public calamity (unless unwise measures may be so called) to destroy such ample resources of commerce, wealth, and power, as of late were ours, and which, if they had been rightly improved, might have raised us to a state of more honorable and more permanent greatness than the world has yet seen.

Let me remind the noble Lords in Administration, that before the Stamp Act, they had power sufficient to answer all the just ends of Government, and they were all completely answered. If that is the power they want, though we have lost much of it at present, a few kind words would recover it all.

But if the tendency of this Bill is, as I own it appears to me, to acquire a power of governing them by influence and corruption; in the first place, my Lords, this is not true Government, but a sophisticated kind which counterfeits the appearance, but without the Spirit or virtue of the true: and then, as it tends to debase their spirits and corrupt their manners, to destroy all that is great and respectable in so considerable a part of the human species, and by degrees to gather them together with the rest of the world, under the yoke of universal slavery; I think, for these reasons, it is the duty of every wise man, of every honest man, and of every Englishman, by all lawfid means, to oppose it.

Anno Decimo Quarto Geothii III. Regis.

An Act for the Better Regulating the Government of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England.

Whereas by Letters Patent under the great seal of England, made in the third year of the reign of their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary, for uniting, erecting, and incorporating, the several Colonies, Territories, and tracts of land therein mentioned, into one real Province, by the name of Their Majesties Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England; whereby it was, amongst other things, ordained and established, that the Governor of the said Province should, from thenceforth, be appointed and commissioned by their Majesties, their heirs and successors; it was, however, granted and ordained, that, from the expiration of the term for and during which the eight and twenty persons named in the said letters patent were appointed to be the first Counsellors or Assistants to the Governor of the said Province for the time being, the aforesaid number of eight and twenty Counsellors or Assistants should yearly, once in every year, for ever thereafter, be, by the General Court or Assembly, newly chosen: and whereas the said method of electing such Counsellors or Assistants, to be vested with the several powers, authorities, and privileges, therein mentioned, although conformable to the practice theretofore used in such of the Colonies thereby united, in which the appointment of the respective Governors had been vested in the General Courts or Assemblies of the said Colonies, hath, by repeated experience, been found to be extremely ill adapted to the plan of Government established in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, by the said letters patent herein-before mentioned, and hath been so far from contributing to the attainment of the good ends and purposes thereby intended and to the promoting of the internal welfare, peace, and good government, of the said Province, or to the maintenance of the just subordination to, and conformity with, the laws of Great Britain, that the manner of exercising the powers, authorities, and privileges aforesaid, by the persons so annually elected, hath, for some time past, been such as had the most manifest tendency to obstruct, and, in great measure defeat, the execution of the laws; to weaken the attachment of his Majesty's well disposed subjects in the said Province to his Majesty's Government, and to encourage the ill disposed among them to proceed even to acts of direct resistance to, and defiance of, his Majesty's authority: and it hath accordingly happened, that an open resistance to the execution of the laws hath actually taken place in the town of Boston, and the neighbourhood thereof, within the said Province: and whereas it is, under these circumstances, become absolutely necessary, in order to the preservation of the peace and good order of the said Province, the protection of his Majesty's well disposed subjects therein resident, the continuance of the mutual benefits arising from the commerce and correspondence between this Kingdom and the said Province, and the maintaining of the just dependence of the said Province upon the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain, that the said method of annually electing the Counsellors or Assistants of the said Province should no longer be suffered to continue, but that the appointment of the said Counsellors or Assistants should henceforth be put upon the like footing as is established in such other of his Majesty's Colonies or Plantations in America, the Governors whereof, are appointed by his Majesty's commission, under the great seal of Great Britain: Be it therefore enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the first day of August, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four, so much of the charter granted by their Majesties King William and Queen Mary, to the inhabitants of the said Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England; and all and every clause, matter, and thing, therein contained, which relates to the time and manner of electing the Assistants or Counsellors for the said Province, be revoked, and is hereby revoked and made void and of none effect; and that the offices of all Counsellors and Assistants, elected and appointed in pursuance thereof, shall from thenceforth cease and determine; and that, from and after the said first day of August, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four, the Council, or Court of Assistants of the said Province for the time being, shall be composed of such of the inhabitants or proprietors of lands within the same as shall be thereunto nominated and appointed by his Majesty, his heirs and successors, from time to time, by warrant under his or their signet or sign manual, and with the advice of the Privy Council, agreeable to the practice now used in respect to the appointment of Counsellors in such of his Majesty's other Colonies in America, the Governors whereof are appointed by commission under the great seal of Great Britain: provided, that the number of the said Assistants or Counsellors shall not, at any one time, exceed thirty-six, nor be less than twelve.

And it is hereby further enacted, That the said Assistants or Counsellors, so to be appointed as aforesaid, shall hold their offices respectively, for and during the pleasure of his Majesty, his heirs or successors; and shall have and enjoy all the powers, privileges, and immunities, at present held, exercised, and enjoyed, by the Assistants or Counsellors of the said Province, constituted and elected, from time to time, under the said charter, (except as hereinafter excepted;) and shall also, upon their admission into the said Council, and before they enter upon the execution of their offices respectively, take the oaths, and make, repeat, and subscribe, the declarations required, as well by the said charter as by any law or laws of the said Province now in force, to be taken by the Assistants or Counsellors who have been so elected and constituted as aforesaid.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, "that from and after the first day of July, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four, it shall and may be lawful for his Majesty's Governor for the time being of the said Province, or, in his absence, for the Lieutenant Governor, to nominate and appoint, under the seal of the Province, from time to time, and also to remove, without the consent of the Council, all Judges of the Inferior Courts of Common Pleas, Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, the Attorney General, Provosts, Marshals, Justices of the Peace, and other officers to the Council or Courts of Justice belonging; and that all Judges of the Inferior Courts of Common Pleas, Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, the Attorney General, Provosts, Marshals, Justices, and other officers so appointed by the Governor, or, in his absence, by the Lieutenant Governor alone, shall and may have, hold, and exercise their said offices, powers, and authorities, as fully and completely, to all intents and purposes, as any Judges of the Inferior Courts of Common Pleas, Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, Attorney General, Provosts, Marshals, or other officers, have or might have done heretofore under the said letters patent, in the third year of the reign of their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary; any law, statute, or usage, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Provided always, and be it enacted, That nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to annul or make void the commission granted before the said first day of July, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four, to any Judges of the Inferior Courts of Common Pleas, Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, the Attorney General, Provosts, Marshals, Justices of the Peace, or other officers; but that they may hold and exercise the same, as if this act had never been made, until the same shall be determined by death, removal by the Governor, or other avoidance, as the case may happen.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That, from and after the said first day of July, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four, it shall and may be lawful for his Majesty's Governor, or, in his absence, for the Lieutenant Governor for the time being of the said Province, from time to time, to nominate and appoint the Sheriffs without the consent of the Council, and to remove such Sheriffs with such consent, and not otherwise.

And be further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That, upon every vacancy of the offices of Chief Justice and Judges of the Superior Court of the said Province, from and after the said first day of July, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four, the Governor for the time being, or, in his absence, the Lieutenant Governor, without the consent of the Council, shall have full power and authority to nominate and appoint the persons to succeed to the said offices, who shall hold their commissions during the pleasure of his Majesty, his heirs and successors; and that neither the Chief Justice and Judges appointed before the said first day of July, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four, nor those who shall hereafter be appointed pursuant to this Act, shall be removed, unless by the order of his Majesty, his heirs or successors, under his or their sign manual.

And whereas, by several Acts of the General Court, which have been from time to time enacted and passed within the said Province, the freeholders and inhabitants of the several townships, districts, and precincts, qualified, as is therein expressed, are authorized to assemble together, annually, or occasionally, upon notice given, in such manner as the said Acts direct, for the choice of Selectmen, Constables, and other officers, and for the making and agreeing upon such necessary rules, orders, and bye-laws, for the directing, managing: and ordering, the prudential affairs of such townships, districts, and precincts, and for other purposes; and whereas a great abuse has been made of the power of calling such meetings, and the inhabitants have, contrary to the design of their institution, been misled to treat upon matters of the most general concern, and to pass many dangerous and unwarrantable resolves: for remedy whereof, Be it enacted, that from and after the said first day of August, one thousand seven hundred and Seventy-four, no meeting shall be called by the Selectmen, or at the request of any number of freeholders of any township, district, or precinct, without the leave of the Governor, or, in his absence, of the Lieutenant Governor, in writing, expressing the special business of the said meeting, first had and obtained, except the annual meeting in the months of March or May, for the choice of Selectmen, Constables, and other officers, or except for the choice of persons to fill up the offices aforesaid, on the death or removal of any of the persons first elected to such offices, and also, except any meeting for the election of a Representative or Representatives in the General Court; and that no other matter shall be treated of at such meetings, except the election of their aforesaid officers or Representatives, nor at any other meeting, except the business expressed in the leave given by the Governor, or, in his absence, by the Lieutenant Governor.

And whereas the method at present used in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in America, of electing persons to serve on Grand Juries, and other juries, by the freeholders and inhabitants of the several towns, affords occasion for many evil practices, and tends to pervert the free and impartial administration of justice: for remedy whereof, Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the respective times appointed for the holding of the General Sessions of the Peace, in the several counties within the said Province, next after the month of September, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four, the Jurors to serve at the Superior Courts of Judicature, Courts of Assize, General Gaol Delivery, General Sessions of the Peace, and Inferior Court of Common Pleas, in the several counties within the said Province, shall not be elected, nominated, or appointed, by the freeholders and inhabitants of the several towns within the said respective counties, nor summoned or returned by the Constables of the said towns; but that, from thenceforth, the Jurors to serve at the Superior Courts of Judicature, Courts of Assize, General Gaol Delivery, General Sessions of the Peace, and Inferior Court of Common Pleas, within the said Province, shall be summoned and returned by the Sheriffs of the respective counties within the said Province; and all writs of Venire Facias, or other process or warrants to be issued for the return of Jurors to serve at the said Courts, shall be directed to the Sheriffs of the said counties respectively, any law, custom, or usage, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Provided always, and be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That wherever the Sheriff of any county shall happen to be a party, or interested or related to any party or person interested in any prosecution or suit depending in any of the said Courts, that then, in such case, the writ of Venire Facias, or other process or warrant for the summoning and return of a Jury, for the trial of such prosecution or suit, shall be directed to, and executed by, the Coroner of such county; and in case such Coroner shall be also a party, or interested in, or related to, any party or person interested in such prosecution or suit, then the Venire Facias, or other process or warrant, for the summoning and return of a Jury for the trial of such prosecution or suit, shall be directed to, and executed by, a proper and indifferent person, to be appointed for that purpose by the Court wherein such prosecution or suit shall be depending.

And that all Sheriffs may be better informed of persons qualified to serve on Juries at the Superior Courts of Judicature, Courts of Assize, General Gaol Delivery, General Sessions of the Peace, and Inferior Court of Common Pleas, within the said Province, Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the Constables of the respective towns, within the several counties of the said Province, shall, at the General Sessions of the Peace, to be holden for each county, next after the month of September, in every year; upon the first day of the said Sessions, return and deliver to the Justices of the Peace, in open Court, a true list, in writing, of the names and places of abode of all persons within the respective towns for which they serve, or the districts thereof, qualified to serve upon Juries, with their titles and additions, between the age of one and twenty years, and the age of seventy years; which said Justices, or any two of them, at the said Sessions in the respective counties, shall cause to be delivered a duplicate of the aforesaid lists, by the Clerk of the Peace of every county, to be Sheriffs, or their Deputies, within ten days after such Sessions, and cause each of the said lists to be fairly entered into a book, by the Clerk of the Peace, to be by him provided, and kept for that purpose amongst the records of the said Court; and no Sheriff shall empanel or return any person or persons to serve upon any Grand Jury, or Petit Jury, whatsoever, in any of the said Courts that shall not be named or mentioned in such list: and, to prevent the failure of justice, through the neglect of Constables to make such returns of persons qualified to serve on such Juries, as in and by this Act is directed, the Clerks of the Peace of the said several counties are hereby required and commanded, twenty days at least next before the month of September, yearly, and every year, to issue forth precepts or warrants, under their respective bands and seals, to the respective Constables of the several towns within the said respective counties, requiring them, and every of them, to make such return of persons qualified to serve upon Juries as hereby respectively directed; and every Constable riffling at any time to make and deliver such return to the Justices in open Court, as aforesaid, shall forfeit and incur the penalty of five pounds sterling to his Majesty, and his successors, to be recovered by bill, plaint, or information, to be prosecuted in any of the Courts aforesaid; and, in order that the Constables may be the better enabled to make complete lists of all persons qualified to serve on Juries, the Constables of the several towns shall have free liberty, at all seasonable times, upon request by them made to any officer or officers, who shall have in his or their custody any book or account of rates or taxes on the freeholders or inhabitants within such respective towns, to inspect the same, and take from thence the names of such persons qualified to serve on Juries, dwelling within the respective towns for which such lists are to be given in and returned, pursuant to this Act; and shall, in the month of September, yearly, and every year; upon two or more Sundays, fix upon the door of the church, chapel, and every other public place of religious worship, within their respective precincts, a true and exact list of all such persons intended to be returned to the said General Sessions of the Peace, as qualified to serve on Juries, pursuant to the directions of this Act; and leave at the same time a duplicate of such list with the Town Clerk of the said place, to be perused by the freeholders and inhabitants thereof, to the end that notice may be given of persons duly qualified who are omitted, or of persons inserted by mistake who ought to be omitted out of such lists; and it shall and may be lawful to and for the Justices, at the General Sessions of the Peace to which the said list shall be so returned, upon due proof made before them of any person or persons duly qualified to serve on Juries being omitted in such lists, or of any person or persons being inserted therein who ought to have been omitted, to order his or their name or names to be inserted or struck out, as the case may require: and in case any Constable shall wilfully omit, out of such list, any person or persons, whose name or names ought to be inserted, or shall wilfully insert any person or persons who ought to be omitted, every Constable so offending, shall, for every person so omitted or inserted in such list, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this Act, be fined by the said Justices, in the said General Sessions of the Peace, in the sum of forty shillings sterling.

Provided always, and be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That in case default shall at any time hereafter be made, by any Constable or Constables, to return lists of persons qualified to serve on Juries within any of the said towns to the said Court of General Sessions of the Peace, then, and in such case, it shall and may be lawful for the Sheriff of the county, in which such default shall be made, to summon and return to the several Courts aforesaid, or any of them, such and so many persons dwelling in such towns, or the districts thereof, qualified to serve on Juries, as he shall think fit to serve on Juries at such respective Courts; any thing herein contained to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That every summons of any person, to serve upon any of the Juries at the said Courts, or any of them, shall be made by the Sheriff, or other person, ten days at the least before the holding of every such Court; and in case any Jurors, so to be summoned, be absent from the usual place of his habitation at the time of such summons, notice of such summons shall be given, by leaving a note, in writing, under the hand of such Sheriff, or person, containing the contents thereof, at the dwelling house of such Juror, with some person inhabiting in the same.

Provided always, and be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That in case a sufficient number of persons qualified to serve on Juries shall not appear at the said Courts, or any of them, to perform the service of Grand or Petit Jurors, that then, and in such case, it shall be lawful for the said Court to issue a writ or precept to the Sheriff, requiring him to summon a sufficient number of other persons qualified to serve on Juries, immediately to appear at such Court, to fill up and complete the number of Jurors to serve at such Court; and such persons are hereby required to appear and serve as Jurors at the said Courts accordingly.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That no person who shall serve as a Juror, at any of the said Courts, shall be liable to serve again as a Juror at the same Court, or any other of the Courts aforesaid, for the space of three years then next following, except upon special Juries.

And, in order that the Sheriffs may be informed of the persons who have served as Jurors, It is hereby further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That every Sheriff shall prepare and keep a book, or register, wherein the names of all such persons who have served as Jurors, with their additions and places of abode, and the times when, and the Courts in which they served, shall be alphabetically entered and registered; which books or registers shall, from time to time, be delivered over to the succeeding Sheriff of the said county, within ten days after he shall enter upon his office; and every Juror, who shall attend and serve at any of the Courts aforesaid, may, at the expiration of the time of holding every such Court, upon application to the Sheriff, or his Deputy, have a certificate immediately, gratis, from the Sheriff, or his Deputy, testifying such his attendance and service; which said certificate the said Sheriff, or his Deputy, is required to give to every such Juror.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if, by reason of challenges, or otherwise, their shall not be a sufficient number of Jurors for the trial of any prosecution for any misdemeanor, or any action depending in any of the said Courts, then, and in such case, the Jury shall be filled up de talibus circumstantibus, to be returned by the Sheriff; unless he be a party, or interested or related to any party or person interested in such prosecution or action; and, in any of which cases, to be returned by the Coron'or, unless he be a party, or interested or related to any party or person interested in such prosecution or action; and, in any of these cases, to be returned by a proper and indifferent person, to be appointed by the Court for that purpose.

And be it farther enacted by the authority aforesaid, That in case any person summoned to serve upon the Grand or Petit Jury, at any of the Courts aforesaid, or upon the Jury, in any prosecution, action, or suit, depending in any of the said Courts, shall not appear and serve at the said Courts, according to the said summons, (not having any reasonable excuse to be allowed by the Judges or Justices at such Court,) he shall be fined by the Judges or Justices of such Court in any sum not exceeding the sum of ten pounds, nor less than twenty shillings sterling.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That every Sheriff, or other officer, to whom the Venire Facias, or other process or warrant, for the trial of causes, or summoning of Juries, shall be directed, shall, upon his return of every such writ, or other process or warrant, (unless in cases where a special Jury shall be stuck by order or rule of Court, pursuant to this Act,) annex a pannel to the said writ, or process, or warrant, containing the christian and surnames, additions, and places of abode, of a competent number of Jurors, named in such lists, which number of Jurors shall not be less than twenty-four, nor more than forty-eight, without direction of the Judges or Justices of such Court of Session, or one of them, who are hereby respectively empowered and required, if he or they see cause, by order, under his or their respective hand or hands, to direct a greater number; and then such number as shall be so directed shall be the number to be returned to serve on such Jury.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That for the trials of all actions or suits depending in any of the said Courts, the name of each and every person who shall be summoned and returned as aforesaid, with his addition, and the place of his abode, shall be written in several and distinct pieces of parchment, or paper, being all as hoar as may be of equal size and bigness, and shall be delivered unto the officer to be appointed by the Court for that purpose, by the Sheriff, Under Sheriff, or some Agent of his; and shall, by direction and care of such officer, be rolled up all as near as may be, in the same manner, and put together in a box or glass, to be provided for that purpose; and when any cause shall be brought on to be tried, some indifferent person, by direction of the Court, may and shall, in open Court, draw out twelve of the said parchments or papers, one after another; and if any of the persons, whose names shall be so drawn, shall not appear, or shall be challenged, and such challenge allowed, then such person shall proceed to draw other parchments or papers from the said box, till twelve indifferent persons shall be drawn; which twelve indifferent persons being sworn shall be the Jury to try the said cause: and the names of the persons so drawn and sworn shall be kept apart by themselves in some other box or glass, to be kept for that purpose, till such Jury shall have given in their verdict, and the same is recorded, or until such Jury shall, by consent of the parties, or leave of the Court, be discharged; and then the same names shall be rolled up again, and returned to the former box or glass, there to be kept, with the other names remaining at that time undrawn, and so toties quoties, as long as any cause remains then to be tried.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall and may be lawful to and for the Superior Court of Assize, and Court of Common Pleas, upon motion made on behalf of his Majesty, his heirs or successors, or on the motion of any prosecutor or defendant, in any indictment or information for any misdemeanor depending, or to be brought or prosecuted in the said Court, or on the motion of any plaintiff or plaintiffs, defendant, or defendants, in any action, cause, or suit whatsoever, depending, or to be brought and carried on in the said Court, and the said Court is hereby authorized and required, upon motion as aforesaid, in any of the cases before mentioned, to order and appoint a Jury to be struck for the trial of any issue joined in any of the said cases, and triable by a Jury of twelve men, by such officer of the said Court as the Court shall appoint; and for that purpose the Sheriff, or his Deputy, shall attend such officer with the duplicate of the lists of persons qualified to serve on Juries; and such officer shall thereupon take down, in writing, from the said duplicate, the names of forty-eight persons qualified to serve on Juries, with their additions, and places of abode, a copy whereof shall forthwith be delivered to the prosecutors or plaintiffs, their attorneys or agents, and another copy thereof to the defendants, their attorneys or agents, in such prosecutions and causes; and the said officer of the Court aforesaid shall, at a time to be fixed by him for that purpose, strike out the names of twelve of the said persons at the nomination of the prosecutors or plaintiffs, their attorneys or agents, and also the names of twelve others of the said persons, at the nomination of the said defendants in such prosecutions and suits, and the twenty-four remaining persons shall be struck and summoned, and returned to the said Court as Jurors, for the trial of such issues.

Provided always, That in case the prosecutors or plaintiffs, or defendants, their attorneys or agents, shall neglect or refuse to attend the officer at the time fixed for striking the names of twenty-four persons as aforesaid, or nominate the persons to be struck out, then, and in such case, the said officer shall, and he is hereby required to strike out the names of such number of the said persons as such prosecutors or plaintiffs, or defendants, might have nominated to be struck out.

And be it further enacted, That the person or party who shall apply for such special Jury as aforesaid, shall not only bear and pay the fees for striking such Jury, but shall also pay and discharge all the expenses occasioned by the trial of the cause by such Special Jury, and shall not have any further or other allowance for the same, upon taxation of costs, than such person or party would be entitled unto in case the cause had been tried by a Common Jury, unless the Judge, before whom the cause is tried, shall, immediately after the trial, certify, in open Court, under his hand, upon the back of the record, that the same was a cause proper to be tried by a Special Jury.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That, in all actions brought in any of the said Courts, where it shall appear to the Court in which such actions are depending, that it will be proper and necessary that the Jurors who are to try the issues in any such actions, should have the view of the messuages, lands, or place in question, in order to their better understanding the evidence that will be given upon the trial of such issues; in every such case the respective Courts in which such actions shall be depending, may order the Jury to the place in question, who then and there shall have the matters in question shown them by two persons to be appointed by the Court; and the special costs of all such views as allowed by the Court, shall, before the trial, be paid by the party who moved for the view, (the adverse part), not consenting thereto; and shall at the taxation of the bill of costs, have the same allowed him, upon his recovering judgment in such trial; and upon all views with the consent of parties, ordered by the Court, the costs thereof, as allowed by the Court, shall, before trial, be equally paid by the said parties; and in the taxation of the bill of costs, the party recovering judgment shall have the sum by him paid, allowed to him; any law, usage, or custom, to the contrary notwithstanding.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any action shall be brought against any Sheriff, for what he shall do in execution, or by virtue of this Act, he may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence; and if a verdict shall be found for him, he shall recover treble costs.

IV. BILL FOR THE IMPARTIAL ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE PROVINCE OF MASSACHUSETTS BAY.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 28, 1774.

The House having had under consideration, in Committee of the Whole, on Friday, the 25th instant, the King's Message of the 7th, and sundry other Papers, received the Report this day, and granted leave to bring in the Bill for the better regulating the Government of the Province of Massachusetts Bay.

Sir Charles Whitworth, then acquainted the House that he was directed by the Committee to move, that they may have leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Wednesday fortnight, the 13th day of April next, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to consider further of the said Message and Papers.

WEDNESDAY, April 13, 1774.

The order of the day, for considering the Message and Papers, in a Committee of the whole House, was read:

Resolved, That this House will, upon Friday morning next, resolve itself into the said Committee.

FRIDAY, April 15, 1774.

The Lord North presented to the House, by his Majesty's command,

No. 1. Copy of a Letter from Governor Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 14th February, 1774; received 5th of April, enclosing,

No. 2. Copy of Governor Hutchinson's Speech to the Council and House of Representatives; and their Answer.

No. 3. Copy of a Requisition from the House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay, to the Judges of the Superior Court.

No. 4. Copy of a Remonstrance of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay, against the Chief Justice.

No. 5. Copy of the Vote of the Council and House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay, for adjourning the Superior Court, not consented to by the Governor.

No. 6. Copy of Governor Hutchinson's Answer to the Remonstrance of the House of Representatives, against the Chief Justice.

Together with a list of the said Papers.

And the said list was read:

Ordered, That the said Papers be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the whole House to whom it is referred, to take into further consideration his Majesty's most gracious Message of Monday, the 7th day of March last, together with the Papers which were presented to the House by the Lord North, upon the 7th and 11th days of March last, by his Majesty's command.

The order of the day, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the whole on the said Message and Papers, was read, and

The House resolved itself into the said Committee, Sir Charles Whitworth in the Chair.

The Papers presented this day were then read: when the reading was finished,

Lord North rose, and said, he meant now to propose a third Bill, which he hoped would effectually secure the Province of Massachusetts Bay from future disturbances. The Bill that he meant to propose was, to give every man a fair and impartial trial; that the Juries of that country it was true, were not established after the manner in which our Juries here were, and therefore were not so likely to give to each offender that impartial trial, which, by the laws of this country, he was entitled to; for if it shall be found in that country, that a man is not likely to meet with a fair and impartial trial, the Governor will be empowered to send him to any of the other Colonies, where the same kind of spirit has not prevailed; but if it shall be thought that he cannot have such fair and impartial trial in any of the Colonies, in that case he is to be sent to Great Britain, to be tried before the Court of King's Bench, the expenses of which trial were to be drawn for on the Customs in England. Unless such a Bill as this now proposed should pass into a law, the Executive power will be unwilling to act, thinking they will not have a fair trial without it. I would not, said his Lordship, wish to see the least doubt or imperfection remain in the plan which we have adopted: if there does, the consequence may be that it may produce bloodshed: that the whole plan may be dear and decisive; that every part of it may be properly supported; and I trust that such a measure as this, which we have now taken, will shew to that country, that this nation is roused to defend their rights, and protect the security of peace in its Colonies; and when roused, that the measures which they take are not cruel nor vindictive, but necessary and efficacious. Temporary distress requires temporary relief; I shall therefore only propose this Bill for the limited time of three or four years. We must consider, that every thing that we have that is valuable to us is now at stake; and the question is very shortly this: Whether they shall continue the subjects of Great Britain or not? This I propose as the last measure that Parliament will take; after which, it requires, that his Majesty's servants shall be vigilant in the execution of their duty, and keep a watchful eye over every encroachment against the power we shall now pass, and not suffer the least degree of disobedience to our measures to take place in that country. Such a watchful and careful eye to prevent the first rise of disobedience, may be a sure preventive against future mischiefs. The customary relief of troops that is ordered for that country, is ordered, in the first place, to Boston, four regiments being the usual relief. Governor Hutchinson comes home, and his Majesty has appointed General Gage as Commander and Governor in Chief, a man whose great abilities, and extensive knowledge of that country, will give him a superior advantage, and his occasional residence there will prevent him from shewing any impolitic partiality to the Americans, and thereby enforce a due observance of those measures which we have taken, and shall send out. There is one thing I much wish, which is, the punishment of those individuals who have been the ringleaders and forerunners of these mischiefs. Our attention will be continually active in that point. A prosecution has been already ordered against them by his Majesty's servants, but I cannot promise myself any very good effect until this law shall have reached the Province. We must particularly guard against any illegal or ineffectual proceedings, or else, after all our trouble, we shall find ourselves at last in the same dilemma we were in at first. We must observe a perfect innocence, and a conscientious avoidance of the breach of any laws. His Majesty's servants, I make no doubt, will be thoroughly watchful against such breach, nor will they at any time proceed upon slight grounds. They have the happiness to be assisted by the ablest lawyers, who have both great resolution and abilities; and guarded by such outlines, I make no doubt, that the spirit of disobedience, which has hitherto unfortunately prevailed, will be tempered and brought to reason by a due observance of those measures which we have now taken, and, I trust, will secure to us the blessings of peace, radicated out of the boiling disturbances and violent spirit of opposition in that country. When those measures are pursued with that resolution, and those abilities which I have mentioned, I doubt not the event will be advantageous to this country. I have no more, Sir, to add but with permission will make the motion, "That the Chair-man be directed to move the House, that leave be given "to bring in a Bill for the impartial administration of justice, "in the cases of persons questioned for any acts done by "them in the execution of the laws, or for the suppression "of the riots and tumults in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England."

[It was observed that Lord North trembled and faltered at every word of his motion.]

Colonel Barré. I rise, Sir, with great unwillingness to oppose this measure in its very infancy, before its features are well formed, or to claim that attention which this House seems to bestow with so much reluctance on any arguments in behalf of America. But I must call you to witness that I have been hitherto silent, or acquiescing, to an unexpected degree of moderation. While your proceedings, severe as they were, had the least colour of foundation in justice, I desisted from opposing them; nay more - though your Bill for stopping up the port of Boston contained in it many things most cruel, unwarrantable, and unjust, yet, as they were couched under those general principles of justice, retribution for injury, and compensation for loss sustained, I not only desisted from opposing, but assented to its passing. The Bill was a bad way of doing what was right; but still it was doing what was right. I would not therefore, by opposing it, seem to countenance those violences which had been committed abroad; and of which no man disproves more than I do.

Upon the present question I am totally unprepared. The motion itself bears no sort of resemblance to what was formerly announced. The noble Lord and his friends have had every advantage of preparation. They have reconnoitred the field, and chosen their ground. To attack them in these circumstances may, perhaps, favour more of the gallantry of a soldier than of the wisdom of a senator.

But, Sir, the proposition is so glaring; so unprecedented in any former proceedings of Parliament; so unwarranted by any delay, denial, or perversion of justice in America; so big with misery and oppression to that country, and with danger to this - that the first blush of it is sufficient to alarm and rouse me to opposition.

It is proposed to stigmatize a whole People as persecutors of innocence, and men incapable of doing justice; yet you have not a single fact on which to ground that imputation. I expected the noble Lord would have supported this motion by producing instances of the officers of Government in America having been prosecuted with unrelenting vengeance, and brought to cruel and dishonourable deaths, by the violence and injustice of American Juries. But he has not produced one such instance; and I will tell you more, Sir, - he cannot produce one. The instances which have happened are directly in the teeth of his proposition. Captain Preston and the soldiers, who shed the blood of the People, were fairly tried, and fully acquitted. It was an American Jury, a New England Jury, a Boston Jury, which tried and acquitted them. Captain Preston has, under his hand, publicly declared, that the inhabitants of the very town in which their fellow-citizens had been sacrificed, were his advocates and defenders. Is this the return you make them? Is this the encouragement you give them to persevere in so laudable a spirit of justice and moderation? When a Commissioner of the Customs, aided by a number of ruffians, assaulted the celebrated Mr. Otis in the midst of the town of Boston, and with the most barbarous violence almost murdered him, did the mob, which is said to rule that town, take vengeance on the perpetrators of this inhuman outrage against a person who is supposed to be their demagogue? No, Sir, the law tried them; the law gave heavy damages against them; which the irreparably injured Mr. Otis most generously forgave upon an acknowledgment of the offence. Can you expect any more such instances of magnanimity under the principle of the Bill now proposed?

But the noble Lord says, "We must now shew the "Americans that we will no longer sit quiet under their "insults. "Sir, I am sorry to say that this is declamation, unbecoming the character and place of him who utters it. In what moment have you been quiet? Has not your Government for many years past been a series of irritating and offensive measures, without policy, principle, or moderation? Have not your troops and your ships made a vain and insulting parade in their streets and in their harbours? It has seemed to be your study to irritate and inflame them. You have stimulated discontent into dissatisfaction, and you are now goading that dissatisfaction into rebellion. Can you expect to be well informed when you listen only to partizans? Can you expect to do justice when you will not hear the accused?

Let us consider, Sir, the precedents which are offered to warrant this proceeding - the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act in 1745 - the making smugglers triable in Middlesex, and the Scotch rebels in England. Sir, the first was done upon the most pressing necessity, flagrante bello, with a dangerous rebellion in the very heart of the Kingdom; the second, you well know, was warranted by the most evident facts: armed bodies of smugglers marched publicly without presentment or molestation from the People of the county of Sussex; who, even to their Magistrates, were notoriously connected with them. They murdered the officers of the revenue, engaged your troops, and openly violated the laws. Experience convinced you, that the Juries of that, and of the counties similarly circumstanced, would never find such criminals guilty; and upon the conviction of this necessity you passed the Act. The same necessity justified the trying Scotch rebels in England. Rebellion had reared its dangerous standard in Scotland, and the principles of it had so universally tainted that People, that it was manifestly in vain to expect justice from them against their countrymen. But in America, not a single act of rebellion has been committed. Let the Crown law officers, who sit by the noble Lord, declare, if they can, that there is upon your table a single evidence of treason or rebellion in America. They know, Sir, there is not one, and yet are proceeding as if there were a thousand.

Having thus proved, Sir, that the proposed Bill is without precedent to support, and without facts to warrant it, let us now view the consequences it is like to produce. A soldier feels himself so much above the rest of mankind, that the strict hand of the civil power is necessary to controul the haughtiness of disposition which such superiority inspires. You know, Sir, what constant care is taken in this country to remind the military that they are under the restraint of the civil power. In America their superiority is felt still greater. Remove the cheek of the law, as this Bill intends, and what insolence, what outrage may you not expect? Every passion that is pernicious to society will be let loose upon a People unaccustomed to licentiousness and intemperance. On the one hand will be a People who have been long complaining of oppression, and see in the soldiery those who are to enforce it upon them; on the other, an army studiously prepossessed with the idea of that People being rebellious, unawed by the apprehension of civil controul, and actuated by that arbitrary spirit which prevails even among the best of troops. In this situation the prudent officer will find it impossible to restrain his soldiers or prevent that provocation which will rouse the tamest People to resistance. The inevitable consequence will be that you will produce the rebellion you pretend to obviate.

I have been bred a soldier; have served long. I respect the profession, and live in the strictest habits of friendship with a great many officers; but there is not a country gentleman of you all, who looks upon the army with a more jealous eye, or would more strenuously resist the setting them above the controul of the civil power. No man is to be trusted in such a situation; it is not a fault of the soldier, but the vice of human nature, which, unbridled by law, becomes insolent and licentious, wantonly violates the peace of society, and tramples upon the rights of human kind.

With respect to those gentlemen who are destined to this service, they are much to be pitied, It is a service, which an officer of feeling and of worth must enter upon with infinite reluctance; a service, in which his only merit must be, to bear much, and do little. With the melancholy prospect before him of commencing a civil war, and embruing his hands in the blood of his fellow subjects, his feelings, his life, his honour, are hazarded, without a possibility of any equivalent or compensation. You may perhaps think a law, founded upon this motion will be his protection. I am mistaken if it will. Who is to execute it? He must be a bold man indeed who makes the attempt. If the People are so exasperated, that it is unsafe to bring the man who has injured them to trial, let the Governor who withdraws him from justice look to himself. The People will not endure it; they would no longer deserve the reputation of being descended from the loins of Englishmen, if they did endure it.

When I stand up as an advocate for America, I feel myself the firmest friend of this country. We stand upon the commerce of America. Alienate your Colonies, and you will subvert the foundation of your riches and your strength, Let the banners of rebellion be once spread in America, and you are an undone People. You are urging it with such violence, and by measures tending so manifestly to that fatal point, that, but that a state of madness only could inspire such an intention, it would appear to be your deliberate purpose. In assenting to your late Bill I resisted the violence of America, at the hazard of my popularity there. I now resist your phrenzy at the same risk here. You have changed your ground. You are becoming the aggressors, and offering the last of human outrages to the People of America, by subjecting them, in effect, to military execution. I know the vast superiority of your disciplined troops over the provincials; but beware how you supply the want of discipline by desperation. Instead of sending them the olive branch, you have sent the naked sword. By the olive branch, I mean a repeal of all the late laws, fruitless to you, and oppressive to them.

Ask their aid in a constitutional manner, and they will give it to the utmost of their ability, They never yet refused it, when properly required. Your Journals bear the recorded acknowledgments of the zeal with which they have contributed to the general necessities of the State. What madness is it that prompts you to attempt obtaining that by force which you may more certainly procure by requisition? They may be flattered into any thing, but they are too much like yourselves to be driven. Have some indulgence for your own likeness; respect their sturdy English virtue; retract your odious exertions of authority, and remember that the first step towards making them contribute to your wants, is it to reconcile them to your Government

Mr. Solicitor General Wedderburn. I take this Bill to be nothing more than conveying a general security to all persons whatsoever, as well as the military. It is necessary there should be a reform of the laws, and a proper security under such magisterial authority. The Americans do not attack the law, otherwise than attacking the Legislature that made it. It is not this nor that law that is particularly disagreeable to them; they say, no laws shall be put in force there: you say, all laws shall. A singular case may happen of not meeting with that fair trial which is expected; this Bill will be a remedy for it; it is a temporary relief for the limited space of three years. They have, in that country, an unwillingness to obey all Magistrates, who have authority from this country, acting under its laws; nay, they even dispute the commission, and may not allow the appointment; a trial, in such a case, would certainly be doubtful. The revenue law gives the power of trial in another country; this case is a direct precedent of that impartial trial at which you want to come; for if you cannot have it in one country, you must remove and try to find it in another. No man will deny me the doctrine, that such fair trial ought and must be had. It is now no longer a question of expediency, it is a question of necessity; and it will be found necessary, at all events to break into their charters, if you mean to produce that subordination which you are seeking; but I hope, and firmly wish, that even the idea of your authority being known to them, will at once prevent the exertion of it. I agree with the honorable gentleman, that the olive branch ought to go in one hand, but the sword should be carried in the other. Peace will be established upon proper principles, when there is a power to enforce it; and your authority once established, I would then drop the point of the sword, and make use of the olive branch, as far and as much as possible. I could very easily tell the colour of all which has already happened in America, and the ground from which it arose; but I stop short, hoping that when they see and know that you have both courage and firmness to proceed in your plan, it will prevent even the exertion of this necessary measure. I would not have them be too confident in our weakness and irresolution, but adopt the measure of reformation, as arising and occasioned by our firmness and courage in the exertion of those powers which are entrusted to us for the preservation of the peace of our Colonies.

Captain Phipps. I commend much, and am glad to hear of, the appointment of General Gage. I think his abilities and knowledge of the People of that country will sufficiently ensure to him their affections, and be a means of inducing them to obey those measures which are to be executed under his direction; and as much approve of the removal of one of the worst, one of the most exceptionable servants the Crown ever had, I mean Governor Hutchinson. I wish to see the Bill before us without the trial by Jury, for I always apprehended that the advantage of such trial was from the vicinage, and by men who knew the circumstances, as well as the characters of the offenders; nor do I wish to see men sent to England to be tried. These men in America are all brought up to mercantile business, and I do not know any recompense or satisfaction whatever that can be made to a man for the loss of his time in coming here and going back. I wish much for unanimity, because I think it would add a chief support to our measures; but I think it impossible to send a man from America to be tried here, when we are three thousand miles asunder. It would be better that America and England were separated entirely, than to offer to bring men here to be tried. I wish this Bill to go on without that trial by Jury. I wish much also the removal of Governor Bernard, because he was the first man who opposed a revenue law. He did it upon the same principle as a smuggler does, because he would lose by it. If this Bill goes on in its present form, it will extort from me that opinion in my vote of affirmative, which I am unwilling to give.

Mr. Townshend. I cannot, Sir, agree with my honorable friend, in approving of the removal of Governor Hutchinson. The Bill is one of those measures to which I can easily give my consent as, I think, it contains a security that the lives of innocent men may be safe. I approve much of the appointment of General Gage; and as I do not find that the troops are with him, I must express a wish that they may be able to arrive time enough to prevent a riot, sooner than to quell one, and to let America see we do not want to quarrel with them upon mere punctilio; do not let us, for God's sake, when we have asserted our authority to all that we wish to do, and enforced that obedience, continue that little paltry duty upon tea; let us, then, nobly lay aside those little, teasing, irritating measures, having once gained the grand point of peace and submission to our laws.

Mr. Dowdeswell. I am the last man to entertain prejudices against Juries. I revere and honour the institution. I rejoice also that Governor Hutchinson is removed, because he has not acted as he ought to do, either towards this country or America.

Lord Carmarthen. I do not mean, Sir, to trouble the House long, but I hope I am justified, by the importance of the question, in delivering my sentiments. Great Britain neither can nor ought to sit silent, and behold the riots and disturbances that have been committed in America; committed, I say, by a People sent out from this country, as it were from our own bowels; to see these men disobey the laws and precepts of Great Britain, and to sit tamely, and take no notice, would be insipid conduct, highly unworthy the British Legislature. For what purpose were they suffered to go to that country, unless the profit of their labour should return to their masters here? I think the policy of colonization is highly culpable, if the advantages of it should not redound to the interests of Great Britain. I cannot see this Act in any other light, than as giving that same degree of relief to every subject in America, in the same manner as it gives protection and security to the military; I shall therefore give it my affirmative, and hope, upon some future day, to express my further sentiments upon that part relating to the trial by Juries.

Lord North. I rise once more to wipe off the aspersion that has been thrown upon Governor Hutchinson, and I am much surprised to find that it was the sentiment of even one gentleman in this House, that the removal of Governor Hutchinson was considered as part of the merit of this measure. I do not know a man who has a greater share of merit; nor did I ever hear any charge brought against him. He was shamefully abandoned in the execution of his duty, by those who ought to have supported him. Governor Hutchinson had before this affair desired and obtained leave to come home. A ship is now arrived at Bristol, in which he had taken a passage, but as the government of the Province, in those disturbed times, would have fallen into the hands of the Council in his absence, in case of the death of the Lieutenant Governor, who was then very ill, he chose rather to adhere to his duty, and stay in that country, to endeavour to quiet those alarming disturbances. This surely, Sir, was acting the part of a faithful servant of the Crown; I would only tell the House that Governor Hutchinson is not recalled home upon account of any misconduct; and that he is not here at present is certainly a mark of his duty, and deserves the thanks of this Assembly.

Captain Phipps rose to explain, and said, that he did not blame Governor Hutchinson for his conduct without reason, which he would give to the House; he thought him culpable upon two occasions, the one for suffering his son to be appointed a consignee of the tea, and the other for setting at defiance the Assembly. I think him also highly blameable (says he) for not acting without his Council. Here seems to be in him a pretended mildness, and a determined prepossession of irritation.

General Conway. We ought not, Sir, I think to dive into People's characters; the more important business requires our serious consideration; the measure that is now before you is full of difficulties; it has given a serious turn to his Majesty's Ministers; and this Bill is the produce of many laboured hours, which we may felicitate ourselves upon. I shall not give my opinion now. I am for this plan, and for giving it its due consideration, though I am apt to think that this measure will have no other tendency than a distrust of the Americans. I am a friend to America. There must be a kind of connection with Great Britain, which is necessary for the carrying on the measures of Government. Let us preserve temper in our proceedings. The Americans have obeyed the laws, except that of taxation; and I should be glad to hear how this olive branch, that is so much talked of, is to go out. Nothing less than non-taxation, in my opinion, can be the olive branch; if the system of taxation is to be maintained, I am sure it will give trouble enough; but if his Majesty's Ministers have the least thoughts of putting an end to the taxation, let them adopt it now at once, and it will put an end to every thing.

Mr. Van. I do not rise to give the House much trouble, but just to make one observation upon what an honorable gentleman has said; that if we will not tax that country, they will return to their duty. I do most heartily agree with him; I believe they will; but if they oppose the measures of Government that are now sent out, I would do as was done of old, in the time of ancient Britons, I would burn and set fire to all their woods, and leave their country open, to prevent that protection they now have; and if we are likely to lose that country, I think it better lost by our own soldiers, than wrested from us by our rebellious children.

Lord North's motion was then agreed to, and the Committee rose.

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that he was directed by the Committee, to move the House, that leave be given to bring in a Bill, for the Impartial Administration of Justice, in the cases of persons "questioned for any acts done by them in the execution of the law, or for the suppression of riots and tumults, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in the Province of New England:"

Ordered, That leave be granted to bring in the Bill; and that Sir Charles Whitworth, the Lord North, Mr. Attorney General, and Mr. Solicitor General, do prepare, and bring in the same.

THURSDAY, April 21, 1774.

Immediately after presenting the Papers this day, [See folio 70.]

The Lord North presented to the House, according to order, the Bill:

And the same was read the first time, upon which,

Mr. Sawbridge arose, saying, Sir, I am astonished at the noble Lord's proceeding, in bringing in a Bill of the utmost consequence, at a time when there is so thin a House. [There were only forty-one members.] It is an improper time; it is taking us by surprise; it is cowardly. But, Sir, I should think myself highly unworthy a seat in this Assembly, were I to suffer so pernicious a Bill to pass in any stage, without giving my hearty negative to it. I will oppose it every time I have an opportunity, although I do not imagine I shall be much attended to. This is a Bill, Sir, of such a ridiculous and cruel nature, that I really am astonished how any person could think of making it. Does the noble Lord think that a man who chances to see a person murdered in America, will come over here as an evidence against the aggressor? Does the noble Lord think that any American would hazard a trial here, or that he would expect to have justice done him, if he was to come over? Then a person would be brought over here to be tried, and you would have evidences only on one side; but I imagine if those evidences should not be sufficient, evidence here, who never saw the transaction, would be procured, and the criminal acquitted. I plainly foresee the dangerous consequences of this Bill; it is meant to enslave America; and the same Minister who means to enslave them, would, if he had an opportunity, enslave England; it is his aim, and what he wishes to do; but I sincerely hope the Americans will not admit of the execution of these destructive Bills, but nobly refuse them; if they do not, they are the most abject slaves that ever the earth produced, and nothing that the Minister can do is base enough for them.

Lord North. Sir, I think myself called upon to vindicate my conduct for bringing in the Bill in so thin a House. Sir: was I to know there would be few members attend? I did as I promised I would do, which was, to bring in the Bill as soon as it was ready; it was but just finished when I brought it, and I little expected to have any debate upon it in this stage: I thought, Sir, the debate would be upon the second reading; it usually is so; and I sincerely hope when this Bill is read a second time, that we shall have a very full House, and let every gentleman give his opinion upon it. I wish to have it thoroughly discussed, and if it should be found to be a bad Bill, in God's name throw it out; if found otherwise, you cannot be too unanimous in assenting to it; the more unanimity there is, the stronger effect it will have. As to its being meant to enslave America, I deny it. I have no such intention; it is an unpleasant, but necessary step to bring them to a sense of their duty; that assertion has much the same truth in it as what has been before said, that the Americans had seen their error, and were willing to satisfy the India Company. Sir, there is a ship arrived, I think her name is the Fortune, Captain Goreham, she arrived in Boston harbour the latter end of February, or beginning of March, 1774, I cannot say which; she was loaded with tea; the inhabitants came immediately and unloaded her, and emptied the contents of her cargo into the sea. Is this, Sir, seeing their error? Is this Sir, reforming? Is this making restitution to the India Company? Surely no gentleman will, after this, urge any thing in their defence. The honorable gentleman has said this Bill is a pernicious one; I trust, when gentlemen come to consider it, they will see it is quite otherwise.

Sir Thomas Frankland rose only to acquaint the House, that he, yesterday afternoon, after the House broke up, was shown a letter which a friend of his received from Boston, dated March, 1774, which mentioned the tea being destroyed, which was the cargo of Captain Goreham, as the noble Lord had mentioned.

Mr. Byng. Sir, I cannot help rising to oppose this Bill. I agree with my worthy friend, that it is a most pernicious Bill, and, I fear, made with no good intention. I really am surprised at the noble Lord, who said, his wish was to make their laws in America as near as possible to our own. Is this Bill any thing like it? No, it is quite the reverse; dragging People from one country to another to give evidence, is such a proposition as I never heard before, nor could have thought of; but, Sir, every person must know, and will allow, that the noble Lord finds his other two Bills are so defective and dangerous, that no person will venture to put them into execution; he is therefore obliged to have recourse to a third, to indemnify such persons as shall be concerned in executing his destructive project. I shall oppose this Bill every time I have an opportunity, and I trust every lover of his court, try will do the same. He further said, that whatever professions of candour were thrown out, he should trust to them with great caution; that for his part these attacks made abroad, seemed to be intended to prepare men's minds for measures of a similar nature to be enforced at home; and that the conduct and complexion of public measures in general wore the appearance of a systematic design of enslaving the People, as well in Great Britain as the Colonies.

Lord Beauchamp. I really am surprised, Sir, to hear an honorable gentleman say, that every person must know that the two former Bills are defective. Sir, I will venture to say the fact is otherwise; every person must allow they are necessary for the preservation of peace, and restoring the Americas to a sense of their duty. Does the honorable gentleman think the soldiery at Boston will act without they are indemnified? No; they could not. No person would execute the laws half so well, was this Bill not to pass. I think it a necessary Bill; it will make their trials by Juries like ours, which are so much approved of; and I shall give my hearty affirmative to it.

Mr. Sawbridge. Sir, I rise to explain to the noble Lord why I think it a pernicious Bill. I am certain, that however willing I might be to bring an offender to justice, was I to see a murder committed in London, my love of justice might induce me to go to any part of the country to appear as an evidence; but I assure the noble Lord I would not go over to America on any account, nor for any mandate that he could issue; and I believe that the noble Lord will allow, that not any sum would induce him to go over now; therefore we have the same right to imagine, that People in America will not come over here. I make no doubt but Government will take care to bring over evidence in support of their side, but they will not trouble themselves with evidence on the contrary; therefore all your trials will be ex parte, and nothing but a mockery of justice. I do not mention this as an advocate for America, but mention it as an Englishman.

The, question on the second reading was then put:

Resolved, That the Bill be read a second time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be printed.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a second time on Monday morning next.

MONDAY, April 25, 1774.

The order of the day, for the second reading of the Bill, being read,

Mr. Dowdeswell said, he did not mean to oppose the Bill now, but he meant to present a petition from the Agent of America, before the third reading; and he would then confine his debate to the injustice of preventing the parties to be heard at the Bar, on the validity of their charter. To this point only he should direct his opposition, and he meant to do it, and collect all his force against the two Bills; the one for the regulating the civil Government, and the other for the impartial administration of justice, in regard to trials, on the third reading, which was appointed for Monday.

Mr. Dyson desired leave to observe, that neither in one case or the other of the two Bills, did the House proceed as a court of justice, but in their capacity as a legislative body, regulating and controlling the deficiency of charters which had been granted by the Crown.

Lord North said he intended to move for commitment of the present Bill for the 29th, and for the third reading of them both on the 2d of May.

Mr. Cavendish wished to be informed from the House, whether it was the usual custom of Parliament to debate the principle of a Bill, after it had been committed?

Colonel Barré said, he thought the Bill deserved to be opposed in every stage on the principle on which it was framed; but on the third reading, was as proper a stage as any. He had considered with himself, and weighed in his own mind the grounds upon which this Bill was formed; and the result of his deliberation was, that it will be odious to the persons for whose benefit it is intended, by being odious to the People; and that it will be oppressive to America at large.

The Bill was then read the second time, and committed to a Committee of the whole House.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Friday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, upon the said Bill.

FRIDAY, April 29, 1774.

The order of the day being read,

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the whole on the Bill, Sir Charles Whitworth in the Chair;

After some time spent therein,

The Speaker resumed the Chair,

And Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee that they had gone through the Bill, and made several amendments thereunto.

Ordered, That the Report be received on Monday, morning next.

MONDAY, May 2, 1774.

A Petition from several Natives of America, against this Bill, and the Bill for the better Regulating the Government of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America, was presented by Sir George Savile. [See folio 81.]

The order of the day, for receiving the Report of the Committee of the whole House, to whom the Bill was committed, being read,

And it being half an hour after two of the clock, on Tuesday morning,

Ordered, That the Report be received to-morrow morning.

WEDNESDAY, May 4, 1774.

Sir Charles Whitworth, according to order, reported from the Committee of the whole House, the Bill with the amendments, which the Committee had made; several of which were disagreed to, and the rest were, with amendments to several of them, agreed to by the House.

A clause was offered by Mr. Wallace, to be added to the Bill, for taking away appeals in the Massachusetts Bay, in cases of murder, during the continuance of the Act.

And a motion being made, that the said clause be brought up;

Mr. Moreton desired to know if the appeal for murder did actually exist now in the Colonies?

Governor Johnstone desired to know if it was to extend to the trial of those sent to England?

Mr. Wallace answered them both, by saying, he meant it should extend, in both cases, as far as the Bill purported.

[This brought on a debate concerning the appeal for murder being to be taken away in general.]

Mr. Dunning. Sir, I rise to support that great pillar of the constitution, the appeal for murder; and I am not satisfied that a precedent should be instituted in order to operate as an example for the taking it away in Great Britain, as well as the Colonies. This clause considers it now as an existing law in America; I cannot say that I took upon it in that light; but this is not the first time this question has been agitated in this House, and has been called and treated as a remnant of barbarism and gothicism. The whole of our constitution, for aught I know, is Gothic. Is it then, the present idea to destroy every part of that Gothic constitution, and adopt a Macaroni one in its stead? If so, it is a system of ministerial despotism that is adopted here; when a political purpose is in view, things may be adopted that may tend to operate as a precedent, that may become at last prejudicial to the public welfare. I wish, Sir, that, in every step of this matter, gentlemen would be a little more cautious, as I much fear the system would soon be adopted in England; it is a proposition produced on a sudden; and as in its extent it may turn out dangerous, I shall dissent from it.

Mr. Solicitor General Wedderburn. I confess, Sir, that this part of our constitution has never appeared to me as essential; it is very much of a footing with a trial by ordeal. Till laws and society took place, there was no other method of deciding between right and wrong. There is now no law in being to prevent trial by battle; and not in very ancient times was it that the Court of Common Pleas attended in Tothill-fields to judge of the trials. None but the wife of the deceased, as a female, can appeal; and this may be compromised by a sum of money; it may be reduced into a civil suit; but by being adopted in the manner proposed in this clause, it can operate to no bad purpose; nor do I conceive that the liberty of this country will be at all in danger, as it is only for a temporary expedient.

Mr. Edmund Burke. I don't controvert, in an adverse line, what is advanced by the learned gentleman. There is nothing more true than that man has given up his share of the natural right of defence into that of the State, in order to be protected by it. But this is part of the whole law, which you ought not separate, or else you will soon lay the axe to them root of it in England. If there is an appeal for rape and robbery, you ought to have one for murder. I allow, that combat was part of this appeal; but it was superstition and barbarism to the last degree. I cannot, in any degree, consent that the common law should, in any case, be taken away from one part of his Majesty's subjects, and not from the other. But as this is a question of great magnitude, whenever it comes on with respect to Great Britain, I hope then humbly to offer my opinion on it.

Mr. W. Burke. No man has the least doubt but the learned gentleman (Mr. Wallace) is fully acquainted with every part of the law, ancient as well as modern; but I think, Sir, he should have brought you in a Bill to have repealed the law in England first; but when this great question comes on, I shall readily give my opinion on it.

Mr. Stanley entered deeply into the polity of our constitution, and dwelt a long time on the repeal of the law respecting appeals in general. I think it is hard, says he, that a man should be tried twice for the same offence, and when you have an advantage by knowing his secrets and defence. I apprehend that criminal laws were made to save the lives of persons, and not to destroy them; that the power of grace or pardon is constitutional, and is a very valuable and glorious prerogative in the Crown; and a trial is not complete without it. There never was an instance wherein the trial by appeal was instituted, that it was not for the sake of obtaining a sum of money; and it is part of the law that it may be reduced into such compensation, the whole being allowed to be a civil suit; but taking it in its utmost sense, it is nothing but barbarism and cruelty; and I wish to abolish it as an improper part of that code of law for which we are so much famed.

Mr. T. Townshend. This is a question, Sir, which has frequently been before the House, and has as often been rejected. I cannot agree to the repeal in part, unless I hear reasons given for the abolition of the whole, or at least better arguments than those I have heard, to induce me to give my opinion to abolish that part which relates to America.

Mr. Cornwall. The appeal for murder, Sir, is incorporated in the law of England, either as a natural or political right. Is then, Sir, the redress of a particular injury to be remedied only by a sacrifice of the lives of others? Every body knows that manslaughter is a bar to appeal. But, Sir, can it be intended as a wise, political institution, that after a trial by jury, a single individual, to satisfy his revenge, may overturn the solemn judgment and verdict of a jury? It appears to me, upon examination, to be neither a political nor a natural right, and I should be sorry to give my negative to the clause.

Mr. Moreton. I think the provisions of the Bill right: but I did not apprehend that the question would have been debated in this manner; nor did I think that such an extent would have been in view; so that an example in future might have been brought of this, to attack one of the greatest pillars in this constitution, the appeal for murder. If the prisoner is to be sent here, were it the use of taking the appeal away in America? I only wanted that you should not give a constitution of appeal for murder to the Colonies, when in my own mind I am convinced they have it not, nor is a part of their law; and as I think that they have no such power of appeal, I cannot vote for this clause.

Mr. Phipps. I would wish to give, Sir, to every man in America, the same kind of right that we enjoy ourselves; did they not carry with them all the privileges, laws, and liberties of this country? If they have a right to part of those laws, they have a right to the whole. I think the appeal for murder ought to be sacred in this country; and whatever doctrines gentlemen may imbibe from Mr. Blackstone, I cannot conceive them to be of that authority which ought to guide and direct us. There is not a more insidious way of gaining proselytes to his opinion than that dangerous pomp of quotations which he has practised; it conveys some of the most lurking doctrines to lead astray the minds of young men. To talk of the finger of nature pointing out law, is to me an absurdity; but I would not advise gentlemen to seek for law in the channels of these times. The rust of antiquity dims the sight of his readers; but if a man will open his eyes, he will find that the finger of nature will never point out the principle of law. The great argument which I dwell upon is, that the appeal for murder is the law of the land; I am also for preserving mercy in the Crown; I think it the brightest jewel in it; but I think that it is a blight that will destroy all our harvest if it is without controul. I cannot, Sir, give my consent to this part of the law being annihilated.

Mr. Skykker. We are got now upon the most important question that can come on. I think the cause does not want advocates; and therefore it might be improper for me to give my opinion; but, Sir, it is no unnatural thing, that the death of a relation should be attempted to be redressed, and that the friends of the deceased should seek for justice. the appeal for murder, Sir, is considered as a civil action, and to go on hand in hand with the criminal prosecution; and surely, Sir, there is nothing then so exceedingly savage or barbarous in it, if it may be compensated by civil action. But let us consider how this will operate in the Colonies; let us consider in what manner this action can be brought; the Americans cannot make use of it unless their constitution allows it: a writ must first issue out of the Court of Chancery; but as they have no such Court in that country, it cannot take its rise there. A writ of this kind can only issue when the person is in the actual custody of the Marshal. In the process which you have laid down in the Bill before us, bail is allowed to be taken for the offence; so that he never can be actually in the custody of the Marshal. Therefore, at present, as their constitution stands, I look upon the writ of an execution of appeal to be impossible there. The Americans will think that we are breaking into their civil rights; and I think it highly improper to introduce the appeal for murder in this instance, as it is not necessary. But, Sir, I cannot sit down without saying a few words in defence of that able person alluded to, now a great Magistrate, who has thought there is something in our constitution worth preserving. And sorry I am to hear that great and able writer has received any reproach or admonition in this Senate; and I believe the honorable gentlemen (Captain Phipps) is singular in his opinion upon this head; and I am glad to find there are no strangers in the gallery,* for his own sake, to hear what he said. But, Sir, I am of a different opinion from that honorable gentleman; and I dare say the House will agree with me when I think that book one of the best that ever was written upon the laws of this constitution, and will do more honor to himself and this country than any that ever yet appeared; and I am sorry to hear him reproached even by an individual, when I am sure the greatest honor will redound to this country from that able performance.

Sir Richard Sutton. Sir, I do not think that the appeal for murder ought to be partially taken away; if you take it away from any part of the Dominions, you should take it from the whole. I am much against the measure, because I think it vindictive and cruel.

Mr. Charles Fox. I am for taking away the appeal for murder entirely, but I am not for taking it away in part. If the appeal is allowed, you take away the power of pardoning in the Crown. I look upon the power of pardon as much a right in the subject to claim, as part of the trial. Suppose a criminal should be tried and convicted, and he should appear to be out of his senses, in this case he is certainly not to be hanged, the pardon being the only mode of saving his life. Appeal for murder is the only instance in our laws in which satisfaction is allowed to the injured by the blood of another, as it may be compensated by a sum of money. I shall vote against this clause, because I think the Americans have a right to the same laws as we have.

Captain Phipps rose to explain himself with regard to Mr. Blackstone, and said, however he might have represented his performance, he was glad to find it was so well defended by the warmth of friendship; that he had heard, and was sorry to hear, that book had undergone some regulations with regard to its eligibility, which he hoped was not true. He sat down rather chagrined to find his opinion with regard to that work was singular.

Sir George Savile. Sir, the appetite of revenge is, like that of hunger, never to be satisfied. There are certain rights which we bring into society which we give up for the good of the whole; the passion of revenge seems to be under that description; and in this instance only the blood of another may be compensated by civil action. But I will not contend that to be a civil suit which ends in hanging, which the appeal for murder does when not compensated for; but it is necessary that men should give up certain rights which they enjoy for the good of society at large. I would wish a fair and impartial trial to be secured, which I think is already done in the Colonies without meddling with the appeal for murder.

Mr. Skynner. Sir, I only rise to explain, that the appeal for murder may be reduced to a civil action; that there also lies an appeal in robbery and rape; and if the woman who had been injured, when the man was under the gallows to be hanged, should marry him, he would, by the ancient law, be saved, because all her civil right would be vested in her husband by that act, and therefore compensated for as such: by that act she vests those civil rights, which he had deprived her of, in him as her husband.

Mr. Wallace then, with leave of the House, withdrew the motion.

Mr. R. Fuller. Sir, I am the more convinced by what I have heard to day, that the whole law relative to the appeal for murder, ought to be repealed. I will therefore give notice, on some future day, when I shall make the motion.

Mr. Dunning desired to know whether his learned friend (Mr. Wallace) had made any provision against a faulty indictment.

Mr. Wallace said, he had not, as he did not think it necessary; that if the prisoner returned, he might there be indicted again.

Mr. Dunning said, so, then, it is intended that the prisoner may go over again if he chooses.

Mr. Wallace then offered a clause to limit the continuance of the Act to three years, from the first day of June, next; which was agreed to.

Ordered, That the Bill, with the amendments, be engrossed.

A motion was made, and the question put, that such a number of copies of the Bill, with the amendments, be printed, as shall be sufficient for the use of the members of the House?

It passed in the negative.

Ordered, That the Bill be read the third time, upon Friday morning next, if the said Bill shall be then engrossed.

FRIDAY, May 6, 1774.

The order of the day, for the third reading of the Bill, being read:

Mr. Dempster. I do not apprehend, Sir, that the Bill before you is at all adequate to the purpose intended; nor do I think that experience warrants the assertion, that a fair trial cannot be had in the Colonies. Surely, Sir, the bringing men over to England to be tried, is not only a direct breach of their constitution, but is a deprivation of the right of every British subject in America. I should have thought that a power of reprieve, lodged in the Governor, after conviction, would have been fully sufficient, without bringing men to England. Whenever murder is committed, it must inevitably go off with impunity; for whenever any person present shall find he is to go over the Atlantic as an evidence, to the detriment of his family and his fortune, there is no doubt but that he will evade the necessity of his appearance as an evidence. This, Sir, will be a means of subjecting the People of that country to assassination, in the room of legal trial; and the invariable consequence has always been, that when a fair trial cannot be procured, the revenge of the relations of the deceased will exercise itself in this kind of cruel assassination. I, perhaps, Sir, may be wrong in my ideas; but I have looked into the history of that country with care and circumspection, and it has inspired me with the highest veneration for those who were the first settlers; they emigrated when that Star Chamber doctrine was practised in this country. Oppressed as they thought themselves by the mother country, by the cruelty of those arbitrary laws, sooner than suffer themselves to be oppressed by tyranny, they choose rather to combat with tygers and Indians in America, than live in a place where oppression and tyranny ruled. It is no new thing, Sir, that they have refused to comply with the payment of taxes demanded from this country; this exemption is a very old demand of theirs, and supported by their charter. Imprisonment of two persons, who held this kind of doctrine, was made in the time of Sir Edmund Andrews, who was then Governor; and the Americans passed a law, declaring that this country had no right to tax; it is true, when that law came over here, it was rejected. Let gentlemen consider, that if we tax America at this present period, her trade and every thing else will decline. I think that Boston has the most merit with this country of any place I know; she is a most valuable ally, or a subordinate Colony; take it in either sense, her possession is inestimable; but I really fear very much, that the Americans are to be thus treated without the parties being heard. I do not like to see public liberty and the rights of persons infringed. There are two articles in this Bill, which I cannot blame the Americans for resisting; I mean that of the Council and the Judges being chosen by the Crown: the ancient way which their charter directed of choosing their Council, was far more eligible; they were men at a certain age, to which experience generally adds wisdom, that were elected Council; but this is a new system, that carries with it neither experience nor wisdom; and I think the change unnecessary, though not oppressive. I think the office of Sheriff is more oppressive, because he is an engine of power in the hands of the Governor; nor do I approve of taking away the town meetings; there is but one precedent of this kind to be found in history; but I could wish, on the present occasion, that a second had not been made. [He concluded in praise of the character of Dr. Franklin, whom he called the ornament of human nature; and said he thought him highly praise-worthy, for those very acts for which he had been so much blamed.]

* The standing order, for the exclusion of strangers, was strictly enforced during the progress of the three bills relating to the Disturbances in America.

Mr. Grey. I think this House and the nation at large, owe their best thanks to the noble Lord who has brought forward this business; and I must allow, that nothing but necessity, in urgent cases like these, warrants a deviation from the constitution; the law should not be invaded on every frivolous pretence, but this requires the serious attention of the whole Legislature. It would be cruel to the last degree, when your subjects are employed in preserving the peace, not to give them the utmost security in the execution of their duty. But let me ask, Sir, in what situation will that Navy and Army be, that has no protection for the execution of the laws which you have vested in their hands? Will you leave them a sacrifice to the rapacity of the revengeful dispositions of the relations of those unhappy men who may fall by their hands, in the execution of their duty? I cannot think this Act will operate in any shape to the detriment of the People, if they return to their duty; if that is the case; if they do return, and be obedient, the Act will be a waste piece of paper; but the trial of persons in England will seldom take place, I apprehend, as nothing but the most absolute necessity will drive the Governor to have recourse to the Act.

Mr. Paulet observed, that nothing was ever more just than the measure proposed in the Bill before the House; that it was the most cruel thing to let a man lie even one hour in prison, in expectation of being tried by a Jury whose minds were biased; but for the sake of justice, a voyage across the Atlantic would surely be thought, on such an account, an undertaking not pregnant with much danger.

Mr. Sawbridge. I hope, Sir, the House will hear me a few words, as it is the last opportunity I shall have. The opposition I have given to these measures, does not proceed from a settled disposition against Administration, nor do I do it for the sake of popularity; it is for the love of that liberty which I have always been strengthened in, and bred up by education. I had rather bear the badge of the parish, than that of apostasy. It has been urged in debate, that this country has a right to pursue those measures adopted in the Bill, and that necessity is the ground and argument which urges it on; but pray, Sir, let me ask, who is to be the judge of that necessity? A nation, surely, cannot be called a free nation, where another has a right to draw money, out of their pockets; but I cannot understand how any one can agree with these measures, and deny the right of taxation. If you exercise an authority which does not belong to you, or if you force an illegal authority, they have a right to resist. I do not see any necessity for bringing over the People to be tried by a Jury in England; I think the Crown should have lodged a power in the Governor to pardon, and I should have thought it the brightest jewel in it on this occasion. You say, that the Governor is to use his discretion with regard to their having a fair trial; but by this Bill the Governor, I say, is not the judge of that, but it must be upon the oath of a witness; he must believe that witness, and no discretion is left in the Governor. No man will become a voluntary evidence on such an occasion; he will sooner fly from that situation, than be transported to England. By that means justice will be evaded, as evidence cannot be had, and the People will soon take upon themselves to revenge their own injuries.

Colonel Barré. Sir, I think it criminal to sit still upon the final decision of this question, as I cannot, in any shape, approve of this measure. I think the persons whom you employ to execute your laws, might have been protected in the execution of their duty in a less exceptionable manner than that Bill proposes. Your Army, Sir, in that country, has the casting voice; and it is dangerous to put any more power into their hands. Consider, Sir, how long they will be content with 4d. per day; I am afraid not long. You have had one meeting already, you may soon have another; the People of America will receive these regulations as edicts from an arbitrary Government. The heaviest offence they have been guilty of is, that they have resisted that law which bears such an arbitrary cast. I want to know if we in this country had not resisted such arbitrary laws in certain ancient times, whether we should have existed as a House of Commons here this day? I object much against the doctrine which I have heard laid down, that the particular exigency of the case countenanced the measure. I do not apprehend the Americans will abandon their principles; for if they submit, they are slaves: I therefore execute the present measure, in the manner proposed.

The Bill was then read the third time.

Mr. Pulteney. Sir, I will comprise in a few words what I have to say: I do not apprehend that the Legislature can tax a particular county, without shewing some degree of partiality to others, nor can they justly do it. I think the principles of this Bill may be tolerably equitable, and I do believe it will produce a fair trial; but as there are some defects in the form in which it now stands, with regard to the errors and flaws that may be in an indictment I will offer a clause, by way of rider, to give power to a Jury in England to find a Bill of indictment, in order to correct such a deficiency.

Mr. Pulteney, then offered the following clause, which was thrice read, and agreed to by the House, to be made part of the Bill, by way of rider:

"That in case, on account of any error or defect in any indictment, which, in virtue or under the authority of this Act, shall be transmitted to any other Colony, or to Great Britain, the same shall be quashed, or judgment thereon arrested, or such indictment judged bad upon demurrer, it shall and may be lawful to prefer a new indictment or indictments against the person or persons accused in the said Colony, to which such indictment, so quashed or adjudged bad, shall have been transmitted, or before the Grand Jury of any county in Great Britain, in case such former indictment shall have been transmitted to Great Britain, in the same manner as could be done in case the party accused should return to the place where the offence was committed; and the Grand Jury and Petty Jury of such other Colony or county in Great Britain shall have power to find and proceed upon such indictment or indictments, in the same manner as if the offence, by such indictment or indictments charged, had been committed within the limits of the Colony or county for which such Juries shall respectively be empanelled to serve."

Various other amendments were agreed to by the House, and the Bill was amended at the table accordingly.

Mr. Fuller. Sir, I will now take my leave of the whole plan, and will give you my free opinion of it: you will commence your ruin from this day, if you do not repeal the tax which has created all this disturbance; you will have no degree of confidence with the Americans; People will not trust you when your credit is gone; you may, I say, date your ruin from this day; and, I am sorry to say, that not only this House has fallen into that error, but that the People of this country approve of the measure. I find the People wish for the measure proposed in this Bill, as much as the majority here: it is not all owing to the junto of a ministry that these measures are taken; it is the People at large who, I am sorry to say, are misled: they are in an error, but a short time will prove the evil tendency of this Bill. I think the present Bill bears the least injury of any of the three; but if ever there was a nation running headlong to its ruin, it is this.

Mr. H. Cavendish. Sir, I am very glad to hear that there is a majority in this House for these measures; but am much better pleased that the country in general approve of them in as high a degree.

The question then being put, that the Bill do Pass? the House divided;

Yeas 127; Nays 24.

So it was resolved in the Affirmative.

Ordered, That Mr. Cooper do carry the Bill to the Lords, and desire their concurrence.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, May 9, 1774.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. Cooper and others:

With a Bill intitled "An Act for the Impartial Administration of Justice in the cases of persons questioned for any acts done by them in the execution of the law,

"or for the suppression of riots and tumults in the Province "of Massachusetts Bay, in New England;" to which they desire the concurrence of the House;

And the said Bill was read the first time.

Ordered. That the Bill be read a second time on Wednesday next; and that the Lords be summoned.

Ordered, That the Bill be printed.

FRIDAY, May 13, 1774.

The order of the day being read, the Bill was accordingly read the second time, and committed to a Committee of the whole House.

Ordered, That the House be put into a Committee upon the said Bill on Monday next.

MONDAY, May 16, 1774.

The House, according to order, was adjourned during pleasure, and put into a Committee upon the Bill.

After some time the House was resumed:

And Lord Boston reported fr'om the Committee, that they had gone through the Bill, and directed him to report the same to the House, without any amendment.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a third time, on Wednesday next; and that the Lords be summoned.

TUESDAY, May 17, 1774.

The Earl of Dartmouth (by his Majesty's command,) laid before the House more Papers relating to the disturbances at Boston, together with a list thereof; which was read by the Clerk, as follows:

No. 1. Copy of a Letter from Governor Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 9th March, 1774; received 13th of May, enclosing,

No. 2. Extracts from the Boston Gazette.

No. 3. Copy of a Letter from Governor Hutchinson to the Earl of Dartmouth, dated Boston, 21st March, 1774, received 13th of May, enclosing,

No. 4. Copy of the Resolution of the House of Representatives, concurred in by the Council.

No. 5. Copy of a Message from the House of Representatives to Governor Hutchinson.

No. 6. Copy of Governor Hutchinson's Message to the House of Representatives.

And the titles thereof being read by the Clerk,

Ordered, That the said Papers do lie on the table.

WEDNESDAY, May 18, 1774.

The order of the day being read, the Bill was accordingly read the third time.

Upon reading the Petition of William Bollan, Esq., Agent for the Council of his Majesty's Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England, taking notice of a Bill depending in this House, intituled, "An Act for the Impartial Administration of Justice, in the cases of persons questioned for any acts done by them in the execution of the law, or for the suppression of riots and tumults in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England;" and praying this right honorable House, "That the same may not pass into a law; and that he may be heard by their Lordships in support of his Petition,"

It is Ordered, That the said Petition do lie on the table.

Moved, That Mr. Bollan be called in, and heard at the Bar.

Which being objected to;

After debate,

The question was put thereupon It was resolved in the Negative.

Then it was moved "That the Bill do Pass?"

Which being objected to; -

A debate ensued.

It was opened by the Earl of Buckinghamshire, who confessed this to be the most exceptionable of the American measures, but thought it was excused by necessity.

He was answered by Lord Shelburne, who spoke with great ability, spirit, and knowledge, of the subject.

The Lords Denbigh, Sandwich, and the Lord Chancellor, were the chief supporters of the Bill.

The Duke of Manchester spoke with that grace of manner and elegance of language which so peculiarly distinguish him

The Marquis of Rockingham spoke late in the debate. His speech lasted near three quarters of an hour; and never was more attention given to a speaker on any occasion. He spoke with all the weight and authority of an able statesman, and all the feeling of a patriot, deeply concerned for the interest of his country. He entered fully into the civil policy which had originally given rise to the disturbances in America, and had in consequence produced bills and regulations so ill calculated to allay them. He took post upon the measure of his own administration, the repeal of the Stamp Act, on which he argued with great force. He insisted that that repeal was no more than a return to the ancient policy of Great Britain, from which the tax had been a deviation. He then stated the new taxes laid on after his removal from office, as originating from no plan or policy whatsoever, but merely as the result of pique and passion; that they were in effect confessed to be so, because they were afterwards repealed for the greater part, as being laid by the avowal of Administration itself, in contradiction to all the principles of commerce. - That the Tea Duty, equally uncommercial and unproductive, was left as a pepper-corn, merely for the sake of contest with America, as the Ministry had likewise avowed. He censured very severely the doctrine of taxing for the sole purpose of exercising an invidious right, and insisted that taxes ought to be for the real purpose of supporting Government, and not purely to irritate and stir up dangerous questions. That the Stamp Act was a great object, and might have produced in time considerable revenues; but to risk the whole trade of England, and the affections of the Americans, in a quarrel with the Colonies for pepper-corns, he thought a very unwise proceeding. After this, he entered into the particulars of the Bill, and, among other ttings, in answer to the difficulties asserted to be laid on officers without such protection as was given by this Bill, he said that he thought the condition of men of honor and sensibility to be far worse under this Bill; for that no acquittal could be honorable, where the prosecutor had not the usual means of securing a fair trial. He concluded with a very emphatical recommendation of temper, as necessary in all things, but particularly in measures of this nature, and in subjects of so much delicacy: his own remarkable calmness and steadiness of mind, gave additional force to this part of his speech.

The Duke of Richmond spoke last in the debate, and with his usual spirit, pointed his answer chiefly to what felt from the Chancellor and Lord Sandwich: he concluded with recommending to the perusal of the House, a pamphlet, called "Considerations on the Measures carrying on "against America," and the Bishop of St. Asaph's Sermon, preached 1773, before the Society for propagating the Gospel, as containing the soundest doctrines and the best policy.

Alter long debate,*

The question was put, "Whether this Bill shall Pass?"

It was resolved in the Affirmative: Contents, 43, Non-Contents, 12.

Dissentient.

1st. Because no evidence whatsoever has been laid before the House tending to prove that persons acting in support of public authority, and indicted for murder, cannot receive a fair trial within the Province; which is the object of this Bill. On the contrary, it has happened that an officer of the Army, charged with murder, has there received a fair and equitable trial, and been acquitted. This fact has happened even since the commencement of the present unhappy dissensions.

2dly. Because, after the proscription of the port of Boston, the disfranchisement of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, and the variety of provisions which have been made in this session for new modelling the whole polity and judicature of that Province, this Bill is an humiliating confession of the weakness and inefficacy of all the proceedings of Parliament. By supposing that it may be impracticable by any means, that the public wisdom could de-wise, to obtain a fair trial there, for any who act under Government, the House is made virtually to acknowledge the British Government to be universally odious to the whole Province. By supposing the case that such trial may be equally impracticable in every other Province of America, Parliament does in effect admit, that its authority is, or probably may, become hateful to all the Colonies. This we apprehend is to publish to all the world, in terms the most emphatical, the little confidence the Supreme Legislature reposes in the affection of so large and so important a part of the British empire. If Parliament believed that any considerable number of the People in the Colonies were willing to act in support of British Government, it is evident that we might safely trust the persons so acting to their fellow Colonists, for a fair trial for acts done in consequence of such support. The Bill therefore amounts to a declaration that the House knows no means of retaining the Colonies in due obedience, but by an Army rendered independent of the ordinary course of law, in the place where they are employed.

* The Bill passed the House on the 6th of May, and being carried up to the House of Peers, occasioned warm debates upon the same principles upon which it was discussed in the House of Commons. The Lords of the minority entered on this, as on the former Bill, a very strong Protest. Neither House was full during the debates on this Bill, as the arguments on the two latter Bills, had been all along very much blended; and the parties had tried their strength by division on the Bill for altering the Massachusetts Charter. On both questions, however, the numbers of the minority had all along continued very low and disproportioned. - Ann. Regis.

3dly. Because we think, that a military force, sufficient for governing upon this plan, cannot be maintained without the inevitable ruin of the nation.

Lastly. Because this Bill seems to be one of the many experiments towards an introduction of essential innovations into the Government of this empire. The virtual indemnity provided by this Bill, for those who shall be indicted for murders committed under colour of office, can answer no other purpose. We consider that to be an indemnity which renders trial, and consequently punishment, impracticable; and trial is impracticable, when the very Governor, under whose authority acts of violence may be committed, is empowered to send the instruments of that violence to three thousand miles distance from the scene of their offence, the reach of their prosecutor, and the local evidence which may tend to their conviction. The authority given by this Bill, to compel the transportation from America to Great Britain of any number of witnesses, at the pleasure of the parties prosecuting and prosecuted, without any regard to their age, sex, health, circumstances, business, or duties, seems to us so extravagant in its principles, and so impracticable in its execution, as to confirm us further in our opinion of the spirit which animates the whole system of the present American regulations.

Richmond,	Portland,
Rockingham	Manchester,
Leinster,	Ponsonby,
Fitzwilliam,	Craven.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by the former Messengers:

To acquaint them, that the Lords have agreed to the said Bill without any amendment.

FRIDAY, May 20, 1774.

His Majesty being seated on the Throne, and the Commons attending with their Speaker, the Royal assent to the Bill was pronounced by the Clerk's Assistant.

Anne Decimo Quarto Georgii III. Regis.

An Act for the Impartial Administration of Justice in the cases of Persons questioned for any Acts done by them in Execution of the Law, or for the Suppression of Riots and Tumults, in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England.

Whereas in his Majesty's Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England, an attempt hath lately been made to throw off the authority of the Parliament of Great Britain over the said Province, and an actual and avowed resistance, by open force, to the execution of certain Acts of Parliament, hath been suffered to take place, uncontrouled and unpunished, in defiance of his Majesty's authority, and to the utter subversion of all lawful Government: and whereas, in the present disordered state of the said Province, it is of the utmost importance to the general welfare thereof, and to the re-establishment of lawful authority throughout the same, that neither the Magistrates acting in support of the laws, nor any of his Majesty's subjects aiding and assisting them therein, or in the suppression of riots and tumults, raised in opposition to the execution of the laws and statutes of this realm, should be discouraged from the proper discharge of their duty, by an apprehension, that in case of their being questioned for any acts done therein, they may be liable to be brought to trial for the same before persons who do not acknowledge the validity of the law, in the execution whereof, or the authority of the Magistrate in the support of whom, such acts had been done: in order therefore to remove every such discouragement from the minds of his Majesty's subjects, and to induce them, upon all proper occasions, to exert themselves in support of the public peace of the Province, and of the authority of the King and Parliament of Great Britain over the same; Be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that if any inquisition or indictment shall be found, or if any appeal shall be sued or preferred against any person, for murder, or other capital offence, in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, and it shall appear, by information given upon oath to the Governor, or, in his absence, to the Lieutenant Governor of the said Province, that the fact was committed by the person against whom such inquisition or indictment shall be found, or against whom such appeal shall be sued or preferred, as aforesaid, either in the execution of his duty as a Magistrate, for the suppression of riots, or in the support of the Laws of Revenue, or in acting in his duty as an Officer of Revenue, or in acting under the direction and order of any Magistrate, for the suppression of riots, or for the carrying into effect the Laws of the Revenue, or in aiding and assisting in any of the cases aforesaid; and if it shall also appear, to the satisfaction of the said Governor, or Lieutenant Governor respectively, that an indifferent trial cannot be had within the said Province, in that case, it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, to direct, with the advice and consent of the Council, that the inquisition, indictment, or appeal, shall be tried in some other of his Majesty's Colonies, or in Great Britain; and for that purpose to order the person against whom such inquisition or indictment shall be found, or against whom such appeal shall be sued or preferred, as aforesaid, to be sent, under sufficient custody, to the place appointed for his trial, or to admit such person to bail, taking a recognizance, (which the said Governor, or in his absence, the Lieutenant Governor, is hereby authorized to take,) from such person, with sufficient sureties, to be approved of by the said Governor, or, in his absence, the Lieutenant Governor, in such sums of money as the said Governor, or, in his absence, the Lieutenant Governor, shall deem reasonable, for the personal appearance of such person, if the trial shall be appointed to be had in any other Colony, before the Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, or Commander-in-Chief of such Colony; and if the trial shall be appointed to be had in Great Britain, then before his Majesty's Court of King's Bench, at a time to be mentioned in such recognizances; and the Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, or Commander-in-Chief of the Colony, where such trial shall be appointed to be had, or Court of King's Bench, where the trial is appointed to be had in Great Britain, upon the appearance of such person, according to such recognizance, or in custody, shall either commit such person, or admit him to bail, until such trial; and which the said Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, or Commander-in-Chief, and Court of King's Bench, are hereby authorized and empowered to do.

And, to prevent a failure of justice, from the want of evidence on the trial of any such inquisition, indictment, or appeal, Be it further enacted, that the Governor, or, in his absence, the Lieutenant Governor, shall, and he is hereby authorized and required, to bind in recognizances to his Majesty all such witnesses as the prosecutor or person against whom such inquisition or indictment shall be found, or appeal sued or preferred, shall desire to attend the trial of the said inquisition, indictment, or appeal, for their personal appearance, at the time and place of such trial, to give evidence: and the said Governor, or in his absence, the Lieutenant Governor, shall thereupon appoint a reasonable sum to be allowed for the expenses of every such witness, and shall thereupon give to each witness a certificate, in writing; under his hand and seal, that such witness has entered into a recognizance to give evidence, and specifying the sum allowed or his expenses; and the Collector and Collectors of the Customs, or one of them, within the said Province, upon the delivery of such certificate, are, and is hereby authorized and required, forthwith to pay to such witness the sum specified therein for his expenses.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That all prosecutors and witnesses, who shall be under recognizances to appear in any of his Majesty's Colonies in America, or in Great Britain, in pursuance of this Act, shall be free from all arrests and restraints, in any action or suit to be commenced against them during their going to such Colony, or coming to Great Britain, and their necessary stay and abiding there, on occasion of such prosecution, and returning again to the said Province of the Massachusetts Bay.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That all and every his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, and other Justices and Coroners, before whom any person shall be brought, charged with murder, or other capital crime, where it shall appear by proof, on oath, to such Justices or Coroners, that the fact was committed by such person, either in the execution of his duty as a Magistrate, for the suppression of riots, or in the support of the Laws of Revenue, or in acting in his duty as an Officer of Revenue, or in acting under the direction and order of any Magistrate, for the suppression of riots, or for the carrying into effect the Laws of Revenue, or in aiding and assisting in any of the cases aforesaid, are hereby authorized and required to admit every such person so brought before him or them, as aforesaid, to bail; any law, custom, or usage, to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That where it shall be made appear to the Judges or Justices of any Court, within the said Province of Massachusetts Bay, by any person, against whom any inquisition or indictment shall be found, or appeal sued or preferred for murder, or other capital crime, that the fact was committed by such person, either in the execution of his duty as a Magistrate, for the suppression of riots, or in the support of the Laws of Revenue, or in acting in his duty as an Officer of Revenue, or in acting under the direction and order of any Magistrate, for the suppression of riots, or for the carrying into effect the laws of revenue, or in aiding and assisting in any of the cases aforesaid, and that he intends to make application to the Governor, or Lieutenant Governor of the said Province, that such inquisition, indictment, or appeal, may be tried in some other of his Majesty's Colonies, or in Great Britain, the said Judges or Justices are hereby authorized and required to adjourn or postpone the trial of such inquisition, indictment, or appeal, for a reasonable time, and admit the person to bail, in order that he may make application to the Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, for the purpose aforesaid.

And be it further enacted, That the Governor, or in his absence, the Lieutenant Governor, if he shall direct the trial to be had in any other of his Majesty's Colonies, shall transmit the inquisition, indictment, or appeal, together with the recognizances of the witnesses, and other recogni-zances, under the seal of the Province, to the Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, or Commander-in-Chief, such other Colony, who shall immediately issue a commission of Oyer and Terminer, and deliver, or cause to be delivered, the said inquisition, indictment, or appeal, with the said recognizances, to the Chief Justice. and such other persons as have usually been Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, Justices of Assize, or General Gaol Delivery there; who shall have power to proceed upon the said inquisition, indictment, or appeal, as if the same had been returned, found, or preferred before them; and the trial shall thereupon proceed in like manner, to all intents and purposes, as if the offence had been committed in such place: and in case the Governor, or, in his absence the Lieutenant Governor, shall direct the trial to be had in Great Britain. he shall then transmit the inquisition, indictment, or appeal, together with the recognizances, of the witnesses, and other recognizances, under the seal of the Province, to one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, who shall deliver, or cause to be delivered, the same, to the Master of the Crown Office, to be filed of record in the Court of King's Bench, and the inquisition, indictment, or appeal, shall be tried and proceeded upon, in the next term, or at such other time as the Court shall appoint, at the Bar of the Court of King's Bench, in like manner, to all intents and purposes, as if the offence had been committed in the county of Middlesex, or in any other county of that part of Great Britain called England, where the Court of King's Bench shall sit, or else before such Commissioners, and in such county, in that part of Great Britain called England as shall be assigned by the King's Majesty's commission, in like manner and form, to all intents and purposes, as if such offence had been committed in the same county where such inquisition, indictment, or appeal, shall be so tried.

And be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That in case, on account of any error or defect in any indictment, which, in virtue, or under the authority of this Act, shall be transmitted to any other Colony, or to Great Britain, the same shall be quashed, or judgment thereon arrested, or such indictment adjudged bad on demurrer, it shall and may be lawful to prefer a new indictment or indictments against the person or persons accused in the said Colony, to which such indictment, so quashed or adjudged bad, shall have been transmitted, or before the Grand Jury of any county in Great Britain, in case such former indictment shall have been transmitted to Great Britain, in the same manner as could be done in case the party accused should return to the place where the offence was committed; and the Grand Jury and Petty Jury of such other Colony or county in Great Britain shall have power to find and proceed upon such indictment or indictments, in the same manner as if the offence, by such indictment or indictments charged, had been committed within the limits of the Colony or county for which such Juries shall respectively be empanelled to serve.

And be it farther enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That this Act, and every clause, provision, regulation, matter, and thing, herein contained, shall commence and take effect upon the first day of June, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four; and be, and continue in force, for and during the term of three years.

V. MOTION FOR REPEAL OF DUTY ON TEA.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 15, 1774.

Mr. Rose Fuller, gave notice that he intended to move on Tuesday next, for a Committee on the Tea Duty, to see whether or not it was possible to repeal the Act, laying that duty, before the Bill for the better regulating the Government of Massachusetts Bay, took effect.

TUESDAY, April 19, 1774.

Mr. Fuller moved, that an Act, made in the seventh year of the reign of his present Majesty, intituled, "An Act for granting certain Duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America; for allowing a Drawback of the Duties of Customs upon the exportation from this Kingdom of coffee and cocoa nuts, of the produce of the "said Colonies or Plantations, for discontinuing the draw-backs payable on china earthen ware exported to America; and for more effectually preventing the clandestine running of goods in the said Colonies and Plantations," might he read:

And the same was read accordingly.

Mr. Fuller then made the motion of which he had given notice:

"That this House will, upon this day sevensnight, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to take into consideration the Duty of three pence per pound weight, upon Tea, payable in all his Majesty's Dominions in America, imposed by the said Act; and also the appropriation of the said duty."

On offering it, he declared that the Boston Port Bill, and the other regulations, would be totally ineffectual without repealing the Tea Duty Bill. He said he was very sure that the motion would be productive of a great deal of good; and that it could not possibly do harm. He spoke much to the temper and feelings of the House; and the arguments which he used served rather to point out the former considerations which the House had had upon this question, and that the subject of taxation of America was no new matter. After a short opening, he concluded by making the preceding motion.

Mr. Pennant seconded the motion, and said, he wished much it might go to a Committee, because he thought the principle upon which the Bill was established, as set forth in the preamble, was unjust and impolitic; that it changed the nature of their constitution, and it took away the power which had always been held sacred to an Englishman, that of levying their own money; that it was similar to raising the ship money in King Charles' time; that those who condemned that measure must of course condemn this, the one being as arbitrary and unconstitutional as the other. He said, he subscribed to the supremacy of Parliament, but he thought there was a plain method for raising by requisition the money which we wanted; that the People of that country would be better able to ascertain how, and in what manner the same ought to be raised, on account of the local circumstances which might attend it. The People of Boston would be the first victims to our resentment; repeal this Bill, said he, and you will meet with support from the rest of the Colonies.

Mr. Rice. This, Sir, is a motion upon the plan of reconciliation, and there is no man would go further than myself to correct any thing that I thought would be the means of bringing about such reconciliation; but I cannot concur in any thing that endangers the supremacy of Parliament. Let us but consider the consequence of such a repeal at this present time. Whenever we have made the least concession, they have always required more; they will think that we acknowledge that we have no right, if we should repeal this law. The objection has hitherto been made on the ground of taxation. I will consider truly what that ground is; but I very much fear that they object to that controul which may be improper to take off; they submitted to external taxation; to internal, they always objected. I will take that period, then, as the fixed era for their allowing taxation, by the repeal of the Stamp Act, as an internal tax. If you repeal this Act, you will allow that you have no right. I desire to keep my stand here, and not to give up that authority which I am clear in. I wish no new taxes to take place, but I wish to keep the right and controul, which if you give up, you part with all. The interest of America is the interest of Great Britain, and I would wish to make their happiness the object, and to do that which would be satisfactory to their minds; but, in this present case, I am greatly afraid if you give up this, you will be required to give up much more.

Captain Phipps. I should be the last person in the House to give trouble, if the importance of this question did not urge me to it; but I cannot take the acts of the Province of Massachusetts Bay to be the opinion of all America, nor those of a few designing interested men in Boston, to be the disposition of the whole Province at large. I perfectly agree that the Americans cannot resist, and that the doctrine of supremacy is good; but I think the Americans have a real security in Parliament, which is, that you can do nothing that does not affect Great Britain equally with America. I will consider the present measure as an act with which they cannot comply, or, more properly they will not. In the light, then, of a mercantile tax, it is trifling and ridiculous; as a matter of revenue, it is absurd. If they cannot resist, they will find some means of avoiding it. God and nature has given them an extensive coast, and of course an opportunity of smuggling. You will injure the manufactures of this country in a very high degree; I do not mean by their non-importation agreements, but by making them prefer the manufacture which is worse than yours, from your enemies, to those of this country, which is better. May the right long remain in the expediency of not exercising it! I would only have it called for at particular times, when the emergency of affairs requires it, and when the whole of Great Britain and America are to receive equal benefit; but if you exercise that right when you have no occasion or urgent reason for raising a revenue, you will throw the quiet man of that country into the factions man. But how can you expect an obedience of that country, when the emoluments of it are taken from them to supply the luxuries of men who live in this? The Province of Virginia, before Lord Botetourt was made Governor, was annually plundered of £5,000 per annum, by the non-residence of former Governors. I knew a person in that country who held eleven offices, the emoluments of which were appropriated to the support of men of bad description in this. I approved much of the Stamp Act, as a necessary measure to destroy that nest of small petty-fogging attorneys, whose business it was to create disturbances and law suits, and live by the plunder. There is a wide difference between giving up a right and exercising it, but I cannot see that Parliament in fact gives up that right, when they say it is not expedient to exercise it. I therefore wish much for the repeal of this Act, which I think you will one day or other be forced to do.

Mr. Stephen Fox. I rise, Sir, much in favour of the motion on your table; and I think the only reason that has been urged against it, is, that America cannot resist. Do not, Sir, let us exercise such a conduct merely to show our power. I am far from saying we ought not to exert this power upon proper occasions, but to make use of it by way of irritation, is to me the highest ill policy, as well as absurdity; I shall therefore give my hearty affirmative to the motion.

Mr. Cornwall. I wish gentlemen would take into consideration the justice of their former proceedings, and the policy and expediency which the present times require and occasion. I do not love entering into the long debates which have formerly happened upon this business; I think it wrong, and wish only to pursue the present expediency of the measure. The proposition which we are now called upon to decide, is simply this: Whether the whole of our authority over the Americans shall be taken away? It has been said we have irritated the Americans by taxes that are neither for the purpose of revenue, nor for commercial regulations. That tax will be found to produce much more than gentlemen think; and however little it may produce, the taking it off at this time would be both impolitic and imprudent. Much has also been said about gaining the affections of the Americans. If this were a new question, I should think the gaining of their affections is worth a thousand times the produce of the Tea Duty. It is true, Sir, that England is loaded with a debt of a very considerable amount, on account of the last American war; and it is but just and right that they should bear their proportion of expense. Gentlemen say, that the proposition should have been made to them by way of requisition. If I saw or apprehended the least inclination from them to assist us in any other mode as to taxation, I would readily give up this particular tax; but has any one offered any thing on this head? Has any person been authorized to treat; or any ambassador sent on that occasion? I would meet them half way in this proposition. It has been said, that all their labours are centered in this country, and that we should injure ourselves by laying this tax. I look upon the interest of this country to be so nearly connected with that, that our own actions will be the guide of their security. America does not meet you on the mode of taxation, but upon the question of right; and, for my part, I cannot comprehend the distinction between internal and external taxation. You repealed the Stamp Act: did America then receive this boon of repeal cheerfully? Disturbances have been fomenting and growing ever since. Some few years past you repealed three or four of these taxes; I wish much the debate on this question had then been agitated. The question now is, whether it is prudent to repeal this tax at this critical juncture? The Americans say, restore us to the same situation we were in before the Stamp Act passed: Suppose we do, we put them in a worse situation than they are now in. The consumer of a pound of tea before that Act took place paid twelve-pence, by this Act he pays only three-pence, the consumer therefore certainly gains nine-pence by every pound he uses. This tax upon tea is certainly not uncommercial, because tea is much cheaper now than before; and therefore I think it cannot have any aspect of grievance as a commercial tax. What, then, are we to expect, if we shew such a pusillanimous timidity in repealing this tax, merely because they object to it? On the question of right, they will certainly consider us in a more contemptuous light than they ever yet did. Let me ask what answer will they give, when, after this, the Americans shall voluntarily apply to repeal the duty on wine, &c.? The same principle that operates for the repeal of this, will go to that. I do not see what answer you can give, nor where the complaint is likely to stop, until you have given up the whole, and, by that means, America itself. If you persist in the measures you have begun with, I think there is not a doubt of your succeeding, and of becoming, if I may use the word, victorious; but I would have this victory obtained by a firm, consistent, just, and manly conduct. I do not see what line of discrimination you can draw; for many parts of America have, in a measure, disobeyed the precepts of this country, and behaved much in the same manner as Boston. It has been said, and it is a doctrine I readily agree to, that you ought to twine the olive branch round the sword; but if, Sir, they will return to their duty as they ought to do, the sword will have no edge. Let us not give way to false conceits, or factious proceedings; be calm, and persist in a just conduct. Deep as our debt is on account of America, you will be deprived of a fourth part of the revenue, in the day when the system of taxation will be found necessary for carrying on the supplies of war, and the exigencies of Government; and when business must be stopt, without some resource of supply, there will not then be found two voices about taxing America.

Mr. Edmund Burke. Sir, I agree with the honorable gentleman who spoke last, that this subject is not new in this House. Very disagreeably to this House, very unfortunately to this nation, and to the peace and prosperity of this whole empire, no topic has been more familiar to us. For nine long years, session after session, we have been lashed round and round this miserable circle of occasional arguments and temporary expedients. I am sure our heads must turn, and our stomachs nauseate with them. We have had them in every shape; we have looked at them in every point of view. Invention is exhausted; reason is fatigued; experience has given judgment; but obstinacy is not yet conquered.

The honorable gentleman has made one endeavour more to diversify the form of this disgusting argument. He has thrown out a speech composed almost entirely of challenges. Challenges are serious things; and as he is a man of prudence as well as resolution, I dare say he has very well weighed those challenges before he delivered them. I had long the happiness to sit at the same side of the House, and to agree with the honorable gentleman on all the American questions. My sentiments, I am sure, are well known to him; and I thought I had been perfectly acquainted with his. Though I find myself mistaken, he will still permit me to use the privilege of an old friendship; he will permit me to apply myself to the House under the sanction of his authority; and, on the various grounds he has measured out, to submit to you the poor opinions which I have formed, upon a matter of importance enough to demand the fullest consideration I could bestow upon it.

He has stated to the House two grounds of deliberation; one narrow and simple, and merely confined to the question on your paper; the other more large and more complicated; comprehending the whole series of the Parliamentary proceedings with regard to America, their causes, and their consequences. With regard to the latter ground, he states it as useless, and thinks it may be even dangerous, to enter into so extensive a field of inquiry. Yet, to my surprise, he had hardly laid down this restrictive proposition, to which his authority would have given so much weight, when directly, and with the same authority, he condemns it, and declares it absolutely necessary to enter into the most ample historical detail. His zeal has thrown him a little out of his usual accuracy. In this perplexity what shall we do, Sir, who are willing to submit to the law he gives us? He has reprobated in one part of his speech the rule he had laid down for debate in the other; and, after narrowing the ground for all those who are to speak after him, he takes an excursion himself, as unbounded as the subject and the extent of his great abilities.

Sir, when I cannot obey all his laws, I will do the best I can. I will endeavour to obey such of them as have the sanction of his example, and to stick to that rule which, though not consistent with the other, is the most rational. He was certainly in the right when he took the matter largely. I cannot prevail on myself to agree with him in his censure of his own conduct. It is not, he will give me leave to say, either useless or dangerous. He asserts, that retrospect is not wise; and the proper, the only proper, subject of inquiry is, "not how we got into this difficulty, but how we are to get out of it." In other words, we are, according to him, to consult our invention, and to reject our experience. The mode of deliberation he recommends is diametrically opposite to every rule of reason, and every principle of good sense established amongst mankind. For that sense and that reason, I have always understood, absolutely to prescribe, whenever we are involved in difficulties from the measures we have pursued, that we should take a strict review of those measures, in order to correct our errors if they should be corrigible; or at least to avoid a dull uniformity in mischief, and the unpitied calamity of being repeatedly caught in the same snare.

Sir, I will freely follow the honorable gentleman in his historical discussion, without the least management for men or measures, further than as they shall seem to me to deserve it. But before I go into that large consideration, because I would omit nothing that can give the House satisfaction, I wish to tread the narrow ground to which alone the honorable gentleman, in one part of his speech, has so strictly confined us.

He desires to know, whether, if we were to repeal this tax, agreeably to the proposition of the honorable gentleman who made the motion, the Americans would not take post on this concession, in order to make a new attack on the next body of taxes; and whether they would not call for a repeal of the duty on wine as loudly as they do now for the repeal of the duty on tea? Sir, I can give no security on this subject. But I will do all that I can, and all that can be fairly demanded. To the experience which the honorable gentleman reprobates in one instant, and reverts to in the next, to that experience, without the least wavering or hesitation on my part, I steadily appeal; and would to God there was no other arbiter to decide on the vote with which the House is to conclude this day!

When Parliament repealed the Stamp Act in the year 1766, I affirm, first, that the Americans did not in consequence of this measure call upon you to give up the former Parliamentary revenue which subsisted in that country, or even any one of the articles which compose it. I affirm also, that when, departing from the maxims of that repeal, you revived the scheme of taxation, and thereby filled the minds of the Colonists with new jealousy, and all sorts of apprehensions, then it was that they quarreled with the old taxes, as well as the new; then it was, and not till then, that they questioned all the parts of your legislative power; and, by the battery of such questions, have shaken the solid structure of this empire to its deepest foundations.

Of those two propositions I shall, before I have done, give such convincing, such damning proof, that however the contrary may be whispered in circles, or bawled in newspapers, they never more will dare to raise their voices in this House. I speak with great confidence. I have reason for it. The Ministers are with me. They at least are convinced that the repeal of the Stamp Act had not, and that no repeal can have, the consequences which the honorable gentleman who defends their measures is so much alarmed at. To their conduct, I refer him for a conclusive answer to his objection. I carry my proof irresistibly into the very body of both Ministry and Parliament; not on any general reasoning growing out of collateral matter, but on the conduct of the honorable gentleman's ministerial friends on the new revenue itself.

The Act of 1767, which grants this Tea Duty, sets forth in its preamble, that it was expedient to raise a revenue in America, for the support of the civil Government there, as well as for purposes still more extensive. To this support the Act assigns six branches of duties. About two years after this Act passed, the Ministry, I mean the present Ministry, thought it expedient to repeal five of the duties, and to leave (for reasons best known to themselves) only the sixth standing. Suppose any person, at the time of that repeal, had thus addressed the Minister.* "Condemning, as you do, the repeal of the Stamp Act, why do you venture to repeal the duties upon glass, paper, and painters' colours? Let your pretence for the repeal be what it will, are you not thoroughly convinced, that your concessions will produce, not satisfaction, but insurrection in the Americans; and that the giving up these taxes will necessitate the giving up of all the rest?" This objection was as palpable then as it is now; and it was as good for preserving the five duties as for retaining the sixth. Besides, the Minister will recollect, that the repeal of the Stamp Act had but just preceded his repeal; and the ill policy of that measure (had it been so impolitic as it has been represented,) and the mischiefs it produced, were quite recent. Upon the principles therefore of the honorable gentleman, upon the principles of the Minister himself, the Minister has nothing at all to answer. He stands condemned by himself, and by all his associates, old and new, as a destroyer, in the first trust of finance, of the revenues; and in the first rank of honor, as a betrayer of the dignity of his country.

Most men, especially great men, do not always know their well-wishers. I come to rescue that noble Lord out of the hands of those he calls his friends; and even out of his own. I will do him the justice he is denied at home. He has not been this wicked or imprudent man. He knew that a repeal had no tendency to produce the mischiefs which give so much alarm to his honorable friend. His work was not bad in its principle, but imperfect in its execution; and the motion on your paper presses him only to complete a proper plan, which, by some unfortunate and unaccountable error, he had left unfinished.

I hope, Sir, the honorable gentleman who spoke last, is thoroughly satisfied, and satisfied out of the proceedings of Ministry on their own favourite Act, that his fears from a repeal are groundless. If he is not, I leave him, and the noble Lord who sits by him, to settle the matter, as well as they can, together; for if the repeal of American taxes destroys all our Government in America - He is the man! - and he is the worst of all the repealers, because he is the last.

But I hear it rung continually in my ears, now and formerly, - "The preamble! what will become of the preamble, if you repeal this tax? I am sorry to be compelled so often to expose the calamities and disgraces of Parliament. The preamble of this law, standing as it now stands, has the lie direct given to it by the previsionary part of the Act, if that can be called previsionary which makes no provision. I should be afraid to express myself in this manner, especially in the face of such a formidable array of ability as is now drawn up before me, composed of the ancient household troops of that side of the House, and the new recruits from this, if the matter were not clear and indisputable. Nothing but truth could give me this firmness; but plain truth and clear evidence can be beat down by no ability. The Clerk will be so good as to turn to the Act, and to read this favourite preamble:

"Whereas it is expedient that a revenue should be raised in your Majesty's Dominions in America, for making a more certain and adequate provision for defraying the charge of the Administration or justice and support of civil Government, in such Provinces where it shall be found necessary; and towards further defraying the expense of the said Administration, the Clerk will be so good as to read this favourite preamble:

"penses of defending, protecting, and securing the said Dominions."

You have heard this pompous performance. Now where is the revenue which is to do all these mighty things? Five-sixths repealed - abandoned - sunk - gone - lost for ever. Does the poor solitary Tea Duty support the purposes of this preamble? Is not the supply there stated as effectually abandoned as if the Tea Duty had perished in the general wreck? Here, Mr. Speaker, is a precious mockery - a preamble without an Act - taxes granted in order to be repealed - and the reasons of the grant still carefully kept up! This is raising a revenue in America! This is preserving dignity in England! If you repeal this tax in compliance with the motion, I readily admit that you lose this fair preamble. Estimate your loss in it. The object of the Act is gone already; and all you suffer is the purging the statute-book of the opprobrium of an empty, absurd, and false recital.

It has been said again and again, that the five taxes were repealed on commercial principles. It is so said in the paper in my hand,* a paper which I constantly carry about; which I have often used, and shall often use again. What is got by this paltry pretence of commercial principles I know not; for, if your Government in America is destroyed by the repeal of taxes, it is of no consequence upon what ideas the repeal is grounded. Repeal this tax too upon commercial principles if you please. These principles will serve as well now as they did formerly. But you know that, either your objection to a repeal from these supposed consequences has no validity, or that this pretence never could remove it. This commercial motive never was believed by any man, either in America, which this letter is meant to soothe, or in England, which it is meant to deceive. It was impossible it should. Because every man, in the least acquainted with the detail of commerce, must know, that several of the articles on which the tax was repealed were fitter objects of duties than almost any other articles that could possibly be chosen; without comparison more so, than the tea that was taxed; as infinitely less liable to be eluded by contraband. The tax upon red and white lead was of this nature. You have, in this Kingdom, an advantage in lead, that amounts to a monopoly. When you find yourself in this situation of advantage, you sometimes venture to tax even your own export. You did so soon after the last war, when, upon this principle, you ventured to impose a duty on coals. In all the articles of American contraband trade, who ever heard of the smuggling of red lead, and white lead? You might, therefore, well enough without danger of contraband, and without injury to commerce (if this were the whole consideration) have taxed these commodities. The same may be said of glass. Besides, some of the things taxed were so trivial, that the loss of the objects themselves and their utter annihilation out of American commerce, would have been comparatively as nothing. But is the article of tea such an object in the trade of England, as not to be felt, or felt but strictly like white lead, and red lead, and painters colours? tea is an object of far other importance. Tea is perhaps the most important object, taking it with its necessary connections, of any in the mighty circle of our commerce. If commercial principles had been the true motives to the repeal, or had they been at all attended to, tea would have been the last article we should have left taxed for a subject of controversy.

Sir, it is not a pleasant consideration, but nothing in the world can read so awful and so instructive a lesson, as the conduct of Ministry in this business, upon the mischief of not having large and liberal ideas in the management of great affairs. Never have the servants of the State looked at the whole of your complicated interests in one connected view. They have taken things by bits and scraps, some at one time and one pretence, and some at another, just as they pressed, without any sort of regard to their relations or dependencies. They never had any kind of system, right or wrong, but only invented occasionally some miserable tale of the day, in order meanly to sneak out of difficulties, into which they had proudly strutted. And they were put to all these shifts and devices, full of meanness and full of mischief, in order to pilfer piecemeal a repeal of an act, which they had not the generous courage, when they found and felt their error, honorably and fairly to disclaim. By such management, by the irresistible operation of feeble councils, so paltry a sum as three-pence, in the eyes of a financier, so insignificant an article as tea in the eyes of a philosopher, have shaken the pillars of a commercial empire that circled the whole globe.

* Lord Hillsborough's Circular Letter to the Governors of the Colonies concerning the Repeal of some of the Duties laid in the Act of 1767.

Do you forget that, in the very last year, you stood on the precipice of general bankruptcy? Your danger was indeed great. You were distressed in the affairs of the East India Company; and you well know what sort of things are involved in the comprehensive energy of that significant appellation. I am not called upon to enlarge to you on that danger, which you thought proper yourselves to aggravate, and to dislodge to the world with all the parade of indiscreet declamation. The monopoly of the most lucrative trades, and possession of imperial revenues, had brought you to the verge of beggary and ruin. Such was your representation - such, in some measure was your case. The vent of ten millions of pounds of this commodity, now locked up by the operation of an injudicious tax, and rotting in the warehouses of the Company, would have prevented all this distress, and all that series of desperate measures which you thought yourselves obliged to take in consequence of it. America would have furnished that vent, which no other part of the world can furnish but America, where tea is next to a necessary of life, and where the demand grows upon the supply. I hope our dear-bought East India Committees have done us at least so much good, as to let us know, that without a more extensive sale of that article our East India revenues and acquisitions can have no certain connection with this country. It is through the American trade of tea that your East India conquests are to be prevented from crashing you with their burthen. They are ponderous indeed; and they must have that great country to lean upon or they tumble upon your head. It is the same folly that has lost you at once the benefit of the West and of the East. This folly has thrown open folding-doors to contraband; and will be the means of giving the profits of the trade of your Colonies, to every nation but yourselves. Never did a People suffer so much for the empty words of a preamble. It must be given up. For on what principle does it stand? This famous revenue stands, at this hour, on all the debate, as a description of revenue not as yet known in all the comprehensive (but too comprehensive!) vocabulary of finance - a preambular tax. It is indeed a tax of sophistry, a tax of pedantry, a tax of disputation, a tax of war and rebellion, a tax for any thing but benefit to the imposers, or satisfaction to the subject.

Well! but whatever it is, gentlemen will force the Colonists to take the teas. You will force them? has seven years struggle been yet able to force them? O! but it seems "we are in the right. - The tax is trifling - in "effect it is rather an exoneration than an imposition; three-fourths of the duty formerly payable on teas exported "to America is taken off; the place of collection is only "shifted; instead of the retention of a shilling from the "drawback here, it is three-pence custom paid in America." All this, Sir, is very true. But this is the very folly and mischief of the Act. Incredible as it may seem, you know, that you have deliberately thrown away a large duty which you held secure and quiet in your hands, for the vain hope of getting one three-fourths less, through every hazard, through certain litigation, and possibly through war.

The manner of proceeding in the duties on paper and glass, imposed by the same Act, was exactly in the same spirit. There are heavy excises on those articles when used in England. On export these excises are drawn back. But instead of withholding the drawback, which might have been done, with ease, without charge, without possibility of smuggling; and instead of applying the money (money already in your hands) according to your pleasure, you began your operations in finance by flinging away your revenue; you allowed the whole drawback on export, and then you charged the duty, (which you had before discharged,) payable in the Colonies, where it was certain the collection would devour it to the bone, if any revenue were ever suffered to be collected at all. One spirit pervades and animates the whole mass.

Could any thing be a subject of more just alarm to America, than to see you go out of the plain high road of finance, and give up your most certain revenues and your clearest interests, merely for the sake of insulting your Colonies? No man ever doubted that the commodity of tea could bear an imposition of three-pence. But no commodity will bear three-pence, or will bear a penny, when the general feelings of men are irritated, and two millions of People are resolved not to pay. The feeling of the Colonies were formerly the feelings of Great Britain. Theirs were formerly the feelings of Mr. Hampden, when called upon for the payment of twenty shillings. Would twenty shillings have ruined Mr. Hampden's fortune? No! but the payment of half twenty shillings, on the principle it was demanded, would, have made him a slave. It is the weight of that preamble, of which you are so fond, and not the weight of the duty, that the Americans are unable and unwilling to bear.

It is then, Sir, upon the principle of this measure, and nothing else, that we are at issue. It is a principle of political expediency. Your Act of 1767 asserts, that it is expedient to raise a revenue in America; your Act of 1769, which takes away that revenue, contradicts the Act of 1767; and, by something much stronger than words, asserts, that it is not expedient. It is a reflection upon your wisdom to persist in a solemn Parliamentary declaration of expediency of any object, for which, at the same time, you make no sort of provision. And pray, Sir, let not this circumstance escape you; it is very material; that the preamble of this act, which we wish to repeal, is not declaratory of a right, as some gentlemen seem to argue it; it is only a recital of the expediency of a certain exercise of a right supposed already to have been asserted; an exercise you are now contending for by ways and means, which you confess, though they were obeyed, to be utterly insufficient for their purpose. You are therefore at this moment in the awkward situation of fighting for a phantom; a quiddity; a thing that wants, not only a substance, but even a name; for a thing, which is neither abstract right, nor profitable enjoyment.

They tell you, Sir, that your dignity is tied to it. I know not how it happens, but this dignity of yours is a terrible incumbrance to you; for it has of late been ever at war with your interest, your equity, and every idea of your policy. Shew the thing you contend for to be reason; show it to be common sense; show it to be the means of attaining some useful end; and then I am content to allow it what dignity you please. But what dignity is derived from the perseverance in absurdity is more than ever I could discern. The honorable gentleman has said well - indeed, in most of his general observations I agree with him he says, that this subject does not stand as it did formerly. Oh, certainly not! every hour you continue on this ill-chosen ground, your difficulties thicken on you; and therefore my conclusion is, remove from a bad position as quickly as you can. The disgrace, and the necessity of yielding, both of them, grow upon you every hour of your delay.

But will you repeal the Act, says the honorable gentleman, at this instant, when America is in open resistance to your authority, and that you have just revived your system of taxation? He thinks he has driven us into a corner. But thus pent up, I am content to meet him, because I enter the lists supported by my old authority, his new friends, the Ministers themselves. The honorable gentleman remembers, that about five years ago as great disturbances as the present prevailed in America on account of the new taxes. The Ministers represented these disturbances as treasonable; and this House thought proper, on that representation, to make a famous address for a revival, and for a new application of a statute of H. VIII. We besought the King in that well-considered address, to inquire into treasons, and to bring the supposed traitors from America to Great Britain for trial. His Majesty was pleased graciously to promise a compliance with our request. All the attempts from this side of the House to resist these violences, and to bring about a repeal, were treated with the utmost scorn. An apprehension of the very consequences now stated by the honorable gentleman, was then given as a reason for shutting the door against all hope of such an alteration. And so strong "was the spirit for supporting the new taxes, that the session concluded with the following remarkable declaration. After stating the vigorous measures which had been pursued, the speech from the Throne proceeds:

"You have assured me of your firm support in the prosecution of them. Nothing, in my opinion, could be more likely to enable the well-disposed among my subjects in that part of the world, effectually to discourage and defeat the designs of the factious and seditious, than the hearty concurrence of every branch of the Legislature, in maintaining the execution of the laws in every part of my Dominions."

After this no man dreamt that a repeal under this Ministry could possibly take place. The honorable gentleman knows as well as I, that the idea was utterly exploded by those who sway the House. This speech was made on the ninth day of May, 1769. Five days after this speech, that is, on the 13th Of the same month, the public circular letter, a part of which I am going to read to you, was written by Lord Hillsborough, Secretary of State for the Colonies. After reciting the substance of the King's speech, he goes on thus:

"I can take upon me to assure you, notwithstanding insinuations to the contrary, from men with factious and seditious views, that his Majesty's present Administration have at no time entertained a design to propose to Parliament to lay any further taxes upon AMERICA, for the purpose of RAISING A REVENUE; and that it is at present their intention to propose, the next session of Parliament, to take off the duties upon glass, paper, and colours, upon consideration of such duties having been laid contrary to the true principles of commerce."

"These have always been, and still are, the sentiments of his Majesty's present servants; and by which their conduct in respect to America has been governed. And his Majesty relies upon your prudence and fidelity for such an explanation of his measures, as may tend to remove the prejudices which have been excited by the misrepresentations of those who are enemies to the peace and prosperity of Great Britain and her Colonies, and to re-establish that mutual confidence and affection, upon which the glory and safety of the British empire depend."

Here, Sir, is a canonical book of ministerial scripture; the general epistle to the Americans. What does the gentleman say to it? Here a repeal is promised; promised without condition; and while your authority was actually resisted. I pass by the public promise of a Peer relative to the repeal of taxes by this House. I pass by the use of the King's name in a matter of supply, that sacred and reserved right of the Commons. I conceal the ridiculous figure of Parliament, hurling its thunders at the gigantic rebellion of America, and then five days after, prostrate at the feet of those Assemblies we affected to despise, begging them, by the intervention of our ministerial sureties, to receive our submission, and heartily promising amendment. These might have been serious matters formerly, but we are grown wiser than our fathers. Passing, therefore, from the constitutional consideration to the mere policy, does not this letter imply, that the idea of taxing America, for the purpose of revenue, is an abominable project, when the Ministry suppose none but factious men, and with seditious views, could charge them with it? Does not this letter adopt and sanctify the American distinction of taxing for a revenue?, does it not formally reject all future taxation on that principle? does it not state the ministerial rejection of such principle of taxation, not as the occasional, but the constant opinion of the King's servants? does it not say (I care not how consistently,) but does it not say, that their conduct with regard to America has been always governed by this policy? It goes a great deal further. These excellent and trusty servants of the King, justly fearful lest they themselves should have lost all credit with the world, bring out the image of their gracious Sovereign from the innest and most sacred shrine, and they pawn him, as a security for their promises - "His Majesty relies" on your prudence and fidelity for such an explanation of his measures.

These sentiments of the Minister, and these measures of his Majesty, can only relate to the principle and practice of taxing for a revenue; and accordingly Lord Botetourt, stating as such, did with great propriety, and in the exact spirit of his instructions, endeavour to remove the fears of the Virginian Assembly, lest the sentiments, which it seems (unknown to the world) had always been those of the Ministers, and by which their conduct in respect to America had been governed, should by some possible revolution, favourable to wicked American taxers, be hereafter counteracted. He addresses them in this manner:

"It may possibly be objected, that as his Majesty's present Administration are not immortal, their successors may be inclined to attempt to undo what the present Ministers shall have attempted to perform; and to that objection I can give but this answer; that it is my firm opinion, that the plan I have stated to you will certainly take place, and that it will never be departed from; and so determined am I for ever to abide by it, that I will be content to be declared infamous, if I do not, to the last hour of my life, at all times, in all places, and upon all occasions, exert every power with which I either am, or ever shall be legally invested, in order to obtain and maintain for the Continent of America that satisfaction which I have been authorized to promise this day, by the confidential servants of our gracious Sovereign, who to my certain knowledge rates his honor so high, that he would rather part with his Crown, than preserve it by deceit."*

A glorious and true character! which (since we suffer his Ministers with impunity to answer for his ideas of taxation) we ought to make it our business to enable his Majesty to preserve in all its lustre. Let him have character, since ours is no more! Let some part of Government be kept in respect!

This epistle was not the letter of Lord Hillsborough solely, though he held the official pen. It was the letter of the noble Lord upon the floor, (Lord North) and of all the King's then Ministers, who (with I think the exception of two only) are his Ministers at this hour. The very first news that a British Parliament heard of what it was to do with the duties which it had given and granted to the King, was by the publication of the votes of American Assemblies. It was in America that your resolutions were pre-declared. It was from thence that we knew to a certainty, how much exactly, and not a scruple more nor less, we were to repeal. We were unworthy to be let into the secret of our own conduct. The Assemblies had confidential communications from his Majesty's confidential servants. We were nothing but instruments. Do you, after this, wonder that you have no weight and no respect in the Colonies? After this, are you surprised, that Parliament is every day and every where losing (I feel it with sorrow, I utter it with reluctance) that reverential affection, which so endearing a name of authority ought ever to carry with it; that you are obeyed solely from respect to the bayonet; and that this House, the ground and pillar of freedom, is itself held up only by the treacherous underpinning and clumsy buttresses of arbitrary power?

If this dignity, which is to stand in the place of just policy and common sense, had been consulted, there was a time for preserving it, and for reconciling it with any concession. If in the session of 1765, that session of idle terror and empty menaces, you had, as you were often pressed to do, repealed these taxes, then your strong operations would have come justified and enforced, in case your concessions had been returned by outrages. But, preposterously, you began with violence, and, before terrors could have any effect, either good or bad. your Ministers immediately begged pardon, and promised that repeal to the obstinate Americans which they had refused in an easy, good natured, complying British Parliament."The Assemblies which had been publicly and avowedly dissolved for their contumacy, are called together to receive your submission. Your Ministerial directors blustered like tragic tyrants here; and then went mumping with a sore leg in America, canting, and whining, and complaining, of faction, which represented them as friends to a revenue from the Colonies. I hope nobody in this House will hereafter have the impudence to defend American taxes in the name of Ministry. The moment they do, with this letter of attorney in my hand, I will tell them in the authorized terms, they are wretches, "with factious and "seditious views; enemies to the peace and prosperity of "the mother country and the Colonies,"and subverters "of the mutual affection and confidence on which the "glory and safety of the British empire depend."

* A material point is omitted by Mr. Burke in this speech, viz. the manner in which the Continent received this Royal assurance. The Assembly of Virginia, in their Address in answer to Lord Botetourt's Speech, express themselves thus: "We will not suffer our present hopes, arising from the pleasing prospect your Lordship hath so kindly opened and displayed to us, to be dashed by the bitter reflection that any future Administration will entertain a wish to depart from that plan, which affords the surest and most permanent foundation of public tranquillity and happiness: No, my Lord, we are sure our most gracious Sovereign, under whatever changes may happen in his confidential servants, will remain immutable in the ways of truth and justice, and that he is incapable of deceiving his faithful subjects; and we esteem your Lordship's information not only as warranted, but even sanctified by the Royal word."

After this letter, the question is no more on propriety or dignity. They are gone already. The faith of your Sovereign is pledged for the political principle. The general declaration in the letter goes to the whole of it. You must therefore either abandon the scheme of taxing, or you must send the Ministers tarred and feathered to America, who dared to hold out the royal faith for a renunciation of all taxes for revenue. Then you must punish, or this faith you must preserve. The preservation of this faith is of more consequence than the duties on red lead, or white lead, or on broken glass, or atlas ordinary, or demi-fine, or blue-royal, or bastard, or fool's-cap, which you have given up; or the three-pence on tea, which you retained. The letter went stamped with the public authority of this Kingdom. The instructions for the Colony Government go under no other sanction; and America cannot believe, and will not obey you, if you do not preserve this channel of communication sacred. You are now punishing the Colonies for acting on distinctions, held out by that very Ministry which is here shining in riches, in favour, and in power, and urging the punishment of the very offence, to which they had themselves been the tempters.

Sir, If reasons respecting simply your own commerce, which is your own convenience, were the sole grounds of the repeal of the five duties, why does Lord Hillsborough, in disclaiming in the name of the King and Ministry their over having had an intent to tax for revenue, mention it as the means "of re-establishing the confidence and affection of the Colonies?"Is it a way of soothing others, to assure them that you will take good care of yourself? The medium, the only medium, for regaining their affection and confidence is, that you will take off something oppressive to their minds. Sir, the letter strongly enforces that idea; for though the repeal of the taxes is promised on commercial principles, yet the means of counteracting "the insinuations of men with factious and seditious "views,"is by a disclaimer of the intention of taxing for revenue, as a constant invariable sentiment and rule of conduct in the government of America.

I remember that the noble Lord on the floor, not in a former debate to be sure (it would be disorderly to refer to it, I suppose I read it somewhere,) but the noble Lord was pleased to say, that he did not conceive how it could enter into the head of man to impose such taxes as those of 1767: I mean those taxes which he voted, for imposing, and voted for repealing; as being taxes, contrary to all the principles of commerce, laid on British manufactures.

I dare say the noble Lord is perfectly well read, because the duty of his particular office requires he should be so, in all our revenue laws, and in the policy which is to be collected out of them. Now, Sir, when he had read this Act of American revenue, and a little recovered from his astonishment, I suppose he made one step retrograde (it is but one) and looked at the Act which stands just before it in the statute book. The American Revenue Act is the forty-fifth chapter; the other to which I refer is the forty-fourth of the same session. These two Acts are both to the same purpose; both Revenue Acts; both taxing out of the Kingdom; and both taxing British manufactures exported: As the 45th is an Act for raising a revenue in America, the 44th is an Act for raising a revenue in the Isle of Man. The two Acts perfectly agree in all respects, except one. In the Act for taxing the Isle of Man, the noble Lord will find (not, as in the American Act, four or five articles) but almost the whole body of British manufactures, taxed from two and an half to fifteen per cent., and some articles, such as that of spirits, a great deal higher. You did not think it uncommercial to tax the whole mass of your manufactures, and, let me add, your agriculture too; for, I now recollect, British corn is there also taxed up to ten per cent., and this too in the very head-quarters, the very citadel of smuggling, the Isle of Man. Now will the noble Lord condescend to tell me why he repealed the taxes on your manufactures sent out to America, and not the taxes on the manufactures exported to the Isle of Man? The principle was exactly the same, the objects charged infinitely more extensive, the duties without comparison higher. Why? why, notwithstanding all his childish pretences, because the taxes were quietly submitted to in the Isle of Man; and because they raised a flame in America. Your reasons were political, not commercial. The repeal was made, as Lord Hillsborough's letter well expresses it, to regain "the "confidence and affection of the Colonies, on which the "glory and safety of the British empire depend."A wise and just motive surely, if ever there was such. But the mischief and dishonour is, that you have not done what you had given the Colonies just cause to expect, when your Ministers disclaimed the idea of taxes for a revenue. There is nothing simple, nothing manly, nothing ingenuous, open, decisive, or steady, in the proceeding, with regard either to the continuance or the repeal of the taxes. The whole has an air of littleness and fraud. The article of tea is slurred over in the circular letter, as it were by accident - nothing is said of a resolution either to keep that tax, or to give it up. There is no fair dealing in any part of the transaction,

If you mean to follow your true motive and your public faith, give up your tax on tea for raising a revenue, the principle of which has, in effect, been disclaimed in your name, and which produces you no advantage, no, not a penny. Or, if you choose to go on with a poor pretence instead of a solid reason, and will still adhere to your cant of commerce, you have ten thousand times more strong commercial reasons for giving up this duty on tea, than for abandoning the five others that you have already renounced.

The American consumption of teas is annually, I believe, worth £300,000 at the least farthing. If you urge the American violence as a justification of your perseverance in enforcing this tax, you know that you can never answer this plain question - Why did you repeal the others given in the same Act, whilst the very same violence subsisted? But you did not find the violence cease upon that concession. No! because the concession was far short of satisfying the principle which Lord Hillsborough had abjured; or even the pretence on which the repeal of the other taxes was announced: and because, by enabling the East India Company to open a shop for defeating the American resolution not to pay that specific tax, you manifestly showed a hankering after the principle of the Act which you formerly had renounced. Whatever road you take leads to a compliance with this motion. It opens to you at the end of every vista. Your commerce, your policy, your promises, your reasons, your pretences, your consistency, your inconsistency - all jointly oblige you to this repeal.

But still it sticks in our throats, if we go so far, the Americans will go further. We do not know that. We ought, from experience, rather to presume the contrary. Do we not know for certain, that the Americans are going on as fast as possible, whilst we refuse to gratify them? Can they do more, or can they do worse, if we yield this point? I think this concession will rather fix a turnpike to prevent their further progress. It is impossible to answer for bodies of men. But I am sure the natural effect of fidelity, clemency, kindness in Governors, is peace, good will, order, and esteem, on the part of the governed. I would certainly, at least, give these fair principles a fair trial, which, since the making of this Act to this hour they never have had.

Sir, the honorable gentleman having spoken what he thought necessary upon the narrow part of the subject, I have given him, I hope, a satisfactory answer. He next presses me by a variety of direct challenges and oblique reflections to say something on the historical part. I shall therefore, Sir, open myself fully on that important and delicate subject; not for the sake of telling you "a long story (which, I know, Mr. Speaker, you are not particularly fond of,) but for the sake of the weighty instruction that, I flatter myself, will necessarily result from it. It shall not be longer, if I can help it, than so serious a matter requires.

Permit me, then, Sir, to lead your attention very far back; back to the Act of Navigation, the corner stone of the policy of this country with regard to its Colonies. Sir, that policy was, from the beginning, purely commercial, and the commercial system was wholly restrictive. It was the system of a monopoly. No trade was let loose from that, constraint, but merely to enable the Colonists to dispose of what, in the course of your trade, you could not take; or to enable them to dispose of such articles as we forced upon them, and for which, without some degree of liberty, they could not pay. Hence all your specific and detailed enumerations; hence the innumerable checks and counter-checks; hence that infinite variety of paper chains by which you bind together this complicated system of the Colonies. This principle of commercial monopoly runs through no less than twenty-nine Acts of Parliament, from the year 1660 to the unfortunate period of 1764.

In all those Acts the system of commerce is established, as that, from whence alone you proposed to make the Colonies contribute (I mean directly, and by the operation of your superintending Legislative power) to the strength of the empire. I venture to say, that during that whole period, a Parliamentary revenue from thence was never once in contemplation. Accordingly, in all the number of laws passed with regard to the Plantations, the words which distinguished revenue laws, specifically as such, were I think, premeditatedly avoided. I do not say, Sir, that a form of words alters the nature of the law, or abridges the power of the law giver. It certainly does not. However, titles and formal preambles are not always idle words; and the lawyers frequently argue from them. I state these facts to shew, not what was your right, but what has been your settled policy. Our revenue laws have usually a title, purporting their being grants, and the words give and grant usually precede the enacting parts. Although Duties were imposed on America in Acts of King Charles the Second, and in Acts of King William, no one title of giving "an aid to his Majesty," or any other of the usual titles to Revenue Acts, was to be found in any of them till 1764; nor were the words "give and grant" in any preamble until the sixth of George the Second. However, the title of this Act of George the Second, notwithstanding the words of donation, considers it merely as a regulation of trade, "An Act for the better securing of the trade of his Majesty's Sugar Colonies in America." This Act was made on a compromise of all, and at the express desire of a part of the Colonies themselves. It was therefore in some measure with their consent; and having a title directly purporting only a commercial regulation, and being in truth nothing more, the words were passed by, at a time when no jealousy was entertained, and things were little scrutinized. Even Governor Bernard, in his second printed letter, dated in 1763, gives it as his opinion, that "it was an Act of Prohibition, not of Revenue." This is certainly true, that no Act avowedly for the purpose of revenue, and with the ordinary title and recital taken together, is found in the statute book until the year I have mentioned, that is, the year 1764. All before this period stood on commercial regulation and restraint. The scheme of a Colony revenue by British authority, appeared therefore to the Americans in the light of a great innovation; the words of Governor Bernard's ninth letter, written in November, 1765, state this idea very strongly; "it must," says he, "have been supposed such an innovation as a Parliamentary taxation, "would cause a great alarm, and meet with much opposition "in most parts of America; it was quite new to the People, "and had no visible bounds set to it." After stating the weakness of Government there, he says, "was this a time "to introduce so great a novelty as a Parliamentary inland taxation in America?" Whatever the right might have been, this mode of using it was absolutely new in policy and practice.

Sir, they who are friends to the schemes of American revenue say, that the commercial restraint is full as hard a law for America to live under. I think so too. I think it, if uncompensated, to be a condition of as rigorous servitude as men can be subject to. But America bore it from the fundamental Act of Navigation, until 1764. Why? Because men do bear the inevitable constitution of their original nature with all its infirmities. The Act of Navigation attended the Colonies from their infancy, grew with their growth, and strengthened with their strength. They were confirmed in obedience to it, even more by usage than by law. They scarcely had remembered a time when they were not subject to such a restraint. Besides, they were indemnified for it by a pecuniary compensation. Their monopolist happened to be one of the richest men in the world. By his immense capital (primarily employed, not for their benefit, but his own,) they were enabled to proceed with their fisheries, their agriculture, their ship building, (and their trade too within the limits,) in such a manner as got far the start of the slow languid operations of unassisted nature. This capital was a hot bed to them. Nothing in the history of mankind is like their progress. For my part, I never cast an eye on their flourishing commerce, and their cultivated and commodious life, but they seem to me rather ancient nations, grown to perfection through a long series of fortunate events, and a train of successful industry, accumulating wealth in many centuries, than the Colonies of yesterday; than a set of miserable out-casts, a few years ago, not so much sent as thrown out, on the bleak and barren shore of a desolate wilderness three thousand miles from all civilized intercourse.
FOURTH SERIES.

All this was done by England, whilst England pursued trade and forgot revenue. You not only acquired commerce, but you actually created the very objects of trade in America; and by that creation you raised the trade of this Kingdom at least four-fold. America had the compensation of your capital, which made her bear her servitude. She had another compensation, which you are now going to take away from her. She had, except the commercial restraint, every characteristic mark of a free People in all her internal concerns. She had the image of the British constitution. She had the substance. She was taxed by her own Representatives. She chose most of her own Magistrates. She paid them all. She had in effect the sole disposal of her own internal Government. This whole state of commercial servitude and civil liberty taken together, is certainly not perfect freedom; but comparing it with the ordinary circumstances of human nature, it was an happy and liberal condition.

I know, Sir, that great and not unsuccessful pains have been taken to inflame our minds by an outcry, in this House and out of it, that in America the Act of Navigation neither is, or ever was obeyed. But if you take the Colonies through, I affirm, that its authority never was disputed; that it was no where disputed for any length of time; and, on the whole, that it was well observed. Wherever the Act pressed hard, many individuals indeed evaded it. This is nothing. These scattered individuals never denied the law, and never obeyed it. Just as it happens whenever the laws of trade, whenever the laws of revenue, press hard upon the People in England, in that case all your shores are full of contraband. Your right to give a monopoly to the East India Company, your right to lay immense duties on French brandy, are not disputed in England. You do not make this charge on any man. But you know that there is not a creek from Pentland Frith to the Isle of Wight, in which they do not smuggle immense quantities of teas, East India goods, and brandies. I take it for granted, that the authority of Governor Bernard in this point is indisputable. Speaking of these laws, as they regarded that part of America now in so unhappy a condition, he says, "I believe they are no where better supported than in this Province; I do not pretend that it is entirely free from a breach of these laws; but that such a breach, if discovered, is justly punished." What more can you say of the obedience to any laws in any country? An obedience to these laws formed the acknowledgment, instituted by yourselves, for your superiority; and was the payment you originally imposed for your protection.

Whether you were right or wrong in establishing the Colonies on the principles of commercial monopoly, rather than on that of revenue, is at this day a problem of mere speculation. You cannot have both by the same authority. To join together the restraints of an universal internal and external monopoly, with an universal internal and external taxation, is an unnatural union; perfect uncompensated slavery. You have long since decided for yourself and them; and you and they have prospered exceedingly under that decision.

This nation, Sir, never thought of departing from that choice until the period immediately on the close of the last war. Then a scheme of Government, new in many things seemed to have been adopted. I saw, or thought I saw, several symptoms of a great change whilst I sat in your gallery, a good while before I had the honor of a seat in this House. At that period the necessity was established of keeping up no less than twenty new regiments, with twenty Colonels, capable of seats in this House. This scheme was adopted with very general applause from all sides, at the very time that by your conquests in America, your danger from foreign attempts in that part of the world was much lessened, or indeed rather quite over. When this huge increase of military establishment was resolved on, a revenue was to be found to support so great a burthen. Country gentlemen, the great patrons of economy, and the great resisters of a standing armed force, would not have entered with much alacrity into the vote for so large and so expensive an army, if they had been very sure that they were to continue to pay for it. But hopes of another kind were held out to them; and, in particular, I well remember that Mr. Townshend, in a brilliant harangue on this subject did dazzle them, by playing before their eyes the image of a revenue to be raised in America.

Here began to dawn the first glimmerings of this new Colony system. It appeared more distinctly afterwards, when it was devolved upon a person to whom, on other accounts, this country owes very great obligations. I do believe, that he had a very serious desire to benefit the public. But with no small study of the detail, he did not seem to have his view, at least equally, carried to the total circuit of our affairs. He generally considered his objects in lights that were rather too detached. Whether the business of an American revenue was imposed upon him altogether; whether it was entirely the result of his own speculation; or, what is more probable, that his own ideas rather coincided with the instructions he had received, certain it is, that, with the best intentions in the world, he first brought this fatal scheme into form, and established it by Act of Parliament.

No man can believe, that at this time of day I mean to lean on the venerable memory of a great man, whose loss we deplore in common. Our little party differences have been long ago composed, and I have acted more with him, and certainly with more pleasure with him, than ever I acted against him. Undoubtedly Mr. Grenville was a first rate figure in this country. With a masculine understanding, and a stout and resolute heart, he had an application undissipated and unwearied. He took public business, not as a duty which he was to fulfil, but as a pleasure he was to enjoy; and he seemed to have no delight out of this House, except in such things as some way related to the business that was to be done within it. If he was ambitious, I will say this for him, his ambition was of a noble and generous strain. It was to raise himself, not by the low pimping politics of a court, but to win his way to power, through the laborious gradations of public service; and to secure to himself a well-earned rank in Parliament, by a thorough knowledge of its constitution, and a perfect practice in all its business.

Sir, if such a man fell into errors, it must be from defects not intrinsic; they must be rather sought in the particular habits of his life; which, though they do not alter the groundwork of character, yet tinge it with their own hue. He was bred in a profession. He was bred to the law, which is, in my opinion, one of the first and noblest of human sciences; a science which does more to quicken and invigorate the understanding than all the other kinds of learning put together; but it is not apt, except in persons, very happily born, to open and to liberalize the mind exactly in the same proportion. Passing from that study he did not go very largely into the world; but plunged into business; I mean into the business of office; and the limited and fixed methods and forms established there. Much knowledge is to be had undoubtedly in that line; and there is no knowledge which is not valuable. But it may be truly said, that men too much conversant in office, are rarely minds of remarkable enlargement. Their habits of office are apt to give them a turn to think the substance of business not to be much more important than the forms in which it is conducted. These forms are adapted to ordinary occasions; and therefore persons who are nurtured in office do admirably well, as long as things go on in their common order; but when the high roads are broken up, and the waters out, when a new and troubled scene is opened, and the file affords no precedent, then it is that a greater knowledge of mankind, and a far more extensive comprehension of things, is requisite than ever office gave, or than once can ever give. Mr. Grenville thought better of the wisdom and power of human legislation than in truth it deserves. He conceived, and many conceived along with him, that the flourishing trade of this country was greatly owing to law and institution, and not quite so much to liberty; for but too many are apt to believe regulation to be commerce, and taxes to be revenue. Among regulations, that which stood first in reputation was his idol. - I mean the Act of Navigation. He has often professed it to be so. The policy of that Act is, I readily admit, in many respects well understood. But I do say that if the Act be suffered to run the full length of its principle, and is not changed and modified according to the change of times and the fluctuations of circumstances, it must do great mischief, and frequently even defeat its own purpose.

After the war, and in the last years of it, the trade of America had increased far beyond the speculations of the most sanguine imagination. It swelled out on every side. It filled all its proper channels to the brim. It overflowed with a rich redundancy, and breaking its banks on the right and on the left, it spread out upon some places where it was indeed improper, upon others where it was only irregular. It is the nature of all greatness not to be exact; and great trade will always be attended with considerable abuses. The contraband will always keep pace in some measure with the fair trade. It should stand as a fundamental maxim, that no vulgar precaution ought to be employed in the cure of evils, which are closely connected with the cause of our prosperity. Perhaps this great person turned his eye, somewhat less than was just, towards the incredible increase of the fair trade; and looked with something of too exquisite jealousy towards the contraband. He certainly felt a singular degree of anxiety on the subject; and even began to act from that passion earlier than is commonly imagined. For whilst he was first Lord of the Admiralty, though not strictly called upon in his official line, he presented a very strong memorial to the Lords of the Treasury, (my Lord Bute was then at the head of the Board,) heavily complaining of the growth of the illicit commerce in America. Some mischief happened, even at that time, from this over-earnest zeal. Much greater happened afterwards when it operated with greater power in the highest department of the finances. The bonds of the Act of Navigation were strained so much, that America was on the point of having no trade, either contraband or legitimate. They found, under the construction and execution then used, the Act no longer tying but actually strangling them. All this coming with new enumerations of commodities; with regulations which in a manner put a stop to the mutual coasting intercourse of the Colonies; with the appointment of Courts of Admiralty under various improper circumstances; with a sudden extinction of the paper currencies; with a compulsory provision for the quartering of soldiers; the People of America thought themselves proceeded against as delinquents, or at best as People under suspicion of delinquency; and in such a manner, as they imagined, their recent services in the war did not at all merit. Any of these innumerable regulations perhaps, would not have alarmed alone; some might be thought reasonable; the multitude struck them with terror.

But the grand manoeuvre in that business of new regulating the Colonies, was the fifteenth Act of the fourth of George III., which, besides containing several of the matters to which I have just alluded, opened a new principle: and here properly began the second period of the policy of this country with regard to the Colonies; by which the scheme of a regular Plantation Parliamentary revenue was adopted in theory, and settled in practice. A revenue not substituted in the place of, but superadded to, a monopoly; which monopoly was enforced at the same time with additional strictness, and the execution put into military hands.

This Act, Sir, had for the first time the title of "granting duties in the Colonies and Plantations of America;" and for the first time it was asserted in the preamble, "that it was just and necessary that a revenue should be raised there." Then came the technical words of "giving and granting;" and thus a complete American Revenue Act was made in all the forms, and with a full avowal of the right, equity, policy, and even necessity of taxing the Colonies, without any formal consent of theirs. There are contained also in the preamble to that Act these very remarkable words - the Commons, &c. - "being desirous to make some provision in the present session of Parliament towards raising the said revenue." By these words it appeared to the Colonies that this Act was but a beginning of sorrows; that every session was to produce something of the same kind; that we were to go on from day to day, in charging them with such taxes as we pleased, for such a military force as we should think proper. Had this plan been pursued, it was evident that the Provincial Assemblies, in which the Americans felt all their portion of importance, and beheld their sole image of freedom, were ipso facto annihilated. This ill prospect before them seemed to be boundless in extent, and endless in duration. Sir, they were not mistaken. The Ministry valued themselves when this Act passed, and when they gave notice of the Stamp Act, that both of the duties came very short of their ideas of American taxation. Great was the applause of this measure here. In England we cried out for new taxes on America, whilst they cried out that they were nearly crushed with those which the war and their own grants had brought upon them.

Sir, it has been said in the debate, that when the first American Revenue Act (the Act in 1764, imposing the Port Duties) passed, the Americans did not object to the principle. It is true they touched it, but very tenderly. It was not a direct attack. They were, it is true, as yet novices; as yet unaccustomed to direct attacks upon any of the rights of Parliament. The duties were Port Duties, like those they had been accustomed to bear; with this difference, that the title was not the same, the preamble not the same, and the spirit altogether unlike. But of what service is this observation to the cause of those that make it? It is a full refutation of the pretence for their present cruelty to America; for it shews, out of their own mouths, that our Colonies were backward to enter into the present vexatious and ruinous controversy.

There is also another circulation abroad (spread with a malignant intention, which I cannot attribute to those who say the same thing in this House,) that Mr. Grenville gave the Colony Agents an option for their Assemblies to tax themselves, which they had refused. I find that much stress is laid on this, as a fact. However, it happens neither to be true nor possible. I will observe first, that Mr. Grenville never thought fit to make this apology for himself in the innumerable debates that were had upon the subject. He might have proposed to the Colony Agents, that they should agree in some mode of taxation as the ground of an Act of Parliament. But he never could have proposed that they should tax themselves on requisition, which is the assertion of the day. Indeed, Mr. Grenville well knew, that the Colony Agents could have no general powers to consent to it; and they had no time to consult their Assemblies for particular powers, before he passed his first Revenue Act. If you compare dates, you will find it impossible. Burthened as the Agents knew the Colonies were at that time, they could not give the least hope of such grants. His own favourite Governor was of opinion that the Americans were not then taxable objects.

"Nor was the time less favourable to the equity of such a taxation. I don't mean to dispute the reasonableness of America contributing to the charges of Great Britain when she is able; nor, I believe, would the Americans themselves have disputed it, at a proper time and season." But it should be considered, that the American Governmentments themselves have, in the prosecution of the late war, "contracted very large debts, which it will take some years

"to pay off, and in the mean time occasion very burdensome taxes for that purpose only. For instance, this Government, which is as much before hand as any, raises every year £37,500 sterling for sinking their debt, and must continue it for four years longer at least before it will be clear."

These are the words of Governor Bernard's letter to a member of the old Ministry, and which he has since printed. Mr. Grenville could not have made this proposition to the Agents, for another reason. He was of opinion, which he has declared in this House a hundred times, that the Colonies could not legally grant any revenue to the Crown, and that infinite mischiefs would be the consequence of such a power. When Mr. Grenville had passed the first Revenue Act, and in the same session had made this House come to a resolution for laying a Stamp Duty on America, between that time and the passing the Stamp Act into a law, he told a considerable and most respectable merchant, a member of this House, whom I am truly sorry I do not now see in his place, when he represented against this proceeding, that if the Stamp Duty was disliked, he was willing to exchange it for any other equally productive; but that if he objected to the Americans being taxed by Parliament, he might save himself the trouble of the discussion, as he was determined on the measure. This is the fact, and, if you please, I will mention a very unquestionable authority for it.

Thus, Sir, I have disposed of this falsehood. But falsehood has a perennial spring. It is said, that no conjecture could be made of the dislike of the Colonies to the principle. This is as untrue as the other. After the resolution of the House, and before the passing of the Stamp Act, the Colonies of Massachusetts Bay and New York did send remonstrances, objecting to this mode of Parliamentary taxation. What was the consequence? They were suppressed; they were put under the table; notwithstanding an Order of Council to the contrary, by the Ministry which composed the very Council that had made the order; and thus the House proceeded to its business of taxing, without the least regular knowledge of the objections which were made to it. But to give that House its due, it was not over desirous to receive information, or to hear remonstrance. On the 15th of February, 1765, whilst the Stamp Act was under deliberation, they refused with scorn even so much as to receive four petitions presented from so respectable Colonies as Connecticut, Rhode Island, Virginia, and Carolina, besides one from the traders of Jamaica. As to the Colonies, they had no alternative left to them, but to disobey, or to pay the taxes imposed by that Parliament which was not suffered, or did not suffer itself, even to hear them remonstrate upon the subject.

This was the state of the Colonies before his Majesty thought fit to change his Ministers. It stands upon no authority of mine. It is proved by uncontrovertible records. The honorable gentleman has desired some of us to lay our hands upon our hearts, and answer to his queries upon the historical part of this consideration; and by his manner (as well as my eyes could discern it) he seemed to address himself to me.

Sir, I will answer him as clearly as I am able, and with great openness: I have nothing to conceal. In the year sixty-five, being in a very private station, far enough from any line of business, and not having the honor of a seat in this House, it was my fortune, unknown and unknown to the then Ministry, by the intervention of a common friend, to become connected with a very noble person, and at the head of the Treasury Department. It was indeed in a situation of little rank and no consequence, suitable to the mediocrity of my talents and pretensions; but a situation near enough to enable me to see, as well as others, what was going on; and I did see in that noble person such sound principles, such an enlargement of mind, such clear and sagacious sense, and such unshaken fortitude, as have bound me, as well as others much better than me, by an inviolable attachment to him from that time forward. Sir, Lord Bockingham, very early in that summer, received a strong representation from many weighty English merchants and manufacturers, from Governors of Provinces, and Commanders of men-of-war, against almost the whole of the American commercial regulations; and particularly with regard to the total ruin which was threatened to the Spanish trade. I believe, Sir, the noble Lord soon saw his way in this business. But he did not rashly determine against Acts which it might be supposed were the result of much deliberation. However, Sir, he scarcely began to open the ground, when the whole veteran body of office took the alarm. A violent outcry of all (except those who knew and felt the mischief) was raised against any alteration. On one hand, his attempt was a direct violation of treaties and public law; on the other, the Act of Navigation, and all the corps of trade laws, were drawn up in array against it.

The first step the noble Lord took, was to have the opinion of his excellent, learned, and ever lamented friend the late Mr. Yorke, then Attorney General, on the point of law. When he knew that formally and officially, which in substance he had known before, he immediately dispatched orders to redress the grievance. But I will say it for the then Minister, he is of that constitution of mind, that I know he would have issued, on the same critical occasion, the very same orders, if the Acts of Trade had been, as they were not, directly against him; and would have cheerfully submitted to the equity of Parliament for his indemnity.

On the conclusion of this business of the Spanish trade, the news of the troubles, on account of the Stamp Act, arrived in England. It was not until the end of October that these accounts were received. No sooner had the sound of that mighty tempest reached us in England, than the whole of the then opposition, instead of feeling humbled by the unhappy issue of their measures, seemed to be infinitely elated, and cried out, that the Ministry, from envy to the glory of their predecessors, were prepared to repeal the Stamp Act. Near nine years after, the honorable gentleman takes quite opposite ground, and now challenges me to put my hand to my heart, and say, whether the Ministry had resolved on the repeal till a considerable time after the meeting of Parliament. Though I do not very well know what the honorable gentleman wishes to infer from the admission, or from the denial, of this fact, on which he so earnestly adjures me, I do put my hand on my heart, and assure him, that they did not come to a resolution directly to repeal. They weighed this matter as its difficulty and importance required. They considered maturely among themselves. They consulted with all who could give advice or information. It was not determined until a little before the meeting of Parliament; but it was determined, and the main lines of their own plan marked out before that meeting. Two questions arose (I hope I am not going into a narrative troublesome to the House)

[A cry of, go on, go on.]

The first of the two considerations was, whether the repeal should be total, or whether only partial; taking out every thing burthensome and productive, and reserving only an empty acknowledgment, such as a stamp on cards or dice. The other question was, on what principle the Act should be repealed? On this head also two principles were started. One, that the Legislative rights of this country, with regard to America, were not entire, but had certain restrictions and limitations. The other principle was, that taxes of this kind were contrary to the fundamental principles of commerce, on which the Colonies were founded; and contrary to every idea of political equity; by which equity we are bound, as much as possible to extend the spirit and benefit of the British constitution to every part of the British Dominions. The option, both of the measure, and of the principle of repeal, was made before the session; and I wonder how any one can read the King's speech at the opening of that session, without seeing, in that speech, both the repeal and Declaratory Act very sufficiently crayoned out. Those who cannot see this can see nothing.

Surely the honorable gentlemen will not think that a great deal less time than was then employed ought to have been spent in deliberation, when he considers that the news of the troubles did not arrive till towards the end of October. The Parliament sat to fill the vacancies on the 14th day of December, and on business the 14th of the following January.

Sir, a partial repeal, or, as the bon ton of the court then was, a modification, would have satisfied a timid, unsystematic, procrastinating Ministry, as such a measure has since done such a Ministry. A modification is the constant resource of weak undeciding minds. To repeal by a denial of our right to tax in the preamble (and this too did not want advisers,) would have cut in the heroic style, the Gordian knot with a sword. Either measure would have cost no more than a day's debate. But when the total repeal was adopted, and adopted on principles of policy, of equity, and of commerce, this plan made it necessary to enter into many and difficult measures. It became necessary to open a very large field of evidence, commensurate to these extensive views. But then this labour did knights service. It opened the eyes of several to the true state of the American affairs; it enlarged their ideas; it removed prejudices; and it conciliated the opinions and affections of men. The noble Lord who then took the lead in Administration, my honorable friend, (Mr. Dowdeswell) under me and a right honorable gentleman (General Conway,) (if he will not reject his share, and it was a large one of this business) exerted the most laudable industry in bringing before you the fullest, most impartial, and least garbled body of evidence, that ever was produced to this House. I think the inquiry lasted in the Committee for six weeks, and at its conclusion this House, by an independent, noble, spirited, and unexpected majority, by a majority that will redeem all the acts ever done by majorities in Parliament, in the teeth of all the old mercenary Swiss of State, in despite of all the speculators and augurs of political events, in defiance of the whole embattled legion of veteran pensioners and practised instruments of a court, gave a total repeal to the Stamp Act, and (if it had been so permitted) a lasting peace to this whole empire.

I state, Sir, these particulars, because this act of spirit and fortitude has lately been, in the circulation of the season, and in some hazarded declamations in this House, attributed to timidity. If, Sir, the conduct of Ministry, in proposing the repeal, had arisen from timidity with regard to themselves, it would have been greatly to be condemned. Interested timidity disgraces as much in the cabinet, as personal timidity does in the field. But timidity, with regard to the well being of our country, is heroic virtue. The noble Lord who then conducted affairs, and his worthy colleagues, whilst they trembled at the prospect of such distresses as you have since brought upon yourselves, were not afraid steadily to look in the face that glaring and dazzling influence at which the eyes of eagles have blenched. He looked in the face one of the ablest, and, let me say, not the most scrupulous oppositions, that perhaps ever was in this House, and withstood it, unaided by even one of the usual supports of Administration. He did this when he repealed the Stamp Act. He looked in the face a person he had long respected and regarded, and whose aid was then particularly wanting, I mean Lord Chatham. He did this when he passed the Declaratory Act.

It is now given out for the usual purposes; by the usual emissaries, that Lord Rockingham did not consent to the repeal of this Act until he was bullied into it by Lord Chatham; and the reporters have gone so far as publicly to assert, in an hundred companies, that the honorable gentleman under the gallery (General Conway,) who proposed the repeal in the American Committee, had another set of resolutions in his pocket directly the reverse of those he moved. These artifices of a desperate cause are, at this time, spread abroad, with incredible care, in every part of the town, from the highest to the lowest companies, as if the industry of the circulation were to make amends for the absurdity of the report.

Sir, whether the noble Lord is of a complexion to be bullied by Lord Chatham or by any man, I must submit to those who know him. I confess, when I look back to that time, I consider him as placed in one of the most trying situations in which, perhaps, any man ever stood. In the House of Peers there were very few of the Ministry, out of the noble Lord's own particular connexion (except Lord Egmont,) who acted as far as I could discern, an honorable and manly part,) that did not look to some other future arrangement, which warped his politics. There were in both Houses new and menacing appearances that might very naturally drive any other, than a most resolute Minister, from his measure, or from his station. The household troops openly revolted. The allies of Ministry (those I mean, who supported some of their measures, but refused responsibility for any) endeavoured to undermine their credit, and to take ground that must be fatal to the success of the very cause which they would be thought to countenance. The question of the repeal was brought on by Ministry in the Committee of this House, in the very instant when it was known that more than one court negotiation was carrying on with the heads of the opposition. Every thing, upon every side, was full of traps and mines. Earth below shook; Heaven above menaced; all the elements of ministerial safety were dissolved. It was in the midst of this chaos of plots and counter-plots, it was in the midst of this complicated warfare against public opposition and private treachery, that the firmness of that noble person was put to the proof. He never stirred from his ground, no, not an inch. He remained fixed and determined, in principle, in measure, and in conduct. He practised no managements. He secured no retreat. He sought no apology.

I will likewise do justice, I ought to do it, to the honorable gentleman who led us in this House, (General Conway.) Far from the duplicity wickedly charged on him, he acted his part with alacrity and resolution. We all felt inspired by the example he gave us, down even to myself, the weakest in that phalanx. I declare for one, I knew well enough (it could not be concealed from any body) the tree atate of things; but, in my life, I never came with so much spirits into this House. It was a time for a man to act in. We had powerful enemies, but we had faithful and determined friends, and a glorious cause. We had a great battle to fight, but we had the means of fighting; not as now, when our arms are tied behind us. We did fight that day, and conquer.

I remember, Sir, with a melancholy pleasure, the situation of the honorable gentleman (General Conway) who made the motion for the repeal; in that crisis, when the whole trading interest of this empire, crammed into your lobbies, with a trembling and anxious expectation, waited, almost to a winter's return of light, their fate from your resolutions. When, at length, you had determined in their favour, and your doors, thrown open, shewed them the figure of their deliverer in the well-earned triumph of his important victory, from the whole of that grave multitude there arose an involuntary burst of gratitude and transport. They jumped upon him like children upon a long absent father. They clung about him as captives about their redeemer. All England, all America, joined to his applause. Nor did he seem insensible to the best of all earthly rewards, the love and admiration of his fellow-citizens. Hope elevated and joy brightened his crest. I stood near him; and his face, to use the expression of the Scripture of the first martyr, "his face was as if it had been the face of an angel." I do not know how others feel; but if I had stood in that situation, I never would have exchanged it for all that Kings in their profusion could bestow. I did hope, that that day's danger and honor would have been a bond to hold us all together for ever. But, alas! that, with other pleasing visions, is long since vanished.

Sir, this act of supreme magnanimity has been represented, as if it had been a measure of an Administration that, having no scheme of their own, took a middle line, pilfered a bit from one side and a bit from the other. Sir, they took no middle lines. They differed fundamentally from the schemes of both parties; but they preserved the objects of both. They preserved the authority of Great Britain. They preserved the equity of Great Britain. They made the Declaratory Act; they repealed the Stamp Act. They did both fully; because the Declaratory Act was without qualification, and the repeal of the Stamp Act total. This they did in the situation I have described.

Now, Sir, what will the adversary say to both these Acts? If the principle of the Declaratory Act was not good, the principle we are contending for this day is monstrous. If the principle of the repeal was not good, why are we not at war for a real substantial effective revenue? If both were bad, why has this Ministry incurred all the inconveniences of both and of all schemes? Why have they enacted, repealed, enforced, yielded, and now attempt to enforce again?

Sir, I think I may as well now, as at any other time, speak to a certain matter of fact, not wholly unrelated to the question under your consideration. We, who would persuade you to revert to the ancient policy of this Kingdom, labour under the effect of this short current phrase, which the court leaders have given out to all their corps, in order to take away the credit of those who would prevent you from that frantic war you are going to wage upon your Colonies. Their cant is this: "all the disturbances in America have been created by the repeal of the Stamp Act." I suppress for a moment my indignation at the falsehood, baseness, and absurdity of this most audacious assertion. Instead of remarking on the motives and character of those who have issued it for circulation, I will clearly lay before you the state of America, antecedently to that repeal; after the repeal; and since the renewal of the schemes of American taxation.

It is said, that the disturbances, if there were any, before the repeal, were slight, and, without difficulty or inconvenience, might have been suppressed. For an answer to this assertion, I will send you to the great author and patron of the Stamp Act, who certainly, meaning well to the authority of this country, and fully apprized of the state of that, made, before a repeal was so much as agitated in this House, the motion which is on your Journals; and which, to save the Clerk the trouble of turning to it, I will now read to you. It was for an amendment to the Address of the 17th of December, 1765:

"To express our just resentment and indignation at the "outrageous tumults and insurrections which have been excited and carried on in North America, and at the resistance given by open and rebellious force to the execution of the laws in that part of his Majesty's Dominions. And to assure his Majesty, that his faithful Commons, animated with the warmest duty and attachment to his Royal Person and Government, will firmly and effectually support his Majesty in all such measures as shall be necessary for preserving and supporting the legal dependence of the Colonies on the mother country, &c., &c."

Here was certainly a disturbance preceding the repeal; such a disturbance as Mr. Grenville thought necessary to qualify by the name of an insurrection, and the epithet of a rebellious force: terms much stronger than any by which those, who then supported his motion, have ever since thought proper to distinguish the subsequent disturbances in America. They were disturbances which seemed to him and his friends to justify as strong a promise of support, as hath been usual to give in the beginning of a war with the most powerful and declared enemies. When the accounts of the American Governors came before the House, they appeared stronger even than the warmth of public imagination had painted them; so much stronger, than the papers on your table bear me out in saying that all the late disturbances, which have been at one time the Minister's motives for the repeal of five out of six of the new court taxes, and are now his pretences for refusing to repeal that sixth, did not amount - why do I comprne them? - no, not to a tenth part of the tumults and violence which prevailed long before the repeal of that Act.

Ministry cannot refuse the authority of the Commander-in-Chief, General Gage, who, in his letter of the 4th of November, from New York, thus represents the state of things:

"It is difficult to say, from the highest to the lowest, who has not been accessory to this insurrection, either by writing, or mutual agreements, to oppose the Act by, what they are pleased to term, all legal opposition to it. Nothing effectual has been proposed, either to prevent or quell the tumult. The rest of the Provinces are in the same situation as to a positive refusal to take the Stamps; and threatening those who shall take them, to plunder and murder them; and this affair stands in all the Provinces, that unless the Act, from its own nature, enforce itself, nothing but a very considerable military force can do it."

It is remarkable, Sir, that the persons who formerly trumpeted forth the most loudly, the violent resolutions of Assemblies; the universal insurrections; the seizing and the burning of the stamped papers; the forcing Stamp Officers to resign their commission under the gallows; the rifling and pulling down of the houses of Magistrates; and the expulsion from their country of all who dared to write or speak a single word in defence of the powers of Parliament; these very trumpeters are now the men that represent the whole as a mere trifle; and choose to date all the disturbances from the repeal of the Stamp Act, which put an end to them. Hear your officers abroad, and let them refute this shameless falsehood, who, in all their correspondence, state the disturbances as owing to their true causes, the discontent of the People from the taxes. You have this evidence in your own archives - and it will give you complete satisfaction; if you are not so far lost to all Parliamentary ideas of information, as rather to credit the lie of the day, than the records of your own House.

Sir, this vermin of court reporters, when they are forced into day upon one point, are sure to burrow in another; but they shall have no refuge; I will make them bolt out of all their holes. Conscious that they must be baffled, when they attribute a precedent disturbance to a subsequent measure, they take other ground, almost as absurd, but very common in modern practice, and very wicked, which is, to attribute the ill effect of ill-judged conduct to the arguments which had been used to dissuade us from it. They say, that the opposition made in Parliament to the Stamp Act at the time of its passing, encouraged the Americans to their resistance. This has even formally appeared in print in a regular volume, from an advocate of that faction, a Dr. Tucker. This Dr. Tucker is already a Dean, and his earnest labours in the vineyard will, I suppose, raise him to a Bishoprick. But this assertion too, just like the rest, is false. In all the papers which have loaded your table; in all the vast crowd of verbal witnesses that appeared at your bar, witnesses which were indiscriminately produced from both sides of the House, not the least hint of such a cause of disturbance has ever appeared. As to the fact of a strenuous opposition to the Stamp Act, I sat as a stranger in your gallery when the Act was under consideration. Far from any thing inflammatory, I never heard a more languid debate in this House. No more than two or three gentlemen, as I remember, spoke against the Act, and that with great reserve and remarkable temper. There was but one division in the whole progress of the Bill; and the minority did not reach to more than thirty-nine or forty. In the House of Lords I do not recollect that there was any debate or division at all. I am sure there was no protest. In fact, the affair passed with so very, very little noise, that in town they scarcely knew the nature of what you were doing. The opposition to the Bill in England never could have done this mischief, because there scarcely ever was less of opposition to a Bill of consequence.

Sir, the agents and distributors of falsehoods have, with their usual industry, circulated another lie of the same nature with the former. It is this, that the disturbances arose from the account which had been received in America of the change in the Ministry. No longer awed, it seems, with the spirit of the former rulers, they thought themselves a match for what our calumniators choose to qualify by the name of so feeble a Ministry as succeeded. Feeble in one sense these men certainly may be called; for with all their efforts, and they have made many, they have not been able to resist the distempered vigour, and insane alacrity with which you are rushing to your ruin. But it does so happen, that the falsity of this circulation is (like the rest) demonstrated by indisputable dates and records.

So little was the change known in America, that the letters of your Governors, giving an account of these disturbances long after they had arrived at their highest pitch, were all directed to the old Ministry, and particularly to the Earl of Halifax, the Secretary of State, corresponding with the Colonies, without once, in the smallest degree, intimating the slightest suspicion of any ministerial revolution whatsoever. The Ministry was not changed in England until the 10th day of July, 1765. On the 14th of the preceding June, Governor Fauquier, from Virginia, writes thus; and writes thus to the Earl of Halifax: "Government is set at defiance, not having strength enough in her hands to enforce obedience to the laws of the community. The private distress, which every man feels, increases the general dissatisfaction at the duties laid by the Stamp Act, which breaks out, and shews itself upon every trifling occasion." The general dissatisfaction had produced some time before, that is on the 29th of May, several strong public resolves against the Stamp Act; and those resolves are assigned by Governor Bernard, as the cause of the insurrections in Massachusetts Bay, in his letter of the 15th of August, still addressed to the Earl of Halifax; and he continued to address such accounts to that Minister quite to the 7th of September of the same year. Similar accounts, and of as late a date, were sent from other Governors, and all directed to Lord Halifax. Not one of these letters indicates the slightest idea of a change, either known, or even apprehended.

Thus are blown away the insect race of courtly falsehoods! Thus perish the miserable inventions of the wretched runners for a wretched cause, which they have fly-blown into every weak and rotten part of the country, in vain hopes that when their maggots had taken wing, their importunate buzzing might sound something like the public voice!

Sir, I have troubled you sufficiently with the state of America before the repeal. Now I turn to the honorable gentleman who so stoutly challenges us to tell, whether, after the repeal, the Provinces were quiet? This is coming home to the point. Here I meet him directly; and answer most readily - they were quiet. And, I in my turn challenge him to prove when, and where, and by whom, and in what numbers, and with what violence, the other laws of trade, as gentlemen assert, were violated in consequence of your concession; or that even your other revenue laws were attacked? But I quit the vantage ground on which I stand, and where I might leave the burthen of the proof upon him: I walk down upon the open plain, and undertake to shew that they were not only quiet, but showed many unequivocal marks of acknowledgment and gratitude. And to give him every advantage, I select the obnoxious Colony of Massachusetts Bay, which at this time (but without hearing her) is so heavily a culprit before Parliament; I will select their proceedings even under circumstances of no small irritation. For a little imprudently I must say, Governor Bernard mixed in the administration of the lenitive of the repeal no small acrimony, arising from matters of a separate nature. Yet see, Sir, the effect of that lenitive, though mixed with these bitter ingredients; and how this rugged People can express themselves on a measure of concession.

"If it is not in our power," say they, in their Address to Governor Bernard, "in so full a manner as will be expected, to shew our respectful gratitude to the mother country, or to make a dutiful and affectionate return to the indulgence of the King and Parliament, it shall be no fault of ours; for this we intend and hope we shall be able fully to effect."

Would to God that this temper had been cultivated, managed, and set in action! Other effects than those which we have since felt would have resulted from it. On the requisition for compensation to those who had suffered from the violence of the populace, in the same Address they say, "The recommendation enjoined by Secretary Conway's letter, and in consequence thereof made to us, we will embrace the first convenient opportunity to consider and act upon." They did consider; they did act upon it. They obeyed the requisition. I know the mode has been chicaned upon; but it was substantially obeyed; and much better obeyed than I fear the Parliamentary requisition of this session will be, though enforced by all your rigour, and backed with all your power. In a word, the damages of popular fury were compensated by Legislative gravity. Almost every other part of America, in various ways demonstrated their gratitude. I am hold to say, that so sudden a calm, recovered after so violent a storm, is without parallel in history. To say that no other disturbance should happen from any other cause, is folly. But as far as appearances went, by the judicious sacrifice of one law, you procured an acquiescence in all that remained. After this experience, nobody shall persuade me, when an whole People are concerned, that acts of lenity are not means of conciliation.

I hope the honorable gentleman has received a fair and full answer to his question.

I have done with the third period of your policy; that of your repeal; and the return of your ancient system, and your ancient tranquillity and concord. Sir, this period was not as long as it was happy. Another scene was opened, and other actors appeared on the stage. The State, in the condition I have described it, was delivered into the hands of Lord Chatham - a great and celebrated name; a name that keeps the name of this country respectable in every other on the globe. It may be truly called,

*Clarum et venerabile nomen
Gentibus, et multum nostræ quod proderat urbi.*

Sir, the venerable age of this great man, his merited rank, his superior eloquence, his splendid qualities, his eminent services, the vast space he fills in the eye of mankind, and, more than all the rest, his fall from power, which, like death, canonizes and sanctifies a great character, will not suffer me to censure any part of his conduct. I am afraid to flatter him; I am sure I am not disposed to blame him. Let those who have betrayed him by their adulation, insult him with their malevolence. But what I do not presume to censure, I may have leave to lament. For a wise man, he seemed to me, at that time, to be governed too much by general maxims. I speak with the freedom of history, and I hope without offence. One or two of these maxims, flowing from an opinion not the most indulgent to our unhappy species, and surely a little too general, led him into measures that were greatly mischievous to himself, and for that reason, among others, perhaps fatal to his country; measures, the effects of which, I am afraid, are for ever incurable. He made an Administration so checkered and speckled; he put together a piece of joinery, so crossly indented and whimsically dovetailed; a cabinet so variously inlaid; such a piece of diversified Mosaic; such a tessellated pavement without cement; here a bit of black stone, and there a bit of white; patriots and courtiers; King's friends and republicans; whigs and tories; treacherous friends and open enemies: that it was indeed a very curious show; but utterly unsafe to touch, and unsure to stand on. The colleagues whom he had assorted at the same boards, stared at each other, and were obliged to ask, "Sir, your name? - Sir, you have the advantage of me - Mr, such a one - I beg a thousand pardons." I venture to say, it did so happen, that persons had a single office divided between them, who had never spoke to each other in their lives, until they found themselves, they knew not how, pigging together, heads and points, in the stone truckle-bed.*

Sir, in consequence of this arrangement, having put so much the larger part of his enemies and opposers into power, the confusion was such, that his own principles could not possibly have any effect or influence in the conduct of affairs. If ever he fell into a fit of the gout, or if any other cause withdrew him from public cares, principles directly the contrary were sure to predominate. When he had executed his plan, he had not an inch of ground to stand upon. When he had accomplished his scheme of Administration, he was no longer a Minister.

When his face was hid but for a moment, his whole system was on a wide sea, without chart or compass. The gentlemen, his particular friends, who, with the names of various departments of Ministry, were admitted, to seem, as if they acted a part under him, with a modesty that becomes all men, and with a confidence in him, which was justified even in its extravagance by his superior abilities, had never, in any instance, presumed upon any opinion of their own. Deprived of his guiding influence, they were whirled about, the sport of every gust, and easily driven into any port; and as those who joined with them in manning the vessel were the most directly opposite to his opinions, measures, and character, and far the most artful and powerful of the set, they easily prevailed, so as to seize upon the vacant, unoccupied, and derelict minds of his friends; and instantly they turned the vessel wholly out of the course of his policy. As if it were to insult as well as to betray him, even long before the close of the first session of his Administration, when every thing was publicly transacted, and with great parade, in his name, they made an Act, declaring it highly just and expedient to raise a revenue in America. For even then, Sir, even before this splendid orb was entirely set, and while the Western horizon was in a blaze with his descending glory, on the opposite quarter of the heavens arose another luminary, and, for his hour, became lord of the ascendant.

This light too is passed and set for ever. You understand, to be sure, that I speak of Charles Townshend, officially the re-producer of this fatal scheme; whom I cannot even now remember without some degree of sensibility. In truth, Sir, he was the delight and ornament of this House, and the charm of every private society which he honored with his presence. Perhaps there never arose in this country, nor in any country, a man of a more pointed and finished wit; and, (where his passions were not concerned) of a more refined, exquisite, and penetrating judgment. If he had not so great a stock, as some have had who flourished formerly, of knowledge long treasured up, he knew better by far, than any man I ever was acquainted with, how to bring together, within a short time, all that was necessary to establish, to illustrate, and to decorate that side of the question he supported. He stated his matter simply and powerfully. He particularly excelled in a most luminous explanation and display of his subject. His style of argument was neither trite and vulgar, nor subtle and abstruse. He hit the House just between wind and water. And not being troubled with too anxious a zeal for any matter in question, he was never more tedious, or more earnest, than the pro-conceived opinions and present temper of his hearers required, to whom he was always in perfect unison. He conformed exactly to the temper of the House; and he seemed to guide, because he was always sure to follow it.

I beg pardon, Sir, if when I speak of this and of other great men, I appear to digress in saying something of their characters. In this eventful history of the revolutions of America, the characters of such men are of much importance. Great men are the guide-posts and land-marks in the State. The credit of such men at court, or in the nation, is the sole cause of all the public measures. It would be an invidious thing (most foreign, I trust, to what you think my disposition) to remark the errors into which the authority of great names has brought the nation, without doing justice at the same time to the great qualities whence that authority arose. The subject is instructive to those who wish to form themselves on whatever of excellence has gone before them. There are many young members in the House (such of late has been the rapid succession of public men) who never saw that prodigy, Charles Townshend, nor of course know what a ferment he was able to excite in every thing by the violent ebullition of his mixed virtues and failings; for failings he had undoubtedly - many of us remember them; we are this day considering the effect of them. But he had no failings which were not owing to a noble cause; to an ardent, generous, perhaps an immoderate passion for Fame; a passion which is the instinct of all great souls. He worshipped that goddess wheresoever she appeared, but he paid his particular devotions to her in her favourite habitation, in her chosen temple, the House of Commons. Besides the characters of the individuals that compose our body, it is impossible, Mr. Speaker, not to observe that this House has a collective character of its own. That character too, however imperfect, is not unamiable. Like all great public collections of men, you possess a marked love of virtue, and an abhorrence of vice. But among vices, there is none which the House abhors in the same degree with obstinacy. Obstinacy, Sir, is certainly a great vice; and in the changeful state of political affairs it is frequently the cause of great mischief. It happens, however, very unfortunately, that almost the whole line of the great and masculine virtues, constancy, gravity, magnanimity, fortitude, fidelity, and firmness, are closely allied to this disagreeable quality, of which you have so just an abhorrence; and, in their excess, all these virtues very easily fall into it. He, who paid such a punctilious attention to all your feelings, certainly took care not to shock them by that vice which is the most disgusting to you.

That fear of displeasing those who ought most to be pleased, betrayed him sometimes into the other extreme. He had voted, and, in the year 1765, had been an advocate for the Stamp Act. Things and the disposition of men's minds were changed. In short, the Stamp Act began to be no favourite in this House. He therefore attended at a private meeting in which the resolutions moved by a right honorable gentleman were settled; resolutions leading to the repeal. The next day he voted for that repeal; and he would have spoken for it too, if an illness (not as was then given out, a political, but, to my knowledge, a very real illness) had not prevented it.

* Supposed to allude to the right honorable Lord North and George Cooke, Esquire, who were made joint Paymasters in the summer of 1766, on the removal of the Rockingham Administration.

The very next session, as the fashion of this world passeth away, the repeal began to be in as bad an odour in this House as the Stamp Act had been in the session before. To conform to the temper which began to prevail, and to prevail mostly among those most in power, he declared, very early in the winter, that a revenue must be had out of America. Instantly he was tied down to his engagements by some who had no objection to such experiments, when made at the cost of persons for whom they had no particular regard. The whole body of courtiers drove him onward. They always talked as if the King stood in a sort of humiliated state, until something of the kind should be done.

Here this extraordinary man, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, found himself in great straits. To please universally was the object of his life; but to tax and to please, no more than to love and to be wise, is not given to men. However he attempted it. To render the tax palatable to the partizans of American revenue, he made a preamble stating the necessity of such a revenue. To close with the American distinction, this revenue was external or port duty; but again, to soften it to the other party, it was a duty of supply. To gratify the Colonists, it was laid on British manufactures; to satisfy the merchants of Britain, the duty was trivial, and (except that on tea, which touched only the devoted East India Company) on none of the grand objects of commerce. To counterwork the American contraband, the duty on tea was reduced from a shilling to three-pence. But to secure the favour of those who would tax America, the scene of collection was changed, and, with the rest, it was levied in the Colonies. What need I say more? This fine spun scheme had the usual fate of all exquisite policy. But the original plan of the duties, and the mode of executing that plan, both arose singly and solely from a love of our applause. He was truly the child of the House. He never thought, did, or said any thing but with a view to you. He every day adapted himself to your disposition; and adjusted himself before it, as at a looking glass.

He had observed (indeed it could not escape him) that several persons, infinitely his inferiors in all respects, had formerly rendered themselves considerable in this House by one method alone. They were a race of men (I hope in God the species is extinct) who, when they rose in their place, no man living could divine, from any known adherence to parties, to opinions, or to principles; from any order or system in their politics; or from any sequel or connection in their ideas, what part they were going to take in any debate. It is astonishing how much this uncertainty, especially at critical times, called the attention of all parties on such men. All eyes were fixed on them, all ears open to hear them: each party gaped and looked alternately for their vote, almost to the end of their speeches. While the House hung in this uncertainty, now the hear-hims rose from this side - now they re-bellowed from the other; and that party to whom they fell at length from their tremulous and dancing balance, always received them in a tempest of applause. The fortune of such men was a temptation too great to be resisted by one, to whom a single whiff of incense withheld gave much greater pain, than he received delight in the clouds of it which daily rose about him from the prodigal superstition of innumerable admirers. He was a candidate for contradictory honours; and his great aim was to make those agree in admiration of him who never agreed in any thing else.

Hence arose this unfortunate Act, the subject of this day's debate; from a disposition which, after making an American revenue to please one, repealed it to please others, and again revived it in hopes of pleasing a third, and of catching something in the ideas of all.

This Revenue Act of 1767, formed the fourth period of American policy. How we have fared since then - what woeful variety of schemes have been adopted; what enforcing, and what repealing; what bullying, and what submitting; what doing, and undoing; what straining and what relaxing; what Assemblies dissolved for not obeying, and called again without obedience; what troops sent out to quell resistance, and on meeting that resistance, recalled; what shiftings, and changes, and jumbings of all kinds of men at home, which left no possibility of order, consistency, vigour, or even so much as a decent unity of colour in any one public measure - it is a tedious, irksome talk - my duty may call me to open it out some other time; on a former occasion* I tried your temper on a part of it; for the present I shall forbear.

After all these changes and agitations, your immediate situation upon the question on your paper is at length brought to this. You have an Act of Parliament, stating, that "it is expedient to raise a revenue in America." By a partial repeal you annihilated the greatest part of that revenue, which this preamble declares to be so expedient. You have substituted no other in the place of it. A Secretary of State has disclaimed, in the King's name, all thoughts of such a substitution in future. The principle of this disclaimer goes to what has been left, as well as what has been repealed. The tax which lingers after its companions (under a preamble, declaring an American revenue expedient, and for the sole purpose of supporting the theory of that preamble) militates with the assurance authentically conveyed to the Colonies; and is an exhaustless source of jealousy and animosity. On this state, which I take to be fair one, not being able to discern any grounds of honor, advantage, peace, or power, for adhering either to the Act or to the preamble, I shall vote for the question which leads to the repeal of both.

If you do not fall in with this motion, then secure something to fight for, consistent in theory, and valuable in practice. If you must employ your strength, employ it to uphold you in some honorable right, or some profitable wrong. If you are apprehensive that the concession recommended to you, though proper, should be a means of drawing on you further but unreasonable claims - why, then employ your force in supporting that reasonable concession against those unreasonable demands. You will employ it with more grace, with better effect, and with great probable concurrence of all the quiet and rational People in the Provinces, who are now united with, and hurried away by the violent; having indeed different dispositions, but a common interest. If you apprehend that on a concession you shall be pushed by metaphysical process to the extreme lines, and argued out of your whole authority, my advice is this, when you have recovered your old, your strong, your tenable position, then face about - stop short - do nothing more - reason not at all - oppose the ancient policy and practice of the empire, as a rampart against the speculation of innovators on both sides of the question, and you will stand on great, manly, and sure ground. On this solid basis fix your machines, and they will draw worlds towards you.

Your Ministers, in their own and his Majesty's name, have already adopted the American distinction of internal and external duties. It is a distinction, whatever merit it may have, that was originally moved by the Americans themselves; and I think they will acquiesce in it, if they are not pushed with too much logic and too little sense, in all the consequences. That is, if external taxation be understood, as they and you understand it when you please, to be not a distinction of geography, but of policy; that it is a power for regulating trade, and not for supporting establishments. The distinction, which is as nothing with regard to right, is of most weighty consideration in practice. Recover your old ground, and your old tranquillity - try it - I am persuaded the Americans will compromise with you. When confidence is once restored, the odious and suspicious summum jus will perish of course. The spirit of practicability, of moderation, and mutual convenience, will never call in geometrical exactness as the arbitrator of an amicable settlement. Consult and follow your experience. Let not the long story with which I have exercised your patience, prove fruitless to your interests.

For my part, I should choose (if I could have my wish) that the proposition of the honorable gentleman (Mr. Fuller) for the repeal, could go to America without the attendance of the Penal Bills. Alone I could almost answer for its success. I cannot be certain of its reception in the bad company it may keep. In such heterogeneous assortments, the most innocent person will lose the effect of his innocence. Though you should send out this angel of peace, yet you are sending out a destroying angel too; and what would be the effect of the conflict of these two adverse spirits, or which would predominate in the end, is what I dare not say: whether the lenient measures would cause American passion to subside, or the severe would increase its fury - all this is in the hand of Providence; yet now, even now, I should confide in the prevailing virtue, and efficacious operation of lenity, though working in darkness, and in chaos, in the midst of all this unnatural and turbid combination. I should hope it might produce order and beauty in the end.

* Resolutions moved in May, 1770.

Let us, Sir, embrace some system or other before we end this session. Do you mean to tax America, and to draw a productive revenue from thence? If you do, speak out: name, fix, ascertain this revenue; settle its quantity; define its objects; provide for its collection; and then fight when you have something to fight for. If you murder - rob! If you kill, take possession; and do not appear in the character of madmen, as well as assassins, violent, vindictive, bloody, and tyrannical, without an object. But may better counsels guide you!

Again, and again, revert to your old principles - seek peace and ensue it - leave America, if she has taxable matter in her, to tax herself. I am not here going into the distinctions of rights, nor attempting to mark their boundaries. I do not enter into these metaphysical distinctions; I hate the very sound of them. Leave the Americans as they anciently stood, and these distinctions, born of our unhappy contest, will die along with it. They, and we, and their and our ancestors, have been happy under that system. Let the memory of all actions, in contradiction to that good old mode, on both sides, be extinguished for ever. Be content to bind America by laws of trade; you have always done it. Let this be your reason for binding their trade. Do not burthen them by taxes; you were not used to do so from the beginning. Let this be your reason for not taxing. These are the arguments of States and Kingdoms. Leave the rest to the schools; for there only they may be discussed with safety. But if, intemperately, unwisely, fatally, you sophisticate and poison the very source of Government, by urging subtle deductions, and consequences odious to those you govern, from the unlimited and illimitable nature of supreme sovereignty, you will teach them by these means to call that sovereignty itself in question. When you drive him hard the boar will surely turn upon the hunters. If that sovereignty and their freedom cannot be reconciled, which will they take? They will cast your sovereignty in your face. No body will be argued into slavery. Sir, let the gentlemen on the other side call forth all their ability; let the best of them get up and tell me, what one character of liberty the Americans have, and what one brand of slavery they are free from, if they are bound in their property and industry, by all the restraints you can imagine on commerce, and at the same time are made pack horses of every tax you choose to impose, without the least share in granting them? When they bear the burthens of unlimited monopoly, will you bring them to bear the burthens of unlimited revenue too? The Englishman in America will feel that this slavery - this legal slavery, will be no compensation, either to his feelings or his understanding.

A noble Lord (Lord Carmarthen,) who spoke some time ago, is full of the fire of ingenuous youth; and when he has modelled the ideas of a lively imagination by further experience, he will be an ornament to his country in either House. He has said, that the Americans are our children; and how can they revolt against their parent? He says, that if they are not free in their present state, England is not free; because Manchester, and other considerable places, are not represented. So then, because some towns in England are not represented, America is to have no Representative at all. They are "our children;" but when children ask for bread, we are not to give a stone. Is it because the natural resistance of things, and the various mutations of time hinders our Government, or any scheme of Government from being any more than a sort of approximation to the right, is it therefore that the Colonies are to recede from it infinitely? When this child of ours wishes to assimilate to its parent, and to reflect with a true filial resemblance the beauteous countenance of British liberty, are we to turn to them the shameful parts of our constitution? Are we to give them our weakness for their strength; our opprobrium for their glory; and the slough of slavery, which we are not able to work off, to serve them for their freedom?

If this be the case, ask yourselves this question - will they be content in such a state of slavery? If not, look to the consequences. Reflect how you are to govern a People, who think they ought to be free, and think they are not. Your scheme yields no revenue; it yields nothing but discontent, disorder, disobedience; and such is the state of America, - that after wading up to your eyes in blood, you could only end just where you begun; that is, to tax where no revenue is to be found, to - my voice fails me; my inclination indeed carries me no further - all is confusion beyond it.

Well, Sir, I have recovered a little, and before I sit down I must say something to another point with which gentlemen urge us. What is to become of the Declaratory Act asserting the entireness of British Legislative authority, if we abandon the practice of taxation?

For my part, I look upon the rights stated in that Act, exactly in the manner in which I viewed them on its very first proposition, and which I have often taken the liberty, with great humility, to lay before you. I look, I say, on the imperial rights of Great Britain, and the privileges which the Colonists ought to enjoy under these rights, to be just the most reconcileable things in the world. The Parliament of Great Britain sits at the head of her extensive empire in two capacities: one as the local Legislature of this Island, providing for all things at home, immediately, and by no other instrument than the Executive power. The other, and I think her nobler capacity, is what I call her imperial character, in which, as from the throne of heaven, she superintends at the several inferior Legislatures, and guides and controls them all without annihilating any. As all these Provincial Legislatures are only co-ordinate to each other, they ought all to be subordinate: to her; else they can neither preserve mutual peace, nor hope for mutual justice, nor effectually afford mutual assistance. It is necessary to coerce the negligent, to restrain the violent, and to aid the weak and deficient, by the overruling plenitude of her power. She is never to intrude into the place of the others, whilst they are equal to the common ends of their institution. But in order to enable Parliament to answer all these ends of provident and beneficent superintendence, her powers must be boundless. The gentlemen who think the powers of Parliament limited, may please themselves to talk of requisitions. But suppose the requisitions are not obeyed? What! Shall there be no reserved power in the empire to supply a deficiency which may weaken, divide, and dissipate the whole? We are engaged in war - the Secretary of State calls upon the Colonies to contribute - some would do it, I think most would cheerfully furnish whatever is demanded - one or two, suppose hang back, and easing themselves, let the stress of the draft lie on the others - surely it is proper that some authority might legally say - "Tax yourselves for the common supply, or Parliament will do it for you." This backwardness was, as I am told, actually the case of Pennsylvania, for some short time towards the beginning of the last war, owing to some internal dissensions in the Colony. But, whether the Fact were so, or otherwise, the case is equally to be provided for by a competent sovereign power. But then this ought to be no ordinary power, nor ever used in the first instance. This is what I meant, when I have said at various times, that I consider the power of taxing in Parliament as an instrument of empire, and not as a means of supply.

Such, Sir, is my idea of the constitution of the British empire, as distinguished from the constitution of Britain, and on these grounds I think subordination and liberty may be sufficiently reconciled through the whole; whether to serve a refining speculatist, or a factious demagogue, I know not; but enough, surely, for the ease and happiness of man.

Sir, whilst we held this happy course, we drew more from the Colonies than all the impotent violence of despotism ever could extort from them. We did this abundantly in the last war. It has never been once denied - and what reason have we to imagine that the Colonies would not have proceeded in supplying Government as liberally, if you had not stepped in and hindered them from contributing, by interrupting the channel in which their liberality flowed with so strong a course; by attempting to take, instead of being satisfied to receive. Sir William Temple says, that Holland has loaded itself with ten times the impositions which it revolted from Spain, rather than submit to. He says true. Tyranny is a poor provider. It knows neither how to accumulate, nor how to extract.

I charge, therefore, to this new and unfortunate system the loss not only of peace, of union, and of commerce, but even of revenue, which its friends are contending for. It is morally certain, that we have lost at least a million of free grants since the peace. I think we have lost a great deal more; and that those who look for a revenue from the Provinces, never could have pursued even in that light, a course more directly repugnant to their purposes.

Now, Sir, I trust I have shewn, first on that narrow ground which the honorable gentleman measured, that you are like to lose nothing by complying with the motion, except what you have lost already. I have shewn, afterwards, that in time of peace you flourished in commerce, and when war required it, had sufficient aid from the Colonies, while you pursued your ancient policy; that you threw every thing into confusion when you made the Stamp Act; and that you restored every thing to peace and order when you repealed it. I have shewn that the revival of the system of taxation has produced the very worst effects; and that the partial repeal has produced, not partial good, but universal evil. Let these considerations, founded on facts, not one of which can be denied, bring us back to your reason by the road of your experience.

I cannot, as I have said, answer for mixed measures; but surely this mixture of lenity would give the whole a better chance of success. When you once regain confidence, the way will be clear before you. Then you may enforce the Act of Navigation when it ought to be enforced. You will yourselves open it where it ought still further to be opened. Proceed in what you do, whatever you do, from policy, and not from rancour. Let us act like men, let us act like statesmen. Let us hold some sort of consistent conduct. It is agreed that a revenue is not to be had in America. If we lose the profit, let us get rid of the odium.

On this business of America, I confess, I am serious, even to sadness. I have had but one opinion concerning it since I sat, and before I sat in Parliament. The noble Lord, (Lord North) will, as usual, probably, attribute the part taken by me and my friends in this business, to a desire of getting his places. Let him enjoy this happy and original idea. If I deprived him of it, I should take away most of his wit and all his argument. But I had rather bear the brunt of all his wit, and indeed blows much heavier, than stand answerable to God for embracing a system that tends to the destruction of some of the very best and fairest of his works. But I know the map of England, as well as the noble Lord (Lord North), or as any other person; and I know that the way I take is not the road to preferment. My excellent and honorable friend under me on the floor, (Mr. Dowdeswell), has trod that road with great toil for upwards of twenty years together. He is not yet arrived at the noble Lord's destination. However, the tracks of my worthy friend are those I have ever wished to follow; because I know they lead to honor. Long may we tread the same road together; whoever may accompany us, or whoever may laugh at us on our journey! I honestly and solemnly declare, I have in all seasons adhered to the system of 1766, for no other reason, than that I think it laid deep in your truest interests - and that, by limiting the exercise, it fixes on the firmest foundations, a real, consistent, well-grounded authority in Parliament. Until you come back to that system, there will be no peace for England.

Mr. Solicitor General Wedderburn. I am not willing to trouble the House long upon this occasion, as it is impossible to say any thing that has not been touched upon before; but I cannot accede to the characters the honorable gentleman has given; I differ much from him in the character of that great man, the late Mr. Grenville, of whom

I shall always speak with veneration; but I cannot, Sir, help thinking, that if you repeal this Act, the Americans will consider you weak in the highest degree, and receive it in the same manner as if you had done it through fear. The disposition to deny your authority in America, was long before the passing or repealing the Stamp Act. The Assembly address the Council, how an Act of the Legislature came to be enrolled in their statute book, not assented to by them. Was this not a flagrant instance of their rebellious disposition? They consider all the Acts that restrain trade as illegal, and they want to treat with you upon an independent footing; but if you give up this tax, it is not here that you must stop, you will be required to give up much more, nay, to give up all. Much has been said about requisition; but I wish gentlemen would consider how, and in what manner, the Ministers of this country, treating with the Assemblies of America, are to raise the money without the aid of their Legislature.

Mr. Burke rose to explain, that he did not mean to cast the least slur upon the character of the late Mr. Grenville; and concluded with saying, he would not raise the bodies of the dead, to make them vampires to suck out the virtues of the living.

Mr. Charles Fox. Let us consider, Sir, what is the State America appears in to this country; the Americans will appear as useful subjects, if you will use them with that temper and lenity which you ought to do. When the Stamp Act was repealed murmurs ceased, and quiet succeeded. Taxes have produced a contrary behaviour; they have been succeeded by riots and disturbances. Here is an absolute dereliction of the authority of this country. It has been said that America is not represented here, but virtually the Americans are full as virtually taxed as virtually represented. A tax can only be laid for three purposes: the first for a commercial regulation, the second for a revenue, and the third for asserting your right. As to the two first, it has clearly been denied it is for either; as to the latter, it is only done with a view to irritate and declare war there, which, if you persist in, I am clearly of opinion you will effect, or force into open rebellion.

Lord Beauchamp. Sir, I should not intrude at this late hour of the night, did I not wish to express my thoughts, that the Americans are not contending for the mode of taxation, but the right. Some years ago, when this Act was passed, combinations took place, in order to oppose that authority which you wish to exert. Measures are now adopted to induce them to consent to this Act, not by force, but by means which I hope will bring them to a sense of their duty. Had this repeal been proposed some sessions ago, I should most probably have adopted it; but the present disturbances in America totally prevent my giving my consent to it. I think it impracticable to repeal it, because we give up our right; and I am not prepared to say, that at no future moment I would tax America. There may be times when the necessity of supplying the exigencies of this country may demand that aid; and therefore I would exert our authority now by a practicable claim of right, which I hope will not hereafter be disputed.

General Burgoyne. Sir, I look upon America to be our child, which I think we have already spoiled by too much indulgence. We are desirous to conciliate measures with the Americans; I look upon this measure to have a totally different effect; I think it a mis-use of time to go into a Committee, and that even the inquiry, the news of which will soon reach America, will tend to nothing but to raise heats, and not appease, but irritate and disturb the more. It is said, if you remove this duty, you will remove all grievances in America; but I am apprehensive that it is the right of taxation they contend about, and not the tax; it is the independent state of that country upon the Legislature of this, which is contended for; but, Sir, I am ready to resist that proposition, and to contend, at any future time, against such independence. I will not enter into the characters of People, nor will I call the great person who planned these measures a cherubim, seraphim, or archangel; but, as a man, I believe he has a good head and an honest heart. [The House here seemed very noisy, and did not attend.] He therefore sat down, concluding, that he wished to see America convinced by persuasion, rather than the sword.

Mr. T. Townshend. Sir, I wish much to go into a Committee upon this occasion, because the Tea Duty, as an object of revenue, is unworthy your consideration; but it is an object which, when once removed from the Americans, will give ease and satisfaction to their minds; and it is preserved by you merely to keep up a continual contest. I will not go back to the ground of arguments which has been so often trod, and which I wish had not been brought forth as the ground of former proceedings, mixing them with the present. I shall look upon this Committee, if granted, as the prelude to that peace which you want to restore to America, and shall therefore give my hearty affirmative.

Lord Clare. Every man who has spoken on this occasion, has prudently avoided going into any thing that gave rise to the original taxation. I am sorry to find that there is even a negative voice against continuing this tax; but as I find there is dissention upon the occasion, it will give room to the Americans to say that the question was much debated, and far from being unanimous; they will upon that account, hold resistance to the measure to be a good ground for some time or other producing a repeal. I could have wished to have seen the House nearly unanimous against the motion, as I am afraid our differences here will countenance resistance there. What, Sir, would they have us surrender the right of Great Britain? It is impossible, in the nature of things, that he can carry this question; and instead of my honorable friend (Mr. Fuller) wishing to restore peace and quietude, he will find he is whetting his sword that it may cut with a keener edge.

Mr. Buller. Sir, I would treat the Americans as subjects of Great Britain, and think them liable to be taxed as well as any others. I am afraid that all these disturbances have been owing to a change of measures in this country. I think a repeal of this Act will have a bad effect, and you will not know where it will end.

Mr. Frederick Montagu. Sir, I feel a strong inclination to trouble the House on this occasion. There must be one supreme right of taxing, I allow, but I think it inexpedient at present to exercise it, and that the only proper way of taxing of America, is through the medium of commerce, and not by hard money. If this motion is rejected, I do not think it will carry the appearance as if we meant to be pacific.

Colonel Barré. I have spoken, Sir, fully on this affair, in what I have said at different times before, and it is impossible to tread the same ground, and to make it pleasant to the same hearers. It has been said that millions have been collected from this country for the use of America; but it ought to be considered, that the stroke of war has been given in many of his Majesty's Dominions, sometimes necessary in one, sometimes in another, and wherever an injury has been struck, there Great Britain resents it. This tax has been said to be not a fruitful one; I think it a very fruitful one, for it has produced riots and disturbances; it has been resisted, it has done its duty, let us dismiss it. I have been much quoted for requisitions; if you will make them with some address, they will comply. I have been also quoted for the olive branch; I say, you have let slip several millions in the East, and now look for a revenue from a pepper-corn in the West. This you will have to lay to your charge, that you will whet your swords in the bowels of your own subjects, and massacre many of your fellow-creatures, who do not know under what constitution of Government they live, by enforcing this tax. You will at last resort to that romantic idea of requisition. [The House was very noisy, and did not give much attention to him, which prevented him from speaking, as he had usually done.]

Lord North said, he was ashamed to take up the time of the House at that late hour of the night, and more so, as what he had to say, chiefly related to himself. He gave an account of the letter which Mr. Burke had read, from Lord Hillsborough to the Americans, and stated the matter of its contents in the best light he could. His Lordship said, this letter of concession was far from quieting the minds of the Americans; that they were guilty of all riots and disturbances; that the non-importation agreement was as impudent and futile a measure as ever existed; and said, he was glad he did not, at that time, propose the repeal of this tax, when all the resolutions of the town meetings denied the authority of this country. Nothing but wisdom on our side, and prudence on theirs, can bring them to a better temper. The tea tax is not an inconsiderable revenue. Convince your Colonies that you are able and not afraid to controul them, and, depend upon it, obedience in them will be the result of your deliberation; and let us conduct ourselves with firmness and resolution throughout the whole of these measures, and there is no doubt but peace and quietude will soon be restored.

Mr. Dowdeswell. I wish the noble Lord would consider what will be the result of these measures. I apprehend the consequences will be dangerous. We are now in great difficulties; let us resolve to do justice before it is too late.

The question on the motion then being put,

The House divided; Yeas, 49; Nays, 182.

So it passed in the Negative.

VI. BILL FOR QUARTERING TROOPS IN AMERICA.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 29, 1774.

Ordered, That leave be granted to bring in a Bill for the better providing suitable Quarters for Officers and Soldiers in his Majesty's service in North America; and that the Lord Barrington and Mr. Pownall do prepare, and bring in the same.

MONDAY, May 2, 1774.

The Lord Barrington presented the Bill according to order: And it was read the first time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a second time to-morrow morning.

WEDNESDAY, May 4, 1774.

The Bill was read a second time and committed to a Committee of the whole House.

Resolved, That this House will, to-morrow morning, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, upon the said Bill.

THURSDAY, May 5, 1774.

The order of the day being read, the House resolved itself in a Committee, on the Bill.

When Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair,

Mr. Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had gone through the Bill, and made several amendments thereunto.

Ordered, That the Report be received to-morrow morning.

FRIDAY, May 6, 1774.

Mr. Whitworth, according to order, reported from the Committee of the Whole, the Bill with the amendments made by the Committee; and the amendments were severally agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the Bill, with the amendments, be engrossed.

MONDAY, May 9, 1774.

An engrossed Bill for the better providing suitable Quarters for Officers and Soldiers in his Majesty's service in North America, was read the third time.

Resolved, That the Bill do Pass.

Ordered, That Sir Charles Whitworth do carry the Bill to the Lords, and desire their concurrence.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, May 9, 1774.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons, by Sir Charles Whitworth, and others:

With a Bill, intituled, "An Act for the better providing "suitable Quarters for Officers and Soldiers in his Majesty's "service in North America;" to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The said Bill was read the first time,

Ordered, That the said Bill be printed.

THURSDAY, May 12, 1774.

The order of the day being read, the Bill was accordingly read a second time, and committed to a Committee of the whole House.

Ordered, That the House be put into a Committee upon the said Bill, to-morrow; and that the Lords be summoned.

MONDAY, May 16, 1774.

The House, according to order, was put into a Committee upon the Bill.

After some time the House was resumed:

And the Lord Boston reported from the Committee, that they had gone through the Bill, and directed him to report the same to the House, without any amendment.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a third time on Wednesday next; and that the Lords be summoned.

WEDNESDAY, May 18, 1774.

The order of the day being read, for the third reading of the Bill:

Ordered, That the said Bill be read the third time, on Thursday, the 26th day of this instant, May; and that the Lords be summoned.

THURSDAY, May 26, 1774.

The order of the day being read, for the third reading of the Bill:

The said Bill was accordingly read the third time.

Moved, That the Bill do Pass?

Lord Chatham rose and said:

My Lords, the unfavourable state of health under which I have long laboured could not prevent me from laying before your Lordships my thoughts on the Bill now upon the table, and on the state of American affairs in general.

If we take a transient view of those motives which induced the ancestors of our fellow-subjects in America to leave their native country, to encounter the innumerable difficulties of the unexplored regions of the Western world, our astonishment at the present conduct of their descendants will naturally subside. There was no corner of the world into which men of their free and enterprising spirit would not fly with alacrity, rather than submit to the slavish and tyrannical principles which prevailed at that period in their native country. And shall we wonder, my Lords, if the descendants of such illustrious characters spurn, with contempt, the hand of unconstitutional power, that would snatch from them such dear-bought privileges as they now contend for? Had the British Colonies been planted by any other Kingdom than our own, the inhabitants would have carried with them the chains of slavery and spirit of despotism; but as they are, they ought to be remembered as great instances to instruct the world, what great exertions mankind will naturally make, when they are left to the free exercise of their own powers. And, my Lords, notwithstanding my intention to give my hearty negative to the question now before you, I cannot help condemning, in the severest manner, the late turbulent and unwarrantable conduct of the Americans in some instances, particularly in the late riots of Boston. But, my Lords, the mode which has been pursued to bring them back to a sense of their duty to their Parent State has been so diametrically opposite to the fundamental principles of sound policy, that individuals, possessed of common understanding, must be astonished at such proceedings. By blocking up the harbour of Boston, you have involved the innocent trader in the same punishment with the guilty profligates who destroyed your merchandise; and instead of making a well-concerted effort to secure the real offenders, you clap a naval and military extinguisher over their harbour, and punish the crime of a few lawless depredators and their abettors, upon the whole body of the inhabitants.

My Lords, this country is little obliged to the framers and promoters of this tea tax. The Americans had almost forgot, in their excess of gratitude for the repeal of the Stamp Act, any interest but that of the mother country: there seemed an emulation among the different Provinces, who should be most dutiful and forward in their expressions of loyalty to their real benefactors; as you will readily perceive by the following letter, from Governor Bernard, to a noble Lord then in office: "The House of "Representatives," says he, "from the time of opening "the session to this day, has shewn a disposition to "avoid all dispute with me: every thing having passed "with as much good humour as I could desire. They "have acted, in all things, with temper and moderation; "they have avoided some subjects of dispute, and have "laid a foundation for removing some causes of former "altercation."

This my Lords, was the temper of the Americans; and would have continued so, had it not been interrupted by your fruitless endeavours to tax them without their consent; but the moment they perceived your intention was renewed to tax them, under a pretence of serving the East India Company, their resentment got the ascendant of their moderation, and hurried them into actions contrary to law, which, in their cooler hours, they would have thought on with horror: for I sincerely believe the destroying of the tea was the effect of despair.

But, my Lords, from the complexion of the whole of the proceedings, I think that Administration has purposely irritated them into those late violent acts, for which they now so severely smart, purposely to be revenged on them for the victory they gained by the repeal of the Stamp Act; a measure to which they seemingly acquiesced, but at the bottom they were its real enemies. For what other motive could induce them to dress taxation, that father of American sedition, in the robes of an East India Director, but to break in upon that mutual peace and harmony, which then so happily subsisted between them and the mother country?

My Lords, I am an old man, and would advise the noble Lords in once to adopt a more gentle mode of governing America; for the day is not far distant, when America may vie with these Kingdoms, not only in arms, but in arts also. It is an established fact, that the principal towns in America are learned and polite, and understand the constitution of the empire as well as the noble Lords who are now in office; and consequently, they will have a watchful eye over their liberties, to prevent the least encroachment on their hereditary rights.

This observation is so recently exemplified in an excellent pamphlet, which comes from the pen of an American gentleman, that I shall take the liberty of reading to your Lordships his thoughts on the competency of the British Parliament to tax America, which in my opinion, puts this interesting matter in the clearest view: "The High "Court of Parliament," says he, "is the supreme Legislative power over the whole empire; in all free States the "constitution is fixed; and as the supreme Legislature "derives its power and authority from the constitution, it "cannot over-leap the bounds of it, without destroying its "own foundation. The constitution ascertains and limits both sovereignty and allegiance: and therefore his Majesty's American subjects, who acknowledge themselves bound by the ties of allegiance, have an equitable claim to the full enjoyment of the fundamental rules of the English constitution; and that it is an essential unalterable right in nature, engrafted into the British constitution as a fundamental law, and ever held sacred and irrevocable by the subjects within this realm - that what a man has honestly acquired, is absolutely his own; which he may freely give, but which cannot be taken from him without his consent."

This, my Lords, though no new doctrine, has always been my received and unalterable opinion, and I will carry it to my grave, that this country had no right under heaven to tax America. It is contrary to all the principles of justice and civil policy, which neither the exigencies of the State, nor even an acquiescence in the taxes, could justify upon any occasion whatever: Such proceedings will never meet their wished-for success; and, instead of adding to their miseries, as the Bill now before you most undoubtedly does, adopt some lenient measures, which may lure them to their duty; proceed like a kind and affectionate parent over a child whom he tenderly loves; and, instead of those harsh and severe proceedings, pass an amnesty on all their youthful errors; clasp them once more in your fond and affectionate arms; and, I will venture to affirm, you will find them children worthy of their sire. But should their turbulence exist after your proffered terms of forgiveness, which I hope and expect this House will immediately adopt, I will be among the foremost of your Lordships to move for such measures as will effectually prevent a future relapse, and make them feel what it is to provoke a fond and forgiving parent! a parent, my Lords, whose welfare has ever been my greatest and most pleasing consolation. This declaration may seem unnecessary; but I will venture to declare, the period is not far distant, when she will want the assistance of her most distant friends: but should the all-disposing hand of Providence prevent me from affording her my poor assistance, my prayers shall be ever for her welfare - length of days be in her right hand, and in her left hand riches and honor; may her ways be ways of pleasantness, and all her paths be peace."

When Lord Chatham had concluded, Lord Suffolk spoke a short time, and was answered by Lord Temple, who closed the debate.

The question was then put, whether this Bill shall Pass?

And the House divided: Contents, 57; Non-Contents, 16.
So it was resolved in the Affirmative.

THURSDAY, June 2, 1774.

The Lord Chancellor acquainted the House "That his Majesty had been pleased to issue a commission to the several Lords therein named, for declaring his royal assent to several Acts agreed upon by both Houses of Parliament."

Then three of the Lords Commissioners, being in their robes, and seated on a form placed between the Throne and the Woolsack, the Lord Chancellor in the middle, with the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury on his right hand, and the Earl of Sandwich on his left; and the Commons with their Speaker being in attendance,

The royal assent was pronounced to the Bill, by the Clerk's Assistant.

Anno Decimo Quarto Georgii III. Regis.

An Act for the better providing suitable Quarters for Officers and Soldiers in his Majesty's Service in North America.

Whereas doubts have been entertained, whether Troops can be Quartered otherwise than in Barracks, in case barracks have been provided sufficient for the quartering of all the Officers and Soldiers within any town, township, city, district, or place, within his Majesty's Dominions in North America: and whereas it may frequently happen, from the situation of such Barracks, that, if troops should be quartered thereby, they would not be stationed where their presence may be necessary and required; Be it therefore enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that in such cases, it shall and may be lawful for the persons who now are, or may be hereafter, authorized by law, in any of the Provinces within his Majesty's Dominions in North America, and they are hereby respectively authorized, empowered and directed, on the requisition of the Officer who, for the time being, has the command of his Majesty's forces, in North America, to cause any Officers or Soldiers in his Majesty's service to be quartered and billeted in such manner as is now directed by law where no Barracks are provided by the Colonies.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if it shall happen at any time that any Officers or Soldiers in his Majesty's service shall remain within any of the said Colonies without Quarters, for the space of twenty-four hours after such Quarters shall have been demanded, it shall and may be lawful for the Governor of the Province to order and direct such and so many uninhabited houses, out-houses, barns, or other buildings, as he shall think necessary to be taken (making a reasonable allowance for the same) and make fit for the reception of such Officers and Soldiers, and to put and quarter such Officers and Soldiers therein, for such time as he shall think proper.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That this Act, and every thing herein contained, shall continue and be in force, in all his Majesty's Dominions in North America, until the twenty-fourth day of March, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-six.

VII. BILL FOR GOVERNMENT OF THE PROVINCE OF Quebec.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, May 2, 1774.

The Earl of Dartmouth presented to the House a Bill, intituled, "An Act making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America."

The said Bill was read the first time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be printed.

TUESDAY, May 3, 1774.

Ordered, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, to desire "That he will be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House copies of such parts of the Instructions given by his Majesty to the Governors in the royal Governments in America, relative to the taking up of Lands by Settlers, and the granting Lands therein, particularly in the Colony of Quebec."

WEDNESDAY, May 4, 1774.

Ordered, That the Bill be read a second time on Monday next; and that the Lords be summoned.

FRIDAY, May 6, 1774.

Ordered, That the second reading of the Bill, which stands appointed for Monday next, be put off to Thursday next; and that the Lords be summoned.

The Earl of Dartmouth laid before the House, pursuant to an Address to his Majesty for that purpose, of the 3d instant,

No. 1. Copy of Instructions from his Majesty to Guy Carleton, Esquire, Governor of Quebec, respecting the granting of Lands in that Province, dated 12th August, 1768, and the 2d of July, 1771.

No. 2. Copy of his Majesty's Instructions to the Governors of Nova Scotia, New Hampshire, New York, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, East Florida, and West Florida, respecting the granting of Lands in those Provinces, dated 3d February, 1774.

THURSDAY, May 12, 1774.

The order of the day being read, the Bill was accordingly read a second time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be committed to a Committee of the whole House.

Ordered, That the House be put into a Committee upon the said Bill to-morrow; and that the Lords be summoned.

FRIDAY, May 13, 1774.

The order of the day being read, the House was put into Committee on the Bill.

After some time the House was resumed:

And the Lord Boston reported from the Committee, "That they had gone through the Bill, and made several "amendments thereto, which he was ready to report when "the House will please to receive the same."

Ordered, That the said report be received on Monday next.

MONDAY, May 16, 1774.

The Lord Boston, according to order, reported the amendments made by the Committee of the Whole to the Bill: which were severally read and agreed to by the house.

Ordered, That the said Bill be read a third time to-morrow; and that the Lords be summoned.

TUESDAY, May 17, 1774.

The order of the day being read, the Bill was accordingly read a third time.

Proposed to insert the following Proviso at the end of the Bill:

["Provided, That this Act shall be in force for the "space of seven years, and to the end of the then next "session of Parliament, and no longer."]

Which being objected to;

After debate, the question was put thereupon, and it was resolved in the Negative.

Moved, "That the Bill do Pass?"

Which being objected to;

After debate, the question was put, whether this Bill shall Pass?

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons to carry down the Bill, and desire their concurrence thereto.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 18, 1774.

A Message from the Lords, by Mr. Browning and Mr. Anguish:

Mr. Speaker, the Lords have passed a Bill, intituled, "An Act making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America," to which the Lords desire the concurrence of the House.

The Bill was read the first time.

Ordered, That the said Bill be printed.

Resolved, That the said Bill be read a second time: to-morrow sevensnight, the 26th day of this instant, May.

FRIDAY, May 20, 1774.

Resolved, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, that he will be graciously pleased to give directions, that there be laid before this House, a copy of his Majesty's Proclamation, respecting the settling the Acquisitions at the Peace, in November, 1763; and also a copy of General Murray's commission, as Captain General of the Province of Quebec.

THURSDAY, May 26, 1774.

The Lord North presented to the House, pursuant to their Address to his Majesty:

No. 1. Printed Proclamation, dated 7th October, 1763; viz:

BY THE KING. - A PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE R.

Whereas we have taken into our royal consideration the extensive and valuable acquisitions in America, secured to our Crown by the late definitive treaty of peace concluded at Paris, the tenth day of February last; and being desirous that all our loving subjects, as well of our Kingdoms as of our Colonies in America, may avail themselves, with all convenient speed, of the great benefits and advantages which must accrue therefrom to their commerce, manufactures, and navigation; we have thought fit, with the advice of our Privy Council, to issue this, our royal proclamation, hereby to publish and declare to all our loving subjects, that we have, with the advice of our Privy Council, granted our letters patent under our great seal of Great Britain, to erect within the countries and islands, ceded and confirmed to us by the said treaty, four distinct and separate Governments, styled and called by the names of Quebec, East Florida, West Florida, and Grenada, and limited and bounded as follows, viz:

First, The Government of Quebec, bounded on the Labrador coast by the river St. John, and from thence by a line drawn from the head of that river, through the Lake St. John, to the South end of the Lake Nipissim; from whence the said line, crossing the river St. Lawrence and the Lake Champlain in forty-five degrees of North latitude, passes along the highlands, which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the said river St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the sea; and also along the North coast of the Baye des Chaleurs, and the coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Cape Rosieres, and from thence crossing the mouth of the river St. Lawrence by the West end of the island of Anticosti, terminates at the aforesaid river St. John.

Secondly, The Government of East Florida, bounded to the Westward by the Gulf of Mexico and the Apalachicola river; to the Northward, by a line drawn from that part of the said river where the Chatahouchee and Flint rivers meet, to the source of St. Mary's river, and by the course of the said river to the Atlantic Ocean; and to the East and South by the Atlantic Ocean, and the Gulf of Florida, including all islands within six leagues of the sea coast.

Thirdly, The Government of West Florida, bounded to the Southward by the Gulf of Mexico, including all islands within six leagues of the coast from the river Apalachicola to Lake Pontchartrain; to the Westward by the said lake, the Lake Mauripas, and the river Mississippi; to the Northward, by a line drawn due East from that part of the river Mississippi which lies in thirty-one degrees North latitude, to the river Apalachicola, or Chatahouchee; and to the Eastward by the said river.

Fourthly, The Government of Grenada, comprehending the island of that name, together with the Grenadines, and the islands of Dominico, St. Vincent, and Tobago.

And to the end that the open and free fishery of our subjects may be extended to, and carried on upon the coast of Labrador and the adjacent islands, we have thought fit, with the advice of our said Privy Council, to put all that coast, from the river St. John's to Hudson's Streights, together with the islands of Anticosti and Madelaine, and all other smaller islands lying upon the said coast, under the care and inspection of our Governor of Newfoundland.

We have also, with the advice of our Privy Council, thought fit to annex the islands of St. John and Cape Breton, or Isle Royale, with the lesser islands adjacent thereto, to our Government of Nova Scotia.

We have also, with the advice of our Privy Council aforesaid, annexed to our Province of Georgia, all the lands lying between the rivers Altamaha and St. Mary's.

And whereas it will greatly contribute to the speedy settling our said new Governments, that our loving subjects should be informed of our paternal care for the security of the liberty and properties of those who are, and shall become inhabitants thereof; we have thought fit to publish and declare, by this our proclamation, that we have, in the letters patent under our great seal of Great Britain, by which the said Governments are constituted, given express power and direction to our Governors of our said Colonies respectively, that so soon as the state and circumstances of the said Colonies will admit thereof, they shall, with the advice and consent of the members of our Council, summon and call General Assemblies within the said Governments respectively, in such manner and form as is used and directed in those Colonies and Provinces in America, which are under our immediate Government; and we have also given power to the said Governors, with the consent of our said Councils, and the Representatives of the people, so to be summoned as aforesaid, to make, constitute, and ordain laws, statutes, and ordinances for the public peace, welfare, and good Government of our said Colonies, and of the people and inhabitants thereof, as near as may be, agreeable to the laws of England, and under such regulations and restrictions as are used in other Colonies; and in the mean time, and until such Assemblies can be called as aforesaid, all persons inhabiting in, or resorting to, our said Colonies, may confide in our royal protection for the enjoyment of the benefit of the laws of our realm of England: for which purpose we have given power under our great seal to the Governors of our said Colonies respectively, to erect and constitute, with the advice of our said Councils respectively, courts of judicature and public justice within our said Colonies, for the hearing and determining all causes, as well criminal as civil, according to law and equity, and, as near as may be, agreeable to the laws of England, with liberty to all persons who may think themselves aggrieved by the sentences of such courts, in all civil cases, to appeal, under the usual limitations and restrictions, to us, in our Privy Council.

We have also thought fit, with the advice of our Privy Council as aforesaid, to give unto the Governors and Councils of our said three new Colonies upon the continent, full power and authority to settle and agree with the inhabitants of our said new Colonies, or with any other persons who shall resort thereto, for such lands, tenements, and hereditaments, as are now, or hereafter shall be, in our power to dispose of, and them to grant to any such person or persons, upon such terms, and under such moderate quit-rents, services, and acknowledgments, as have been appointed and settled in other Colonies, and under such other conditions as shall appear to us to be necessary and expedient for the advantage of the grantees, and the improvement and settlement of our said Colonies.

And whereas we are desirous, upon all occasions, to testify our royal sense and approbation of the conduct and bravery of the officers and soldiers of our armies, and to reward the same, we do hereby command and empower our Governors of our said three new Colonies, and all other our Governors of our several Provinces on the Continent of North America, to grant, without fee or reward, to such reduced officers as have served in North America during the late war, and to such private soldiers as have been or shall be disbanded in America, and are actually residing there, and shall personally apply for the same, the following quantities of land, subject, at the expiration of ten years, to the same quit-rents as other lands are subject to in the Province within which they are granted, as also subject to the same conditions of cultivation and improvement, viz:

To every person having the rank of a field officer, 5,000 acres.

To every captain, 3,000 acres.

To every subaltern or staff officer, 2,000 acres.

To every non-commission officer, 200 acres.

To every private man, 50 acres.

We do likewise authorize and require the Governors and Commanders-in-chief of all our said Colonies upon the Continent of North America to grant the like quantities of land, and upon the same conditions, to such reduced officers of our navy of like rank, as served on board our ships of war in North America at the times of the reduction of Louisbourg and Quebec in the late war, and who shall personally apply to our respective Governors for such grants.

And whereas it is just and reasonable, and essential to our interest, and the security of our Colonies, that the several nations or tribes of Indians, with whom we are connected, and who live under our protection, should not be molested or disturbed in the possession of such parts of our dominions and territories, as, not having been ceded to, or purchased by us, are reserved to them, or any of them, as their hunting grounds; we do therefore, with the advice of our Privy Council, declare it to be our royal will and pleasure, that no Governor, or Commander-in-chief, in any of our Colonies of Quebec, East Florida, or West Florida, do presume, upon any pretence whatever, to grant warrants of survey, or pass any patents for lands beyond the bounds of their respective Governments, as described in their commissions; as also that no Governor or Commander-in-chief in any of our other Colonies or Plantations in America, do presume for the present, and until our further pleasure be known, to grant warrants of survey, or pass patents for any lands beyond the heads or sources of any of the rivers which fall into the Atlantic Ocean, from the West or Northwest; or upon any lands whatever, which not having been ceded to, or purchased by us, as aforesaid, are reserved to the said Indians, or any of them.

And we do further declare it to be our royal will and pleasure, for the present, as aforesaid, to reserve under our sovereignty, protection, and dominion, for the use of the said Indians, all the lands and territories not included within the limits of our said three new Governments, or within the limits of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company; as also, all the lands and territories lying to the westward of the sources of the rivers which fall into the sea from the West and Northwest as aforesaid; and we do hereby strictly forbid, on pain of our displeasure, all our loving subjects from making any purchases or settlements whatever, or taking possession of any of the lands above reserved, without our especial leave and license for that purpose first obtained.

And we do further strictly enjoin and require all persons whatever, who have either wilfully or inadvertently seated themselves upon any lands within the countries above described, or upon any other lands, which not having been ceded to, or purchased by us, are still reserved to the said Indians as aforesaid, forthwith to remove themselves from such settlements.

And whereas great frauds and abuses have been committed in the purchasing lands of the Indians, to the great prejudice of our interests, and to the great dissatisfaction of the said Indians; in order therefore to prevent such irregularities for the future, and to the end that the Indians may be convinced of our justice and determined resolution to remove all reasonable cause of discontent, we do, with the advice of our Privy Council, strictly enjoin and require that no private person do presume to make any purchase from the said Indians of any lands reserved to the said Indians within those parts of our Colonies where we have thought proper to allow settlement; but that if at any time any of the said Indians should be inclined to dispose of the said lands, the same shall be purchased only for us, in our name, at some public meeting or assembly of the said Indians, to be held for that purpose by the Governor or Commander-in-chief of our Colonies respectively within which they shall lie: and in case they shall lie within the limits of any proprietary Government, they shall be purchased only for the use and in the name of such proprietaries, conformable to such directions and instructions as we or they shall think proper to give for that purpose: and we do, by the advice of our Privy Council, declare and enjoin, that the trade with the said Indians shall be free and open to all our subjects whatever, provided that every person who may incline to trade with the said Indians, do take out a license for carrying on such trade, from the Governor or Commander-in-chief of any of our

Colonies respectively, where such person shall reside, and also give security to observe such regulations as we shall at any time think fit, by ourselves or by our Commissaries, to be appointed for this purpose, to direct and appoint for the benefit of the said trade: and we do hereby authorize, enjoin, and require the Governors and Commanders-in-chief, of all our Colonies respectively, as well those under our immediate Government, as those under the Government and direction of proprietaries, to grant such licenses without fee or reward, taking especial care to insert therein a condition that such license shall be void, and the security forfeited, in case the person to whom the same is granted, shall refuse or neglect to observe such regulations as we shall think proper to prescribe as aforesaid.

And we do further expressly enjoin and require all officers whatever, as well military as those employed in the management and direction of Indian affairs within the territories reserved, as aforesaid, for the use of the said Indians, to seize and apprehend all persons whatever, who standing charged with treasons, misprisons of treasons, murders, or other felonies or misdemeanours, shall fly from justice and take refuge in the said territory, and to send them under a proper guard to the Colony where the crime was committed of which they stand accused, in order to take their trial for the same.

Given at our Court at St. James's, the seventh day of October, one thousand seven hundred and sixty-three, in the third year of our reign.

GOD save the KING.

No. 2. Copy of a Commission for James Murray, Esq. to be Captain General and Governor-in-chief of the Province of Quebec; viz:

G.R.

George the Third, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, to our trusty and well-beloved James Murray, Esquire, greeting:

We, reposing especial trust and confidence in the prudence, courage, and loyalty of you, the said James Murray, of our especial grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, have thought fit to constitute and appoint, and by these presents do constitute and appoint you, the said James Murray, to be our Captain General and Governor-in-chief in and over our Province of Quebec, in America; bounded on the Labrador coast by the river St. John and from thence by a line drawn from the head of that river through the Lake St. John to the South end of the Lake Nipissim, from whence the said line crossing the river St. Lawrence and the Lake Champlain, in forty-five degrees of northern latitude, passes along the highlands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the said river St. Lawrence from those which fall into the sea; and also along the North coast of the Baye des Chaleurs and the coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Cape Rosieres; and from thence crossing the mouth of the river St. Lawrence by the West end of the Island of Anticosti, terminates at the aforesaid river St. John: together with all the rights, members, and appurtenances whatsoever thereunto belonging.

And we do hereby require and command you to do and execute all things in due manner that shall belong to your said command and the trust we have reposed in you, according to the several powers and directions granted or appointed you by this present commission, and the instructions and authorities herewith given unto you, or by such other powers, instructions, and authorities as shall at any time hereafter be granted or appointed under our signet and sign manual, or by our order in our Privy Council, and according to such reasonable laws and statutes as shall hereafter be made and agreed upon by you with the advice and consent of the Council and Assembly of our said Province under your Government, in such manner and form as is hereinafter expressed.

And our will and pleasure is, that you, the said James Murray, do, after the publication of these our letters' patent and after the appointment of our Council for our said Province, in such manner and form as is prescribed in the instructions which you will herewith receive, in the first place, take the oaths appointed to be taken by an Act passed in the first year of the reign of King George the

First, intituled, "An Act for the further security of his Majesty's person and Government, and the succession of the Crown in the heirs of the late Princess Sophia, being Protestants, and for extinguishing the hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales, and his open and secret abettors;" as also that you make and subscribe the declaration mentioned in an Act of Parliament made in the twenty-fifth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, intituled, "An Act for preventing dangers which may happen from Popish recusants;" and likewise, that you take the oath of office usually taken by our Governors in the other Colonies for the due execution of the office and trust of our Captain General and Governor-in-chief in and over our said Province, and for the due and impartial administration of justice; and further, that you take the oath required to be taken by the Governors of the Plantations, to do their utmost that the several laws relating to trade and plantations be duly observed: which said oaths and declarations our Council of our said Province, or any three of the members thereof, have hereby full power and authority and are hereby required, to tender and administer to you.

All which being duly performed, you shall yourself administer to each of the members of our said Council, and to the Lieutenant Governors of Montreal and Trois Rivières, the said oaths mentioned in the said Act, intituled, "An Act for the further security of his Majesty's person and Government, and the succession of the Crown in the heirs of the late Princess Sophia, being Protestants, and for extinguishing the hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales, and his open and secret abettors;" and also to cause them to make and subscribe the afore-mentioned declaration, and also shall administer unto them the usual oaths for the due execution of their places and trust.

And we do further give and grant unto you, the said James Murray, full power and authority from time to time and at any time hereafter, by yourself, or by any other to be authorized by you in this behalf, to administer and give the oaths mentioned in the said Act, "for the further security of his Majesty's person and Government, and the succession of the Crown in the heirs of the late Princess Sophia, being Protestants, and for extinguishing the hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales, and his open and secret abettors;" to all and every such person or persons as you shall think fit, who shall at any time or times pass into our said Province, or shall be resident or abiding there.

And we do hereby authorize and empower you to keep and use the public seal which will herewith be delivered to you, or shall be hereafter sent to you, for sealing all things whatsoever that shall pass the great seal of our Province.

And we do hereby give and grant unto you, the said James Murray, full power and authority, with the advice and consent of our said Council to be appointed as aforesaid, so soon as the situation and circumstances of our said Province under your Government will admit thereof, and when and as often as need shall require, to summon and call General Assemblies of the freeholders and planters within your Government, in such manner as you in your discretion shall judge most proper; or according to such further powers, instructions, and authorities, as shall be at any time hereafter granted or appointed you under our signet or sign manual, or by our order in our Privy Council.

And our will and pleasure is, that the persons thereupon duly elected by the major part of the freeholders of the respective parishes or precincts, and so returned, shall, before their Sitting, take the oaths mentioned in the said Act, intituled, "An Act for the further security of his Majesty's person and Government, and the succession of the Crown in the heirs of the late Princess Sophia, being Protestants, and for extinguishing the hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales, and his open and secret abettors;" and also make and subscribe the fore-mentioned declaration; which oaths and declaration you shall commissionate fit persons under the public seal of that our Province to tender and administer unto them; and, until the same shall be so taken and subscribed, no person shall be capable of sitting, though, elected.

And we do hereby declare, that the persons so elected and qualified shall be called the Assembly of that our Province of Quebec; and that you, the said James Murray, by and with the advice and consent of our said Council and Assembly, or the major part of them, shall have full power and authority to make, constitute, and ordain, laws, statutes, and ordinances, for the public peace, welfare, and good Government of our said Province, and of the people and inhabitants thereof, and such others as shall resort thereunto, and for the benefit of us, our heirs and successors; which said laws, statutes, and ordinances, are not to be repugnant, but, as near as may be, agreeable to the laws and statutes of this our Kingdom of Great Britain.

Provided that all such laws, statutes, and ordinances, of what nature or duration soever they be, shall be, within three months, or sooner, after the making thereof, transmitted to us, under our seal of our said Province, for our approbation or disallowance of the same, as also duplicates thereof, by the next conveyance.

And in case any, or all, of the said laws, statutes, and ordinances, not before confirmed by us, shall at any time be disallowed and not approved, and so signified by us, our heirs, and successors, under our, or their, signet and sign manual, or by order of our, or their, Privy Council, unto you, the said James Murray, or to the Commander-in-chief of our said Province for the time being, then such and so many of the said laws, statutes, and ordinances, as shall be so disallowed and not approved, shall from thenceforth cease, determine, and become utterly void and of no effect; any thing to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

And to the end that nothing may be passed or done by our said Council or Assembly to the prejudice of us, our heirs, and successors, we will and ordain that you, the said James Murray, shall have and enjoy a negative voice in the making and passing all laws, statutes, and ordinances, as aforesaid; and that you shall and may likewise from time to time, as you shall judge necessary, adjourn, prorogue, or dissolve all General Assemblies as aforesaid.

And we do by these presents give and grant unto you, the said James Murray, full power and authority, with the advice and consent of our said Council, to erect, constitute, and establish such and so many courts of judicature and public justice within our said Province under your Government as you and they shall think fit and necessary, for the hearing and determining of all causes; as well criminal as civil, according to law and equity, and for awarding execution thereupon, with all reasonable and necessary powers, authorities, fees, and privileges belonging thereto; as also to appoint and commissionate fit persons in the several parts of your Government to administer the oaths mentioned in the aforesaid Act, intituled, "An Act for the further security of his Majesty's person and Government, and the succession of the Crown in the heirs of the late Princess Sophia, being Protestants, and for extinguishing the hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales, and his open and secret abettors;" as also to tender and administer the aforesaid declaration to such persons belonging to the said courts as shall be obliged to take the same.

And we do hereby grant unto you full power and authority to constitute and appoint Judges, and, in cases requisite, Commissioners of Oyer and Tinner, Justices of the Peace, and other necessary officers and ministers, in our said Province, for the better administration of justice, and putting the laws in execution; and to administer, or cause to be administered, unto them, such oath or oaths as are usually given for the due execution and performance of offices and places, and for clearing the truth in judicial causes.

And we do hereby give and grant unto you full power and authority, when you shall see cause, or shall judge any offender or offenders in criminal matters, or for any fines or forfeitures due unto us, fit objects of our mercy, to pardon all such offenders, and remit all such offences, fines, and forfeitures, treason and wilful murder only excepted; in which cases you shall likewise have power, upon extraordinary occasions, to grant reprieves to the offender until, and to the intent that, our royal pleasure may be known therein,

And we do by these presents give and grant unto you full power and authority to collate any person or persons to any churches, chapels, or other ecclesiastical benefices within our said Province, as often as any of them shall happen to be void.

And we do hereby give and grant unto you, the said James Murray, by yourself, or by your Captains and Commanders by you to be authorized, full power and authority to levy, arm, muster, command, and employ all persons whatsoever residing within our said Province; and, as occasion shall serve, them to march, embark, or transport, from one place to another, for the resisting and withstanding of all enemies, pirates, and rebels, both at land and sea; and to transport such forces to any of our Plantations in America, if necessity shall require, for the defence of the same against the invasion or attempts of any of our enemies; and such enemies, pirates, and rebels, if there should be occasion, to pursue and prosecute in or out of the limits of our said Province: and, if it shall so please God, them to vanquish, apprehend, and take; and, being taken, according to law to put to death or keep and preserve alive, at your discretion; and to execute martial law in time of invasion, war, or other times, when by law it may be executed; and to do and execute all and every other thing and things which to our Captain General and Governor-in-chief doth, or of right ought to belong.

And we do hereby give and grant unto you full power and authority, by and with the advice and consent of our said Council, to erect, raise, and build in our said Province, such and so many forts, platforms, castles, cities, boroughs, towns, and fortifications, as you, by the advice aforesaid, shall judge necessary, and the same, or any of them, to fortify and furnish with ordinance, ammunition, and all sorts of arms fit and necessary for the security and defence of our said Province; and by the advice aforesaid, the same again, or any of them, to demolish or dismantle as may be most convenient.

And forasmuch as divers mutinies and disorders may happen by persons shipped and employed at sea during the time of war, and to the end that such as shall be shipped and employed at sea during the time of war may be better governed and ordered, we hereby give and grant unto you, the said James Murray, full power and authority to constitute and appoint Captains, Lieutenants, Masters of Ships, and other Commanders and Officers; and to grant to such Captains, Lieutenants, Masters of Ships, and other Commanders and Officers, commissions to execute the law martial, during the time of war, according to the directions of an Act passed in the twenty-second year of the reign of our late royal grandfather, intituled, "An Act for amending, explaining, and reducing into one act of Parliament, the laws relating to the Government of his Majesty's ships, vessels, and forces, by sea;" and to use such proceedings, authorities, punishments, corrections, and executions upon every offender or offenders, who shall be mutinous, seditious, disorderly, or any way unruly, either at sea, or during the time of their abode or residence in any of the ports, harbours, or bays in our said Province, as the ease shall be found to require, according to martial law, and the said directions, during the time of war, as aforesaid.

Provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to the enabling you, or any by your authority, to hold plea, or have any jurisdiction of any offence, cause, matter, or thing committed or done upon the high sea, or within any of the havens, rivers, or creeks of our said Province under your Government, by any Captain Commander, Lieutenant, Master, Officer, Seaman, Soldier, or person whatsoever, who shall be in actual service and pay, in or on board any of our ships of war, or other vessels acting by immediate commission or warrant from our Commissioners for executing the office of High Admiral of Great Britain, or from our High Admiral of Great Britain, for the time being, under the seal of our Admiralty; but than such Captain, Commander, Lieutenant, Master, Officer, Seaman, Soldier, or other person, so offending, shall be left to be proceeded against, and tried, as their offences shall require, either by commission under our great seal of this Kingdom, as the statute of the twenty-eighth of Henry VIII. directs; or by commission from our said Commissioners for executing the office of High Admiral of Great Britain, or from our High Admiral of Great Britain, for the time being, according to the aforementioned Act, intituled, "An Act for amending, explaining, and reducing into one act of Parliament, the laws relating to the Government of his Majesty's ships, vessels, and forces, by sea;" and not otherwise.

Provided nevertheless, that all disorders and misdemeanors committed on shore by any Captain, Commander, Lieutenant, Master, Officer, Seaman, Soldier, or other person whatsoever, belonging to any of our ships of war, or other vessels acting by immediate commission or warrant from our Commissioners for executing the office of High Admiral of Great Britain, or from our High Admiral of Great Britain, for the time being, under the seal of our Admiralty, may be tried and punished according to the laws of the place, where any such disorders, offences, and misdemeanors shall be committed on shore; notwithstanding such offender be in our actual service, and borne in our pay on board any of our ships of war, or other vessels acting by our immediate commission, or warrant from our Commissioners for executing the office of High Admiral of Great Britain, or from our High Admiral of Great Britain, for the time being, as aforesaid, so as he shall not receive any protection for the avoiding of justice for such offences committed on shore from any pretence of his being employed in our service at sea.

And our further will and pleasure is, that all public moneys raised, or which shall be raised, by any act hereafter to be made within our said Province, be issued out by warrant from you, by and with the advice and consent of our Council, as aforesaid, for the support of the Government, and not otherwise.

And we likewise give and grant unto you full power and authority, by and with the advice and consent of our said Council, to settle and agree with the inhabitants of our said Province, for such lands, tenements, and hereditaments, as now are, or hereafter shall be in our power to dispose of, and them to grant to any person or persons upon such terms and under such moderate quit-rents, services, and acknowledge ments to be thereupon reserved unto us, as you, with the advice aforesaid, shall think fit; which said grants are to pass, and be sealed by our public seal of our said Province, and being entered upon record by such officer or officers as shall be appointed thereunto, shall be good and effectual in law against us, our heirs, and successors.

Provided the same be conformable to the instructions herewith delivered to you, or to such other instructions as may hereafter be sent to you under our signet and sign manual, or by our order in our Privy Council; which instructions, or any articles contained therein, or any such order made in our Privy Council, so far as the same shall relate to the granting of lands as aforesaid, shall from time to time be published in the Province, and entered on record in like manner as the said grants are hereby directed to be entered.

And we do hereby give you, the said James Murray, full power and authority to order fairs, marts, and markets; and also such and so many ports, harbours, bays, havens, and other places for the conveniency or security of shipping, and for the better loading and unloading of goods and merchandises, in such and so many places, as by you, with the advice and consent of our said Council, shall be thought fit and necessary.

And we do hereby require and command all officers and ministers, civil and military, and all other inhabitants of our said Province to be obedient, aiding, and assisting unto you, the said James Murray, in the execution of this our commission, and of the powers and authorities therein contained; and in case of your death or absence from our said Province and Government, to be obedient, aiding, and assisting, as aforesaid, to the Commander-in-chief for the time being, to whom we do therefore by these presents give and grant all and singular the powers and authorities herein granted to be by him executed and enjoyed, during our pleasure, or until your arrival within our said Province.

And in case of your death or absence from our said Province, our will and pleasure is, that our Lieutenant Governor of Montreal or Trois Rivières, according to the priority of their commissions of Lieutenant Governor, do execute our said commission with all the powers and authorities therein mentioned, as aforesaid. And in case of the death or absence of our Lieutenant Governors of Montreal and Trois Rivières from our said Province, and that there shall be no person within our said Province appointed by us to be Lieutenant Governor or Commander-in-chief of our said Province, our will and pleasure is, that the eldest Counsellor, who shall be, at the time of your death or absence, residing within our said Province, shall take upon him the administration of the Government, and execute our said commission and instructions, and the several powers and authorities therein contained, in the same manner and to all intents and purposes, as other our Governor or Commander-in-chief should or ought to do, in case of your absence, or until your return, or in all cases until our further pleasure be known.

And we do hereby declare, ordain, and appoint, that you, the said James Murray, shall and may hold, execute, and enjoy the office and place of our Captain General and Governor-in-chief, in and over our said Province of Quebec, and all the territories dependant thereon, with all and singular the powers and authorities hereby granted unto you, for and during our will and pleasure.

In witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patent.

Witness ourself at Westminster, the twenty-first day of November, in the fourth year of our reign.

By writ of Privy Seal.

(Signed) YORKE & YORKE.

The Order of the Day, for the second reading of the Bill, being read,

Mr. T. Townshend said, the very deplorable situation of the Canadians ever since the late peace, has been a matter, I confess, which has repeatedly engaged my attention. Without law, without regulation, or any protection whatever, I must own, I often pressed that they should be put under some form of Government, or left to themselves, to choose a mode of regulation suited to their immediate wants; but little did I think that my solicitude was pressing on to a measure of so extraordinary a nature as the present; little did I think, that a country as large as half Europe, and within the Dominions of the Crown of Great Britain, was going to have the Romish religion established in it, as the religion of the State.

Little did I think, that so many thousand men, entitled and born to the rights of Englishmen, settling on the faith of the King's proclamation, should, contrary to that assistance, contrary to every idea of the constitution, be subjected to French Papists, and French laws. Little did I think, that when the noble Lord opposite me was frequently applied to, session after session, in this House, to restore order and regulation, in a country where nothing for full twelve years had prevailed but anarchy and confusion; and that his Lordship assured us, that the Crown Officers in that country, the Crown Officers over the way (Solicitor and Attorney General,) the sages learned in the law, the first great law officer under the Crown in the other House, nay, even the Lord President of the Council, had been consulted, and had turned their closest attention to this subject; little did I think, I say, that any measure like the present could have been the united result of so many great, wise, grave, and learned men. Standing as I do, and astonished as I am, I call upon the noble Lord to answer and tell to which of those sages does the nation, do the Canadians, stand indebted for this extraordinary act of legislation. Is it to the Lord President, to the first law officer in the other House? Is it to the very able and learned gentleman over the way? or to his Majesty's law servants in Canada? But let it have originated where it might, I rise not only to condemn the several clauses, but the very principle of the Bill, and shall be therefore against its being read a second time.

The Bill establishes a despotic Government in that country, to which the Royal Proclamation of 1763 promised the protection of the laws of England. I call it despotic; for so in fact it is, as the Council of Seventeen or Twenty-three is, with the Governor, the legislative authority of the Province. This Council the Governor can appoint, suspend, and turn out, at his pleasure: there is no quorum appointed; for what purpose omitted, no one can tell. Now, Sir, this is rendering the Governor securely absolute; you had much better have -made b ira literally so, and then he would not have had a Council to screen him: he is responsible in England, if he acts tyrannically; but by means of this convenient Legislative Council, he can do any thing with impunity.

Well, Sir, not content with constituting this Legislative Council, the mere creature of a Governor, who must necessarily be the creature of a Minister, you go farther, and throw under this absolute power a country never considered as Canada, and peopled by British subjects alone; for you extend the Government to the Mississippi on the West, to the Ohio on the South, to Hudson's Bay on the North, and on the East, to God knows where; for no mortal can tell from the Bill where the Eastern boundaries are, so exceedingly indefinite and unintelligible is the Bill. I should be glad to know for what purpose the Colony is thus amazingly extended.

In the next place, Sir, the internal arrangement of the Colony consists in leaving the inhabitants the civil law of France. You take away the trial by Jury, in civil matters, and you cut off the habeas corpus from them. Thus, in giving a Government to the Canadians, you deprive many British born subjects, residing in countries where they never dreamed of such innovations, of the dearest birth-rights of Britains. And as by this Act all commissions to the legal Magistrates are revoked, I suppose the Province is to change her present excellent Chief Justice for a new one to be appointed. It is for these reasons, Sir, and for others, which I am clear will suggest themselves to all the members of the House, that I shall give my hearty negative to the Bill.

Lord North. The honorable gentleman has put a string of questions to me, which I am in no way able, nor, if I were, should I look upon myself bound to answer. I know not who drew the Bill up. I know not whether it was this great Lawyer, or that noble Lord. All I know about the matter is, that it is a Bill from the other House offered to us for consideration, and on which the House is at liberty to form that opinion best suited to its wisdom and judgment. I know further, that very great and uncommon pains have been taken to form a Bill least liable to inconvenience or objection from any quarter. The honorable gentleman has often pressed the King's servants on this subject, and now owns that the affairs of that country call loudly for regulation and redress; yet the very first attempt that is made to put them on a proper footing, he at once condemns in the gross, and is willing to continue the evils he complains of, rather than attempt their correction in the first instance. For my part, all circumstances considered, I think the Bill is the best that can at present be devised; other gentlemen, may think otherwise; but at all events it seems to me proper that it should be permitted to go to a Committee; and if it shall then appear to be the sense of the House, that the Bill should pass in its present form, that it should receive amendments, or that particular clauses should be struck out, and others substituted in their stead; or, in fine, that it should be totally rejected; in any or either of these events, I shall be perfectly satisfied.

I wish to give the right honorable member all the satisfaction in my power upon this measure. Respecting the Government given to the Province, the right honorable gentleman objects, I suppose, to an Assembly not being appointed. The reason why a Council alone, appointed by the Governor, was preferred, was the small number of English settlers who must choose that Assembly, in order for their acts to govern and bind all the French and Roman Catholic subjects. This, Sir, was thought to be very unequal, and even cruel, to have an Assembly, chosen by so small a body, govern so large a one; and if the business is considered maturely, it will, I believe, be found the most conducive to the happiness of the People. Next, Sir, as to the extent given to this Colony; it takes in no countries regularly planted by British settlers, but merely distant military posts, at present without any Government but that of the respective commanding officers. Now, the question here is merely this, will you annex them under the present Government? Will you leave them without any Government? Or will you form separate Governments and Colonies of them?

It was thought by the Lords, that the plan in which there were the fewest inconveniences, was to throw the scattered posts to the Government of Quebec. As to the civil law of France being left to the Canadians, it was thought more humane to them than to change it for a new law, of which they must be entirely ignorant, as the trial by Jury, in criminal matters is given them. The present officers in the Province were not meant to be changed, most certainly,

Mr. Dunning. I cannot omit this opportunity of giving my hearty protest against a Bill, which, in my conscience, I think destructive of every principle of freedom, and abounding with mischief of a most serious tendency. Sir, I shall beg leave to follow the noble Lord in the reply he has given to the honorable member who stated his objections to the Bill; a reply which by no means answers those objections; on the contrary, they appear to me to remain in full force. And in endeavouring to do this, I shall divide what I have to observe into two considerations: first, the consequences which will attend this Bill if it passes, in case Canada should ever be restored to France, an idea which by no means hurts me; for if it should pass, I must own I would as soon see the one Sovereign reigning there as the other; I mean, it will be of little consequence to the People, and they will be as free in one case as in the other. My second consideration will be; if the Province should remain to England.

Consider what it was for which you engaged in the last war, encroachments of the French upon our Colonies; they passed down their rivers, they seized upon large tracts, and built forts about this very country to the southward of Canada, claiming it as a part of Canada. You repelled force by force; they offered to you to withdraw from the South of the Ohio; and retire to the North, making that river the boundary of the two Colonies. No, you replied; the river of St. Lawrence is the boundary of Canada; we will admit of no other; the tracts which you claim are parts of our Colonies of Virginia, Pennsylvania, &c., and we cannot grant away the certain and undoubted rights of our subjects in such a manner. This refusal brought on the war; and in case a future war should happen, in which your arms do not succeed in the manner they did in the last war, you may then find yourself treating upon the re-cession of Canada to France; will not the French demand the cession of Canada as you limit it by Act of Parliament? Will they not say, you have, by a solemn act of your whole Legislature, proved to all the world, that in the dispute of limits at the opening of the war we were right, and you wrong; you have chalked out the very limits to it, which we insisted on; and you have confirmed them by an act of Parliament; how therefore can you, with any propriety, talk of restoring any thing less than what we always claimed as Canada, and what you have since solemnly adjudged to be Canada? And this, I think, in a negotiation, may be attended with most serious consequences.

Next Sir, supposing you preserve the possession of it, let us consider the consequences that flow from this Act; you throw at once the whole People of that Colony into an arbitrary power, for such is that of your Governor, as it has been well stated; and you not only do this to the Canadian subjects, but, by giving to the new Province this monstrous southern extent, you run it down upon the back of the planted part of many of our Colonies, and take away, by one stroke, the charter properties confirmed by act of Parliament of those Colonies, you violently seize their rights, and the People who pass the mountains to settle on the eastern side of them, will immediately find, that by going to live in what they ever esteemed their direct property, they find themselves gone from the freedom of the British constitution, and meet with all the power of despotism. This is not only a cruel, violent, and odious measure, but it tears up justice, and all its principles, by the root. To think that the inhabitants of those countries, settling in them under the protection of this free Government, and assured by law and Parliament that they settle under the liberty of their old charter constitutions, finding themselves, by crossing an imaginary line, deprived of the dearest rights and privileges of English subjects, is a most tyrannical and inhuman conduct. It is sporting with property in a manner that cannot be defended, and for attaining no end whatever that deserves attention.

But there are much greater and more solid objections to the present Bill, than can possibly arise from the limits within which it is intended to operate. I am well warranted in affirming, and do without reserve affirm, that it is a Bill the most pernicious in its frame, and destructive of the principles of the constitution in its tendency, that was ever introduced into this House. What does it do? It appoints a Legislative Council, under the absolute controul and dominion of the Governor; that Governor equally dependant on those in power here; that Council to be composed of Papists and Frenchmen; and this is the Government and the mode of legislation which British subjects and Englishmen are bound implicitly to obey. But what are they to have in return? Oh! The criminal law of England is to be retained; that is, when they grossly offend against the laws of society, they are entitled to the superior lenity of those criminal laws; but when they do not offend, but demean themselves peaceably, or are in the fair and honest prosecution of their rights and properties, both one and the other are to be determined on, not by the fair and equitable laws of England, but by constitutions they cannot be supposed, nor ever will be able to understand. Suppose those laws were as intelligible as they are otherwise, would it not add to the misery of an Englishman, that he perfectly understood the full meaning and extent of a lettre de cachet? Is not this part of the constitutions of Paris, on which the laws of Canada are framed? It may be objected, that being within the territorial jurisdiction, no such thing can possibly happen; but I contend for the contrary, as letters of this kind are issued upon a thousand occasions, in which no crimes are imputed to the person arrested and confined; motives of prudence, motives of convenience, or family regulation, &c., frequently give birth to steps of this nature. On the whole, if any thing were wanting to give me the worst opinion of this Bill, the trial by Jury in civil cases, and the habeas corpus law being omitted, would be motive strong enough with me to give it my strongest negative.

Mr. Attorney General Thurlow. Respecting the ill consequences that may flow from enlarging the Province of Quebec, in case of being forced by a future war to restore it, I cannot see that in the same light as my learned friend; because I think that the limits and importance of cessions are never dependant upon such arrangements as these, but upon the length of the sword; it is success in war that gives success in peace, and by no means the imaginary lines drawn by a State in its Colonies; nor have the limits now drawn any thing to do with old Canada; they take in countries never claimed by France; it is a new scheme, and by no means the restoration of those old limits the French once contended for.

With regard to the supposed cruelty of not giving the Canadians the same laws in every instance as we enjoy in England, I am so far from bring of the same opinion, that I think you could not act more cruelly to that People, than to change at once their law of property, and give them our trial by Jury, which is necessarily giving our law of actions. I am clear it would so completely confound them, as to be more tyrannical than can be easily imagined. They would not understand the rule of their own actions; they would not know on what principles they stood possessed of their own property. In a word, you would give them the greatest curse, under the notions of a blessing. There is not a circumstance dearer to a man, nor one which he ought to be more jealous of, than to be tried in all points by laws to which he has been used, and whose principles are known to him.

He condemned in very harsh terms the advisers of the proclamation, and the imperfect, improper manner in which it was drawn up. He denied however, that it contained any such assurance as that contended for by the gentlemen on the other side. He said, that no such encouragement should have been given; that it was impolitic to hold out any benefits to the natural born subjects of this country to emigrate thither from hence, or to go from the other Colonies; that to form settlements in North America, far distant from the sea, or from the neighbourhood of the great navigable rivers, was extremely improper; that as to the establishment of the French laws, relative to property, being not so proper as those of England, he was astonished to hear any gentleman object to them, as it would be in the last degree cruel and unjust to force the laws of the conquerors on the conquered; that the uniform custom of all great and conquering nations had been against it; and, that therefore taking the present Bill as applying to French or English, it was perfectly right the former should receive every possible encouragement, to become good subjects, and the latter meet with every possible obstruction from settling in that Province.

Colonel Barré said, that the Bill was every way complete; that its clauses perfectly corresponded with its principle; and that taking them unitedly, they were the most flagrant attack on the constitution that had hitherto been attempted. He next stated the probable number of English settlers and inhabitants; the situation of the Province at the time of the conquest; explained the terms of the Definitive Treaty of Peace; the King's Proclamation in October, 1763; and demonstrated how repugnant they were to the design and provisions of the present Bill. He entered pretty fully into several points before spoke to, particularly relative to the French laws; and finished with observing - I cannot agree that there is any thing in the laws of England, in the trial by Jury, and the habeas corpus, that the Canadians would not very easily understand; and it is preposterous to suppose, that the superiority of good and just law, and freedom, should not be felt by People. because they had been used to arbitrary power. But why is the religion of France, as well as the law of France, to become the religion of all those People not Canadians, that pass out of one Colony into another? By this Act you establish the Roman Catholic religion where it never was established before, and you only permit the practice of your own; you do not so much as let them go hand in hand. For what purpose is the Illinois and the Ohio to be Roman Catholics? Why is that to be made the established religion of that vast country, in which are very many English settlers?

Lord John Cavendish objected to many of the principles laid down by Mr. Attorney. He said he did not contend for the total introduction of the English laws, particularly on a sudden, but that by blending them with their own, they might gradually conciliate the Canadians to them, and in the end be able to conquer all their present prejudices, so as to lead to the final establishment of the laws of this country. He added, that whatever compromise of this kind might be entered into on the present occasion, he could perceive no possible good reason, for withholding from them, the extension of the Habeas Corpus Act, and the trial by Jury.

Mr. Sergeant Glynn controverted most of the positions laid down by the Attorney General, particularly relative to the true construction of the Definitive Treaty, his Majesty's Proclamation, and the propriety of allowing the conquered to retain their own laws. He observed, that whatever contrary opinion might be maintained, it was his, that all conquests, as soon as made, vested in the King, Lords, and Commons; but that, until the two latter interfered, the King, as actual representative of the whole, was justified making such regulations as he might think proper, so that they were not actually repugnant to the laws or constitution. The latter not being the case of the Proclamation, he thought the nation in every respect bound to fulfil every thing promised by that solemn engagement. He instanced likewise the cases of Wales and Ireland, as conquered countries, where our laws had been established; and enlarged, in a very able manner on the many important and salutary effects that had arisen from our extending them to those countries.

Mr. Solicitor General denied the fact as stated by the learned Sergeant; insisted, that it was not till the reign of Henry the Eighth, that they were introduced into Wales, nor until that of James the First, that they, obtained in Ireland. He said, that among all the great or powerful nations we had an account of, the Romans and English were the only two who forced their laws on the conquered; that it was a most cruel and barbarous policy, and that the English laws, how much soever we might prize them, would be the greatest curse imaginable to the Canadians.

Mr. Charles Fox objected to the Bill, as being contrary to the established usage of Parliament. He said a provision was made in it for securing the tithes to the Romish clergy; that this was raising money on the subject, and that consequently its originating in the other House, was not only irregular and informal, but directly repugnant to the custom and law of Parliament.

Mr. Dempster said, the impropriety of the Bill struck him, for it certainly was a Bill either to take away or impose a tax, and therefore should have originated in the Commons, but he should be glad of the Speaker's opinion.

Mr. Sawbridge rose, saying, he found the Speaker was unwilling to rise, but that he should not ask his opinion as a favour, but as a part of his duty, and, if the honorable gentleman (Mr. Dempster) was willing, he would make it a question, whether the Speaker should give his opinion or not?

The Speaker rose, seemingly very angry, and said, he was not used to be called on in that manner, and that he did not think it his business to give any opinion on the affair.

A strong debate ensued, in which Mr. Charles Fox, Mr. Dempster, Mr. T. Townshend, Mr. Dunning, Sergeant Glynn, and Sir George Savile, strongly contended, that the Bill was, to all intents and purposes, either a Bill to impose a tax, or to repeal a part of a tax, and therefore it was against a standing order, concerning the privileges of all money bills, originating in that House, Lord North, and the Attorney and Solicitor Generals, defended the Bill.

The question was then put, That the Bill be now read a second time;

The House divided; Yeas, 105; Nays, 29.

So it was resolved in the Affirmative: and the Bill was accordingly read a second time.

Resolved, That the Bill be committed to a Committee of the whole House.

Resolved, That the House will, upon Tuesday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, upon the said Bill.

TUESDAY, May 31, 1774.

Mr. Baker presented a Petition of Thomas Penn, Esquire, on behalf of himself, and of John Penn, Esquire, true and absolute Proprietaries of the Province of Pennsylvania, and the three lower Counties of New Castle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware, in America, setting forth, that his late Majesty King Charles the Second, by letters patent under the great seal, bearing date the fourth day of March, in the three and thirtieth year of his reign, was graciously pleased to grant unto William Penn, Esq., (late father of the Petitioner, Thomas Penn, and grandfather of the Petitioner, John Penn,) in fee, the said Province of Pennsylvania; the extent and bounds whereof were expressed in the said letters patent; and taking notice of the Bill for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec; in North America; and alleging that, from the best observations which have been made, and the most correct maps which have been laid down of those parts, and from other evidence, it appears, that the river Ohio, intersects a very large tract of the Northwestern Western, and Southwestern parts of the said Province, as granted by the said letters patent, the limits or boundaries whereof, in that part, have not, as yet, been allowed and confirmed by the Crown; and that, in order to have the limits and boundaries of the said Province ascertained, the Petitioners did, on the 27th day of March, 1773, present a petition to his Majesty, in Council, praying that his Majesty would be graciously pleased to appoint such disinterested persons in those parts, as his Majesty should think proper, to join with such persons as should be named by the Petitioners, to mark out and ascertain the Northern, Western, and Southwestern boundaries of the said Province; which petition has been referred, by his Majesty, to the consideration of the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, and is now under consideration of that Board; and that the Petitioners conceive that the said Bill will be injurious to them, if it should pass into a law, without containing some provision, that the same may not affect the Petitioners rights under the said letters patent: and therefore praying, that the description of the Territories, Islands, and Countries, to be annexed to the said Province of Quebec, may be so confined, as not to affect the Petitioners said Province; or that a provision may be made in the said Bill, that the same shall not affect the Petitioners Province, granted to them by the said letters patent: and that the Petitioners may be at liberty to be heard, by their Counsel, upon the matter of their Petition.

Upon the Petition being read, Lord North rose and said, that he should not think of opposing it, as it was never the intention of the Bill to affect the just rights of any proprietors, or of any of the Colonies.

Ordered, That the said Petition do lie upon the table, until the Report be received from the Committee of the whole House, to whom the said Bill is committed; and that the Petitioners be then heard, by their Counsel, upon their petition, if they think fit.

Mr. Mackworth. The Petition which I have in my hand, is from the merchants of London, trading to Quebec, who finding that a Bill is about to pass this House, which they apprehend will essentially injure them in their commercial transactions with that Colony, rely on the justice and the candour of this House to take their case into consideration. As to the merit, Sir, of the Bill, which is now coming before us, I must make this general observation, that a Bill which has confessedly taken nine years for Administration to consider of effectual means to remedy the evils complained of; such a Bill, Sir, surely will demand more time than a few days for the members of this House, to judge in what manner to give their vote. Information is what we want. I know not what opinion I am to form upon the necessity which can call for such a Bill, and for want of that information which ought now to be before the House. I cannot but condemn most sincerely several arrangements in the Bill, which seem destructive of that liberty which ought to be the ground-work of every constitution formed by this House; but I cannot judge what are the causes which call for such measures, while I remain so uninformed as at present. There were reports from the Board of Trade, to the King in Council, upon the state of the Province; there were representations from men in the highest offices in the Provinces, upon the proposed constitution to be given to it; there were opinions in writing from the Attorney and Solicitor General, upon the plans proposed; these papers would, if laid before us, give that information which we want, and without which it will be impossible for us to give any other than blind votes, which will, from every thing that we can at present see in the Bill, establish a most fatal system of Government in that country.

Mr. Mackworth then presented a Petition of the several merchants of the City of London, trading to the Province of Quebec, in North America, whose respective names are thereunto written, setting forth, that there is a clause in the said Bill, by which his Majesty's Royal Proclamation, and the grants and commissions issued in consequence thereof, will be revoked and made void; and that by another clause in the said Bill, all matters of controversy, relative to the property and civil rights of any of his Majesty's subjects Of the said Province, are to be decided by the laws of Canada, and by the Judges presiding in the courts of judicature of that Province, without the interposition of a Jury; and representing to the House, that the system of government and administration of justice in the said Province of Quebec, which have taken place in consequence of his Majesty's said Royal Proclamation, have been hitherto, as nearly as might be; according to the laws of England, and such government and administration of justice have been perfectly satisfactory to his Majesty's subjects residing in the said Province of Canada; and the Petitioners conceive it will be highly injurious to his Majesty's said subjects trading to the said Province, to have the laws of Canada substituted in the place of the laws of England, and to have the trial by Jury abolished: and therefore praying (in behalf of themselves and others interested in the prosperity of the said Province) that the said Bill may not pass into a law, with the above-mentioned clauses remaining in it; and that they may be heard, by their Counsel, against the same.

Ordered, That the said Petition be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the whole House, to whom the said Bill is committed; and that the Petitioners be heard, by themselves or Counsel, before the said Committee, upon their petition, if they think fit.

A motion was made, by Mr. Mackworth, that an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, that he will be graciously pleased to give directions, that there be laid before this House:

Copy of a Report made by Major General Carleton, Governor of the Province of Quebec, to his Majesty, relative to the state of the Province.

Copy of a Report made by William Hey, Esquire, Chief Justice of the said Province.

Copy of a Report made by Francis Maseres, Esquire, late Attorney General of the said Province; and Copies of the Reports of his Majesty's Advocate General, Attorney General, and Solicitor General, relating to the said Province.

Lord North I shall oppose the calling for those papers; they will take some time in copying; there have been several reports from the Board of Trade, which are long, and if we wait for addressing the Crown to lay them before us, the season will be delayed too late, and for no purpose, as we may have the same information at our bar. The Governor of the Province I see at the bottom of the House, who may be ordered to attend when you go into the Committee; Mr. Hey, who is Chief Justice, is near Canterbury, and may be ordered up; and Mr. Maseres, who was Attorney General of that Province, is also in London; as to the Attorney and Solicitor General, we have them among us; therefore I do not see but we may have just as good information in this manner, and much more expeditiously, than by addressing for the papers.

Mr. T. Townshend. As this is not the proper time for going into the principle of the Bill, I shall confine myself to the absurdity, to say no more of it, of bringing in a Bill of such magnitude and importance so late in the session, without previously laying upon the table the necessary information; at present we have none; and if the noble Lord means that we should know the subject upon which we are to debate, he certainly will not object to giving us that information, without which we cannot proceed with propriety. Let us, in the name of common sense, see what are the complaints of the Canadians against their present Government, what are their distresses; what their desires; and let us see the opinions of the great law officers which have been given upon this point.

Colonel Barré. I think there will be very little difficulty in shewing, that the proposition now made by the noble Lord will be very far from answering the purpose of those who wish for full information on this subject. The papers we now call for would give us that information; those papers are drawn up coolly, attentively, and upon long and mature consideration; and they have been drawn up at leisure by men of great character and abilities. Now, Sir, the noble Lord will not, he cannot assert, with any appearance of justice, that calling those men to your bar, to be questioned in the desultory manner common upon those occasions, and in the midst of the contention between those who patronise the Bill, and others who condemn it - will he tell us that this is such information as we should receive from the papers referred to? It is impossible. As to the two great law officers who are present, I admit that their standing in their places, and reciting the opinions they gave would be satisfactory; but then they ought simply to inform us what those opinions were, and not to enter into the debate on the merit of the Bill at the same time, or, by a side wind, to warp information concerning a past fact into an opinion of a debate in question. That satisfaction should be made the House on these points nobody can doubt; for to tell us that we cannot have information for want of time to copy papers, is to tell us plainly that we are to proceed in the dark; it is and will be a deed of despotism, and therefore may well be linked with darkness. I wish it to be the deed of a single hand; it is a proper exertion of arbitrary power, in which the less concern Parliament has, the better. Intelligence must be kept from us because it will not bear the light; if it was openly and fairly laid before you, it would condemn in the strongest and clearest manner the principles and the provisions of this Bill, all of which it would be found are equally unnecessary and pernicious.

Mr. Attorney General. My opinion, and that of my learned colleague, were in writing, and lodged among our State papers; nor have we any right to read them in our places as servants of the Crown. No person, without his Majesty's consent, has a right to them.

Mr. Edmund Burke. I am very sorry to find from the turn which the debate takes on the other side of the House that we are to have no satisfaction relative to the information which every man of common sense must think necessary on this occasion: this is a fresh reason for condemning the Bill, since if Administration thought their conduct in this Bill would hear the light, they would give you light to view it in, and rejoice in the opportunity of giving such a proof of their abilities and moderation. For what purpose is it that you would precipitate this affair? You have been nine years considering, weighing maturely, and reflecting perpetually upon what Government should be given to this Province: what harm can arise from a delay of a single year? What prodigious mischief is to result from the Government of the Province continuing one year more in the present situation?

And the question being put, the House divided: Yeas, 45; Nays, 85.

So it passed in the Negative.

Resolved, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, that he will be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House:

The last Report from the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, to his Majesty, in Council, relative to the Constitution of the Province of Quebec; and

The Reports from the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, to his Majesty, in Council, dated the 11th of January, and 3d of September, 1765, relating to the said Province.

Ordered, That Francis Maseres, Esquire, late Attorney General of the Province of Quebec, do this day attend the Committee of the whole House, to whom the engrossed Bill from the Lords, intituled, "An Act for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America," is committed.

Ordered, That Major General Carleton, Governor of the said Province, do attend the said Committee, at the same time.

Ordered, That William Hey, Esquire, Chief Justice of the said Province, do attend this House upon Thursday morning next.

Ordered, That Doctor James Marriott, his Majesty's Advocate General, do attend this House upon Thursday morning next.

The Order of the Day being read;

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the whole House, upon the Bill.

Mr. Mansfield, counsel for the Merchants of London, petitioners against the Bill, was called in, who, after a long speech, setting forth the dangerous tendency of the Bill, desired leave to call in Edward Watts.

He being accordingly called in, was asked a number of questions by Lord Barrington, Lord North, Lord Clare, Lord Carmarthen, Colonel Barré, Capt. Phipps, Mr. W. Burke, Mr. Mackworth, Gov. Johnstone, Mr. Hopkins, &c.. as to the French and English laws in Canada, and to which the inhabitants gave the preference.

After he withdrew, Mr. Samuel Morin was called in.

They both spoke in favour of the English laws being exercised in Canada, and mentioned that the English residents there highly approved of the trial by Jury, and seemed to think that an annihilation of that right would greatly hurt the Colony. The former of the witnesses had been nine years resident in Canada, the latter eleven.

The Committee then rose, reported progress, and asked leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Thursday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to consider further of the said Bill.

Ordered, That the several persons, who were ordered to attend the said Committee this day, do attend the said Committee upon Thursday morning next.

WEDNESDAY, June 1, 1774.

The Lord North presented to the House, pursuant to their Addresses to his Majesty:

Copy of a Representation of the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, to the Lords of the Committee of Council for Plantation Affairs, dated Whitehall, 2d September, 1765.

Copy of a Representation of the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, to the Lords of the Committee of Council for Plantation Affairs, dated Whitehall, July 10th, 1769.

Copy of a Representation of the Board of Trade, to the King, dated January 9th, 1765, on affairs of the Province of Quebec.

The Lord North also presented to the House, by his Majesty's command:

Copy of a Memorial of the new subjects of Quebec, to his Majesty.

Copy of a Memorial of Canadian subjects, to the King.

Copy of a Memorial of the citizens and Burgesses of Montreal, to the King.

Copy of a Memorial of the principal citizens of Quebec.

Memorial of the principal French inhabitants of Canada, in support of their Petition to the King.

And the titles of the said Papers were read:

Ordered, that the said Papers be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the whole House, on the Bill.

THURSDAY, June 2, 1774.

The Lord North presented to the House, by his Majesty's command:

A paper intituled, "Petition from the new Inhabitants of Quebec, to his Majesty."

Ordered, That the said Paper be referred to the consideration of the Committee of the whole House, on the Bill.

the Order of the Day being read, the House resolved itself into a Committee of Whole, upon the Bill.

General Carleton was called in and examined.

Mr. Mackworth. What was the proceedings and course of justice in Canada, when you first went there?

General Carleton. There is a Court of King's Bench and Court of Common Pleas, in which the proceedings are in the English form.

Mr. Mackworth. Did the Canadians express a dislike to the distribution of justice in that form?

General Carleton. In some things they did, in others they did not. I never heard them express a disapprobation of the criminal law of England; but in relation to the law in Civil trials, they have disapproved it greatly.

Mr. Mackworth. Did they disapprove the trial by Jury?

General Carleton. Very much; they have often said to me, that they thought it very extraordinary that English gentlemen should think their property safer in the determination of tailors, shoe-makers, mixed with people in trade, than in that of the judges.

Mr. T. Townshend. But if they had juries such as they approved of, would they then object to the English civil law?

General Carleton. Their objections to that law are very numerous; they do not know what it is; and they expressed great apprehensions at being governed by a law of which they were ignorant: they also complained of the proceedings of the Courts being in a language they did not understand.

Lord North. Did the General hear them complain of the want of the trial by Jury in civil causes?

General Carleton. Never. Though I have heard the same men praise the English law in points wherein it favoured their own causes, who at other times were much against it.

Lord North. Did they express wishes of having an Assembly?

General Carleton. Very much the contrary. In the conversation I have had with them, they have all said that when they found what disputes the other Colonies had with the Crown, upon account of Assemblies, they would much rather be without them; and when they supposed that an Assembly, if they had one, would be chosen from the old British subjects only, expressed an horror at the idea of one.

Lord North. Does the General know the proportion of old subjects to those of new ones in Canada?

General Carleton. The Protestants in Canada are under four hundred; about three hundred and sixty; but the French inhabitants, who are all Catholics, amount to one hundred and fifty thousand.

Lord North. Are those three hundred and sixty, men of substance?

General Carteton. Much the greatest part of them are not. There are some that have purchased seignories, some in trade, and some reduced soldiers: but the majority are men of small substance.

Mr. Jenkinson. Is there much intercourse or communication between those three hundred and sixty and the rest of the Province?

General Carleton. Very little.

Lord North. Are those People, upon the whole, proper and eligible for an Assembly to be chosen from them?

General Carleton. I should apprehend by no means.

Mr. Phipps. What is the extent of the cultivated and populous part of Canada?

General Carleton. About three hundred miles.

Mr. Phipps. Are there any populous settlements detached from that line, at a distance?

General Carleton. None of consequence.

Mr. Phipps. Is the cultivation of the lands and the trade of the Province much increased since the conquest?

General Carleton. Very much.

Lord North. Does General Carleton attribute that increase to the introducing of the trial by Jury, and the English law?

General Carleton. By no means.

Mr. T. Townshend. To what then does the General attribute it?

General Carleton. To the change from a state of war to one of peace; the Government was before extremely military; and military expeditions ever going on to a distance, great numbers of men lost, population hurt, and the People taken from the culture of the earth for those purposes. This change (for they have now enjoyed above ten years peace, with none of the inhabitants taken for the military) has wrought the increase of People.

Mr. Turner. Has not the increase of trade and wealth been much owing to the free export of corn?

General Carleton. I take it to be owing to the increase of People.

Mr. Turner. Was not the increase of cultivation owing to the export?

General Carleton. The cultivation I attribute to the increase of People. There must be the People before there could be the cultivation.

Lord North. Does the General know any thing of a Monsieur Le Brun?

General Carleton. I know him very well. He was a blackguard at Paris, and sent as a lawyer to Canada: there he gained an extreme bad character in many respects; he was taken up and imprisoned for a very filthy crime with children of eight or nine years old; for this he was fined, I think, twenty pounds, but being unable to pay it-

Mr. T. Townshend. I desire the General may withdraw. [He withdrew.] Sir, I know not what use is to be made of this part of the evidence; but sure I am, it is a most unprecedented thing, and such an one, as an independent member of Parliament, I cannot see and hear without interrupting it; - you are criminating a man unheard - not before you - and with whom you seem to have nothing to do.

Lord North. This Monsieur Le Brun has come over from Canada to make representations that it is the general opinion, desire, and wish of the Canadians, to have an Assembly: I thought it right to know how likely he was to know the opinion of that country; and what degree of dependance could be placed in his testimony - but I shall ask no more questions concerning him.

[The General called in again.]

Mr. Phipps. Were there any other objections to the English law than what the General has mentioned?

General Carleton. I recollect an instance against the criminal law. Some Canadian and English gentlemen were apprehended for a crime, and laid in goal; - the whole Province supposed them innocent, and the Jury found them so; the nobility complained, that by our law they were punished by a severe imprisonment, which, in the French law, they would have escaped. This made a great impression upon them, and prejudiced them very much against even our criminal law.

Mr. Maseres called in and examined.

Mr. Solicitor General: What form of Government have the Canadians expressed themselves most desirous of?

Mr. Maseres, They have no clear notions of Government, having never been used to any such speculations. They will be content with any you give them, provided it be well administered.

Mr. Mackworth. Have they expressed any dissatisfaction at the trial by Jury in criminal matters?

Mr. Maseres. They like it very well.

Mr. T. Townshend. Do you know that they have any objection to the same trial in civil cases?

Mr. Maseres. Certainly they have; but they principally consist in the expense and trouble of that attendance. Were they allowed a compensation, I should apprehend they would be well satisfied in all cases; and I think so small a sum as five shillings a man would do for that purpose.

Mr. Solicitor General. Does Mr. Maseres think that they would be pleased with the abolition of their old customs by the introduction of our civil law?

Mr. Maseres. A total abolition of their customs relative to descents, dower, and the transfer of land, would be highly offensive to them. In other matters I believe they would be very well satisfied with the English laws.

Mr. Mackworth. Would they have any objection to the law of habeas corpus?

Mr. Maseres. It is impossible that any People should object to that law.

Mr. T. Townshend. Did not the Canadians think themselves promised, by the Proclamation, the benefit of an Assembly, and do they not now desire to have it?

Mr. Maseres. As to an Assembly, they have a very confused idea of what it is; the generality of the People have no desire to have it, for they know not what it is; but there are a few among them who have considered the matter, and they would prefer an Assembly.

Mr. Mackworth. Does Mr. Maseres think that the provisions of this Bill for the Government of Canada are the freest that could with propriety be granted?

Mr. Maseres. Certainly not; I have sufficiently explained to the world how I think there might have been a judicious mixture of a law for the free Government of that Province.

Mr. Dunning. Is Mr. Maseres acquainted with the laws of Canada?

Mr. Maseres. I have some slight knowledge of them.

Mr. Dunning. As by this Bill resort is to be had to the laws of Canada, and not the laws of England, in all matters of property and civil rights, I would ask Mr. Maseres, whether the Governor of the Province will not have a right by the laws of Canada, if this Bill should pass, to issue a lettre de cachet to imprison any of the King's subjects in the Province?

Mr. Maseres. I believe he would not have a right to imprison persons by lettres de cachet signed by himself; because I have always heard that no lettres de cachet are ever used for that purpose in France, or the French Dominions, but such as are signed by the French King himself. But I have also been told, that blank lettres de cachet, ready signed by the King, are sometimes given to Governors and Intendants of Provinces, to be used by them as occasion shall require.

Mr. Dunning. I desire then to know, whether if lettres de cachet, signed by the King, were to be delivered to the Governor of Canada, after this Bill shall be passed into a law, these lettres de cachet might not, in Mr. Maseres' opinion, be lawfully made use of by the Governor, to imprison the King's subjects in that Province?

Mr. Maseres. [After some pause.] I think they might.

Mr. Solicitor General. I desire to know of Mr. Maseres, upon what principle of the French law he supposes the authority of issuing lettres de cachet to be founded?

Mr. Maseres. I do not know. It seems probable, that it was at first an usurped authority. But it is now constantly practised, and acquiesced in throughout the French Dominions, and is therefore now understood to be the legal prerogative of the Crown of France, whatever might be its origin.

Mr. Solicitor General. Mr. Maseres does not rightly apprehend my question. I will explain myself. I want to know in what capacity the French King is supposed, by writers upon the French laws and Government, to act, when he issues a lettre de cachet?

Mr. Maseres. I do not yet thoroughly comprehend the question.

Mr. Solicitor General. I mean to ask whether Mr. Maseres does not understand the King of France to act in his legislative capacity, when he issues one of those letters?

Mr. Maseres. I have never yet considered the relation between a lettre de cachet and the legislative authority. It may perhaps be on that authority that the right of issuing those letters is grounded, or said to be grounded. I cannot say to the contrary. Yet there seems, at first sight, to be a considerable difference between a law and a lettre de cachet; since a law is generally understood to be a previous declaration of the will of the lawgiver, or lawgivers, whether one or many, upon a particular subject, with penalties annexed to the breach of it, when so previously declared; whereas a lettre de cachet is a sudden exercise of power without such a previous declaration of the will of the legislator.

Mr. Solicitor General. Though Mr. Maseres has not considered it in that light, yet it is certain, that the French King's power of issuing lettres de cachet is generally understood by the writers on the French laws and Government to be a part of his legislative authority, by which he provides for the sudden emergencies that occur in Government, as he does by the more formal kind of laws for the usual business of the State. And, consequently, as the King of Great Britain has not in himself alone the legislative authority over this Kingdom, and the other dominions of the Crown, but this authority belongs to the King and the two Houses of Parliament conjointly, this power of issuing lettres de cachet, in the Province of Quebec, which had formerly belonged to the French King, by reason of his being the sole legislator of that country, cannot, by this revival of the laws of Canada, accrue to the King of Great Britain, who is not the sole legislator of it, but only to the King and the two Houses of Parliament, who are so. I dare say Mr. Maseres must now see this matter in the same light that I do, and be convinced, that no lettres de cachet can legally be used in Canada, by virtue of this Act.

Mr. Maseres. This reasoning may perhaps be just. It is so new to me that I cannot undertake just at present to form a judgment of it. But though it should be just, and, in consequence of it, the use of lettres de cachet should not be legal, yet I cannot help thinking that, if they were used, the subjects against whom they were employed would be without any legal remedy against them; for if a motion was made on the behalf of a person imprisoned by one of them in the Court of King's Bench in the Province, for a writ of habeas corpus, or any other relief against such imprisonment, the Judges would probably think themselves bound to declare that, as this was a question concerning personal liberty, which is a civil right, and in all matters of property and civil rights they are directed, by this Act of Parliament, to have resort to the laws of Canada, and not to the laws of England, they could not award the writ of habeas corpus, or any other remedy prescribed by the English law, but could only use such methods for the relief of the prisoner as were used by the French Courts of Justice in the Province during the time of the French Government, for the relief of a person imprisoned by the Intendant or Governor, by a lettre de cachet, signed by the King of France. And such relief would, I imagine, be found to be none at all. Therefore, if it is intended that the King's subjects in Canada should have the benefit of the habeas Corpus Act, I apprehend it would be most advisable, in order to remove all doubts and difficulties upon the subject, to insert a short clause for that purpose in this Act.

Lord North. I desire to know of Mr. Maseres, whether he does not think it would be criminal in a Governor to make use of any such lettres de cachet, and in a Minister of State to advise the King to sign them; and whether they would not be punishable here in England for doing so?

Mr. Maseres. If the lettres de cachet should not be in themselves illegal, I do not see how the Governor could be punished in the courts of law for making use of them, nor the Ministers of State for advising the King to sign them. The use of legal powers is in general no crime. Indeed if legal powers are employed to bad purposes, there is one method of proceeding against the persons concerned in such abuse of them, and but one, and that is by impeachment by this House, before the House of Lords. But this is an operose way of proceeding, and out of the common course of things. So that if the issuing lettres de cachet should not be absolutely illegal when this Bill shall be passed into an Act (and I am still inclined to think they will not be so,) the poor objects of them may linger a long time in prison, indeed one may say indefinitely, without any legal method of redress; therefore a short clause to establish the Habeas Corpus Act in the Province seems to be highly expedient.

Lord North. I would ask the witness one question more before I sit down. Does he think it probable that, if this Bill should pass into a law, such lettres de cachet would be made use of?

Mr. Maseres. I do not think it probable that they would be used.

Mr. Hey, Chief Justice, called in.

Mr. Mackworth. Does Mr. Hey think that the Canadians are well satisfied with the trial by Jury, in criminal matters?

Mr. Hey. They are well satisfied with it.

Mr. Mackworth. Would they not be also satisfied with the same trial in civil matters?

Mr. Hey. Under certain regulations they might: for instance, if the unanimity required in England was dispensed with, and a majority of two-thirds of a Jury of thirteen or fifteen was sufficient; and if they were allowed some compensation for the expense and trouble of attendance; also if the trial by that mode was optional in the parties; under these regulations, I apprehend, they would be very well satisfied with that mode of trial in civil as well as criminal cases. Half the year in Canada all business is stopped by the climate, which makes them much the busier the other half, and at that season they consequently find the attendance as jurymen a burden.

Mr. T. Townshend. Would they wish for and approve the other parts of the English law in civil matters?

Mr. Hey. They are very little acquainted with the English law, and from their ignorance of it, would be very much against its establishment. They are tenacious of their ancient laws and customs, and would esteem a total change a great injury to them.

Mr. Baker. Would they esteem the Habeas Corpus Act an injury?

Mr. Hey. I cannot imagine that any People would be so stupid as not to esteem it a benefit.

Mr. T. Townshend. Would not the Canadians think an Assembly also a great benefit?

Mr. Hey. Very far from it: they are too ignorant a People to understand the value of a free Government; they are exceedingly obedient: would obey the King's commands let it be what it may: if he ordered an Assembly to meet they would go, but they would not know what to do when they came there: the fact is, they are not capable of that Government: they do not expect it: it is contrary to all their ideas, to all their prejudices, to all their maxims: their idea of a House of Assembly is that of a House of riot and confusion, which meets only to impede public business, and to distress the Crown: all which is a system extremely contrary to the ideas and principles of the Canadians.

Mr. T. Townshend. Did Mr. Hey ever hear of a plan or representation of what Government would probably be successful in Canada?

Mr. Hey. There was a commission from his Majesty to Governor Carleton, the Attorney General, and myself, to draw up a report of that Government which would be most proper for Canada. In that deliberation I had the misfortune to differ in opinion from Governor Carleton; my ideas were, that the laws of Canada might be blended with those of England, so as to form a system perfectly adapted to the wants of the Canadians, and also to the principles of the polity of this country. I would have left the Canadians all their laws that in any degree concerned the transfer, possession, settlement, or mortgage of landed property. I would have secured them their religious toleration and security: but I proposed to give them the criminal law of England, and the civil law as far as it concerned the rights of moveable property, the modes of trial, &c. This was a mixture which I imagined would answer the purposes that were wanting.

Mr. Mackworth. Is Mr. Hey acquainted with the laws of Canada, by which, in matters of property, he must conduct himself in case this Bill passes.

Mr. Hey. Not as a system: only in the cases which have come before me from the Court of Common Pleas.

Mr. Baker. If this Bill passes, will there be any legal remedy for a man's being arbitrarily imprisoned?

Mr. Hey. That must depend very much on the constitution which his Majesty may be pleased to give to his Courts of Justice, which he is enabled to erect by this Bill. But if, as a Chief Justice, I knew of a man's imprisonment, I should be much induced, if I found no law for the purpose, to make one, to have the prisoner brought before me, that the cause of his Commitment might be known.

The Committee then reported to the House,

Resolved, That this House will, to-morrow morning, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to consider further of the said Bill.

Ordered, That Major General Carleton, Governor of the Province of Quebec, William Hey, Esquire, Chief Justice of the said Province, Doctor James Marriott, his Majesty's Advocate General, and M. De Lotbiniere, Esquire, do attend the said Committee at the same time.

FRIDAY, June 3, 1774.

The House being informed that the Sheriffs of the City of London attended at the door, they were called in; and, at the Bar, presented to the House,

A Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons, of the City of London, in Common Council assembled.

And then they withdrew.

And the said Petition was read;

To the Honorable the Commons of Great Britain, in Parliament assembled, the humble Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen,, and Commons, of the City of London, in Common Council assembled, sheweth:

That your Petitioners are deeply concerned, and much alarmed, to find there is now a Bill depending before this honorable House, intituled, "An Act making more effectual "provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America," which, in all civil cases, takes away the exercise of the English law, and that sacred part of it, the Trial by Jury, and substitutes in its stead the French law of Canada, whereby the freedom of the person, and security of the property of his Majesty's subjects, are rendered very precarious.

That if this Bill passes into a law, the Roman Catholic will be the only legal established religion, without any provision being made for the free exercise of the Protestant religion, which may prove greatly injurious and oppressive to his Majesty's Protestant subjects, who do now, or may hereafter reside in the said Province.

That the Legislative power is vested solely in persons appointed during pleasure, by the Crown, which is totally inconsistent with the liberty and principles of the English Constitution.

Your Petitioners therefore most humbly pray that the said Bill may not pass into a law.

Ordered, That the said Petition do lie upon the table.

The Order of the Day being read, the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, upon the Bill:

M. De Lotbiniere was called in, and examined in French.

Mr. T. Townshend. Are you of Canada?

M. De Lotbiniere. I am.

Mr. T. Townshend. Of the corps of nobility?

M. De Lotbiniere. Yes.

Mr. T. Townshend. Do you know if the Canadians are desirous of having an Assembly to represent them in the Government of the Province?

M. De Lotbiniere. They are very desirous of it.

Mr. T. Townshend. Why then have they not made representations to that purpose?

M. De Lotbiniere. Because they understand, that if they were gratified with an Assembly, they would in consequence have the expenses of the Government to support, which, in the present state of the Province, would be much more than they can support.

Lord North. Did M. De Lotbiniere ever hear any material objections to the establishment of a Legislative Council?

M. De Lotbiniere. I never heard it particularly debated, nor any objections.

Mr. T. Townshend. Does he think the Canadians are not desirous of a more free Government than a Governor, with a Council, the members of which are appointed, removed, and suspended by him?

M. De Lotbiniere. They would certainly desire a freer Government.

Lord Beauchamp. But if some of the noblesse were admitted into that Council, would they not then be well satisfied?

M. De Lotbiniere. They might then be satisfied.

Lord North. Would the noblesse be desirous of an Assembly in which the Bourgeois were admitted to sit in common with themselves?

M. De Lotbiniere. I do not apprehend they would object to that, if it was the King's pleasure so to have it.

Mr. T. Townshend. Have they been displeased with the English law?

M. De Lotbiniere. While the circumstances of, lands have been left to the Canadian laws, they like the English judicature very well.

Dr. Marriott, his Majesty's Advocate General, was called in.

Mr. Mackworth. I desire to know of the gentleman at the bar, what would be the best establishment of laws in the Province of Quebec, in his opinion?

Mr. Marriott. It is difficult to say upon any subject, in this world, what is best for any men or set of men of speculation: that which succeeds best in public and private life is best; and therefore I cannot tell what will be best for the Canadians.

Mr. Mackworth. Does he think that the Canadians would chuse the system of English law, or the French law?

Mr. Marriott. I do not know a single Canadian. I never was in Canada.

Mr. Mackworth. Does the gentleman think that the commerce of this country, and the Province, would be hurt by a revival of the French laws in cases of property?

Mr. Marriott. I cannot tell.

Mr. Mackworth. Does he know any thing of the state of Canada?

Mr. Marriott. What I know is from such papers as have been laid before me, by order of the King, in Council, and by information of other persons.

Captain Phipps. I desire to ask if he understands the French law?

Mr. Marriott. I find it very difficult to understand any law.

Captain Phipps. Does he know the power of the French King, under the constitution of the French laws?

Mr. Marriott. I do not well understand the constitution of France. I never was in France. It is a very hard thing for a foreigner to obtain an adequate idea of the constitution of another country. The constitution of one's own requires a great deal of close application and study: I wish I understood it better; and that many other People would study it more, and understand it better than I fear they do.

Captain Phipps. Does he understand the constitution of Ireland?

Mr. Marriott. No: I never was in Ireland.

Mr. Dempster. Does he think it expedient to give the Province of Quebec any part of the French constitution?

Mr. Marriott. The question is upon the word "expedient."

Mr. Dempster. I mean, will it be wise and prudent?

Mr. Marriott. By the words "expedient, wise, and prudent," I understand the question to mean, whether it will be politically wise and prudent. Expediency is ministerial language. It is a word of State: State expediency. It means that high policy, that great arcanum, the sublime of Government, extended almost beyond the reach of human wisdom. Few that can pry into this sort of knowledge. Fewer that can comprehend it. I am sure I do not.

Mr. Dempster. The gentleman, by the nature of his office, and greatly informed as he is from his connections with Government, and his own reading, must know much concerning the actual state of the Province of Quebec; I desire he will answer what sort of Government he would give to it?

Mr. Marriott. The giving laws to mankind is the perfection of all knowledge, human and divine. It is not the work of days, of months, of years, but of ages. For me to answer that gentleman's question, what sort of Government I would give to the Province, I must be the vainest of men.

Mr. Dempster. From such papers and informations as have been laid before the gentleman for his consideration, I desire to know, in general, what is his idea of a civil establishment for the Province of Quebec, the properest to be given it by the Legislature of this country?

Mr. Marriott. It depends upon a most extensive knowledge, infinite indeed, of the relations of men and things, times and circumstances; the positions of both countries; the manners and genius of the People; the wants of the Province; the views of the mother country; the conduct of the neighbouring Colonies; the state of the nation vis à vis, or respecting them and the designs of the rest of Europe. These relations change every moment; this vast political prospect is for ever doubtful and floating; it contains too many objects for my short vision and poor comprehension. - My answer therefore to the question (what is the properest establishment for the Province of Quebec, to be given by the Legislature of this country) is, I cannot tell.

Mr. W. Burke. There is an absurdity in this answer. The gentleman spoke of an infinite knowledge of men and things, times and circumstances, and yet he says he cannot tell.

House. - Read the Minutes.

The Clerk read the Minutes - as Mr. Burke had represented them.

Mr. Marriott. They were not my words - It depends upon a most extensive knowledge, &c., &c., that is, the question depends - The words "it depends" were left out. - Repeats as above.

Mr. Baker. I would ask the gentleman at the bar if ever he has read any thing of the laws of France? I believe he has read a great deal.

Mr. Marriott. I have read a little of the French law.

Mr. Baker. Does he understand it?

Mr. Marriott. Not the style of it, nor its forms very well.

Mr. Baker. What does he mean by the style of it?

Mr. Marriott. There is in every civilized country, in which a system of civil laws is established, a law language - as there are in every art and science words and phrases peculiar to them, only understood by the persons who practise those arts and sciences; I correct myself: not always understood perfectly even by them, for they frequently dispute about the force and meaning. The law therefore calls these arts, crafts, and mysteries. The French have a serious word for the style of law; they call it jargon; we ludicrously use jargon. It is a cant word.

Mr. Baker. Did he ever see any system of the French law in Canada?

Mr. Marriott. I have read a collection of French laws, which contains, by way of abstract, the laws and usages of that Province, founded on the laws of the Prevôté of Paris: and it also contains several ordonnances of police and arrests of the French King.

Mr. Baker. Does he understand them?

Mr. Marriott. Some part of them: the law language is difficult.

Mr. Baker. Is there not in that collection something concerning the jus retractus?

Mr. Marriott. I suppose the gentleman who puts the question means the rêtrai lignager. It is the right which a Lord of a fief or a manor, and the first original possessor of a grant from the Crown, has to receive some indemnifications from those persons who are called the artier tenants, who hold under him. There is such a title as rêtrai lignager.

Mr. Baker. If the French civil laws were revived, or suffered to remain in Canada, would it not be a discouragement to the old British subjects to go and trade there, and make purchases of lands?

Mr. Marriott. If old British subjects were to go thither, the French civil law remaining in force, or being revived, they would go thither at their option, and of their own free will, as they now go to Jersey or Guernsey, where the French laws prevail. Or for another instance, if you please; if any person on speculation thought of going to buy an estate in Scotland, if he found that he did not like the Scotch law and inhabitants, he might do a better thing, keep his money in his pocket and stay at home; a thing much wanted in this country.

Mr. Dempster. On what terms do you think, in the state of things in Canada, an English merchant going to settle there, would hold any lands which he should purchase?

Mr. Marriott. On the same terms as the Canadians held them who convey the lands: or if the new settler takes them by grant from the Crown, he will then take them on the same terms as any other grantee would do; that is to say, on such terms as the granter shall please. All is voluntary on the part of the purchaser or grantee - he may take the lands, or he may leave them.

Mr. Dempster. Has he given no opinion upon the subject of Canada?

Mr. Marriott. I have.

Mr. Dempster. In what capacity, and to whom?

Mr. Marriott. As his Majesty's Advocate General, to his Majesty, in Council, I drew up a plan of a code of laws.

Mr. Dempster. Will the gentleman be pleased to give the House some account of the plan?

Mr. Marriott. I had the honor of his Majesty's commands in Council, together with my brethren in office, the Attorney and Solicitor General, to consider a great number of papers referred, and to call for such persons as could give me information upon the subject; and to prepare a plan of civil and criminal law for that Province: it was referred separately to each of us three, as being the law officers of the Crown. I drew up nay plan accordingly.

Mr. Dempster. What was the plan?

Mr. Marriott. I drew nay plan in the following method: after stating the principles of legislation, and representing what appeared to me to have been the late condition, and now, to be, and likely to be hereafter, the state of the Colony, I formed my plan under four heads: the Courts of Judicature; the Common Law of the Province; the Revenue; the Religion.

Mr. Dempster. To whom did he deliver that plan?

Mr. Marriott. To his Majesty in Council.

Mr. Dempster. As doubtless it was very extensive in point of knowledge and information, the House would be glad to know the contents?

Mr. Marriott. I stand here as his Majesty's servant: my colleagues next to me in office, who have given their opinions as well as myself to his Majesty, are within the bar. When an advocate or counsellor gives his opinion, it is the property of his client. His Majesty is in possession of my opinion. If this House does me the high honor of being desirous to know my sentiments, such as they are, (and they are very free ones) the House will then address his Majesty to lay my opinion before the House. If the House will not agree to that address, my sentiments must remain deposited with his Majesty, in his great wisdom, where they now most happily rest.

Mr. Dempster. When somebody moved to have all the papers laid before the House, the motion was overruled, on the ground that we might have complete information at the bar. I fear we shall not have it where we wish it, and were bidden to expect it. What is the sum and conclusion of that opinion?

Mr. Marriott. In a question so extensive, and which involved every possible consideration of policy, and very little of law, I drew up my Opinion with all that modesty and diffidence which became me. The danger of positiveness in speculative opinions is too obvious to every man of a right mind. The more I viewed the subject on every side, the more difficulties occurred to me. I weighed all facts and reasonings in a true balance, without bias to any man or any party, but found it hard, after the whole result of my inquiries, to fix decisively what the system of law ought to be for a People so remote from home, of whose manners and wants we know so little. My method of proceeding was, I collected all facts as represented to me, and as far as other persons, who well knew the Colony by having been in it, were agreed in their reports made to the King's Government. I then brought all the facts and probable reasonings together in one general point of view, for the assistance of my two colleagues in office, that they might form an easier decision on their part. I drew indeed my own conclusions, but they were not positive, but open to better reasonings. I therefore, through the whole, adopted the style and manner of that which Cicero calls the diberativum genus dicendi; I submitted every thing to his Majesty's wisdom in Council, aided by opinions and arguments of much higher authority than any which I could offer.

Mr. Dempster. Can the gentleman recollect any parts of the opinion which he gave?

Mr. Marriott. I answered before, that doubtless if this House will address his Majesty, they will have the whole of it before you: I have no objection, I am sure, for my part; but my memory will not serve me to repeat so extensive a work.

Mr. Dempster. Does it agree in substance, or part, with the Bill now depending before this House?

Mr. Marriott. I know nothing of such a Bill officially. A printed paper, with a title of a Bill relative to the Government of Quebec, was put into my hands only two days ago, by a friend accidentally. Not having the honor to be a member of this House, I cannot, according to the rules of it, take notice of any thing proposed within its walls. If the House were pleased to refer the Bill to me, I should desire to take it home, to read it with great care and deliberation. And if I were within the bar, as I am now without, I would give my opinion upon the Bill in my place as freely, and with as much courage, as any man upon this ground.

Mr. Dempster. The gentleman owns that he has had much information: I wish he would tell us what?

Mr. Marriott. The same as the House has already heard just now, and from some of the same persons.

Mr. Cavendish. If we cannot have the whole of his opinion, will he give us some of the very learned quotations in his book.

Mr. Marriott. So many compliments would naturally draw a positive answer from any person capable of feeling the flattery and giving an answer; but I do not know what the honorable gentleman thinks of me. It is not a little memory or a little time will serve to repeat all the quotations of civil and common law, and all the French and latin extracts which I have used. I have used a great many in dressing out my own thoughts. Quotations are commonly among authors but the mere ornaments, the fringe and trappings of a book. They only shew that the man who uses them, has read a great deal; but they do not prove how much he has thought, and whether well or ill; and they shew he has thought like other people who have thought and wrote before him. If I could possibly recollect and repeat this amass of the opinions and informations of other men, I must be very tedious, and appear very pedantic to the House. I question much whether a walking library would be tolerable in these walls. I cannot remember quotations.

Mr. W. Burke. Will the gentleman tell us how long he was composing his plan? (It must require great labour and study) and how many pages it contained?

Mr. Marriott. About three hundred closely written.

Mr. W. Burke. What was the time it took to compose it.

Mr. Marriott. I cannot exactly tell.

Mr. W. Burke. Was it several months?

Mr. Marriott. Ten or twelve months, at different intervals, to compose it. But if I am to speak to all the time that I was thinking on the subject, the time was near two years. I took it up, laid it in my desk; took it up, and laid it in my desk again, that it might ripen in my mind. I saw my difficulties of coming to a decision increased. I dreaded being hasty or positive, and I thought no trouble too much on such a public subject, which appeared too much for the life of any man, and most certainly for any one man's understanding.

Mr. W. Burke. I desire to know, Mr. Chairman, what was the name of the thing which he took up and laid down so often, and which he delivered in at last to his Majesty?

Mr. Marriott. I think Mr. Chairman, I remember the face of that gentleman who asks me the question, "what is that thing which I took up and laid down so often, and delivered in to his Majesty." I answer, when that gentleman was himself in office, he very well knew what sort of things are the opinions of Crown lawyers.

Mr. W. Burke. Mr. Chairman, the witness at the bar has behaved without any respect to the House. It was enough for the House to be insulted elsewhere. We are in an abject state. I say so, and others think so. We are very ill used. The upper House had used us ill. They shut us out, not for fear we should hear what they did, but for fear we should see they did nothing. They frame the Bill there, delay it by keeping it in their hands, and then send it down to us; and now we are to hurry through it without sufficient information; and nobody will own it. The doors are shut upon us; nobody will give us information. I said, the gentleman at the bar said he had a knowledge of men and things, and yet he said he could not tell. I am not guilty of any blunders, any Iricism. The Clerk mistook as well as I. The gentleman says, he does not know the constitution of France; he does not know the constitution of Ireland; he never was in Canada; the King is his client; he will not tell you what advice he has given the King; we have a right to be informed by him. The Minister told us we should be so; and now truly the witness will not give an answer to any thing, what his real opinion is. By the rules of this House, no witness at the bar is to answer any thing personally, touching a member. It is a disrespect to the House. The questions are to be put to the Chair by a member; and the Chair, which represents the House, is to put the questions to a witness. He is to return answers to the Chair, that is to the House. If an improper question is put, the House may overrule it. I always behave like a gentleman; I know the gentleman at the bar, though I am not intimate with him. He has taken fire at my expression; I did not mean to affront him. He would not tell us what it was he had delivered: he himself therefore forced me to call it "that thing" which he delivered. I had no other way to express it. I am ready every where to demand or gave satisfaction, where there is an affront offered or received. I desire the gentleman may withdraw, and to know the sense of the House, whether I put an improper question, or the gentleman made an improper answer?

[Mr. Marriott was ordered to withdraw.]

Mr. Pulteney. It is certainly very irregular for a witness at the bar to answer any thing relating to a member, personally, who puts the question. It was always in my opinion wrong, considering that gentleman's situation, to call him to be examined: but we were refused the perusal of his opinion, and the papers. The Attorney and Solicitor General here refused to tell us what were the opinions which were given in by them. I often have observed much, debate and confusion occasioned in the House, when a witness of wit and abilities is examined. It should be remembered by both the persons, by the one who puts the question, and by the other who gives the answer, that the question is put by the House, and the answer is returned to the House. An attention to this would preserve reciprocal decorum.

Captain Phipps. I must observe to the Committee, that this examination is getting into a train which appears to me to be very improper. Sir, when men of great parts and abilities, and much wit, come to this bar, I cannot help condemning that kind of applause which is given them for exertions of that wit, though very unseasonable. I may have been guilty of joining in this encouragement to a witness, but am sure the Committee sees, by this time, that if we proceed thus, the witness will have been called to the bar to very little purpose. Besides, Sir, there is a conduct in witnesses that is not at all consistent with the dignity of this House. I therefore hope, that the witness, as well as any others that may come to this bar hereafter, would recollect, that although the House owes much to the situation of a witness, yet does the witness owe something to the dignity of the House.

Lord North. I rise to answer the honorable gentleman who was so warm. He is angry that the gentleman will not tell you what his opinion was. He made a complete answer to his question. He said it was a deliberative opinion: that he made no decision. I do admit, that the answer of a witness, by the rules of this House, should not be any thing personal to the member questioning, however impertinent, rude, or absurd, the question may appear to him. The rank and station of the gentleman at the bar ought to be considered. The word "thing" is understood generally as a word of contempt. Nothing contemptible comes from the gentleman at the bar: such a word might naturally strike him: and his not being a member of this House, so as to know the rules of it, excuses him for shewing his spirit on the occasion, when he thought himself affronted. He is under the protection of the House, and no improper question ought to be asked. In that case he may demand the protection of the House, and so may every person who is examined at this bar.

Mr. Edmund Burke. I rise to apologize for the honorable gentleman next me. I am perfectly sure he did not mean to affront the gentleman at the bar. I know the gentleman there extremely well, his great abilities, learning, and character; he has distinguished himself by his writings and behaviour, and nobody here or any where else can treat him with contempt; but we should have been very glad to have had his information. I am sensible that he is in a very trying situation. His information is withheld. It is a distress upon him, and an insult upon us to refer us to him, when it was known beforehand that it was not likely that he should think himself at liberty to give us his opinion vivâ voce, after what he has written was refused us by others. It was, however, very natural for us to call for him. We had no other hope of obtaining any information of great authority. All the world knows that the King's Advocate General, the Attorney and Solicitor General, from the nature of their very high offices, have the power of obtaining every sort of information. All is open to them in every department of Government. They can enter behind the veil. The sanctum sanctorum of State must be frequently and confidentially submitted to their view; but the curtain is drawn upon us, and the door is shut. How, then, are we to get information? I ask; shall we have it from the other Crown lawyers? The answer is, they stand upon their own ground, and take and narrow it when and where they please, as members within the bar; and the gentleman who proceeds in office, but who stands without the bar, necessarily suffers from a variety of torturing questions put to him on speculative points, which it must put any man under difficulties to answer, especially one in his station. I never should have concurred in the motion to examine him, if the former motion for the address for papers in general had not been overruled.

Mr. Marriott was again called in.

Chairman. Sir, you are to address yourself to the Chair.

Captain Phipps. Under what denomination are the papers which were delivered in by Mr. Marriott to the King?

Mr. Marriott. A Report.

Mr. Mackworth. I wish the gentleman would give a short account of the substance of that report, as concise as he pleases to make it.

Mr. Marriott. I thought I had before given an account of the contents, and of the plan. It is impossible to give a short account of a long affair.

Mr. Mackworth. In that report does he approve of Juries; does he like them; what does he think of them?

Mr. Marriott. I should choose to be tried by them. But I think of Juries as I do of every thing else in this world - every thing is imperfect. I have often considered the different modes of trial in different countries; the Civil Law Courts, the Courts of Common Law, and Chancery; their modes are all defective in discovering truth. Juries are like most other men and things; they have their excellent qualities, and they have their bad ones.

Mr. Mackworth. Does he think it will be a hardship upon the Canadians not to have Juries? Not to have their lives and properties tried by a Jury out of their own neighbourhood? Would it be their happiness or unhappiness?

Mr. Marriott. If I were a Canadian I could tell what would make me happy; if I were to go to Canada I could tell the same. As an Englishman, I say that Juries are a mode of trial which I like; they are very favourable to the property of the subject, and the natural liberties of mankind.

Mr. Dempster. Does Mr. Marriott think that the present Bill is calculated to give as much freedom to Canada as is expedient to give?

Mr. Marriott. Expedient to give them! I answered before to that question; it involves a thousand others.

Mr. C. Jenkinson. Does he think that the Canadians will not suffer greatly if the habeas corpus law is not introduced among them?

Mr. Marriott. I desire the question may be repeated; the merit of the habeas corpus law is a great constitutional question.

Question repeated.

Mr. Marriott. The idea of the suffering is the idea of the sufferer, and not of a third person; I cannot answer for the feelings of the Canadians.

Mr. C. Jenkinson. Cannot the gentleman conceive the pain of another person?

Mr. Marriott. No person has a true impression of the degree of pain or pleasure of another being; there is no complete medium to convey the sensations; words will not do it. No person can tell what a man of probity and reflection, who wishes to judge without error, and to do his public duty in an arduous question, feels, when put upon the rack of opinion. No man in this place exactly knows how I feel, in my particular and relative situation, by being so long kept at this bar, and called upon to answer every sort of question that can be imagined about all possible and probable things from such a variety of persons, Witnesses, by all the law I know in the world, are called every where only to speak to facts; to opinions, no where; - except in one court of religion, in the world.

Mr. C. Jenkinson. The gentleman then has, I find, some sort of idea of another man's suffering, although not an adequate and perfect one. Cannot he tell the House, supposing I were to give the gentleman who sits below me a slap on the face, what he would suffer? I mean, what would a person struck suffer when there are visible signs of a violent blow? Suppose that the blood gushes out of the nose?

Mr. Marriott. The noses of some people bleed without pain. That gentleman might have a blow on the nose, and he might feel it. I should not. I mean, he would feel it if he were sober; if he were drunk he might not; he might take it all in good part; and as for the blood, swear it was all good claret.

A Member. Repeat the answer.

Mr. Marriott. If he were inebriated he might not feel. Mr. Chairman, I hope my answers are not improper. I desire to be serious. I am in earnest. The answer, I take it, by the law of all evidence, ought to be of the same colour with the question, and pointed to it.

Chairman. Right, certainly.

Colonel Barré. I would not desire to distress the learned gentleman at the bar. He is certainly under personal difficulties in his situation of office, and not being a member. But I see he bears his examination with much patience and good humour. We were all going to be very dull, and he has enlivened us. He has been asked above one hundred questions, and has parried them all: not one decisive answer. I did not expect he would have kept his ground so stoutly against members. I will now beg leave to try him. I undertake, Sir, to ask him one very easy question, which I think he may and will answer. What does he think is the King of Prussia's religion?

Mr. Marriott. I have read some of his works; if the writings I mean are really his; although some people have doubted the title, "Oeuvres du Philosophe de Sans Souci." His religion may be judged from them.

Colonel Barré. I desire to know, Sir, what he judges the King of Prussia's religion to be?

Mr. Marriott. From them? I believe his Majesty has no (formal) religion.

Colonel Barré. If the Province of Canada were to be ceded to his Prussian Majesty, what religion would he introduce into it?

Mr. Marriott. A soldier's religion.

Colonel Barré. What is a soldier's religion?

Mr. Marriott. If I were a soldier, Sir, I would answer the words - my honor.

Colonel Barré. What is a lawyer's religion?

Mr. Marriott. His honor too; not to give up his client. But I suppose the gentleman knows there are two orders of men in this country, the civilians, and the common lawyers. I am no common lawyer. The religion of which?

Colonel Barré. Of both.

Mr. Marriott. The common lawyers must answer for themselves. I can readily answer for the civilians; they are ecclesiastical lawyers, and subscribe; they are of the religion of this country by law established.

Colonel Barré. I see, Sir, there is no hitting the gentleman at the bar. But I have read an opinion of some weight in a book here in my hand: it is so laid down, that I think the gentleman cannot escape answering to it. With the leave of the House, I will read it: -

"In order to judge politically of the expediency of suffering the Romish religion to remain an established religion of the State in any part of your Majesty's Dominions, the Romish religion, I mean its doctrines, not its ceremonies ought to be perfectly understood. The opinion of the royal author of the Memoires de Brandenburgh, seems to be conclusive on this head to every sovereign power, that the Protestant religion is best both for the Prince and the People; because there is in it no middle power to intervene and stand before the Prince against the People, nor before the People against the Prince."

The House now sees why I put the other question.

Colonel Barré. Did the gentleman ever read the Memoires de Brandenburgh? Is that which I have read the King of Prussia's opinion? Is that opinion in the Memoires de Brandenburgh?

Mr. Marriott. I have read a book with that title: but whether that book was his writing or whether, being his book, that was his opinion, (for many people write books, who are not of an opinion with their own book,) I do not know. There is something very like that opinion in the book.

Colonel Barré. The book, Sir, in which this opinion is recommended and adopted, ends with the name of the gentleman at the bar. He has subscribed to that opinion. -

Mr. Marriott. [Bowing with great respect round to the House, and laying his band on his bosom.] I now subscribe to that opinion most seriously - and most sincerely.

Mr. Marriott. Was ordered to withdraw.

The House went into a debate, in the course of which Mr. Charles Fox and Mr. T. Townshend agreed with Mr. Edmund Burke, that it was wrong to have examined the King's Advocate General, and to force him to give an opinion to the House; and laid the blame on the Minister, and those persons who opposed the motion for the papers.

Mr. Baker moved, "That General Murray be examined as a witness."

Notice being given, that the General was not in the House, the Sergeant was sent out for him, but he was gone home.

The Committee then reported progress, and asked leave to sit again.

Resolved, That this House will, upon Monday morning next, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to consider further of the said Bill.

Mr. Baker then moved, "That Lieutenant General Murray, late Governor of Canada, and present Governor of the town of Quebec, do attend the said Committee, on Monday next."

The motion was seconded by

Mr. T. Townshend, who set forth the necessity of his attendance; and said, he could assign no other reason for his evidence being denied, unless it was that he himself had been imprudent enough to declare to the House, that General Murray coincided with Mr. Maseres; and said, he believed when the noble Lord gave his consent to hear him, and sent the Sergeant to look for him, he well knew he was not in the House.

Lord North rose in a terrible passion, and said, he cared not what the honorable gentleman thought of him; that he never paid any respect to what a passionate and prejudiced person said; that he knew the honorable gentleman had an ill opinion of him, and he was welcome to think so still. He said, had General Murray been in the House he would have heard him, but as he was not, summoning him for another day would greatly delay the business, and he should therefore oppose the motion.

Mr. T. Townshend rose, and in a spirited manner answered, that he would submit to the House which seemed most passionate; that he was certain General Murray's evidence was material; and as to prejudice, he desired nothing but that it might be remarked, he was prejudiced to hear General Murray, the noble Lord was prejudiced against hearing him. He then set forth, that, by this law, the fishery on the Labrador coast would be altered, which would affect the Newfoundland fishery; that as it was an affair of great consequence, Admiral Palliser would be necessary to be examined; but as the noble Lord objected as to time, he would not move for his attendance, but only wish to refer the noble Lord to him for information.

Colonel Barré set forth how material it was to have General Murray's evidence, as he was at the taking of Quebec, was Governor of the Colony the first after it was taken, and remained Governor several years after, and therefore, consequently, knew the manners and customs of the Canadians; that, as he had been resident there at so critical a juncture, he must have seen how they liked the French laws, and how they liked the English laws.

Captain Phipps was likewise much for the General being heard, saying, that the evidence produced had been deficient in many points of information which he could have wished to have heard.

Mr. Charles Fox rose, and in the most sarcastic manner attacked Lord North, as to passion and prejudice. He said, the noble Lord always had two opinions; that most people's second opinion was best, but the noble Lord's second thought was generally the worst; that he was always very uniform in his conduct; for about half an hour before he gave leave for General Murray to be heard, but now he was against it. He said there had been no other objection started against the motion except want of time; that that was ridiculous, for the persons who brought in the Bill now, might have brought it in at the beginning of the session, or even last session; that they could not make an excuse, and say it was a case of such urgent necessity, that if the Bill did not pass in a day or two, the place would be entirely ruined, therefore the Bill must pass.

Lord North rose to explain himself, and said he had often been accused of having panegyrists in pay to write in favour of him in the newspapers; that he then would solemnly protest that he never had employed, or knew any person that ever did write in favour of him; that he did not wish for newspaper applause, as it was generally meant to serve some end; and as to panegyrics on him, he believed, if they only looked into the opposite scale, that which held abuse, they would find the account had been more than balanced.

Mr. Dernpster, Governor Johnstone, Mr. Burke, Mr. Baker, Mr. Turner, &c., spoke in favour of the motion, and none but Lord North against it.

When the question was put, the House divided: Yeas, 36; Nays, 90.

So it passed in the Negative.

MONDAY, June 6, 1774.

The House again went into Committee of the Whole, upon the Bill.

Governor Johnstone, after stating his objections to the principle of the Bill, and to the extension of Canada,

(which another member informed the House, was no less than 11,400,000 acres more than as claimed by France,) read a list of propositions, which, he said, appeared to him, to be contained in the Bill, amongst which were -

That a state of Slavery is better than a state of Freedom:

That the Popish Religion is better than the Protestant:

That Juries are unnecessary, and therefore to be disused:

That Monopolies are useful to Trade:

That French Laws and Commercial Regulations are preferable to English:

And that the Constitution which our ancestors had framed with so much wisdom, and established at the expense of so much blood and treasure, is to be destroyed by their wiser sons.

Mr. E. Burke spoke against the Bill; but confined himself to the point of ascertaining the limits of New York; and proposed the following to be the boundaries of Canada. against that Province, viz: by a line drawn from a point on the East side of Lake Champlain, in 45 degrees North latitude, and by a line drawn in that parallel West to the river St. Lawrence, and up that river to Lake Ontario, and across that lake to the river Niagara, and from Niagara across Lake Erie, to the Northwest point of the boundary of Pennsylvania, and down the West boundary of that Province, by a line drawn from thence till it strike the Ohio. After some debate this passed. The limits of Quebec were next carried along the Ohio to the Mississippi. Governor Johnstone spoke against the annexing the Illinois to Canada. There was another debate on annexing the coast of Labrador to Quebec. The objection was begun by Sir C. Saunders, who deduced from it the loss of the fishery to the Americans. Lord North gave an account of the sea cow and seal fishery on the Labrador coast, and shewed, that from the sedentary nature of it, it could not be conducted Upon the same principles as the Newfoundland fishery.

Upon this clause the House divided: Yeas, 88; Nays, 49.

The Committee then reported progress; and it was,

Resolved, That this House will, to-morrow morning, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to consider further of the said Bill.

TUESDAY, June 7, 1774.

The House, according to order, went into a Committee of the Whole, upon the Bill.

An objection was made to a part of the preamble of a clause, which says, "It will be highly expedient to grant them the same laws, by which their lives and property

"have been heretofore governed, protected, and ordered." Mr. Dempster and Mr. E. Burke objected to the word "protected," as it was, in their opinion, not true, and was at the same time, paying the French too great a compliment.

Lord North, Lord Beaucharnp, and Mr. Grey Cooper, insisted the word was proper, and that the law that governed, protected.

The next objection was made to the clause, which repeals all laws and ordinances passed by the Governor and Council, for the civil Government of Quebec, and the King's Proclamation, in 1763, so far as it relates to the Province of Quebec, from and after the first day of May, 1775.

A very strong debate ensued, in which Mr. Dunning spoke for near an hour and an half against it; he was supported by Mr. E. Burke, Captain Phipps, Mr. Howard, &c. Lord North, Mr. Cornwall, Lord Clare, Mr. Rice, &c., &c., as strongly supported the clause.

And on the motion, that the clause shall stand, the Committee divided: Ayes, 91; Nays, 31.

The next objection was made to the clause, which settles that Tythes and Dues shall be paid to the Romish clergy.

A very strong debate here ensued, in which Mr. E. Burke, Mr. Baker, Mr. Dunning, Mr. W. Burke, Mr. C. Fox, Captain Phipps, &c., strongly opposed, not only the whole clause, but particularly an alteration proposed by Lord North, which was, "that his Majesty should have power to appropriate, when he thought proper, the said tythes unto the establishing a Protestant clergy."

Lord North, the Attorney and Solicitor General, &c., as strongly supported the clause, with the amendment, which was carried without a division.

A motion was then made to adjourn, it being past eleven o'clock, but the friends of the Bill insisting to go on, a debate arose, and the Committee divided; for proceeding, 75; against it, 31.

Several of the most strenuous opposers of the Bill now quitted the House, and the Committee proceeded, with very little interruption, through the two next clauses, the fourth and fifth. After which

The Committee reported further progress;

And it being half an hour after twelve of the clock, on Wednesday morning,

Resolved, That the House will, this day, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, upon the said Bill.

WEDNESDAY, June 8, 1774.

The House, according to order, was resolved into a Committee of the Whole, upon the Bill.

Mr. Burke said, he had last night, when it was past eleven o'clock, moved to adjourn, but his motion was rejected on account of the great necessity of going through the Bill with all possible despatch; yet he understood they were to adjourn on account of a champêtre to be given by a noble Lord (Stanley,) and therefore desired to know which ought to be given way to most, the pleasures of dissipation, or a Bill of such magnitude as that before them? He said, he had several very material amendments to propose to the clauses, which had been so slovenly and scandalously gone through that morning, but now he was precluded.

Lord North replied, he was sure he had shewn great candour to the House at the time the honorable gentleman mentioned, and that he should always trust to his conscience for the uprightness of his conduct.

Mr. T. Townshend rose, and answered the noble Lord as to the slovenly manner in which the two clauses mentioned had been carried through the Committee; he said, he likewise understood that the House was to adjourn a day on account of a champêtre, and to be sure, the ninth day of June was more proper for a champêtre, than for a Committee of the House of Commons to be sitting on so important a Bill; but he, at the same time, could not but allow that the noble Lord had an amazing foresight, in ordering, above all days in the year, the tenth day of June for the finishing a Bill to establish Popery: he said, the day was truly characteristic to the business; and he made no doubt, but the noble Lord and his party would come with white roses in their breasts, which would at once make them truly respectable; he said, however, he should have a clause to introduce on the report, which, if the noble Lord would suffer it to pass, he should be so far devoted to him as to smirk and smile with the rest of his friends.

Mr. Edmund Burke also, in a most pointed speech, attacked the noble Lord as to candour and conscience; he ran on in such a vein of humour that the House was in a continual laugh during the whole of his speech. He said, the noble Lord ought to be highly commended for his humility, for he always gave way to the majority of the House; he said, as to the father of the Bill, he would be bold to say the noble Lord was the father; he brought it into that House, he supported it, and he was responsible for the mischiefs that might ensue from it.

Colonel Barré severely attacked the noble Lord as to his candour and conscience. He said, the Bill had originated with the Lords, who were the Romish Priests that would give his Majesty absolution for breaking his promise given by the Royal Proclamation, in 1763; that they, in this Bill, had done like all other Priests, not considered separately the crimes with which the Bill abounded, but had huddled them all up together, and, for despatch, had determined to give absolution for the whole at once. He said, the noble Lord might go on and support that or any sinful affair, as he was sure of getting absolution for all at last. He said, he was certain, by the noble Lord and his dependants proceedings, that after their death, People might say as they did after the death of King Charles, "that by papers found in their closets, they appeared to have died in the Roman Catholic belief."

Mr. Dempster, Governor Johnstone, Mr. Baker, &c., attacked Lord North for hurrying the two clauses through the Committee at such an improper time of the morning.

Mr. C. Jenkinson, Mr. Welbore Ellis, Lord Beauchamp, &c., supported Lord North, and said, as they were Roman Catholics, and were deemed near their end, it would be kind to let them die in peace; but that they found their case was like most Roman Catholics, who, generally, at their end, were surrounded by a number of troublesome People.

The House was full two hours and a half thus wrangling about the manner in which the business had been conducted the night before. After which, Sir Charles Whitworth, the Chairman, read the clause which mentions the number of the Legislative Council to be appointed, which is not to be more than twenty-three, nor less than seventeen.

Mr. Dempster objected as to the number, and proposed thirty. Lord North strongly opposed the amendment, and on the question being put, it was rejected.

Mr. E. Burke, Captain Phipps, Mr. Baker, Mr. C. Fox, Mr. Dempster, Governor Johnstone, &c., opposed the clause, and Lord North, Lord Beauchamp, Mr. C. Jenkinson, Mr. Welbore Ellis, Mr. Gascoigne, &c., supported it; which clause, on the question being put, was carried without a division. They next proceeded to several of the provisos annexed to the clause, which likewise occasioned much debate. Several amendments were proposed by the enemies to the Bill, but rejected, and other amendments inserted in their stead, proposed by Lord North; after which the last clause was read without any debate.

Mr. Jenkinson said, he had the other evening heard an honorable gentleman mention, that the oath to be taken by any person who was entrusted with power, would not suit the Roman Catholics, he had therefore substituted a new oath, which he begged leave to bring up, and to have it inserted as a clause, which being brought up and read, was approved of, as follows:

"Provided always, and be it enacted, That no person professing the religion of the Church of Rome, and residing in the said Province, shall be obliged to take the oath required by the said statute, passed in the first year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, or any other oaths substituted by any other Act in the place thereof; but that every such person, who by the said statute is required to take the oath, therein mentioned, shall be obliged, and is hereby required to take and subscribe the following oath, before the Governor, or such other person, or in such court of record, as his Majesty shall appoint; who is hereby authorized to administer the same; videlicet:

"I, A---B---, do solemnly promise and swear, that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to his Majesty, King George, and him will defend to the utmost of my power, against all traitorous conspiracies and attempts whatsoever, which shall be made against his person, crown, and dignity; and I will do my utmost endeavour to disclose and make known to his Majesty, his heirs, and successors, all treasons and traitorous conspiracies and attempts which I shall know to be against him, or any of them; and all this I do swear, without any equivocation, mental evasion, or secret reservation, and renouncing all pardons and dispensations from any power whomsoever, to the contrary. So help me God.

"And every such person who shall neglect or refuse to take the said oath before mentioned, shall incur, and be liable to the same penalties, forfeitures, disabilities, and incapacities, as he would have incurred, and been liable to, for neglecting or refusing to take the oath required by the said statute, passed in the first year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth."

The Committee then rose, and

Sir Charles Whitworth reported from the Committee, that they had gone through the Bill, and made several amendments thereunto; which they had directed him to report, when the House will be pleased to receive the same.

Ordered, That the Report be received on Friday morning next.

FRIDAY, June 10, 1774.

The Order of the Day being read,

Sir Charles Whitworth reported the amendments made to the Bill, by the Committee of the whole House.

And the House being informed, Thomas Penn, Esquire, who petitioned this House, upon the 31st day of May last, on behalf of himself, and of John Penn, Esquire, true and absolute Proprietaries of the Province of Pennsylvania, and the three lower Counties of New Castle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware, in America, praying to be heard by Counsel upon the matter of said Petition, and which Petition was then ordered to lie upon the table, until the Report should be received from the Committee, to whom the said Bill was committed, declined being now heard by Counsel upon the said Petition.

The amendments of the Committee, were then severally read and agreed to by the House, except that made on the motion of Mr. Burke, on the 6th instant, in relation to the Southern boundary of Canada, which was amended to read as follows, and then adopted:

"Bounded on the South by a line drawn from the Bay of Chaleurs, along the high lands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the sea, to a point of forty-five degrees of Northern latitude, on the Eastern bank of the river Connecticut, keeping the same latitude, directly West, through the Lake Champlain, until, in the same latitude, it meets the river St. Lawrence; from thence, up the Eastern bank of the said river, to the Lake Ontario; thence through the Lake Ontario, and the river commonly called Niagara, along the Eastern and South-eastern bank of Lake Erie, following the said bank, until the same shall be intersected by the Northern boundary granted by the charter of the Province of Pennsylvania, in case the same shall be so intersected; and from thence along the said Northern and Western boundaries of the said Province, until the said Western boundary strike the Ohio. But in case the said bank of the said lake shall not be found to be so intersected, then following the said bank, until it shall arrive at that point of the said bank which shall be nearest to the Northwest angle of the said Province of Pennsylvania; and thence, by a right line to the said Northwest angle of the said Province; and thence along the Western boundary of the said Province."

Mr. Mackworth moved, that a clause should be added to the Bill, "That in all trials relating to property and civil rights, where the value shall exceed a certain sum, either of the contending parties may demand a trial by Jury, constituted according to the laws of England, and that the issue between the parties shall be determined by the verdict of such Jury, and not otherwise." He recommended the clause as a security for the English, in Quebec, against the French laws.

Lord North opposed it. He recapitulated part of the evidence that had been produced at the bar, and said Governor Carleton had informed the House, that the Canadians had a dislike to the English laws in general; and it was his opinion, that giving the Canadians their old system of laws would be the only means of making them a happy People; that Mr. Hey, the Chief Justice, had said it was his opinion, that the Canadians, at first, might have been brought to like the English laws, but since they had been so indulged, they expected now nothing less than a repeal of the whole of the laws by which they are governed at present; and that the noblesse of the country thought trial by Jury was humiliating and degrading to them, as it subjected their property to the decision of barbers and tailors; that Mr. Maseres, had to be sure, said, that Juries, he believed would be liked under proper regulations, but the People of Canada did not choose to give their time and attendance for nothing; that Mons. Lotbiniere, on a question being put to him, whether he did not think the English laws the best for the Canadians in general? Said, "I make no doubt but your laws are good and wise, and make you a happy People, but I do not think they are suited to every climate." His Lordship afterwards entered much upon the subject of Juries, and said, the Canadians could have but a bad opinion of English Juries, when a Grand Jury there had presented the Roman Catholics as a nuisance; he said, the Canadians, in their petition to the Throne, had desired to have the whole of their ancient laws restored to them, which the Bill was meant to do; that in his opinion, the trial by Jury was not necessary there; and that, by what he had been informed, the French laws, were sufficient to protect property without it; that People had very industriously circulated a report that he had made a ministerial question of this; he would assure the House, upon his honor he had not; that, after once fixing the Government of Quebec, in the hands of this nation, it was a matter of indifference to him what law or religion was established, so that it made the People happy; that the British merchants saying their property would not be secure without English laws, let gentlemen recollect that British merchants trade to all parts of the world, and think their property secure in Portugal or Spain, where they know the Roman Catholic religion is the religion of the land, and that the number of old or English subjects in Canada were so few in number, that the cries of one hundred and fifty thousand ought to be given way to in preference of three hundred and sixty.

Sergeant Glynn recapitulated the parts of the evidence which the noble Lord had so ingeniously selected; he said, the noble Lord had laid great stress on the imprudence of the Grand Jury presenting the Roman Catholics as a nuisance, and seemed to think, for that reason, they ought to have the trial by Jury taken away; did the noble Lord never recollect, that the British House of Commons had committed equally flagrant acts of injustice; and that, if the reason for abolishing held good in one point, it ought in the other; yet he sincerely hoped that the House would never be taken away; for, bad and corrupt as it was believed to be by ignorant People, it still remained some safeguard to the nation; he afterwards launched forth into the praise of Juries, and mentioned many particular circumstances where Juries had been found extremely beneficial to the welfare of the public; he afterwards stated the account of the seizing the papers of Mr. Wilkes, the general warrants, &c., &c. He said, all State causes would be carried as desired, was it not for Juries: he mentioned the affair of Hampden, concerning ship money, and concluded with saying, that the tenth day of June, 1774, would be handed down to posterity as a day when the members of a British House of Commons preferred Popery and French laws to the established religion and laws of their own country; and, at the same time, that trials by Jury, which their forefathers accounted a blessing, they deemed a curse.

Mr. Attorney General Thurlow said, he did not agree with the honorable and learned gentleman, that whoever was against the allowing a trial by Jury in that Bill thought the mode a curse; far from it; he had, himself, in many cases, often thought the trial by Jury a great blessing; yet it would be highly imprudent, unparliamentary, ridiculous, and absurd, to establish a clause at the end of the Bill, (as that must be,) which clause would entirely repeal that clause in the body of the Bill, which allows the Canadians all their ancient laws; for would any body say, that trial by Jury was one of their ancient customs, or assert that it was necessary; that, as for the petitioning Canadians, they only desired to have their ancient laws and customs restored to them; and that he by no means thought an optional Jury any thing like an English Jury; that, by the former, any party that thought he could gain a preference in his trial over the other, would adopt it; and that it must be allowed, that where the option was liked by one, it would displease the other; besides, the evidences at the bar had declared, that the Canadians were averse to the form of an English Jury, especially in that part which obliges them to be unanimous in their verdict; and that, if you took away that part, in his opinion, you destroyed the whole; that he believed the learned gentleman had been wrong in giving praise to a Jury in the case of Mr. Hampden, for no Jury was consulted on that case.

Mr. Dunning said, that as to the learned gentleman mentioning that he by no means approved of optional Juries, had we not, every term, instances in the Court of Chancery, where it was in the power of the Lord Chancellor to appoint a Jury, if he thought proper? That, as to the establishing the French laws in Canada, who had we fit to administer them? Had not the two learned and respectable gentlemen at the bar, Mr. Hey and Mr. Maseres, informed the House, that they by no means thought themselves capable of learning the French law sufficiently to administer it with justice; and if such learned gentlemen had not abilities sufficient to understand it, sure he was, that no person the Minister could produce was capable of undertaking the task, so as to do justice to the People and honor to himself. He said, the noble Lord had been repeatedly called upon to declare the author of the Bill; let the author now stand forth and clear himself; but he would be bold to say, no man would dare to own a bill which was meant to establish Popery. The noble Lord had said the Canadians had not desired to have a Jury; could the noble Lord say the Canadians had desired not to have a Jury? He then entered fully into the nature of Juries; said they were fit in all cases; that he had known many instances where Juries had found for the Crown, and that he could wish to see Juries established throughout the world, as they were a check upon evil judges, and consequently if they were not so good judges of law, they were judges of fact; he said, as to the People of Canada being negligent of attending to serve on Juries, it was the case here; there was scarce a term passed but jurymen were fined for non-attendance.

Mr. Solicitor General Wedderburn said, he could not agree with the learned Serjeant, that the supporters of the Bill deserved the appellation of traitors to their country; that he had no objection to a Jury hereafter being established there, but let it be left in the power of the Crown, and if they saw it was necessary, they could at any time adopt it; but this was not the time, when the People were so much enraged against the proceedings of Juries in that country; that as to the Jury which Mr. Maseres had formed for that country, in the pamphlet he had published, he by no means thought it like an English Jury, for it was to be formed of an odd number of people, thirteen, fifteen, or seventeen, and a majority of those people to be decisive, and the jurymen to have five shillings per day allowed them for their attendance. He said he never would allow that the Canadians were fit persons to serve upon a Jury; they understood nothing of its form, and therefore were not judges enough how to act upon it; that as to cases of revenue, we had had two instances of their deciding different to an English Jury; that a Jury in England had found for the Crown, they in Canada had twice, on the same trial, found for the defendant; and the witness at the bar, Mr. Hey, had informed the House, that he had often been put to trouble, because he never could get the Canadians to give a special verdict.

Mr. Byng. The noble Lord had given them such of the evidence as he thought proper, and mentioned the equality of the numbers of the two sorts of subjects; that as to the numbers, it was a matter of indifference to him whether they were three hundred and sixty or three hundred and sixty thousand, they had equally a claim to compassion; that he thought it proper, that wherever an English Colony was settled, English laws ought to be established; that he did not approve of the clause now offered, because he thought it not sufficient, yet he would gladly accept of it as part of a good thing, and he made no doubt but the Canadians would, when they became used to the nature of it, love it, and wish to have it in its full extent; that General Carleton had informed them that the Canadians were a docile People; had we any occasion to go to Canada to look for docile creatures? No! There was a sufficient number always to be seen on the opposite side of the House, docile enough to do any thing the noble Lord, their leader, should direct them to do.

Governor Johnstone spoke lightly in favour of Juries, and recommended the clause.

Mr. T. Townshend spoke against the whole of the Bill, and much in praise of Juries; and recommended the clause offered in a strenuous manner, setting forth, that the English residents there had not gone to that Colony, had they not been invited by his Majesty's Royal Proclamation; but those who advise him to break his promise, would advise him to do any thing that was bad.

Mr. Edmund Burke, in a long speech, the first part of which was a keen, pointed vein of humour, against the ministerial members, who just then came into the House in great numbers, said, he should not then have risen, only he thought he now seized a happy moment when he should carry his point, for the House, had filled, all of a sudden, with members who had not heard any thing that had been said against the Bill, no, not even from its being first agitated in the House; that they had now come with good English dinners in their bellies, which would, he trusted, make them good humoured, and by being thus full of English meat, would undoubtedly be for English laws that could secure to them that meat; that he should have been afraid to attack such a body of power and wisdom as the other side of the House contained, had he not fortunately observed, that the noble Lord, and his two great oracles of wisdom and order, had all differed in their opinions; that finding them thus at variance, he thought the moment would be fortunate to his cause; the one was for a Jury, only now was not the proper time; the other against any Jury at all; and a third that it could not be inserted in the Bill. He then divided the People concerned in the Bill under three heads: first, the English merchants; second, the English subjects; and thirdly, the Canadians; he said they all deserved support; and, though the noble Lord, and his supporters, had so industriously always made use of the number three hundred and sixty, as suitable to their cause, let them only recollect what all the evidence at the bar agreed in, which was, that the English subjects were possessed of upwards of two-thirds of the whole trade: did the noble Lord think then that they were a body of People to be minded? That as to their numbers being small, the noble Lord might recollect that there was an old vulgar saying, "that one Englishman was always worth two Frenchmen," that, in this case, he thought them preferable to fifty Frenchmen; that he would, be willing to give a Canadian every indulgence in his power, but not grant that indulgence at the expense of the English; that if these noblesse were the only persons (as they appeared to be by the evidences at the bar,) that were against the English laws, he would sacrifice them and all the noblesse of England and other countries, but he would make the majority of the People happy. But the reason the noblesse did not like the English laws: was on account of the manner in which they had been represented to them; namely, that they were a string of religious and civil persecutors, which would entirely hinder them either from exercising their own religion, or from having any share in the Government of their own country; that, remove those prejudices which the noblesse had imbibed from misrepresentations, and he would be bound to say they would not only admire our laws, but petition to have them; that, as to the noblesse hating Juries, because it trusted their property to their inferiors, it was a principal reason why he would give the Canadians a Jury, in order to protect their property from the arbitrary proceedings of the noblesse, who, in all countries, always wished to have the poor under their controul; that as to the English laws not being esteemed by the French, he could produce mountains of books written by Frenchmen, on the justness and excellency of our laws, where they approved of the trial by Jury as one of the greatest excellencies our Constitution produced; that the noble Lord had invited him, and others, to come and offer their opinions; setting forth, that the Bill was imperfect, and he wished to alter it, yet he had not attended to what had been offered; that, in the Committee, when he meant to propose a clause, the noble Lord told him he might do it with propriety on the Report, and that there would be no other obstacle in his way, than that he would oppose it: he said he was greatly obliged to the noble Lord for his candour, for it had spared him much trouble, having intended to offer several clauses, which he should, with great justice be called obstinate, were he now to attempt it, when he knew there was such a glorious triumvirate of power and wisdom formed against him; that he sincerely believed the French were in awe of us, yet he could not help thinking that they must be astonished that a People, who had such powerful arms, should have such weak heads: he strongly recommended the state of the merchants as an object of the noble Lord's attention, setting forth, that their property was always in a fluctuating state, and that they run great risks of their whole fortune, to benefit Government as well as themselves.

The question was then put, and the House divided: Yeas 40; Nays, 83.

So it passed in the Negative.

Mr. T. Townshend offered an amendment, making temporary that part of the Bill which relates to the Legislative Council.

This produced a short debate, but it passed in the Negative, without a division.

Mr. Dempster offered an amendment, for establishing rules to be observed in the making of Ordinances; which also passed in the Negative.

Mr. C. Fox proposed an amendment, to secure the religious Orders their rights and properties, as a corporate body claiming under the capitulation.

Which was rejected without a division.

Mr. Dempster then proposed to amend the Bill, giving to the Canadians, claiming it, the benefit of the English laws of habeas corpus, and bail, in cases of commitment.

And the question being put, the House divided: Yeas, 21; Nays 76.

So it passed in the Negative.

Ordered, That the Bill be read the third time, upon Monday morning next.

MONDAY, June 13, 1774.

The Order of the Day being read, the Bill was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. Cooper moved, that the Bill do Pass.

Mr. Charles Fox opposed this, on the ground of its being a money Bill, and having originated in the other House; he moved, therefore, that the Journals of the House of Commons, of the 5th of March, 1677, might be read; and the same being read accordingly, it appeared that they had rejected a Bill from the Lords, for the purpose of collecting customary tythes and other dues. He then argued from this precedent as a case exactly applicable and in point to the clause in the Bill, which provides for the security of the accustomed rights and dues of the Romish clergy; and appealed to the sense of the House if the present Bill, under such circumstances, was permitted to pass, whether: it would not be, in fact, a relinquishment of the ancient and hitherto undisputed right of the House of Commons, to originate money Bills.

Mr. Cooper, in answer, quoted another precedent, from the Journals in the year 1691, on the Bill for the recovery of small tythes, in which the Lords had made an amendment.

Mr. Howard observed, that Mr. Cooper's precedent did not apply,, and that he knew of but one in the whole records of Parliament that did, which was in the reign of Edward the Sixth, on which the learned Bishop who wrote the History of the Reformation remarked, that it was a direct infringement on the rights and privileges of the Reformation.

Then the question being put, That the Bill, with the amendments, do Pass; the House divided: Yeas, 56; Nays, 20.

So it passed in the Affirmative.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

TUESDAY, June 14, 1774.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons, by Mr. Cooper and others:

To return the Bill, and to acquaint this House, that they have agreed to the same, with some amendments, to which they desire their Lordships concurrence thereto.

Ordered, That the said amendments be taken into consideration on Friday next; and that the Lords be summoned.

Ordered, That the said Bill with the amendments, be printed.

FRIDAY, June 18, 1774.

The Order of the Day being read, the amendments to the Bill were read three times by the Clerk;

It was proposed, "To agree with the Commons in the said amendments."

Lord Chatham rose, and entered fully upon the subject of the Bill. He said it would involve a great country in a thousand difficulties, and in the worst of despotism, and put the whole People under arbitrary power; that it was a most cruel, oppressive, and odious measure, tearing up justice and every good principle by the roots; that by abolishing the trial by Jury, he supposed the framers of the Bill thought that mode of proceeding, together with the habeas corpus, mere moonshine, whilst every true Englishman was ready to lay down his life sooner than lose those two bulwarks of his personal security and property. The merely supposing that the Canadians would not be able to feel the good effects of law and freedom, because they had been used to arbitrary power, was an idea as ridiculous as false. He said the Bill established a despotic Government in that country, to which the Royal Proclamation, of 1763, promised the protection of the English laws. Here the noble Lord read part of the Proclamation, and then entered fully on the Council and power vested in the Governors, the whole mode of which, he said, was tyrannical and despotic: he was likewise very particular on the bad consequences that would attend the great extension of that Province, that the whole of the Bill appeared to him to be destructive of that liberty which ought to be the ground-work of every constitution: ten thousand objections, he was confident, might be made to the Bill, but the extinction of the mode of trial above mentioned, was a very alarming circumstance, and he would pronounce him a bold man who proposed such a plan. When his Lordship came to the religious part of the Bill, he directed this discourse to the bench of Bishops, telling them, that as by the Bill the Catholic religion was made the established religion of that vast Continent, it was impossible they could be silent on the occasion. He called the Bill a child of inordinate power, and desired and asked if any of that bench would hold it out for baptism; he touched again upon the unlimited power of the Governor, in appointing all the members, and who might be made up of Roman Catholics only. He also took notice of an amendment which had been made in the House of Commons, which was a new clause, repealing so much of the Act of Reformation of the first of Elizabeth, as relates to the oath of supremacy, and substituting a common oath of allegiance in its place. This Act of Elizabeth, he said, had always been looked upon as one that the Legislature had no more right to repeal, than the Great Charter, or the Bill of Rights.

His Lordship stated, with great force, many objections to the clause giving to the French Canadians so advantageous a part of the fisheries of cod on the Labrador coast, to the great prejudice of the English fishermen on the banks of Newfoundland; considering the said fisheries of Labrador as a nursery of French Canadian seamen, to man, in case of a French war, any squadrons of France, in those seas: He exposed the train of fatal mischiefs attending the establishment of popery and arbitrary power in that vast and fertile region now annexed to the Government of Quebec, and capable of containing (if fully peopled) not less than thirty millions of souls. He deduced the whole series of laws from the supremacy first re-vindicated under Henry the Eighth, down to this day, as fundamentals constituting a clear compact that all establishments by law are to be Protestant; which compact ought not to be altered, but by the consent of the collective body of the People. He further maintained, that the dangerous innovations of this Bill were at variance with all the safeguards and barriers against the return of Popery and of Popish influence, so wisely provided against by all the oaths of office and of trust, from the Constable up to the members of both Houses, and even to the Sovereign, in his coronation oath. He pathetically expressed his fears, that it might shake the affections and confidence of his Majesty's Protestant subjects in England and Ireland; and finally lose the hearts of all his Majesty's American subjects. His Lordship then said, that for these and other reasons, he gave his hearty negative to the Bill, Lord Dartmouth said a few words in favour of the Bill.

Lord Lyttelton began by observing that whatever fell from that noble Earl, fell with such weight as to make the deepest impression on those who heard him: that from the solemn opposition he had given to that clause of the Bill, which excused the Canadians from the oath of supremacy, and imposed an oath of allegiance in the room of it, he was induced to give his reasons why he differed from Lord Chatham; that so far from thinking with the noble Lord last named, that no man who was a Protestant in his heart could give his consent to the passing of that clause, he aft]reed that no true Protestant could refuse it his hearty concurrence, because the doctrinal principles of our holy religion, drawn from that pure and excellent source the Gospel of our Saviour, breathed forth a spirit of moderation, candour, and universal toleration to all religions that were not incompatible with the precepts of morality, and the general welfare and happiness of mankind. That to oblige Catholics to deny the supremacy of the Pope, was to compel them forcibly to abjure their religion, and in reality, to commence a persecution against them; that opposition always grew and strengthened under the scythe of persecution, and that fanaticism was never formidable till it was oppressed. He said that the Canadians had, ever since the conquest of that country, behaved like good and peaceable subjects, that therefore they were justly entitled to a beneficial code of civil policy, and to a free exercise of their religion. That though he had the greatest reverence for the Protestant faith, yet he had no less respect for the safety and good government of the State; that to force the inhabitants of Canada to renounce those errors which they had imbibed with their mother's milk, was to alter by violence the constitution of their mind, and by so doing, to lay a foundation for resistance, which if it did not proceed to rebellion, would at least tend to alienate their minds from that allegiance which they had but just adopted, and which, under the mild government we exercised over them, would, he hoped, be daily strengthened and matured by time. That it was matter of triumph to this great and free country to treat the conquered subjects of France with more lenity, and to give them a better form of Government than that which they had received from their mother country; that so far was he from believing that Administration had predetermined in the closet the result of the proceedings of Parliament, and that, as the noble Earl expressed himself, "what must be, must be," that on the contrary, in every stage of the Bill, they had shewed the greatest candour and desire of information, and in the House of Commons, had actually adopted many ideas that had been thrown out by opposition, especially in regard to a very important part of the Bill, the definition of the limits of Canada. He said, he approved of the Bill, chiefly from its lenity and moderation, and that he deemed it sound policy for a conquering nation to lay the yoke lightly over the necks of those who were subjected to its dominion. That as the noble Earl had observed how much Canada was inclined towards France, he thought nothing was more likely to win them over to England than to improve and meliorate their commercial as well as political situation, and, above all, to give them liberty of conscience in religious matters.

His Lordship then observed, the dark times of superstition were past, that the gloomy reign of persecution and priestcraft were now at an end, that science every where diffused - had every where enlightened the human mind; he took notice that the noble Earl had said, if the Bill passed you might take down the bells from your steeples, and the steeples from your churches; but that if even that was to happen, the evil would not be great, for that Christian men might meet in the faith of Christ and in Christian charity without these things, which to the pure of heart and to the truly devout were of little importance; that they were the externals of religion, the internals of which were charity and universal benevolence; and that these principles gave birth to the clause which the noble Earl had so uncharitably censured.

After Lord Lyttelton had thus answered Lord Chatham's objections to the religious tendency of the Bill, he proceeded to shew why he approved of the general policy of it: he said, he would not pretend to be sufficiently versed in the deep science of politics to affirm whether or no a better system of legislation might not have been invented, but that he insisted upon the code contained in the Bill to be conformable to the genius of the country over which it is to be exercised; that it was consistent with the political notions of the inhabitants, and the form of Government to which they had been accustomed; that forms of Government must always be suited to the dispositions of the governed, and infinitely varied in different climates; that the mild Constitution of this country would be rejected with contempt by the sons of despotism in Asia, and the excess of liberty happily spread over England, would degenerate to an excess of licentiousness in Canada. As to the idea of the noble Earl, that this political separation of Canada from the rest of America might be a means of dividing their interests, and that French Canada would in a future day be used as a proper instrument to quell British America, Lord Lyttelton said, he was not apprehensive of these consequences; but that if British America was determined to resist the lawful prower and pre-eminence of Great Britain, he saw no reason why the loyal inhabitants of Canada should not co-operate with the rest of the Empire in subduing them, and bringing them to a right sense of their duty; and he thought it happy, that, from their local situation, they might be some check to those fierce fanatic spirits that, inflamed with the same zeal which animated the Round-heads in England, directed that zeal to the same purposes, to the demolition of regal authority, and to the subversion of all power which they did not themselves possess; that they were composed of the same leaven, and whilst they pretended to be contending for liberty, they were setting up an absolute independent Republic, and that the struggle was not for freedom, but power, which was proved from the whole tenor of their conduct, even to demonstration.

The question was then put, and the House divided: Contents, 26; Non-Contents, 7.

So it was resolved in the Affirmative.

The following Lords were the minority: the Duke of Gloucester, the Earls Chatham, Coventry, Effingham, and Spencer, the Lords Sandys, and King.*

WEDNESDAY, June 22, 1774.

[The Lord Mayor, Aldermen Crosby, Lewis, and Plomer, the Recorder, upwards of one hundred and fifty of the Common Council, and City Officers, went from Guildhall to St. James's, (Alderman Sawbridge joined them in the way,) in order to present an Address and Petition to his Majesty, previous to his going to the House, relative to the Bill for the government of Quebec. They arrived at St. James's a quarter before one. A little before two, the Lord Chamberlain waited on the Lord Mayor with a Message from the King, which he had committed to writing, to prevent any mistake; and he read the following paper:

The Session was drawing near to the usual time of recess; and the greatest number of the members, fatigued with a long attendance on the American Bills, were retired into the country. In this situation, a Bill which has engaged a great deal of the public attention, was brought into the House of Lords; - "The Bill for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America." This passed through that House with very little, if any observation. But when it came down to the House of Commons, it met with a very different reception. A disposition immediately appeared in that House to criticise it with unusual severity. The party for Ministry seemed to be a little alarmed at this spirit, partly because, from its easy passage through the House of Lords, it was not so much expected; but principally, because they apprehended it would create more uneasiness among the People out of doors than any of the former Bills. In this case, the passions which had been excited by the disorders in America, did not operate in their favour. And as the Act had for a part of its objects establishments touching religion, it was far more likely to give occasion for popular complaint. The Ministry therefore found it necessary not to carry things with so high an hand as in the preceding Bills.

The Bill received in the course of these debates [in the Commons] many amendments, so as to change it very greatly from the state in which it came down from the House of Lords; but the ground-work remained the same. Throughout the whole progress of the business, though well fought, the numbers in the minority were uncommonly small. It produced, nevertheless, much greater uneasiness and discontent out of doors than any of the Bills for punishing of the old Colonies.

This discontent called on the attention of the House of Lords; so that when the Bill was returned to them with the amendments, there was a considerable opposition to it, although in some respects less exceptionable than when it had passed their House with so little notice; but, as in all other questions, so in this, the minority shewed no strength in numbers.

The session had now stretched far into the Summer. The business of it had been of as much importance as that, perhaps, of any session since the revolution. Great changes had been made in the economy of some of the Colonies, which were thought foundations for changes of a like nature in others; and the most sanguine expectations were entertained by the Ministry, that when Parliament had shown so determined a resolution, and the advocates for the Colonies had appeared so very little able to protect them. the submission throughout America would be immediate; and complete obedience and tranquillity would be secured in future. The triumphs and mutual congratulations of all who supported these measures; within doors and without, were unusually great. - Ann. Regis.

"As your Petition relates to a Bill agreed on by the "two Houses of Parliament, of which his Majesty cannot "take public notice, until it is presented for his royal as- "sent in Parliament, I am commanded by the King to in- "form you, that you are not to expect an answer."

The Lord Mayor immediately sent the Remembrancer, to present his duty to the King, and inform his Majesty, "That they waited to present their Address, agreeable to "his Majesty's order;" which was in a little time complied with; when no other answer was given.

The following is a copy of the City Address:

"To the King's Most Excellent Majesty, the humble Ad- dress and Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons, of the City of LONDON, in Common Council assembled:

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons, of the City of London, in Common Council assembled, are exceedingly alarmed that a Bill has passed your two Houses of Parlia- ment, entitled "An Act for making more effectual provi- sion for the government of the Province of Quebec, in "North America," which we apprehend to be entirely subversive of the great fundamental principles of the Constitution of the British Monarchy, as well as of the authority of various solemn acts of the Legislature.

"We beg leave to observe, that the English law, and that wonderful effort of human wisdom, the trial by Jury, are not admitted by this Bill in any civil cases, and the French law of Canada is imposed on all the inhabitants of that extensive Province, by which both the persons and propeerties of very many of your Majesty's subjects are rendered insecure and precarious.

"We humbly conceive, that this Bill, if passed into a law will be contrary, not only to the compact entered into with the numerous settlers of the reformed religion, who were invited into the said Province, under the sacred promise of enjoying the benefits of the laws of your realm of England, but likewise repugnant to your royal Proclamation of the 7th of October, 1763, for the speedy settling the said new Government.

"That consistent with the public faith, pledged by the said Proclamation, your Majesty cannot erect and consti- tute Courts of Judicature and Public Justice for the hear- ing and determining all cases, as well civil as Criminal, within the said Province, but as near as may be agreeable to the laws of England; nor can any laws, statutes, or ordinances for the public peace, welfare, and good govern- ment of the said Province, be made, constituted, or or- dained, but according to the laws of this Realm.

"That the Roman Catholic religion, which is known to be idolatrous and bloody, is established by this Bill, and no legal provision is made for the free exercise of our reformed faith, nor the security of our Protestant fellow subjects of the Church of England, in the true worsbip of Almighty God, according to their consciences.

"That your Majesty's illustrious family was called to the throne of these Kingdoms, in consequence of the exclu- sion of the Roman Catholic ancient branch of the Stuart line, under the express stipulation that they should pro- fess the Protestant religion; and according to the oath es- tablished by the sanction of Parliament, in the first year of the reign of our great deliverer, William the Third, your Majesty, at your coronation, solemnly swore that you would, to the utmost of your power, maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the gospel, and Protestant reformed religion, established by law.

"That although the term of imprisonment of subjects is limited to three months, the power of fining is left indefi- nite and unrestrained, by which the total ruin of the party may be effected by an enormous and excessive fine.

"That the whole Legislative power of the Province is vested in persons to be solely appointed by your Majesty, and removable at your pleasure, which we apprehend to be repugnant to the leading principles of this free Constitution, by which alone your Majesty now holds, or legally can hold, the imperial crown of these Realms.

"That the said Bill was brought into Parliament very late in the present session, and after the greater number of the members of the two Houses were retired into the coun- try, so that it cannot fairly be said to be the sense of those parts of the Legislature.

"Your Petitioners, therefore, most humbly supplicate your Majesty, as the guardian of the laws, liberties, and religion of your People, and the great bulwark of the Protestant faith, that you will not give your royal assent to the said Bill.

"And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray."]

His Majesty, being seated on the Throne, adorned with his crown and regal ornmments, and attended by his Offi- cers of State, (the Lords being in their robes,) and the Commons, with their Speaker, being in attendance,

The Royal assent was pronounced to the Bill, by the Clerk's Assistant.

Then his Majesty made a Speech, in which he said: -

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I have observed, with the utmost satisfaction, the "many eminent proofs you have given of your zealous "and prudent attention to the public service, during the "course of this very interesting session of Parliament.

"The very peculiar circumstances of embarrassment in "which the Province of Quebec was involved, had render- "ed the proper adjustment and regulation of the Govern- "ment thereof, a matter of no small difficulty. The Bill which you prepared for that purpose, and to which I "have now given my assent, is founded on the clearest "principles of justice and humanity; and will, I doubt not, "have the best effects in quieting the minds, and promot- "ing the happiness of my Canadian subjects.

"I have long seen, with concern, a dangerous spirit of "resistance to my Government, and to the execution of "the laws, prevailing in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England. It proceeded at length to such "an extremity as to render your immediate interposition "indispensably necessary; and you have accordingly made "provision, as well for the suppression of the present dis- "orders, as for the prevention of the like in future. The "temper and firmness with which you have conducted "yourselves in this important business, and the general "concurrence with which the resolution of maintaining the "authority of the laws, in every part of my dominions, "hath been adopted and supported, cannot fail of giving "the greatest weight to the measures which have been the "result of your deliberations. Nothing that depends on "me shall be wanting to render them effectual. It is my "most anxious desire to see my deluded subjects, in that "part of the world, returning to a sense of their duty; ac- "quiescing in that just subordination to the authority, and "maintaining that due regard to the commercial interests "of this country; which must ever be inseparably con- "nected with their own real prosperity and advantage."

Anno Decimo Quarto Georgii, III. Regis,

An Act for making more effectual provision for the Go- vernment of the Province of QUEBEC, in NORTH AMERICA.

[N. B. The words printed within crotchets [], denote what was left out by the Commons; and those printed within a parenthesis (), what have been inserted by them.]

Whereas his Majesty, by his Royal Proclamation, bear- ing date the seventh day of October, in the third year of his reign, thought fit to declare the provisions which had been made in respect to certain Countries, Territories, and Islands, in America, ceded to his Majesty by the Definitive Treaty of Peace, concluded at Paris, on the tenth day of February, one thousand seven hundred and sixty-three: And whereas, by the arrangements made by the said Royal Proclamation a very large [part of the territory of Cana- da,] (extent of country) within which there were several Colonies and settlements, of the subjects of France, who claimed to remain therein under the faith of the said treaty, was left, without any provision being made for the administration of civil Government therein, and [other] (certain) parts of the [said county] (territory of Canada) where sedentary fisheries had been established and car- ried on by the subjects of France, inhabitants of the said Province of Canada, under grants and concessions from the Government thereof, were annexed to the Government of Newfoundland, and thereby subjected to regulations inconsistent with the nature of such fisheries: May it therefore please your most excellent Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords, Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that all the [said] territories, islands, and countries, [heretofore part of the Province of Canada,] in North America, [extending Southward to the banks of] (belonging to the Crown of Great Britain, bounded on the South by a line from the Bay of Chaleurs, along the high lands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the sea, to a point in forty-five degrees of Northern latitude, on the Eastern bank of the river Connecticut; keeping the same latitude directly west through the Lake Champlain, until, in the same latitude, it meets the river St. Lawrence; from thence up the Eastern bank of the said river, to the Lake Ontario; thence through the Lake Ontario, and the river called the Niagara; and thence along by the Eastern and Southeastern bank of Lake Erie, following the said bank until the same shall be intersected by the Northern boundary, granted by the Charter of the Province of Pennsylvania, in case the same shall be so intersected; and from thence along the said Northern and Western boundaries of the said Province, until the said Western boundary strike the Ohio: but in case the said bank of the said lake shall not be found to be so intersected, then following the said bank, until it shall arrive at that point of the said bank which shall be nearest to the Northwestern angle of the said Province of Pennsylvania; and thence by a right line to the said Northwestern angle of the said Province, and thence along the Western boundary of the said Province, until it strike the river Ohio (and along the bank of the said river) Westward, to the banks of the Mississippi, and Northward to the Southern boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England, trading to Hudson's Bay; and [which said] (also all such) territories, islands, and countries, [are not within the limits of some other British Colony as allowed and confirmed by the Crown, or] which have, since the tenth of February, one thousand seven hundred and sixty-three, been made part of the Government of Newfoundland, be, and they are hereby, during his Majesty's pleasure, annexed to, and made part and parcel of, the Province of Quebec, as created and established by the said Royal Proclamation of the seventh of October, one thousand seven hundred and sixty-three.

(Provided always, That nothing herein contained relative to the boundary of the Province of Quebec, shall in any wise affect the boundaries of any other Colonies.) -

(Provided always, And be it enacted, that nothing in this Act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to make void, or to vary or alter any right, title, or possession, derived under any grant, conveyance, or otherwise howsoever, of or to any lands within the said Province, or the Provinces thereto adjoining, but that the same shall remain and be in force, and have effect, as if this Act had never been made.)

And whereas the provisions made by the said Proclamation, in respect to the civil Government of the said Province of Quebec, and the powers and authorities given to the Governor, and other civil officers of the said Province, by the grants and commissions issued in consequence thereof, have been found, upon experience, to be inapplicable to the state and circumstances of the said Province, the inhabitants whereof [amounting] (amounted) at the conquest, to above [one hundred] (sixty-five) thousand persons, professing the religion of the Church of Rome, and enjoying an established form of constitution and system of laws, by which their persons and property had been protected, governed, and ordered for a long series of years, from the first establishment of the said Province of Canada; Be it therefore further enacted by the authority aforesaid the said Proclamation, so far as the same relates to the said Province of Quebec, and the commission under the authority whereof the Government of the said Province is at present administered, and all and every the ordinance and ordinances made by the Governor and Council of Quebec for the time being, relative to the civil Government and administration of justice in the said Province, and all commissions to Judges and other officers thereof, be, and the same are hereby revoked, annulled, and made void, from and after the first day of May, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five.

And for the more perfect security and ease of the minds of the inhabitants of the said Province, it is hereby declared, that his Majesty's subjects professing the religion of the Church of Rome, of, and in the said Province of Quebec, [as the same is described in and by the said Proclamation and commissions, and also all the territories, part of the Province of Canada, at the time of the conquest thereof, which are hereby annexed during his Majesty's pleasure, to the said Government of Quebec,] may have, hold, and enjoy, the free exercise of the religion of the Church of Rome, subject to the King's supremacy, declared and established by an Act made in the first year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, over all the dominions and countries which then did, or thereafter should, belong to the imperial Crown of this realm; and that the Clergy of the said church, may hold, receive, and enjoy their accustomed dues and rights, with respect to such persons only as shall profess the said religion.

Provided nevertheless, That, [nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to the disabling] (it shall be lawful for) his Majesty, his heirs, or successors, [from making] (to make) such provision (out of the rest of the said accustomed dues and rights) for the encouragement of the Protestant religion, and for the maintenance and support of a Protestant clergy within the said Province, as he or they shall, from time to time, think necessary and expedient.

(Provided always, and be it enacted, That no person professing the religion of the Church of Rome, and residing in the said Province, shall be obliged to take the oath required by the said statute, passed in the first year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, or any other oaths substituted by any other Act in the place thereof, but that every such person, who by the said statute is required to take the oath therein mentioned, shall be obliged, and is hereby required to take and subscribe the following oath, before the Governor, or such other person, or in such court of record as his Majesty shall appoint, who are hereby authorized to administer the same; videlicet:

"I, A---B---, do sincerely promise and swear that I will "be faithful and bear true allegiance to his Majesty King
"George, and him will defend to the utmost of my power,
"against all traitorous conspiracies and attempts whatsoever, which shall be made against his person, crown and
"dignity; and I will do my utmost endeavours to disclose
"and make known to his Majesty, his heirs, and successors, all treasons and traitorous conspiracies and attempts,
"which I shall know to be against him, or any of them,
"and all this I do swear, without any equivocation, mental "evasion, or secret reservation; and renouncing all pardons and dispensations from any power or person whomsoever to the contrary. So help me God."

And every such person who shall neglect or refuse to take the said oath, before mentioned, shall incur, and be liable to the same penalties, forfeitures, disabilities, and incapacities, as he would have incurred and been liable to, for neglecting or refusing to take the oath required by the said statute, passed in the first year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That all his Majesty's Canadian subjects, within the Province of Quebec, the religious orders and communities only excepted, may also hold and enjoy their property and possessions, together with all customs and usages relative thereto, and all other their civil rights, in as large, ample, and beneficial manner, as if the said proclamation, commissions, ordinances, and other acts, and instruments, had not been made, and as may consist with their allegiance to his Majesty, and subjection to the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain; and that in all matters of controversy relative to property and civil rights, resort shall be had to the laws of Canada, (as the rule) for the decision of the same, and all causes that shall hereafter be instituted in any of the courts of justice, to be appointed within and for the said Province, by his Majesty, his heirs, and successors, shall, with respect to such property and rights, be determined [by the Judges of the same] agreeably to the said laws and customs of Canada [and the several] (until they shall be varied or altered by any,) ordinances that shall, from time to time, be passed in the said Province by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Commander-in-chief, for the time being, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council of the same, to be appointed in manner hereinafter mentioned.

(Provided always, That nothing in this act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to any lands that have been granted by his Majesty, or shall hereafter be granted by his Majesty, his heirs, and successors, to be holden in free and common soccage.)

Provided [always] (also,) That it shall and may be lawful to and for every person that is owner of any lands, goods, or credits, in the said Province, and that has a right to alienate the said lands, goods, or credits, in his or her life time, by deed of sale, gift, or otherwise, to devise or bequeath the same, at his or her death, by his or her last will and testament; any law, usage, or custom heretofore or now prevailing in the Province, to the contrary hereof in any wise notwithstanding.

[Provided also, That nothing in this Act contained shall extend or be construed to extend, to any lands that have been granted by his Majesty, or shall hereafter be granted by his Majesty, his heirs, and successors, to be holden in free and common soccage;] (such will being executed either according to the laws of Canada, or according to the forms prescribed by the laws of England.)

And whereas the certainty and lenity of the criminal law of England, and the benefits and advantages resulting from the use of it, have been sensibly felt by the inhabitants from an experience of more than nine years, during which it has been uniformly administered; be it therefore further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the same shall continue to be administered, and shall be observed as law, in the Province of Quebec, as well in the description and quality of the offence, as in the method of prosecution and trial, and the punishments and forfeitures thereby inflicted, to the exclusion of every other rule of criminal law, or mode of proceeding therein, which did or might prevail in the said Province before the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and sixty-four; any thing in this Act to the contrary thereof in any respect notwithstanding; subject nevertheless to such alterations and amendments, as the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Commander-in-chief, for the time being, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council of the said Province, hereafter to be appointed, shall from time to time, cause to be made therein, in manner hereinafter directed.

And whereas it may be necessary to ordain many regulations, for the future welfare and good Government of the Province of Quebec, the occasions of which cannot now be foreseen, nor without much delay and inconvenience be provided for, without entrusting that authority a certain time, and under proper restrictions, to persons resident there: And whereas it is at present inexpedient to call an Assembly; be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, that it shall and may be lawful for his Majesty, his heirs, and successors, by warrant under his or their signet, or sign manual, and with the advice of the Privy Council, to constitute and appoint a Council for the affairs of the Province of Quebec, to consist of such persons resident there, not exceeding twenty-three, nor less than seventeen, as his Majesty, his heirs, and successors, shall be pleased to appoint; and upon the death, removal, or absence, of any of the members of the said Council, in like manner to constitute and appoint such and so many other person or persons as shall be necessary to supply the vacancy or vacancies; which Council, so appointed and nominated, or the major part thereof, shall have [full] power and authority to make ordinances for the peace, welfare, and good government of the said Province, with the consent of his Majesty's Governor, or, in his absence, of the Lieutenant Governor, or Commander-in-chief, for the time being.

Provided always, That nothing in this Act contained shall extend to authorize or empower the said Legislative Council to lay any taxes or duties within the said Province, (such rates and taxes only excepted, as the inhabitants of any town or district within the said Province, may be authorized by the said Council to assess, levy, and apply, within the said town or district, for the purpose of making roads, erecting and repairing public buildings, or for any other purpose respecting the local convenience and economy of such town or district.)

Provided also, and be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That every ordinance so to be made shall, within six months, be transmitted by the Governor, or in his absence, by the Lieutenant Governor, or Commander-in-chief, for the time being, and laid before his Majesty, for his royal approbation; and if his Majesty shall think fit to disallow thereof, the same shall cease and be void from the time that his Majesty's order in Council thereupon shall be promulgated at Quebec.

Provided also, That no ordinance touching religion, or by which any punishment may be inflicted greater than fine or imprisonment for three months, shall be of any force or effect, until the same shall have received his Majesty's approbation.

Provided also, That no ordinance shall be passed, at any meeting of the Council, (where less than a majority of the whole Council is present, or at any time,) except between the first day of January, and the first day of May, unless upon some urgent occasion; in which case, every member thereof resident at Quebec, or within fifty miles thereof, shall be personally summoned by the Governor, or, in his absence, by the Lieutenant Governor, or Commander-in-chief, for the time being, to attend the same.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That nothing herein contained, shall extend, or be construed to extend, to prevent or hinder his Majesty, his heirs, and successors, by his, or their, letters patent, under the great seal of Great Britain, from erecting, constituting, and appointing, such courts of criminal, civil, and ecclesiastical jurisdiction, within and for the said Province of Quebec, and appointing, from time to time, the Judges and officers thereof, as his Majesty, his heirs, and successors, shall think necessary and proper, for the circumstances of the said Province.

(Provided always, and it is hereby enacted, That nothing in this Act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to repeal or make void, within the said Province of Quebec, any Act or Acts of the Parliament of Great Britain, heretofore made, for prohibiting, restraining, or regulating the trade or commerce of his Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in America; but that all and every the said Acts, and also all Acts of Parliament, heretofore made, concerning or respecting the said Colonies and Plantations, shall be, and are hereby declared to be, in force, within the said Province of Quebec, and every part thereof.)

An Act to prevent the Exportation to Foreign parts of Utensils made use of in the Cotton, Linen, Woollen, and Silk Manufactures of this Kingdom.

Whereas the exportation of the several tools or utensils made use of in preparing, working up, and finishing, the cotton and linen manufactures of this Kingdom, or any or either of them, or any other goods wherein cotton and linen, or either of them, are used, will enable foreigners to work up such manufactures, and thereby greatly diminish the exportation of the same from this Kingdom: therefore, for preserving as much as possible to his Majesty's British subjects the benefits arising from those great and valuable branches of trade and commerce, be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords, Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That if at any time after the first day of July, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four, any person or persons, in Great Britain or Ireland, shall upon any pretence whatsoever, load or put on board, or cause to be laden or put on board, of any ship, vessel, or boat, which shall not be bound directly to some port or place in Great Britain or Ireland, any such tools or utensils as are commonly used in, or are proper for the preparing, working up, or finishing, of the cotton or linen manufactures, or any or either of them, or any other goods wherein cotton and linen, or either of them, are used, or any parts or parcels of such tools or utensils, by what name or names the same shall or may be called or known; the person or persons so offending shall, for every such offence, not only forfeit and lose all such tools and utensils, or parts or parcels thereof, which shall be so laden or put on board as aforesaid, but also the sum of two hundred pounds of lawful money of Great Britain; to be recovered by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, or in the Court of Session in Scotland, or in any of the four courts of Dublin respectively, wherein no essoine, protection, privilege, or wager of law, shall be allowed, or more than one imparlance.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the said first day of July, it shall and may be lawful to and for any officer of his Majesty's Customs in Great Britain, and for any officer of the Revenue in Ireland, to seize and secure in some or one of his Majesty's warehouses, all such tools or utensils, or parts or parcels thereof, by this Act prohibited to be exported, as such officer shall find or discover to be lade or put on board of any ship, vessel, or boat, which shall not be bound directly to some port or place in Great Britain or Ireland, and that every officer who shall seize and secure any of the said tools or utensils, or parts or parcels thereof, shall be fully and absolutely indemnified for so doing; and all tools and utensils, or parts or parcels thereof, so seized and secured as aforesaid, shall, after condemnation thereof in due course of law, be publicly sold to the best bidder, and one moiety of the produce arising by the sale of such tools and utensils shall be to the use of his Majesty, his heirs, and successors, and the other moiety to the officer who shall seize and secure the same as aforesaid.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the said first day of July, if the captain or master of any ship, vessel, or boat, in Great Britain or Ireland, shall knowingly permit any tools or utensils, by this Act prohibited to be exported as aforesaid, to be put on board his said ship, vessel, or boat, every such captain or master shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of two hundred pounds of lawful money of Great Britain; to be sued for and recovered in such manner as the penalties by this Act upon persons exporting the said tools and utensils are to be sued for and recovered: and if the said ship, vessel, or boat, belongs to his Majesty, his heirs, or successors, then the captain or master thereof shall not only forfeit the sum of two hundred pounds, to be sued for and recovered as aforesaid, but shall also forfeit his employment, and be incapable of any office or employment under his Majesty, his heirs, or successors.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any Customer, Comptroller, Surveyor, Searcher, Waiter, or other officer of the Customs in Great Britain, or any officer of the Revenue in Ireland, shall take, or knowingly or willingly suffer to be taken, any entry outward, or shall sign any cocker, warrant, or sufferance, for the shipping or exporting of any of the said tools or utensils by this Act prohibited to be exported, or shall knowingly or willingly permit or suffer the same to be done, directly or indirectly, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this Act, every such Customer, Comptroller, Surveyor, Searcher, Waiter, or other officer of the Customs of Great Britain, or officer of the Revenue in Ireland, shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of two hundred pounds of lawful money of Great Britain; to be sued for and recovered, as aforesaid, and shall also forfeit his office, and be incapable of holding any office or employment under his Majesty, his heirs, or successors.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any person or persons, from and after the said first day of July, shall collect, obtain, or have, in his, her, or their custody or possession any such tools or implements as aforesaid, or any tools or implements used in the woollen or silk manufactures of this Kingdom, or any parts or parcels thereof, and complaint shall be made upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses before any Justice or Justices of the Peace, that there is reason to believe that such person or persons have or hath collected, obtained, or got into his, her, or their custody or possession, such tools or implements as aforesaid, or parts or parcels thereof, with intent to export the same to some other port or place than Great Britain or Ireland; then, and in such case, it shall and may be lawful to and for the Justice or Justices of the Peace unto whom such complaint shall be made, to issue his warrant or warrants, not only to seize all such tools or implements, and parts or parcels thereof, but also to bring the person or persons so complained of before him or them, or some other of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the same county, riding, division, or city; and if, when such person or persons shall be so brought before such Justice or Justices, he, she, or they, shall not give such an account of the use or purpose to which such tools, utensils, or parts or parcels thereof, are intended to be appropriated, as shall be satisfactory to the Justice or Justices before whom he, she, or they, shall be brought as aforesaid, then, and in such case, it shall and may be lawful to and for such Justice or Justices, not only to cause all such tools or utensils, or parts or parcels thereof, which shall have been seized as aforesaid, to be detained, but also to bind the person or persons so charged to appear at the next assizes, general gaol delivery, or quarter sessions of the peace for the county, city, riding, or division, where such offence shall be committed, with reasonable sureties for his, her, or their appearance; and in case such person or persons shall refuse or neglect to give such security, then, and in such case, it shall and may be lawful to and for such Justice and Justices to commit the person or persons so refusing to the county gaol, there to be kept until the next assizes, or next quarter sessions of the county, city, riding, or division, where such commitment shall be, at the election of such Justice of the Peace, and until he, she, or they, shall be delivered by due course of law: and in case any such person or persons shall be convicted upon any indictment or information against him, her, or them, at such assize or general gaol delivery, or quarter sessions of the peace as aforesaid, of collecting, obtaining or getting into his, her, or their custody or possession, such tools or utensils, or parts or parcels thereof, with such intent as aforesaid; then, and in such case, the person or persons so offending, shall, for every such offence, not only forfeit and lose all such tools and utensils, and parts and parcels thereof, which shall be so seized and detained, but also the sum of two hundred pounds of lawful money of Great Britain; to be recovered by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, or in the Court of Session in Scotland, or in any of the four courts at Dublin respectively, wherein no essoine, protection, privilege, wager of law, or more than one imparlance, shall be allowed.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That one moiety of the respective forfeitures by this Act inflicted upon offenders against the same, shall, when recovered, go and be applied to the use of his Majesty, his heirs, and successors, and the other moiety to the use of the person or persons who shall sue and prosecute for the same respectively.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any suit or action shall be commenced against any person for what he shall do in pursuance of this Act, such action shall be commenced within six months after the fact committed; and the person, so sued, may file common bail, or enter a common appearance, and plead the general issue, not guilty; and may give this Act, and the special matter, in evidence; and if the plaintiff or prosecutor shall become nonsuit, or suffer discontinuance, or if a verdict pass against him or her, or if upon demurrer, judgment be given against the plaintiff, the defendant shall recover treble costs.

The following Speech of Lord North, on presenting the American papers to the House of Commons, 7th of March, 1774, was, through accident, omitted to be inserted in its proper place; see folio 39..

These papers, his Lordship said, consist of copies and extracts of letters from the Commander of the forces, and from the several Governors in America, of threats and prophetic warnings to the gentlemen to whom the tea lately sent over by the East India Company was consigned; of copies of letters from the several consignees at Boston to a ring-leader of the faction in that town; of votes and resolves of the town of Boston, previous to the arrival of the tea; of narratives of transactions that happened after the arrival; of a Petition from the consignees to the Council of Massachusetts, praying that they and their property might be taken under the protection of Government; with the absolute denial of the Council to interfere in the business; of notes from the India House; of letters from the Admiral commanding in Boston harbour; and from Lt. Col. Leslie, of the sixty-fourth regiment, in barracks at Castle William; of a Proclamation of the Governor's against the factious meetings of the inhabitants, which they treated with the most insolent contempt; of copies of treasonable printed papers; of the transactions of the Massachusetts Council, condemning the destruction of the tea, and advising legal prosecutions against the perpetrators, none of whom were publicly known. - So far regards the Massachusetts only.

The papers written and printed from the other Colonies, partake in a great measure of the nature of those already mentioned, and are formed exactly on their model. Besides the regular official information of the different Governors, transmitted to the American Secretary of State, there are copies of many inflammatory fugitive pieces, handbills, alarms, resolves of town meetings, and minutes of Council; but as there was no outrage committed but at Boston, it were unnecessary to trouble the House with all the incendiary scribbling and printing in the different Colonies. It may, however, be necessary to observe, that all the printed and circulated trash were plentifully larded with the fashionable phrases of "desperate plans of despotism; ministerial designs to ruin their liberties; slavery; galling fetters; forging infernal chains; encouraging popery; "despotic rule;" &c. &c.

The letters from the different Governors contain a minute and regular detail of the state of their respective Provinces, and particularly of the capital cities of each, from the first intelligence of the teas being shipped at home till its arrival in America, and return back, or destruction. Above all Governor Hutchinson's letters are the most precise, exact, and circumstantial. He appears to have left nothing untried to preserve the peace of the town, and secure the property of the Company. He appears to have endeavoured, first, to sooth, and when that did not do, to intimidate the faction. It was the Governor who advised the consignees to apply to the Council for their advice, for the preservation of the tea committed to their care, and for their personal security; for two of his sons were the two principal consignees. He also, during the height of their turbulent, unlawful, and seditious assemblings, before the tea was destroyed, sent the Sheriff to the town-meeting at Boston, commanding the people there to break up and depart. When the Sheriff, Mr. Greenleaf, entered the hall, and intimated that he had a paper to read from the Governor, the faction put it to the vote, whether he should be permitted to read it or not? After some debate, permission was granted, and the Sheriff accordingly proclaimed the Governor's orders for them to disperse. The instant he had done speaking, the faction saluted him with an universal hiss, which continued during his stay, and accompanied him in his retreat. The Proclamation was afterwards published in the Gazette, from whence it was copied into the other papers, and commented upon with every mark of contempt and indignity.

Before the arrival of the tea, the Governor appeared to have taken every measure that prudence could suggest, or good policy justify, both for the security of the Company's property and for the safety of the consignees. The principal leader of the faction was applied to; he commanded the Governor's company of cadets; and although it was hardly to be expected that he would muster the cadets to oppose his own party, it was judged necessary to make him acquainted with his duty, and to leave him without excuse. The application, as was foreseen, was without effect; and no steps were taken either to preserve the peace, or to secure the tea. The Selectmen of the town insisted, indeed, that Mr. Rotch, the owner of Captain Hall's ship, should demand a clearance outward from the custom-house, in order that the tea might be carried back; Mr. Rotch, knowing that the demand was unusual, resisted for a long time, till finding his life in danger, he was constrained to comply. The custom-house refused to grant him an illegal clearance. The Governor was then applied to for a pass, without which the vessel would have been stopped at Castle William; but this was also refused to Mr. Rotch, because it was totally inconsistent with the duty of a Governor to grant a pass to a vessel that had not been regularly cleared at the custom-house. This negotiation, therefore, being to a crisis, a town meeting was called about the middle of December last, when an account of the several demands and refusals, with the reasons that prevented the compliance, were very fairly reported by Mr. Rotch; upon which a signal way given, and presently a number of men disguised like Indians, boarded the vessel in which the tea was stowed, broke open the chests, and committed the contents to the sea.

This is a succinct account of the proceedings at Boston, as they happened, in regular succession. It happened that the ship bound for Boston was the first, of those employed by the Company to carry the tea, that reached her destined port. Every civil precaution appears to have been tried, to preserve the property, and the peace of the town; his Majesty's Council, the cadets, and the militia, were all applied to, without effect: the Sheriff read a Proclamation to the faction, commanding them to dissolve their assembly, and this Proclamation was immediately afterwards inserted in the Gazette; both the Sheriff and the Proclamation were treated with insult.

The people of Boston were, on this occasion, fairly tried. the Governor from the beginning had formed the resolution not to call in either the naval or military force, but to trust the management of the whole affair to the conduct of the civil power. The loyal and peaceable people of the mercantile town of Boston, as they have ever affected to be thought, were wholly left to the exercise of their own judgment, and they have given all the world a notable proof of their justice and moderation, by wantonly committing to the waves a valuable commodity, the property of another mercantile body of loyal subjects, when all they had to do, in order to defeat any supposed imposition, was, to keep firm to their resolution, not to buy or to use it. It is but reasonable, however, that they should be made to pay for their outrageous pastime, and be constrained to make good the loss; such an indemnification will be, to them, the more bitter as they must pay for a commodity they did not taste, and which they pretend to abhor.

The other Governors, after the accomplishment of the Bostonian exploit, wisely agreed to suffer the tea to be carried back from whence it came. The consignees refused to receive it, and as no one had ordered it, no one was obliged to hazard his own personal safety, in taking upon himself to be the owner of it. They, therefore, well knowing that what had already happened, was fully sufficient to rouse the resentment of the British people and Parliament, very prudently acquiesced in the applications that were made to them by the respective Captains, for leave to return home, thereby avoiding an unnecessary occasion of involving their Provinces in a troublesome dispute, the issue of which could not but be foreseen.

With respect to Governor Hutchinson, had it not been for his determined resolution not to irritate the people by calling in the assistance of the naval power, the Company's tea might undoubtedly have been saved; but, as the leading men, in the town of Boston, have always made great complaints of the interposition of the army and navy, and not only declared, but insisted that they were the aggressors in every riotous disturbance that has happened among them, it cannot but give pleasure to every unprejudiced mind, that their Governor gave them no such plea on this occasion. They were left wholly to themselves, and their present conduct has given the lie direct to their former declarations.

By an impartial review of all the letters and papers now laid before the House, I may venture to assert, that it will manifestly appear, that nothing can be done there by officers, civil, military or naval, to effectuate the re-establishment of peace in that Province, without additional Parliamentary powers to give weight to their proceedings. They can make no movement, even the most trifling, but what is exclaimed against by the licentious as an infringement of their liberties. It is the settled opinion of the wisest men in that and this country, that no effort in the Colonies by any body of men, civil, or military, can remove the evils that now reign amongst them. It is Parliament, and Parliament only, which can restore that turbulent people to peace, and bring order out of confusion. It is therefore incumbent upon every member of this House, to weigh and consider the purport of the papers that his Majesty has been graciously pleased, unasked, to communicate; and to lay all prejudice aside in forming an opinion of them.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE SEVERAL COLONIES

ON

THE MEASURES ADOPTED BY THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT;

WITH

LETTERS AND OTHER PAPERS

RELATING TO THEIR CONDITION AND AFFAIRS, GENERALLY, IN 1774.

MR. BOLLAN TO THE HON. JOHN ERVING, WM. BRATTLE, JAMES BOWDOIN, AND JAMES PITTS, ESQRS., A COMMITTEE OF THE COUNCIL OF MASSACHUSETTS BAY.

Covent Garden, March 11, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: Late in the evening of Saturday, the 5th instant, I received certain information that on Monday a Message from the King would be sent to the two Houses of Parliament, respecting the late proceedings in North America, and at Boston in particular, accompanied with papers of correspondence; and Lord North, on that day, presented the following Message to the House of Commons; "His Majesty upon information of the unwarrantable practices which have been lately concerted and carried on in North America, and particularly of the violent and outrageous proceedings at the town and port of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, with a view of obstructing the Commerce of this Kingdom, and upon grounds and pretences immediately subversive of the Constitution thereof, has thought fit to lay the whole matter before his two Houses of Parliament, fully confiding as well in their zeal for the maintenance of his Majesty's authority, as in their attachment to the common interest and welfare of all his dominions, that they will not only enable his Majesty effectually to take such measures as may be most likely to put an immediate stop to the present disorders, but will also take into their most serious consideration what further regulations and permanent provisions may be necessary to be established for better securing the execution of the laws, and the just dependence of the Colonies upon the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain."

In consequence of my information, after doubting some time on Sunday what was the best step now to be taken, and being sensible that Ministers, after taking as much time to prepare their own measures as they think fit, sometimes so far hurry on execution as to distress their opponents; for this and other reasons, to check in some measure, if I could, the torrent in this case, I resolved to prepare, and publish with all possible despatch, my late Petition to the King, with illustrations; and thereupon went into the city to the printer, who, during some time past, had been employed in my intended vindication of the Colonies, a laborious work, requiring great care; after collecting numerous proper materials, told him he must lay that aside for the present, and prepare for printing a short pamphlet, with all speed, promising to make proper allowance to the men who should work out of common hours, directing him to send the next morning for part of the copy; when, going about it, and attending to it without intermission, the copy was completed on Tuesday, before dinner; and, by my Clerk's attendance, and my going to the printer's in person, several times, and afterwards going late farther into the city, to two of the principal publishers, in consequence of Mr. Almon's telling me at file printer's it was too late for the next day's publication, I prevailed on them to publish it on Wednesday morning, and now send herewith enclosed two copies of it.

FOURTH SERIES.

On Tuesday evening, having before heard of nothing but hostile intentions, I was informed that American affairs would come on in the House of Commons to day, wherefore on Wednesday I resolved to prepare, as far as the uncertain state of the affair would then permit, for petitioning that House, my chief intent being to ascertain the rights of the Colonies, a point the least objectionable, though in its nature efficacious; and for that purpose gain admittance at least to lay before the House authentic copies from the records of many letters, patent royal, passed for acquiring and settling new dominion in America, never yet laid before them, thereby proving that the several Princes, numerous Nobles, and other worthy persons who were concerned in the settlement of the Plantations, as well as the actual Settlers, were very far from understanding that they who by their merits should enlarge the public dominion, should thereby, contrary to natural justice, lessen their own liberties; and, after preparing a few general articles that might possibly serve on the occasion, in order to have my Petition presented when ready, and proper in point of time, I waited yesterday morning on General Conway, who had in the House denied the authority of Parliament to tax America. On proposing the presentation to him, he answered it would be more proper for him to support the petition, expressing clearly his readiness to do it; at the same time complaining that violence and disorders in the Colonies laid difficulties in the way of their friends obtaining the relief they wanted. Waiting upon Sir George Savile, he declined the presentation because he was in honour obliged various ways to apply himself closely to another business. He told me Lord North had put such an insidious question to him respecting the measures proper for the House to take, that after giving him a suitable answer, he directly went out of the House, out of resentment, as I understand. From him I went directly to the mansion house, where the Lord Mayor very readily and kindly promised to present my Petition. From him, pursuant to his recommendation, I went to Mr. Alderman Oliver, whom I found very intelligent and candid, and who satisfied me that my Petition might be presented at a more distant day than I had supposed, when a certain object of opposition would have arisen. He told me the West India merchants had agreed to meet on Thursday next, in order to oppose any injurious measures; agreeing with me that this was one common cause of all the Colonies. I had the pleasure of being informed by the Lord Mayor that the spirit of resentment in their House was abated, and he seemed to think in no small degree, several of the members to whom he had spoke having changed their minds.

I had, since being refused to be heard before the Lords of the Committee, made as great progress in my examination and observations on the most material parts of the Governor's letters, with intent to complete and publish them with my petition, as the time and avocations would permit, when the late proceedings in Parliament began, which obliged me to change my measures, and publish the Petition as you will find it, which I understand, has not been unserviceable, and the affair of the letters, you are sensible, must give way to others more important during their continuance. It is no easy matter to prepare a Petition in efficacious terms for the Province service, and agreeable to the different sentiments of those who are to support it, and, moreover, least liable to objection from your adversaries; wherefore to this, and the other difficulties attending this important business, I must now go on with my preparations.

I am, gentlemen, with the greatest respect, for you, and the other members of the Council, your most obedient and most humble servant,
W. BOLLAN.

The Hon. John Erving, Wm. Brattle, James Bowdoin, and James Pitts, Esqrs.

MR. BOLLAN TO THE COMMITTEE.

Covent Garden, March 15, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: Having begun my Petition to the House of Commons upon a larger scale, after conferring with proper members, I reduced it to as small compass as the sufficiency and perspicuity of proper matter would permit, and now send a copy of it. As soon as completed yesterday morning, waiting on the Lord Mayor, in order to its presentation, I found him less spirited for the business than before, and inclined to postpone the presentation; whereupon I observed that it was uncertain what measures the Ministers might take; that some time past, when a Petition from another Colony was prepared and proposed to be presented in season, Administration got it delayed, and afterwards, when offered, objected with success, that it came out of time; and that, in point of fairness to all parties, as well as safety to my constituents, I earnestly desired my Petition might be presented that day, before the House proceeded to their consideration at large on the state of American affairs. He at length assented, and received my Petition accordingly; having in the course of what passed observed Ministers could carry any point they were set upon; to which I answered, that was no sufficient reason, I thought, for ceasing opposition and despairing of the Commonwealth, wherein he agreed. Then going directly to Mr. Oliver's, and finding he was gone to the House, I went thither, when, being informed, that the Lord Mayor was not come, nor General Conway, for whose use I carried a copy of my Petition, I went up into the great committee room to speak with Alderman Oliver, whom I found in the chair, which, upon speaking with him, I was satisfied he could not leave in season to assist or second the Lord Mayor; then returning towards the lobby the Under Doorkeeper met me and told me the Lord Mayor had come out of the House and inquired for me; whereupon, as soon as possible, I got the Door-keeper to send in a message to let his Lordship know I was waiting in the lobby, where I staid a considerable time in painful suspense, till Sir Joseph Mawbey came out and told me the Lord Mayor had desired him to present my Petition, being unacquainted with the usual proper proceeding; and after saying a few things, he went into the House, and soon coming out again told me the Speaker had endeavored to throw cold water upon my Petition; but after making proper inquiry into the nature of the Council, on whose behalf I petitioned, he directly returned into the House with the Spirit proper for presenting it. After waiting a considerable time he came out again and told me he had got my Petition so far allowed and accepted, as to be laid upon the table, where it would lie ready to be taken up when any prejudicial measure should require it. Upon asking what countenance the House shewed when it was read, he answered, favourable by many, and the question being put, whether it should be received, a considerable majority answered in the affirmative. The Minister, I found, with another member, setting on the Treasury bench, at first rather ridiculed the Petition; however, he did not chuse to divide the House upon the question. Among other things Sir Joseph told me, Governor Pownall objected that it did not appear I was the proper agent for the Council; to whom he answered, my authority would be shown when I appeared, and produced my proofs; afterwards adding, they were once very near calling me in. Upon the whole Sir Joseph behaved extremely well, with the spirit and despatch proper for presenting my Petition immediately before the House proceeded upon American affairs. The reading and admittance of my Petition in a full House is a favourable circumstance.

It is impossible for me in the present interesting state of the Province affairs, and my concerns therein, to acquaint you with many particulars otherwise desirable; however I must by no means longer omit mentioning what gave me great pleasure, to wit, that when your affairs were considered in the House of Lords, the right of Parliament to tax the Americans was not only denied by Lord Camden, esteemed by many the most able judge of this question in the Kingdom, but he, according to my information, with great learning and historical knowledge, shewed that taxation and representation were inseparable companions; among other things reading in the House a passage in Mr. Locke, heretofore cited by me, in some public essay, for this purpose.

In case I had in my Petition expressly opposed the Parliament's right of taxation, instead of stating the rights of the Colonies incompatible with it, in order to give proper proofs of the same, and so laying the foundation of opposition, my Petition would certainly have been rejected.

March 17th

I wrote in haste on the 15th inst., in order to despatch my letters, with a copy of my Petition and the duplicates, by the Captains Lloyd and Scott, who, I understood, were on the point of sailing; but going into the city, at noon, I found their departure was postponed for a short time. At present I have not much to add, and less time for doing it. On Monday, having risen early, and been in a constant state of hurry and anxiety until my Petition was admitted, I then went away directly, to get necessary sustenance, getting home about five, having before coming away declined writing to the Speaker, as the Door-keeper had proposed, for the favour of leave of admittance into the House. According to my information, next morning great disappointment took place by the principal persons, men of the greatest weight in the opposition, not speaking at all; and Lord North's drift seemed to be to adopt the ancient maxim divide et impera, and to make the town of Boston the chief source of all the opposition made by the Colonies to the measures of Government, and by punishment suitable to this idea to make an example of them, in terrorem, to others, supposing the old maxim, proximus ardet, would not take place in the Colonies.

Lord Camden was not at home yesterday when I went to wait on him, whereupon I left, to be delivered to him, at his return, a copy of my Petition to the House of Commons, and a printed copy of my late Petition to the King, &c. American affairs being appointed to come on in the House of Lords to-day, upon my waiting on him this morning his Lordship told me his servant informed him Serjeant Baldwin had left some papers for him, which he had not looked into, and he was in such haste, that I had bare time to inform him that Calias, which, you are sensible, was obtained by conquest, at the expense of much blood and treasure, had, in process of time, right of election of two members to set in Parliament, to which he seemed quite a stranger, the knowledge whereof after making many researches in vain, I had at length acquired. The rights of taxation being hastily mentioned, he said an Act of Parliament hung over his head, and, at my coming away, said he should be glad to see me any other time; and, as the Ministers proceed against you by Bill, that will give opportunity, of course, for my waiting on him.

I am, with the greatest respect, for you, gentlemen, and all the other honorable members of the Council, your most obedient and most humble servant,
W. BOLLAN.

The Hon. John Erving, Wm. Brattle James Bowdoin, and James Pitts, Esqrs.

ARTHUR LEE, TO RICHARD H. LEE.

London, March 18th, 1774.

DEAR BROTHER: The affairs of America are now become very serious; the Ministry are determined to put your spirit to the proof. Boston is their first object. On Monday the 14th, it was ordered in the House of Commons, that leave be given to bring in a Bill "for the immediate removal of the officers concerned in the collection "and management of his Majesty's duties of Customs from "the town of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, "in North America; and to discontinue the landing and "discharging, lading and shipping of goods, wares and mer- "chandise, at the said town of Boston, or within the har- "bour thereof."

If the Colonies in general permit this to pass unnoticed, a precedent will be established for humbling them by degrees, until all opposition to arbitrary power is subdued. The manner, however, in which you should meet this violent act should be well weighed. The proceedings of the Colonies, in consequence of it, will be read and regarded as manifestos. Great care, therefore, should be taken to word them unexceptionably and plausibly. They should be prefaced with the strongest professions of respect and attachment to this country; of reluctance to enter into any dispute with her; of the readiness you have always shown, and still wish to show, of contributing according to your ability, and in a constitutional way, to her support; and of your determination to undergo every extremity rather than submit to be enslaved. These things tell much in your favour with moderate men, and with Europe, to whose interposition America may yet owe her salvation, should the contest be serious and lasting. In short, as we are the weaker, it becomes us to be suaviter in modo, however we may be determined to act fortiter in re. There is a persuasion here that America will see, without interposition, the ruin of Boston. It is of the last importance to the general cause, that your conduct should prove this opinion erroneous. If once it is perceived that you may be attacked and destroyed by piecemeal, actum est, every part will in its turn feel the vengeance which it would not unite to repel, and a general slavery or ruin must ensue. The Colonies should never forget Lord North's declaration in the House of Commons, that he would not listen to the complaints of America until she was at his feet. the character of Lord North, and the consideration of what surprising things he has effected towards enslaving his own country, makes me, I own, tremble for ours. Plausible, deep, and treacherous, like his master, he has no passions to divert him, no pursuits of pleasure to withdraw him, from the accursed design of deliberately destroying the liberties of his country. A perfect adept in the arts of corruption, and indefatigable in the application of them, he effects great ends by means almost magical, because they are unseen. In four years he has overcome the most formidable opposition in this country, from which the Duke of Grafton fled with horror. At the same time he has effectually enslaved the East India Company, and made the vast revenue and territory of India, in effect, a Royal patronage. Flushed with these successes, he now attacks America; and certainly, if we are not firm and united, he will triumph in the same manner over us. In my opinion, a general resolution of the Colonies to break off all commercial intercourse with this country, until they are secured in their liberties, is the only advisable and sure mode of defence. To execute such a resolution would be irksome at first, but you would be amply repaid, not only in saving your money, and becoming independent of these petty tyrants, the merchants, but in securing your general liberties.

You are, however, more capable of judging what is proper and practicable. My great wish is to see you firm and united. Adieu.

Yours affectionately,
ARTHUR LEE.

Richard H. Lee.

MR. BOLLAN TO THE COMMITTEE.

Covent Garden, March 22, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: Contrary to my information, received from several officers of the House of Commons, the forenoon of the 10th, who supposed American affairs would be deferred to some day this week, the Bill, of which you have a copy enclosed, was brought into the House in the afternoon, and being read, no debate ensued; whereupon, yesterday was appointed for the second reading. Before that took place Sir Joseph Mawby moved that I might be heard in support of my Petition, which being opposed by Administration, was refused, chiefly on this ground, that it did not relate to the Bill depending; but in the course of the opposition it was allowed there would be a time for my being heard upon a proper Petition. Sir George Savile, who first came out of the House, told me he had endeavoured to have the time ascertained when I should be heard; but this was not done. Afterwards, the Lord Mayor coming out with Sir Joseph Mawby, they declared their readiness to promote another Petition, after giving me some farther information hereupon. Before they came out the Bill had been read a second time, and committed for to-morrow, when I expect the debates will take place. As soon as this hasty letter is concluded I shall apply myself to the preparation of another Petition, proper, and least objectionable.

Enclosed you have copies of the past proceedings in the House, received from the proper officer.

I am, with the greatest respect for you, gentlemen, and the other members of the Council, your most obedient and most humble servant,

W. BOLLAN.

the Hon. John Erving, Wm. Brattle, James Bowdoin, and James Pitts, Esqrs.

MR. BOLLAN TO THE COMMITTEE.

Covent Garden, March 23, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: I am just returned from the House of Commons, to which I went in order to have my second Petition, whereof you have a copy enclosed, presented, before the House was resolved into a Committee of the Whole, for their consideration of the Bill for the port of Boston; although in some doubt whether this was the proper time for presenting my Petition, which opposed the principle of the Bill, being determined to petition as soon as possible, to prevent your adversaries saying I did not come in season. When there I shewed my Petition to Sir George Savile, having not found him at home, in order to his supporting the motion for its admission. Upon his perusal he said he saw nothing at all improper in it, observing at the same time that he was not well acquainted with the forms of proceedings. Soon after I met with Sir Joseph Mawby, who, on reading the Petition, and being informed of what Sir George had said, readily declared he would present it before the House went into a Committee. Afterwards he came out and told me that he had shewed it to the Speaker, spoken to the Clerk of the House, and consulted the friends of the Petition, upon the proper time of its presentation, and that it was agreed on all hands that my Petition, opposing the principle of the Bill, could not be regularly presented now, because the Bill itself might be lost in the Committee; but the proper time of presenting it, wherein the Speaker agreed it would be admissible, was before the third reading of the Bill; and so the matter rests at present. While at the House I understood the objection mentioned to me some days ago by Sir Joseph, gained ground, to wit, that the Bill as it now stands gave no election for paying the value of the tea destroyed, and thereby preventing the shutting up of the port, but proposed to shut it up directly, to be opened on condition of future payment, which would be a precipitate, compulsory proceeding, without any certain necessity; and it seemed to me not improbable that some temperament of this nature might take place to day. However 'tis necessary for me to save the present ship, to despatch what littler! have said, without waiting for any thing more.

I am, with the greatest respect for you, gentlemen, and the other members of the Council, your most obedient and most humble servant,

W. BOLLAN.

The Hon. John Erving, Wm. Brattle, James Bowdoin, and James Pitts, Esqrs.

A GENTLEMAN IN LONDON TO A FRIEND IN ANNAPOLIS, MD.

London, March 31, 1774.

DEAR SIR: This covers a Bill brought into the House of Commons by Lord North, against the town of Boston, for destroying the tea sent out on account of the East India Company; by its complexion you may judge what will be the fate of America. I am sorry to see what little opposition it met with in the House of Commons - not a division on the passage of the bill! In the House of Lords it met with more opposition; a number of able speakers opposed it, but the court party prevailed. You may be surprised that there was not a Petition presented to the House sooner than there was; the Americans residing here waited for the body of merchants to take the lead, but they acted on this important occasion as in every other matter of this nature heretofore.

I suppose there will be a general Congress from the Colonies; - on their deliberations the fall or rise of your country will depend. You will undoubtedly form some resolutions, and strictly adhere to them, or give up the dispute and submit at once to English tyranny. A determination to stop the exports of your country, and not import any British manufactures, will in two years restore you to liberty, and draw poverty and ruin on the mother country.

I have enclosed you the Petition to the King, with the names of those who signed it.

Lord North made a motion in the House of Commons for leave to bring in a bill to regulate the government of the Massachusetts Bay, the substance of which, I understand, is to invest such powers in the Governor as to enable him to hear, determine, and turn out at pleasure; in fact, to be as arbitrary as he pleases.

If Boston acquiesces, the next step will probably be to punish Philadelphia for sending the tea back, and thus, by crushing each respectively, enforce a submission by the whole, to any tax Britain may please to impose.

May heaven protect you, and direct your resolutions to the happiness of your country may you be free from the chains of slavery intended by a wicked and arbitrary Government.

MR. BOLLAN TO THE COMMITTEE.

Covent Garden, April 2, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: After being several times assured Jenkins would not take away his bag before Monday, my servant is now, after two, returned in great haste to let me know his bag might be taken away in a few hours, which obliges me to discontinue writing a letter of information at large, and in few words to inform you that after various difficulties my Petition to the House of Lords was presented, on which considerable debate ensued, and at length it was determined that I should be heard in support of my Petition, and was called in, and heard accordingly. That soon after the Bill passed to be enacted that Lord North has not yet brought in his Bill for the better regulating of the government of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, North Amerwa, for which leave was given on the 28th ult -- that after being at the offices of the two Houses of Parliament this morning, calling at the Secretary of State's office, I saw General Gage, who, in a few minutes, Mr. Pownall told me was Governor of Massachusetts Bay, or at least, would be appointed by the King to-morrow.

I am with the greatest respect for you, gentlemen, and the other members of the Council, your most obedient and most humble servant,
W. BOLLAN.

The Hon. John Erving, Wm. Brattle, James Bowdoin, and James Pitts, Esqrs.

MR BOLLAN TO THE COMMITTEE.

Covent Garden, April, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: The present recess of the two Houses of Parliament, during the holidays, admits of resuming a more regular, though brief, relation of what has passed since the account given of what was done in the former part of the day on the 23d ult., by letter then despatched, but came an hour too late for Captain Scott. In the evening the House, after resolving themselves into a Committee, went through the Boston Bill, filled up the blanks, and made several amendments; and then, the Speaker resuming the chair, the same were reported, and ordered to be engrossed, and to be read the third time the next day. At nine in the evening a gentleman belonging to the House of Commons, to my great concern, acquainted me with this precipitate proceeding, the mention whereof next morning to some of the principal members who were not down at the House, having reserved themselves, I suppose, for the third reading, so surprised them they could scarce credit the account I gave of the matter, but soon found it true.

My business was now to get my Petition presented in season, which was attended with some fresh difficulties; Sir Joseph Mawby was gone out of town, expecting the Bill would not be read the third time till Monday following, when he would be ready to present it. Some of the chief members in the House were more inclined to support than present the Petition. After various applications Mr. Alderman Crosby undertook to present it. He attended accordingly, shewed my Petition to the Speaker, and afterwards, in point of fairness, to Lord North, and other members of different inclinations, without any objection being made to it. After waiting a considerable time Lord North went out of the House, and I was soon informed the Boston Bill would not come on till next day, and presently Alderman Crosby coming out, told me what he had done, adding that he would stay and present it that evening, if opportunity offered. Afterwards, while I was steeped out of the lobby through necessity, he left the House likewise. The next morning waiting upon him, he said the friends of the Petition were inclined to put off the presentation to that day, and that it had been objected that I was not Agent for the Council, upon which I shewed him my authorities, wherewith he was fully satisfied, appearing from the first well disposed to present and support the Petition; and before the third reading he offered it to the House, stated distinctly all the particulars of its contents, and added, that having seen my authority from the Council he was fully satisfied with it, and doubted not the House would be so likewise upon my producing the same; but the Ministry having no inclination that I should come here, opposed the Petition's being brought up, and a debate thereupon ensuing the Alderman, as he told me, was well supported, but on a division of the House the Ministry had a great majority against me; and in the evening, after the merits of the Bill were debated, it passed.

The next day it had the first reading in the House of Lords, and was appointed to be read the second time on Monday. On Saturday morning I went to Lord Temple's, in hopes that he would be inclined to oppose the Bill. He being rode out, and his return uncertain before noon, I took the liberty to write to him, enclosing copies of my two Petitions, and praying the favour of leave to wait on him: In the afternoon his Lordship by a civil message, in writing, informed me he would receive me. On the next morning, at ten o'clock, when waiting on him, a free conference respecting the state of America began, and continued for an hour and more, wherein he discovered friendly sentiments towards the Colonies in several respects, but seemed to have a firm opinion of the unlimited authority of Parliament; granting indeed, at the same time, that no benefit could arise from exercising the power of taxation. He said he had of late declined attendance in Parliament, mentioning the state of his health as a reason for it; and I have since been told he has not been able to get over a hurt he received by a fall from his horse some time ago. In the evening before, by letter to Lord Camden I took the liberty after informing his Lordship of the proceedings in the House of Commons to lay before him an office copy of the amended Bill as it passed.

On Monday morning being solicitous to make the best preparation for presenting my Petition to the Lords, I first waited on Lord Stair, to whom, when an advocate in Scotland, his title lately descended from the famous Earl of Stair. When the affair of the Colonies was first moved in the Lords' House, pursuant to the King's message, he had espoused your cause, being the first, if I remember aright, who spoke in their behalf. He now appeared very friendly towards you; but on proposing to his Lordship to present my Petition, after observing he had particular reasons for not presenting it, he took notice that it was the proper office of the Secretary of State for the Colonies to present it. On my discovering a doubt of the utility of this proceeding, he immediately mentioned the Duke of Richmond, as the most proper man in all respects. From his Lordship, who had frankly told me twice that if I could get no other person to present it, he would, I went directly down to the Duke's house, who was gone out, and upon the best inquiry found there was no certainty of his return, saving to dinner, about four, and no prospect of seeing his Grace before six, when attending again I found he had been gone down to the House a considerable time, and was told that upon his being informed of my having come to wait upon him, he said he was sorry he had not seen me before he went, and that he was going to his seat in the country the next morning. From thence I went down to the House, where I found he was speaking on your behalf. While there a noble Lord, with whom several years ago I had the honour of some acquaintance, coming out of the House, and passing through the room, hastily came up to me and taking me by the hand, said he had not seen me this age, and so passed on. This suddenly inclined me to think I might prevail with him to present my Petition, but afterwards considering that his Lordship holds one of the most important and valuable offices in the Kingdom, I laid aside the thoughts of applying to him. Admission into the House being impracticable I returned home. Early the next morning my servant was informed by the Duke's porter that his Gracious' carriage was ordered to be ready at nine; whereupon I soon attended. On seeing his Grace I found him extremely well disposed to serve you, and that he had used his best endeavours to do it in the course of the debate, which, he told me, lasted till ten o'clock. As to presenting my Petition, he said that was the proper business of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and afterwards favoured me with some farther advice. From him I went to Lord Stair, who, among other things, told me he spoke with Lord Dartmouth, touching the presentation of my Petition, and advised me directly to apply to him, in order to its being presented the next day, before the third reading of the Bill; whereupon going to Lord Dartmouth's he was gone out, and on going a second time found it very uncertain whether I could see him that day; wherefore in the evening I wrote to his Lordship, enclosed my Petition, with my authority from the Council, and prayed the favour of his Lordship to present it in season. Attending the next morning, I met with such difficulty in seeing his Lordship as obliged me to urge the necessity of speaking a few words with him immediately, whereby gaining admittance, I mentioned the contents of my letter as the reason for my application; whereupon he seemed less inclined to the presentation than Lord Stair supposed, and objecting to the sufficiency of my authority, said the Council was an annual body, though the members chosen were generally the same, and that the Council's vote of last June, appointing persons to correspond with me as their Agent, was not a regular appointment of me for that purpose; to which I answered that in this case no set form of words was requisite, and that the Council's express declaration of my being their agent is reason sufficient as well for this purpose as any larger form of words; that the former vote manifested the nature of the trust reposed in me, and that the latter vote clearly shewed the continuance of it. He did not seem fully satisfied with my reasoning; however, having the Petition, with the two votes, in his hand, he did not refuse to present it, but said he was going to the King with a Petition of some natives of America to his Majesty, not to give his royal assent to the Bill; that it was uncertain how long he might wait before he should be admitted to see his Majesty, and how long he might be detained by him, so that it was uncertain whether he should be down at the House in time to present it. This reason, added to his Lordship's objection to the sufficiency of my authority, made me readily take back my papers;

From him I went directly to Lord Stair, who seemed surprised at the difficulty I had met with; and having before settled my Petition to his mind, and now acquainted him with Lord Dartmouth's objection to my authority, after considering the matter, he undertook to present it, in such manner as clearly shewed he was determined to support it. Upon his presenting it a considerable debate ensued, wherein Lord Camden gave the most sensible and spirited support to its admissibility. Other particulars cannot now be mentioned; however at length the debate ceasing, as I suppose, an officer who came out of the House on some other occasion, said the matter was all over; nevertheless, when I was preparing to come away the proper officer came out of the House, and calling me by name introduced me. Upon my standing up at the bar the Lord Chancellor told me I had petitioned the House to be heard against the Bill depending, and that the Lords had agreed to hear me; and, after reminding me of the great dignity of the House of Peers, observed it was necessary for me to confine myself to the matter in question; to whom, having answered that I should endeavour to behave in the most proper manner, and that if I erred, I should with great pleasure stand corrected, I proceeded to set forth the great importance of the port of Boston, wherein as to the number of ships of late employed by the constant trade between it and Great Britain, I had not long since received useful knowledge from Mr. Temple, whom I described by his late offices without naming him; then mentioned the very great number of entries inwards and outwards, which appeared with certainty upon a trial, wherein I was many years ago concerned; adding that about thirty-five years ago Mr. Dinwiddie, who was a long time Surveyor General of the Customs for the South district, afterwards Governor of Virginia, told me that the annual value of the goods imported from Great Britain into the port of Boston, amounted to £600,000 sterling, which exceeded the value of the goods imported into any other American port, save that of Kingston, in Jamaica, where the amount of the imports were much increased for the sake of the Spanish trade.

I have not time to state all particulars, and it practicable I do not perceive any great benefit would thence arise. Below you have a note of some things taken in haste, as proper, with others, to be mentioned and explained; and it may not be amiss to take notice that on coming to the fishery, I observed to their Lordships that I was as well acquainted with the rise of the English and French navies as my poor abilities would permit; and after touching upon the agreeable nature of the present business to the French, I observed, that in my humble opinion, it would be a pleasure to them to see the English begin to lay difficulties in the way of carrying on their fishery. Upon coming to a short pause, when preparing, if I remember aright, to speak to the great hardships imposed by the Bill on the numerous Boston and British merchants and manufacturers, a noble Lord stood up and observed to this effect, that I had petitioned as Agent for the Council, but did not confine myself to their concerns; whereupon the noble Lord who, on coming out of the House the day before spoke to me kindly, and who, on my standing up at the bar, changing his seat, came and sat near me, cried out with others, go on, go on. After observing that the innocence of the merchants was a fact stated in my Petition, and that during the long time I had lived at Boston, the body of merchants never frequented the town meetings, but, like other merchants, were a peaceable set of men, and that they considered themselves as a distinct order, of which I had the proper evidence, to wit, a letter from a committee of eight, written to me respecting the great difficulties attending their commerce since the late unhappy difference. A short time after my coming out of the House, the Bill passed to be enacted.

On the Friday preceding, an intelligent member of the lower House assured me it was a point determined by Government that the Bill should pass, and receive the Royal assent on Thursday. This account was riot long after confirmed by a noble Lord, who nevertheless agreed with me, that my business was to go on. "I had not the least expectation of succeeding in my opposition to the Bill, but considered, first, that the establishment of the right of your being heard was beneficial; second, that the Lords having the supreme judicial authority of the Kingdom, together with the legislative, their admittance of the sufficiency of my authority to be heard on the Council's behalf, may probably promote the like admittance into the Commons' House, in order to oppose two other disagreeable bills, which I am told Lord North intends to bring in, having had a constant view towards this point while speaking before the Lords, and was therefore particularly careful to avoid every occasion of censure; and upon inquiry was informed by a noble Lord that I had not given the least offence to any one member in the House.

During the former part of the proceedings in Parliament, subsequent to the King's message, I had considerable expectation that the honorable India merchants would assist and strengthen your defence; afterwards that the manufacturers in the principal towns, who, according to my information, were alarmed, and stirring, would make their opposition to the Bill for shutting up the port; but all failed, even the London merchants declining their opposition to it. The Duke of Richmond told me that Barclay, a quaker, had presented some petitions without mentioning particulars; so that no other Petition but my own was presented, save a Petition of several natives of North America, which was presented to both Houses, admitted, and ordered to lie upon the table. The number of persons who signed the Petition to the House of Commons was seventeen; and the petitioners to the Lords were twenty-nine; this Petition was well drawn; but a noble Lord, who was your faithful and active friend from first to last, told me on these different occasions that this Petition had hurt the cause, by reason of the small number of petitioners, considering how numerous the natives of North America, residing in this metropolis, were, whence those Lords who contended for the Bill drew this prejudicial argumment, "that the voice of the country was plainly against you."

If agreeable to the honorable the Council, it may not be amiss, I conceive, for them to give me authority to make, in their behalf, proper grateful acknowledgment to their principal friends in each House, for their kind endeavours to serve them, desiring at the same time that no public mention may be made of any of their names.

I am with the greatest respect for you, gentlemen, and the other members of the Council, your most obedient and most humble servant,

W. BOLLAN.

The Hon. John Erving, Wm. Brattle, James Bowdoin, and James Pitts, Esqrs.

B. FRANKLIN TO THOMAS CUSHING, SPEAKER,

London, April 2. 1774

SIR: My last was of the 22d past, since which I have received none of your favours.

I mentioned that the Bill brought into Parliament for punishing Boston, met with no opposition. It did, however, meet with a little before it got through, some few of the members speaking against it in the House of Commons, and more in the House of Lords. It passed, however, by a very great majority in both, and received the Royal assent on Thursday the 31st, past. You will have a copy of it from Mr. Lee.

In mine of February second, I informed you, that after the treatment I had received at the Council Board, it was not possible for me to act longer as your agent, apprehending I could, as such, be of no further use to the Province; I have, nevertheless, given what assistance I could, as a private man, by speaking to members of both Houses, and by joining in the Petitions of the natives of America, now happening to be in London, which were ably drawn by Mr. Lee, to be presented separately, to the several branches of the Legislature. They serve, though without other effect, to show our sentiments, and that we did not look on and let the Act pass, without bearing our testimony against it. And, indeed though called Petitions, (for, under another name, they would not have been received,) they are rather Remonstrances and Protests.

By the enclosed extract of a letter from Wakefield, in Yorkshire, to a friend of mine, you will see that the manufactures begin to take the alarm. An other general non-importation agreement is apprehended by them, which would complete their ruin. But great pains are taken to quiet them, with the idea that Boston must immediately submit, and acknowledge the claims of Parliament, for that none of the other Colonies will adhere to them. A number of the principal manufacturers from different parts of the Kingdom, are now in town, to oppose the new duty on foreign linens, which they fear may provoke the Germans to lay discouragements on British manufactures; they have desired me to meet and dine with them on Wednesday next, when I shall have an opportunity of learning their sentiments more fully, and communicating my own.

Some alterations of the Constitution of the Massachusetts Bay, are now hotly talked of, though what they are to be, seems hardly yet settled; one thing mentioned, is the appointment of the Council by mandamus; another, giving power to the Governor to appoint Magistrates, without consent of Council; another, the abolishing of town meetings, or making it unlawful to hold them, till the business to be proposed, has been certified to the Governor, and his permission obtained. A motion has also been made in the House of Commons with a view to conciliate, as is said, that all the Duty Acts should be revised, and in the revision and re-enacting, without formally or expressly repealing the tea duty (which will hurt the dignity of Parliament) sink or omit it, and add an equal value in some of the coasting port duties; and the tea duty being thus taken out of the way, it is supposed will have the salutary effect of preventing the other Colonies from making a common cause with ours. Some advantages in trade, are at the same time to be given to America, for the same purpose, such as carrying wine and fruit directly from Spain and Portugal, without touching in England.

I send enclosed, the proceedings of the Lords on Wednesday, which show their zeal in the business, by appointing a Committee to sit during the recess, and the Easter holidays.

With great esteem, I am, sir, your most obedient and humble servant,

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

Hon. Thomas Cushing, Esq.

Extract of a Letter from the Rev. Mr. T * * * *, of Wakefield, in Yorkshire, (England,) to Dr. Price, dated March 20, 1772; enclosed in the preceding.

Most wretched is the state of the poor about Dewsbury, through the languishing condition of the woollen manufactory. I am told, that the poor's assessment for the last half year, amounted to five shillings in the pound, and for the preceding half year, to three shillings and six pence, and this merely to preserve the poor wretches from absolute starving. Many of the lesser manufacturers have already been broken and sold up, and the rest say, with tears in their eyes, that they expect it will soon be the common fate. Unfortunately, the chief branch of the business of that very populous neighbourhood is making duffil blankets for the North American market, the total stagnation of which trade has chiefly brought on this distress. But the cloth business is almost as bad. I am told, that last Tuesday an account was taken at Leeds, of the cloths that lie there unsold, and they amounted to near nineteen thousand cloths. Measures are also taken to get the number of cloths unsold in the manufacturer's possession, which, it is not doubted, will be found exceedingly great; and this is the time of the year when business should be most brisk. Mr. W * * * * h, I hear, is going up again to London; furnished with these, and other proper facts, to be laid before Parliament. Even the principal manufacturers express their apprehensions, that they must either stop entirely, or soon will be reduced to the common level. In short, the present state of things here is lamentable, and the prospect dismal. Our work people at Wakefield are tolerably well off, for the Milneses do a great deal this year; but at Leeds, I am told, little is done. Several families are already gone from Bristol this spring for North America, and carry their arts and manufactures with them. If they succeed, swarms will follow. All our hope of relief, while suffering the severities of an hungry and cold winter, was the revival of the demand from America. What astonishment and indignation then must we feel at the measures that blast that hope forever, and fill us with apprehensions, that these are but the beginning of sorrows. Such measures for the supporting authority, are ridiculous enough; but alas, we are too miserable to laugh. I was exceedingly affected last Friday, on observing the settled gloom and dejection that sat on the countenances of the poor manufacturers, who brought their cloths to Mr. M * * * 's warehouse. How different from the looks they wore two years ago! In short, our situation here, is a too forcible confirmation of the principles so affectingly exhibited to public attention, in Dr. Price's additional preface to his appeal to the public, &c., which Mr. Lindsey has just sent. Beyond a doubt, if the event he so probably prognosticates takes place, the manufacturing part of the nation will first, and most severely suffer.

ARTHUR LEE TO FRANCIS L. LEE.

Extract.

London, April 2d, 1774.

The Parliament are now bringing the question to that decision, which makes me tremble for the virtue, the character, the liberties of my countrymen. They have passed an act to take away the port of Boston, till every compensation is made for the tea, and perfect obedience is acknowledged. And then it is to be restored in such portions as the King pleases. What makes this more alarming is, that no accusation is brought against the town; no evidence produced to criminate it; and it is avowed, that this is the first step towards reducing all America to an acknowledgment of the right of Parliament to impose taxes upon her, and to a submission to the exercise of that right.

The Americans who are here, have thought it of so much consequence, that they have petitioned the three branches of the Legislature, against passing such a bill; but as you may imagine, without success.

The next proceeding against Boston and the Province, is already announced in the House of Commons. The Selectmen and town-meetings are to be abolished. The Governor is to be endued with the power of calling the citizens together, when, and for what purpose he pleases. They are not to deliberate on any thing, but what he dictates. The Council and Judges are to be suspended at the Governor's pleasure. The constitution of Juries is to be altered, so as to render them more manageable, in finding bills and verdicts against the friends of liberty.

We are just informed that General Gage is going over immediately, with three regiments, as Governor of Massachusetts, and Commander-in-chief; that he is to collect an army about Boston, in order to impose these measures, and reduce the people to entire obedience.

The storm, you see, runs high; and it will require great prudence, wisdom, and resolution, to save our liberties from shipwreck. In my opinion, there ought to be a general Congress of the Colonies; and I think Annapolis would be the place, where it would be less liable to military interruption, than at New York or Philadelphia. If you have virtue enough to resolve to stop, and to execute the resolution of stopping your exports and imports for one year, this country must do you justice.

The shipping, manufactures, and revenue, depend so much on the Tobacco and Carolina Colonies, that they alone, by stopping their exports, would force redress. Such a measure, should be attended with an address to the merchants, manufacturers, and traders of this country, stating the necessity which compels you to a measure injurious to them; professing every thing, to flatter or conciliate them. Such a measure, operating at the general election, next April, would probably produce such a return of members, as would listen to truth and redress, not so much for our grievances, as their own.

This is the only effectual measure I can conceive. If there is not virtue enough for it, I am afraid American liberty is no more; for you may depend upon it, that if they find the chains can be easily imposed, they will make them heavy, and rivet them fast.

It is impossible for me, to describe how much I am grieved at these proceedings, and with what anxiety I look forward to the event. You know I have doubted the virtue of my countrymen. God grant that I may be mistaken; that by a wise, temperate, and firm conduct, they may escape the blow intended, and preserve their freedom. The friends of liberty here, look to your conduct with great anxiety. They consider it as decisive, either to establish or overturn the present plan of despotism.

There is a spirit of violence, injustice, and persecution in Administration, against every active friend of America, which makes that character perilous. I cannot see that rely service can be done here, until the event of these measures is seen, and the popular prejudices begin to abate. I am therefore determined to withdraw myself, by taking the advantage of a favourable opportunity of visiting Rome, for some months; from whence however, I shall return sooner, if any great event should hold out a probability of my being useful.

Mrs. Lee well knows the power of her praise; and how ambitious I should be of meriting it from her. But, alas, I have not the powers of pleasing. Horrors only dwell on my imagination. Public corruption at present, and public calamity for the future, are the dismal objects which incessantly fill my mind. The busy haunts of men furnish more to lament than to rejoice in; to censure, than to praise. They are filled with scenes of false happiness, and real misery, variety of vice and wretchedness. It is rural retirement only, rural innocence, rural tranquility, which excite an uninterrupted flow of ideas, amiable and delightful. In these pleasing scenes, the perturbed spirits settle into a calm, productive of more real happiness than all that the splendour of fortune, all that the pomp of power can bestow. It is there the golden age revives, and all things inspire the spirit of love and delight. My best love awaits her. Remember me at Mount Airy, Stradford, Chantilly, and wherever else you think the mention of my name will not be disagreeable.

Adieu, &c.,

ARTHUR LEE.

Francis L. Lee.

SAMUEL ADAMS TO ARTHUR LEE.

Boston, April 4th, 1774.

MY DEAR SIR: My last letter to you I delivered to the care of Dr. Williamson, who sailed with Captain * * * *, in December last. The General Assembly has since been sitting, and the important subject of the Judges of the Superior Court being made dependent on the Crown for their salaries, was again taken up by the House of Representatives with spirit and firmness. The House had, in a former session, passed divers resolutions expressing their sense of the dangers of this innovation, and declaring, that unless the Justices should renounce the salaries from the Crown, and submit to a constitutional dependence upon the Assembly for their support, they would proceed to impeach them before the Governor and Council. One of them, Mr. Trowbridge, very early in the session, in a letter to the Speaker, expressed his formal compliance with that resolve, which letter was communicated to the House and voted satisfactory. The other four had taken no notice of the resolve. The House, therefore, having waited from the 26th of January, which was the first day of the session, till the 1st of February, then came to a resolution, that unless they should conform to their order on or before the fourth of the same month, further proceedings would be had on such neglect. The effect of this resolve was, that three of them, viz. Hutchinson, (a brother to him who is called Governor) * * * *, and * * * *, made similar declarations to that of Trowbridge, which were also voted satisfactory. Mr. Justice Oliver, who is brother of the Lieutenant Governor, and is connected with the Governor by the marriage of their children, came to a different determination, which occasioned a controversy between the Governor and the two Houses, inserted at large in the enclosed papers. Therein you will see that the Governor has treated the petitions, complaints and remonstrances of the Representative body with haughty contempt. The people view it with deep resentment, as an effect of his independency; whereby he is aliened from them, and become a fitter instrument in the hands of the Ministry to carry into effect their destructive plans. They are irritated to the highest degree, and despair of any constitutional remedy against the oppressions of a corrupt officer, while the Governor, be he who he may, is thus dependent on Ministers of State. They have, ever since the trial of Preston and his soldiers, been murmuring at the conduct of the Superior Court, and me partiality which many say is so clearly discovered in causes between revenue officers and the Government, abettors, and other subjects. Indeed, the House of Representatives, two or three years ago, passed a resolution that such conduct, in several instances, had been observed, as appears in their printed journals. To give you some idea of what the temper of that court has been, a lawyer* of great eminence in the Province, and a member of the House of Representatives, was thrown over the bar a few days ago, because he explained in a public newspaper the sentiments he had advanced in the House when he had been misrepresented; and a young lawyer of great genius in this town, who had passed the regular course of study, (which is more than can be said of the Chief Justice,) has been, and still is, refused by the Governor, only because he mentioned the name of Hutchinson with freedom, and that not in court, but in a Boston town meeting, some years before. And to show you from whence this influence springs, I must inform you, that not long ago the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor, and three of the Judges, which make a majority of the bench, were nearly related; and even now the Governor has a brother there, and is brother-in-law to the Chief Justice. Such combinations are justly formidable, and the people view them with a jealous eye. They clearly see through a system formed for their destruction. That the Parliament of Great Britain is to make laws, binding them in all cases whatsoever; that the Colonies are to be taxed by that Parliament without their own consent; and the Crown enabled to appropriate money for the support of Executive and arbitrary powers; that this leaves their own Assembly a body of very little significance; while the officers of Government, and Judges, are to be totally independent of the legislature, and altogether under the controul of the King's Ministers and Counsellors; and there an union will be effected, as dangerous as it will be powerful; the whole power of Government will be lifted from the hands into which the Constitution has placed it, into the hands of the King's Ministers and their dependants here. This is, in a great measure, the case already; and the consequences will be, angry debates in our Senate, and perpetual tumults and confusions abroad; until these maxims are entirely altered, or else, which God forbid, the spirits of the people are depressed, and they become inured to disgrace and servitude. This has long been the prospect in the minds of speculative men. The body of the people are now in council. Their opposition grows into a system. They are united and resolute; and if the British Administration and Government do not return to the principles of moderation and equity, the evil which they profess to aim at preventing by their rigorous measures, will the sooner be brought to pass, viz. the entire separation and independence of the Colonies.

* Joseph Hawley, Esq., of North Hampton.

- Mr. Cushing obliged me with a sight of your letter to him of the 22d of December last. I think I am not so clearly of opinion as you seem to be, that "the Declaratory Act is a mere nullity," and that therefore, "if we can obtain a repeal of the Revenue Acts from 1764, without their pernicious appendages, it will be enough." Should they retract the exercise of their assumed power, you ask, when will they be able to renew it? I know not when, but I fear they will soon do it, unless, as your worthy brother in Virginia, in a letter I yesterday received from him, expresses himself, "we make one uniform, steady effort, to secure an explicit bill of rights for British America." Let the Executive power and right on each side be therein stipulated, that Britain may no longer have a power or right to make laws to bind us, in all cases whatsoever. While the claim is kept up, she may exercise the power as often as she pleases; and the Colonies have experienced her disposition to do it too plainly, since she in anger made the claim. Even imaginary power beyond right begets insolence. The people here, I am apt to think, will be satisfied on no other terms but those of redress; and they will hardly think they are upon equitable terms with the mother country, while, by a solemn act, she continues to claim a right to enslave them, whenever she shall think fit to exercise it. I wish for a permanent union with the mother country, but only on the principles of liberty and truth. No advantage that can accrue to America from such an union, can compensate for the loss of liberty. The time may come sooner than they are aware of it, when the being of the British nation, I mean the being of its importance, however strange it may appear to some, will depend on her union with America. It requires but a small portion of the gift of discernment, for anyone to foresee that Providence will erect a mighty empire in America; and our posterity will have it recorded in history, that their fathers migrated from an island in a distant part of the world, the inhabitants of which had long been revered for wisdom and valour. They grew rich and powerful; these emigrants increased in numbers and strength. But they were at last absorbed in luxury and dissipation; and to support themselves in their vanity and extravagance, they coveted and seized the honest earnings of those industrious emigrants.

This laid a foundation of distrust, animosity and hatred, till the emigrants, feeling their own vigor and independence, dissolved every former band of connexion between them, and the islanders sunk into obscurity and contempt.

May I whisper in your ear that you paid a compliment to the Speaker when you told him you "always spoke under the correction of his better judgment." I admire what you say to him, and I hope it will have a good impression on his mind; that we shall be respected in England exactly in proportion to the firmness and strength of our opposition. I am sincerely your friend,

SAMUEL ADAMS.

Arthur Lee, Esq.

As Captain Wood is now about to sail there is not time to have copies of the papers; I will send them by the next opportunity. In the mean time I refer you to Dr. Franklin, to whom they are sent by this vessel, S.A.

London, April, 5, 1774.

SIR: Such is my regard for the Americans, that though a native of this country, I do not know how I would wish our rulers to act at this time. The great folly which the Americans are running into is luxury. I hope we shall teach them to be wise, and attend to their real interest.

Though the present resentment seems levelled at Boston, yet as the principle is common to all, viz., the Parliamentary tax, I fear the rest of the Northern Colonies will so far take it as aimed at all, as in some degree to interrupt our commerce with them. This will in every shape be a loss to us; for though it may lessen the profit of their provision vessels, bound to the Spanish and French islands, yet the loss of the sale of the British commodities they carried is ours. This will likewise slow them, that their lasting and certain expectation of profit in commerce, must arise from their own productions; which will naturally send them out of their maritime towns, to attend to the cultivation of their land; and thus they will become every day more independent of us: whereas their profit on the sale of our manufactures to the Spaniards and French, at present diverts many from that true domestic policy.

The French make cloth which pleases the inhabitants of Turkey and Italy better than our iniquitous fabric does. It may perhaps equally please the Americans, and when once commerce has taken a channel, who shall stem the tide! Our cruisers? Can they guard a coast of at least 1500 miles, abounding in creeks and inlets? Wise policy! What is the loss we may thereby sustain? Only of a clear profit of about a million and a half sterling from the Provinces of New England, New York, and Pennsylvania, with our loss from the other Colonies. A trifle to so rich a nation as we are!

I would, as a Politician, divide our American settlements into two classes. The first, and favourite one, the West India islands import hither a million sterling more than they export from us, the whole being almost articles of luxury and consumption. Cotton is, I think, the only rough material they send us. True! but the proprietors spend their fortunes here. If strict inquiry was made, I fancy it would be found that large remittances are made from hence to Madeira and France for wines, and several articles of luxury. I cannot suppose, from what I have seen in these islands, that less than half a million goes that way. What is pretty singular is, that New England exports from hence more than Jamaica does, and that Jamaica exports from hence nearly as much as all the other islands; so that New England and New York export a greater quantity of British manufactures, than all the favourite islands.

New England, New York, and Pennsylvania, send us, in articles of luxury, a few furs, but in cash and bills, at an average of several years, about a million and a half Sterling, and about two hundred thousand pounds in rough materials, to be worked up by our people. While the flags of truce were permitted during the last war, their remittances were much greater. In the year 1760, the balance in our favour, from these three Colonies, was one million nine hundred thousand and odd pounds. Shall we, then, on the whole, call our present conduct wise? What can we do? What would a parent do to reclaim a wayward child, on whose reformation the parent's subsistence greatly depends? Set them down as they were at the close of the last war, and glory in amending an injudicious measure too long pursued.

The word war brings to my mind another transgression of these wicked Bostonians. They very simply imagining that it would be for the advantage of Britain, conquered Cape Breton, in the war before the last; and we restored it, without indemnifying them, so far as I have heard, for their expense. These very miscreants continued a greater number of men constantly in arms, during the last war, than they were required to do; and most cruelly injured us, in a very essential manner, by sending to the Havana a supply of men, without whose aid the city had not been taken, nor our exhausted troops carried off in safety. As a just punishment on the gentleman who conducted that supply, to the ruin of his own fortune, he remained here for several years in a starving condition; and, as if a general infatuation had at that time seized all ranks of people, even the then House of Commons returned thanks to that people for these exertions of Loyalty.

FROM A. GENTLEMAN IN LONDON TO ONE IN NEW YORK.

London, April 5, 1774.

I know not in what language to speak my concern and indication relative to the Boston Port Bill. He who may view it singly, as pointed at a part of America, knows but little of the temper and designs of Administration. - The liberty of this country seems to have expired in their hands. You must summon all the wisdom and firmness of the United Continent of America to preserve yours. I know it to be the design, and an indispensable measure, to divide. - you must, therefore, subdue every prejudice, and bear with every infirmity, among yourselves, that, like a bundle of tender rods, you may not be separately broken to pieces. If the other Provinces do not warmly and firmly support an opposition to this horrid attempt to ruin the town of Boston, you must fall the easy victims of tyranny, and become the most abject slaves of the earth.

Let me entreat you, therefore, to turn a deaf ear to every prejudice and idle report against your suffering fellow subjects; forgive their errors, and think of nothing but mutual defence.

There were a few of us who petitioned Parliament, which was all we could do. The Sheriffs of this city stand at the head of the several petitions; they behaved nobly and spirited on this occasion; for they were first in proposing, and active in the execution of the affair - being the first in rank in the county of Middlesex, where the petitions were signed, their example gave weight and dignity to the proceedings.

I do not hold myself answerable to give reasons why those gentlemen, who formerly spoke the language of America, should have become so few in number; but, for your satisfaction, can assure you that Lord Chatham holds the same friendly sentiments of you. When he is asked why he does not attend the House of Lords, he says, I have talked long enough to the tapestry.*

The times are growing dangerous, and I know they would be glad to have my head; therefore you will excuse my not writing my name - you know my hand.

Yours.

AN APOLOGY FOR THE LATE CONDUCT OF AMERICA.

From the London Gazetteer, April 7, 1774.

There are those who are clearly of opinion that the Commons of Great Britain have no right to give and grant away the property of the Americans.

If such people are consistent in their notions, they must allow that the Americans would be justified in refusing to make good such gifts, and to comply with the requisitions in such grants.

And if they would be justified in refusing to comply with such requisitions, it must also be allowed that there is a line of conduct which it would be proper for them to pursue, and that they are not left altogether without a remedy.

They that are most violent against the Americans for their conduct in the affair of the tea, would do well if they endeavoured, before they passed judgment upon it, to obtain proper ideas of right and wrong, and qualified themselves to distinguish what is unlawful from what is inexpedient only; otherwise they may be led to condemn, as criminal, measures that were ill judged only; and by the false colourings of jesuitical writers, may be induced to believe actions to be unjustifiable and wrong, that were only impolitic and foolish.

* The House of Lords is hung with tapestry.

FOURTH SERIES.

I think the affair of the tea is, in general, rather ill understood; and that the Constitution of England, the fundamental law of property, and the inalienable rights of human nature, seem to have been but little regarded in this dispute, concerning American taxation.

That the Constitution of England has been but little regarded must appear evident when it is considered what the spirit of that Constitution is with respect to its idea of taxation. Does the Legislature levy a tax upon the Kingdom in the same manner, and with the same pretensions as the King of France, by his edict, imposes taxes upon his subjects? - certainly not: The Commons give and grant for themselves and their constituents; the Lords answer for themselves; and the King, by his assent and acceptance of such gifts, binds the parties to fulfil the contract, and gives the deed the sanction of the law. But, say the advocates for American slavery, taxation is a necessary part of legislation; forgetting, or rather infamously misrepresenting the truth, which is that our Constitution knows of no arbitrary legislative money bills, nor acknowledges any other source of taxation but free gift. Can any man, then, have a right to give away another man's property? - certainly not. And the Commons of Great Britain may give and grant away as much as they please of their own property, but they have no right to give and grant away the property of the Americans.

So much touching the constitutional part of this dispute, which I should have thought too obvious to have required any discussion, had there not appeared to have been much pains taken to confound the two very distinct ideas of legislation and taxation, and to persuade mankind that legislation, which is essential to all Government, is nugatory without that power, which is incompatible with the very end of Government itself, an arbitrary and unlimited power of taxation; for the end of Government is the preservation of property, and there can be no property where there is an arbitrary power of taxation; for what property can any man have in that which another can, by right, take from him when he pleases, against his consent?

And that the fundamental law of property has been but little attended to in this dispute, the application of the foregoing observation will sufficiently demonstrate; for what security can the Americans be said to have in their property, if the people of Great Britain can give and grant it away when they please? or rather, can they truly be said to have any property at all, if the people of Great Britain have, under this pretended right of taxation, a power of taking from them, when they please, what they possess, and of using and disposing of it afterwards in what manner they think proper?

But how are the rights of human nature violated in this dispute? To this I answer, that the law of nature, being founded in reason and justice, admits of property; for the better preservation of which, and for the use and enjoyment of it in peace and quiet, men entered into society. If therefore, any man, or body of men, claim a right to take away at pleasure from other men their property, and to dispose of it as they please such claim tends to a dissolution of society, and is repugnant also to the law of nature, as it would place mankind in a worse condition than the state of nature, wherein they had liberty to defend their right against the injuries of others.

Unfortunately also for these flaming advocates for the high prerogative doctrine of a necessary and unlimited right of taxation in the British Legislature, and who assert that the power of legislation in the regulation of commerce, without that of unbounded taxation also, would be nugatory and futile, I must mention the cases of Scotland before the union, and Ireland. If the British Legislature must necessarily be possessed of that power; with respect to America, why was it not necessary with respect to Scotland before the union? and why is it not at this moment necessary with respect to Ireland? If the machine of Government Cannot move on without this power over the poor dispersed, divided and defenceless Americans, how could it so long have moved on without the same power over the rebellious Scots, or the discontented and fickle Irish?

I could mention also the Charters of the Americans, which would be entirely subverted by this right of taxation; but those who, in their utmost pursuits, scruple not to violate the Constitution and polity of Great Britain, the fundamental law of property, and the rights of human nature, will pay, I am afraid, but very little regard to chartered rights.

But what line of conduct is to be observed by that people whose liberties and property are invaded? In answer to this question, I shall beg leave to subjoin a few short extracts from Locke: "Tyranny is the exercise of power without right. Wherever the power that is put in any hands for the Government of a people, and the preservation of their properties, is applied to other ends, and made use of to impoverish, harass, or subdue them to the arbitrary and irregular commands of them that have it, there it presently becomes tyranny, whether those that use it are one or many. Where law ends, tyranny begins. The exceeding the bounds of authority is no more a right in a great than a petty officer; no more justifiable in a King than a Constable; but is so much the worse in him, in that he has more trust put in him. May the commands then of a Prince be opposed? To this I answer, that force is to be opposed to nothing but unjust and unlawful force. Where the injured party may be relieved, and his damages repaired by appeal to the law, there can be no pretence for force, which is only to be used where a man is intercepted from appealing to the law; for nothing is to be accounted hostile force but where it leaves not the remedy of such an appeal; and it is such force alone that puts him that uses it into a state of war, and makes it lawful to resist him. Men can never be secure from tyranny, if there be no means to escape it, till they are perfectly under it; and therefore it is that they have not only a right to get out of it, but to prevent it."

Bearing these axioms of eternal truth in our minds, let us now take a slight view of the controversy between Great Britain and America.

The three estates of Great Britain claiming a supreme legislative power over Great Britain and its dependencies, the Commons of Great Britain claim an absolute and unlimited right of giving and granting away the property of the Americans.

America admits the supreme legislative power of Great Britain, as extending to the regulation of commerce, &c., but denies the inference drawn from it, the right of taxation, alleging, that such a right is not only contrary to the Constitution of Great Britain, and the venerable Charters of America, but that it cannot, in the very nature of things, exist; because, if it did exist, it would be impossible for an American to possess any property.

The Commons of Great Britain, proceeding to carry their claim into execution, give and grant away a tax upon all teas that shall be imported into America, to be collected in their very ports, at or before the landing thereof, and the Executive appoints his tax-gatherers to collect the same.

The Americans petition and remonstrate against the measure, as looking upon it to be a violation of their rights, and a total annihilation of their property; but obtaining no redress, rather than submit to so humiliating a measure, the whole Continent resolves to import no more tea, nobly choosing rather to have one natural right violently taken from them, than to become themselves the instruments of surrendering up the whole.

Great Britain, not satisfied with letting things remain in this situation, the East India Company are instigated to attempt, in open violation of the Charters of the Americans, in opposition to the general voice of the people, and in defiance of honour and justice, by a hostile importation of their tea, and by a submission to the tax so imposed, to sap the foundation of their liberties and property, and to establish a precedent for future inroads. Dreading the odium of such an action, and knowing the sentiments of the Americans, the Company at first hesitate; but being formally and regularly indemnified, they are at length prevailed upon by Administration to become parties in the cause, and to make a direct attack upon the liberties and property of America. A party also in America, either dependent upon, or looking up to Government for advancement, or influenced by the mean consideration of the commission to be got by the sale of the tea, are procured, who scruple not, to conspire with her external enemies, against the freedom of America, and become zealous advocates for taxation and slavery.

When the vessels arrive in America, such are the convulsions into which the whole Continent is thrown, that the parties concerned are prevailed on to consent to their immediate return.

In one instance, the Governor and officers of the Customs interfere; a proper clearance for the vessel is denied; the return of it is prevented; and a day for the landing of the cargo and the execution of their plan, is fixed upon.

What now ought the Americans to have done? Ought they to have tamely submitted to this taxation, and by acknowledging the principle to be just, from which it originated, confessed themselves in so humiliating a condition, as that the whole of their property, and every convenience of life that commerce could afford them, depended upon, and was held at the pleasure of the people of Great Britain?

This would have been to have imitated the lamb, who yielded his throat to be torn by the imperious wolf.

Ought they to have submitted first, and then petitioned?

They have repeatedly petitioned, but their cries were not regarded.

Ought they to have appealed to the law?

But what appeal can be made to the law, if the unjust acts done against a man, are maintained by the power of the aggressors, and the remedy which is due by law, be by the same power obstructed?

Ought they, when the tea had been landed, to have taken it from the consignees, and locked it up?

But what man could prudently have stood forth in this way; wrested the property from its owners, locked it up, and openly exposed himself to the rage of the blind and infatuated Ministry of Great Britain?

Whatever were the sentiments of the Americans upon this head, or whether in the heat of their resentment, they thought at all, is foreign to my purpose; it is sufficient for me to observe, that in the conflict, that commodity, which was to have been instrumental to the introduction of slavery and taxation, was destroyed.

Let us next consider in what light the East India Company ought to have been considered by the Americans: as merchants trading to America, under the sanction of the law of nations, or as a banditti hired to attack their privileges, and indemnified against any loss which might be sustained in such attack?

And if the indemnification by them required, places the nature of their act in so very unfriendly a point of view, shows that they were fully acquainted with the sentiments of the Americans, and considered the measure as dangerous, because unjust, in what light must the indemnifiers, the suborners themselves, appear?

And if the agents in this business appear so black, let us next examine in what light their commodity ought to have been considered - in the same sacred light as the property of the honorable trader, or as the indifferent property of men combined together to subvert the liberties of America? But neither of these ideas fully expresses its true nature.

Ought it not rather to have been considered as that identical property, that very engine, by which the enemies of America meant to subvert its privileges, and by introducing along with it an unlimited and discretionary right of taxation, totally to annihilate American property? Certainly, property so circumstanced, brought thither with such an intent, and become so maliciously involved in the subject of dispute, had lest those sacred sanctions which are the defence of common property, and may figuratively be said to have changed its very nature, and to have become an instrument of war.

If, then, it appears, that the Executive would not suffer it to be taken back, and that the landing of it would, in the opinion of the Americans, have proved as fatal to America, as the introduction of the wooden horse of the Grecians did to Troy, though the alternative which they chose may have procured them many enemies, there will, doubtless, be found many others who will pity and excuse.

EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO GOVERNOR GAGE.

Extract.

Whitehall, 9th April, 1774.

The King having thought fit that you should return immediately to your command in North America, and that you should proceed directly to Boston, on board his Majesty's ship Lively, now lying at Plymouth, ready to sail with the first fair wind, I send you herewith, by his Majesty's command, a commission under the great seal, appointing you Captain General and Governor-in-chief of his Majesty's Province of Massachusetts Bay, together with such instructions as have been usually given to Governors of that Province, for their guidance in the exercise of the ordinary and more permanent powers and authorities incident to that command.

What is further necessary for your direction in the present state of disorder and commotion within that Province, and for enabling you to carry into execution the measures that have been, and probably will be adopted, for reducing it to a state of obedience to lawful authority, is of a more delicate and important nature, and requires more precise and particular instructions.

With this letter you will receive an Act of Parliament, passed in the present session, for discontinuing the loading and unloading of goods and merchandise at the town and within the harbour of Boston; and also a Minute of the Treasury Board, containing the substance of such instructions as their Lordships have thought fit to give to their officers in consequence thereof; and it is the King's command that you do give them all proper and necessary assistance and support in the execution thereof.

To this end it will be expedient that you do, immediately upon your arrival, and as soon as your commission has been read and published, in the usual form, appoint a meeting, either at the town or within the castle, (as circumstances shall point out,) with the Commander-in-chief of his Majesty's ships, the Lieutenant Governor, and the Commissioners of the Customs, the Chief Justice, and the Secretary of the Province, in order to consider what steps it may be proper to take for carrying the Act into execution, and for enforcing, if necessary, a due obedience thereto; and if Mr. Hutchinson should not be come away, in consequence of the leave he has obtained for that purpose, his advice and assistance, in this case, as well as in the execution of every other part of your instructions, will be of very great use and advantage to you.

His Majesty trusts that no opposition will, or can, with any effect, be made to the carrying the law into execution, nor any violence or insult offered to those to whom the execution of it is entrusted. Should it happen otherwise, your authority as the first Magistrate, combined with the command over the King's troops, will, it is hoped, enable you to meet every opposition, and fully to preserve the public peace, by employing those troops with effect, should the madness of the people, on the one hand, or the timidity or want of strength of the peace officers on the other hand, make it necessary to have recourse to their assistance. The King trusts, however, that such necessity will not occur, and commands me to say, that it will be your duty to use every endeavour to avoid it; to quiet the minds of the people; to remove their prejudices, and, by mild and gentle persuasion, to induce such a submission on their part, to this law, and such a proper compliance with the just requisitions it contains, as may give full scope to his Majesty's clemency, and enable his Majesty to exercise the discretionary power given him by the Act, of again restoring to the town of Boston those commercial privileges and advantages which it hath so long enjoyed, and which have raised it to its present state of opulence and importance.

At the same time the sovereignty of the King, in this Parliament, over the Colonies, requires a full and absolute submission; and his Majesty's dignity demands, that until that submission be made, the town of Boston, where so much anarchy and confusion have prevailed, should cease to be the place of the residence of his Governor, or of any other officer of Government, who is not obliged by law to perform his functions there. It is, therefore, his Majesty's further pleasure, that so soon as the law for discontinuing the port shall have taken place, and every step has been pursued that is necessary to insure the execution of it, you do make the town of Salem the place of your residence; that you do require all officers (not included in the above exception) to attend you there; and that the General Court, and all other courts and offices which are not by law fixed at Boston, be appointed and held at Salem, until his Majesty, satisfied on your representation, that the laws of this Kingdom will be duly observed, and Government be again administered at the town of Boston, without opposition, shall have signified his Royal will and pleasure for the return of his Governor to, and for holding of the General Court at that town.

The proceedings of the body of the people at the town of Boston, in the months of November and December last, were of such a nature and criminality as to have fixed a deep degree of guilt upon those who were the principal ringleaders and abettors of those proceedings, and the measures proper to be taken for inducing the punishment of such guilt, become a very necessary part of the present consideration, relative to the state of the Province of Massachusetts Bay.

The King considers the punishment of these offenders as a very necessary and essential example to others, of the ill consequences that must follow from such an open and arbitrary usurpation as tend to the subversion of all government, and the rendering civil liberty unsafe and precarious; and his Majesty's subjects in the Province of Massachusetts Bay in general, cannot give a better test of their love of justice, and respect for the Constitution, than in their zealous endeavours to render effectual a due prosecution of such offenders.

If, however, the prejudices of the people should appear to you to be such as would in all probability prevent a conviction, however clear and full the evidence might be, in that case it would be better to desist from prosecution, seeing that an ineffectual attempt would only be a triumph to the faction, and disgraceful to Government.

The foregoing is all that I have at present in command from the King to say to you. I need not suggest to you the very great advantage that will result from your obtaining a just and perfect knowledge of the characters, inclinations and tempers of the principal people in the Colony; such information must, of necessity, be of great benefit, and your own discretion will point out to you the use that is to be made of it.

The last advices from Boston are of a nature to leave but little room to hope that order and obedience are soon likely to take the place of anarchy and usurpation. His Majesty, however, confides in your fortitude and discretion, and doubts not that all other officers, civil and military, animated by your example, will exert themselves in such a manner, in support of the Constitution, and for enforcing obedience to the laws, as will recommend them to his Majesty's royal grace and favour.

Enclosed in the Earl of Dartmouth's Letter to Governor Gage, of April 9th, 1774.

COPY OF A MINUTE OF THE TREASURY BOARD.

Whitehall Treasury Chambers, 31st March, 1774.

Present Lord North, Mr. Townshend, Lord Beauchamp, Mr. Cornwall.

My Lords take into consideration an Act to discontinue, in such manner and for such time as are therein mentioned, the landing and discharging, lading and shipping, of goods, wares and merchandise, at the town and within the harbour of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America: and being desirous that the provisions of the said Act should be carried into execution with all possible vigilance, despatch and circumspection, as far as the same relate to the officers of his Majesty's Customs, established in the same town and Province, transmit a copy of the said Act to the Commissioners of the Customs in America, and direct them forthwith to take such steps as they shall find necessary for the removal of their Board from the said town of Boston to the town of Salem, in the said Province of Massachusetts Bay, and that as soon as proper offices can be prepared for their reception and accommodation.

Direct them, together with all the officers belonging to their Board, to repair to the said town of Salem, and there to execute the duties and functions of their commissions, until they shall receive further orders respecting the future residence and establishment of their Board.

Direct them, at the same time, to give orders for the removal of the Collector, Comptroller, Surveyor, and such other officers of the port of Boston as they shall judge necessary, to the town of Plymouth, or to the island of Nantucket, or to such other town or place within the limits of the said port, as shall appear to them most proper and most convenient for the trade of his Majesty's subjects: and let the said Collector, and other officers, be ordered to establish themselves in the said town of Plymouth, or such other town or place as the Commissioners shall appoint, within the limits of the said port of Boston: and there to proceed and carry on, in the usual manner, the business of their several departments in the collection and management of his Majesty's Customs, and in the execution of the Laws of Trade.

And inasmuch as it may be reasonably expected, that the trade within the port of Salem and Marblehead, will be considerably increased during the continuance of the said Act of Parliament, and may require an additional number of officers to be stationed at those places to transact the business of the Customs, -

Direct the Commissioners to take with them to Salem, such of the Tidesmen and incidental officers, now employed at Boston, as they shall think the service at Salem and Marblehead may demand: and recommend to their particular care and attention, that clause of the said Act which relates to vessels carrying coastwise, under the restrictions therein mentioned, fuel and victual for the necessary use and sustenance of the people of the town of Boston: and direct them to give express orders to the proper officers to be vigilant and alert in visiting and searching all such vessels laden with fuel and provisions, as aforesaid, which shall enter the harbour of Marblehead, for the purpose of obtaining a transire, or let pass, pursuant to the said Act of Parliament. And in case it shall appear to the officers employed on that service, by information, or by any probable cause of suspicion, that there are concealed on board any such vessels, any goods, wares or merchandise, other than such fuel or victual, that then, and in every such case, such officers should be directed to oblige the master or commander of such vessel so informed against or suspected, to unlade his cargo, before he obtains such transire, or let pass, in order to proceed to the town of Boston.

Let the Commissioners take care that, after the first day of June, 1774, and during the continuance of the said Act, no officers of the Customs whatsoever be suffered to reside within the town or harbour of Boston.

In consideration of the losses which the Collector, Comptroller, and other officers upon the establishment, within the said port of Boston, must inevitably suffer by the diminution of the fees and perquisites of the respective offices, during the continuance of the said Act, -

My Lords direct the Commissioners to report to their Lordships, as soon as they can form any opinion of the matter, how much it may be reasonable to allow to such officers respectively, as a compensation for such their losses. Direct them, from time to time, by every opportunity, to inform my Lords of the several steps they shall have taken in the execution of the said Act, and of their Lordships orders.

Acquaint them that they, and all the officers under their authority, may depend on being supported and protected in the execution of the duties of their respective offices.

Inform them that the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have despatched orders to the Admiral, commanders and commissioned officers of his Majesty's ships of war on that Station, to use the utmost vigilance and activity in the execution of the several provisions of the said Act of Parliament; and in case any of the officers in any of his Majesty's ships, or sloops of war, shall see occasion to require any officer or officers of the Customs, to be put on board any of the vessels under their command, direct the Commissioners to take care that all such requisitions be duly complied with.

Transmit a copy of this Minute to Mr. Stephens, for the information of the Lords of the Admiralty. and to Mr. Pownall, for the information of the Earl of Dartmouth.

FROM A GENTLEMAN IN LONDON TO ONE IN NEW YORK.

Extract.

London, April 27, 1774.

I hope there is no necessity of admonishing you to unite in the defence of the liberty of America. The stroke may first be felt in Boston: but that man who does not perceive it meant against the whole line of Colonies must be blind indeed. Trust me, the views of Administration are to subdue and enslave you. They have so sure a majority in both Houses of Parliament, that they find no difficulty in executing every wish of the King, either in the ruin of this country or America. I love to speak the naked truth. Tell the people of America, that the favourite Ministry of the most powerful Monarch in Europe, hate the name of liberty, and abhor the man who dares support the principles of it. They suffer no man to share their confidence, until he has proved himself an unprincipled apostate, and spurns at the idea of a virtuous opinion. This may be supposed one of the great reasons why so few of the first rank among us openly espouse the cause of America: for it is the cause of virtue, in which nothing can be gained, but much lost. The infinite increase of perquisites, pensions, and places, in consequence of an uncontrolled direction of the India Company, has almost silenced opposition. Having, therefore, but few friends left, and even those left without power to do you any essential service you must rely upon nothing but your own wisdom and virtue to disappoint the wicked purposes of your powerful enemies; for their interest, inclinations, and even existence, all unite to work your ruin. I do not venture to point out what steps you should take to avert the storm, or direct it to your advantage. If you mean to negotiate any thing with this country, let it be done with dignity and firmness.

I have the satisfaction of assuring you that Lord Chatham is that kind of friend to America which he ever has been: he came to town on purpose to watch and oppose the present proceedings, but has ever since been confined to his bed. Lord Camden and Lord Rockingham are your friends.

The two Sheriffs of London, with other gentlemen, natives of America, have another petition now ready to present to the House of Commons, against the Bills now before them. Sir George Savile has agreed to bring it in and support it.

As to the merchants, many of them were such idiots as to wait on Lord North, and return to their country houses perfectly satisfied that he meant nothing inimical to you, because he said so. He served the East India Directors the same trick not many months since.

I have no doubt but that the people of England will, in six months time see the folly of those measures, and drive the Ministry to the necessity of giving up the question, especially if you have spirit enough to act properly."

LIEUT. GOVERNOR COLDEN TO EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Extract.

New York, 4th May, 1774.

Captain Lockyer, with the so long looked for tea from the India Company, arrived at Sandy Hook on the 19th of last month. The ship came no farther up, and a few days after sailed from thence again for London, with the tea on board. Neither the Captain, nor any other, made the least application to me about the ship or her cargo. The account of this affair, published in the enclosed Newspaper, is as particular and full as any I could procure.

In the same paper your Lordship will find an account of some more violent proceedings against a parcel of tea imported by Captain Chambers, of the ship London, who arrived here while Captain Lockyer was in this place. As no application was made to me by Captain Chambers, or any other, before or since the riotous event, I cannot give your Lordship a better account of it than is contained in the printed paper.

It happened early in the evening, and though a pretty large number of spectators were assembled, the quarter where I reside, and the greater part of the town, was perfectly quiet. It is said Captain Chambers drew the particular resentment of the people upon himself by the duplicity of his conduct. Last voyage he claimed applause here for being the first who refused to take the India Company's tea on board his ship, and received public thanks from the people of this place for it.

A few days after Governor Tryon went from hence, a small sloop loaded with Dutch tea, duck, &c., was seized by an officer of the custom-house. She was taken in this port at noon day, and secured without any tumult on the occasion.

Enclosed in Lieutenant Governor Colden's Letter to the Earl of Dartmouth, of May 4, 1774.

New York, April 28, 1774.

On Monday sevensnight, April 18, advice was received from Philadelphia, that Captain Chambers, of the ship London, of this port, had taken on board, at the port of London, eighteen boxes of fine tea, which were regularly cleared, and the mark and numbers were taken from the cocket by Captain All, of Philadelphia. As Captain Chambers was one of the first who refused to take the India Company's tea on freight the last summer, for which he received the thanks of the citizens, they could not believe that he knew of the tea's being on board, and therefore supposed it to have been shipped by some Ministerial tool, under another denomination, in order to injure the owners, or the reputation of the master, or to make an experiment of this mode of introducing the teas to America. The Committee, and the inhabitants, were, therefore, determined to examine into the matter with great vigilance.

In the night, the long expected tea ship Nancy, Captain Lockyer, arrived at Sandy Hook without her mizenmast, and one of her anchors, which were lost in a gale of wind the 2d inst., when her maintopmast was sprung, and thrown on her beam-ends. Letters being delivered to him by the Pilot, from sundry gentlemen of this city, informing him of the determined resolution of the citizens not to suffer the tea on board of his ship to be landed, he requested the Pilot to bring him up to procure necessities, and make a protest; but he would not do it till leave was obtained. Early the next morning this was communicated to the Committee; and it appearing to them to be the sense of the city that such leave should be granted to him, the ship to remain at the Hook, the Pilot was immediately despatched to bring him up. This intelligence was immediately communicated to the public by an handbill.

At 6 P. M. the pilot boat returned with Captain Lockyer on board; and although the people had but a very short notice of it, the wharf was crowded with the citizens, to see the man whose arrival they long and impatiently wished, to give them an opportunity to co-operate with the other Colonies. The Committee conducted him to the house of the Honorable Henry White, Esq., one of the consignees, and there informed Captain Lockyer, that it was the sense of the citizens that he should not presume to go near the custom-house, and to make the utmost despatch in procuring the necessary articles he wanted for his voyage. To this he answered; "That as the consignees would not receive his cargo, he would not go to the custom-house, and would make all the despatch he could to leave the city." A Committee of Observation was appointed to go down in a sloop to the Hook, to remain near the tea ship till she departs for London; and four Committees were appointed to watch the ship London, on her arrival, day and night, till she should be discharged.

Wednesday night, April 20th, arrived Captain Lawrence, from London, who confirmed the account received from Philadelphia, of Captain Chambers having on board eighteen boxes of fine tea, but could not tell who was the shipper, or to whom it was addressed. Thursday the Committee interrogated Captain Lawrence relative to what he knew of the tea's being on board of Captain Chambers; when he showed them a memorandum in his pocket-book, which he took from the cocket in the middle of Captain Chambers' file of papers, in the Searcher's Office at Graves- end, corresponding with the advice transmitted from Philadelphia, except some variation in the mark. This morning the following handbill was distributed :

"To the Public. - The sense of the city, relative to the landing the East India Company's tea, being signified to Captain Lockyer by the Committee, nevertheless, it is the desire of a number of the citizens, that at his departure from hence, he should see, with his own eyes, their detestation of the measures pursued by the Ministry and the India Company, to enslave this country. This will be declared by the convention of the people at his departure from this city, which will be on next Saturday morning at 9 o'clock, when, no doubt, every friend to this country will attend. The bells will give the notice about an hour before he embarks from Murray's wharf.

"By order of the Committee."

"New York, April 21, 1774.

Friday, at noon, Captain Chambers came into the Hook; the Pilot asked him if he had any tea on board? He declared he had none. Two of the Committee of Observation went on board of Captain Chambers, and informed him of the advices received of his having tea on board, and demanded a sight of all his cockets, which was accordingly given them; but the cocket for the tea was not found among them, nor was the mark or number on his manifest.

About 4 P. M. the ship came to the wharf, when she was boarded by a number of the citizens. Captain Chambers was interrogated relative to his having the tea on board, but he still denied it. He was then told that it was in vain to deny it, for as there was good proof of its being on board, it would be found, as there were Committees appointed to open every package, and that he had better be open and candid about it, and demanded the cocket for the tea; upon which he confessed it was on board, and delivered the cocket. The owners and the Committee immediately met at Mr. Francis's, where Captain Chambers was ordered to attend. Upon examining him who was the shipper and owner of the tea? he declared that he was sole owner of it. After the most mature deliberation, it was determined to communicate the whole state of the matter to the people, who were convened near the ship, which was accordingly done. The Mohawks were prepared to do their duty at a proper hour; but the body of the people were so impatient, that before it arrived a number of them entered the ship, about 8 P. M., took out the tea, which was at hand, broke the cases, and started their contents into the river, without doing any damage to the ship or cargo. Several persons of reputation were placed below to keep tally, and about the companion to prevent ill-disposed persons from going below the deck.

At 10 the people all dispersed in good order, but in great wrath against the Captain; and it was not without some risk of his life that he escaped. Saturday, in the morning, the shipping in the harbour displayed their colours, and a large flag was hoisted on the Liberty Pole, and at 8 A. M. all the bells of the city rang, pursuant to the notice published on Thursday. About nine, the greatest number of people were collected at and near the coffee house, that was ever known in this city. At a quarter past nine the Committee came out of the coffee house with Captain Lockyer, upon which the band of music attending played God save the King. Immediately there was a call for Captain Chambers. Where is he? Where is he? Captain Lockyer must not go till we find Captain Chambers, to send him with the tea ship. This produced marks of fear in Captain Lockyer, who imagined some mischief was intended him; but upon assurances being given him to the contrary, he appeared composed. The Committee, with the music, conducted him through the multitude to the end of Murray's wharf, where he was put on board the pilot boat, and wished a safe passage; upon which the multitude gave loud huzzas, and many guns were fired, expressive of their joy at his departure. The Committee of Observation at the Hook have cognizance of him fill a fair wind offers for his departure from thence. Thus, to the great mortification of the secret and open enemies of America, and the joy of all the friends of liberty and human nature, the union of these Colonies is maintained in a contest of the utmost importance to their safety and felicity.

On Sunday night, at 8 P. M., the Committee of Observation returned from the Hook. They inform us, that the sailors Of the tea ship, being unwilling to proceed with her to London, made a raft of spars and boards, in order to quit the ship with the tide of flood, but were observed by the Captain and being aided by the Committee, who offered their assistance to him, they desisted from their project.

That on Sunday, at 10 A. M., the ship and the sloop, with the Committee, weighed their anchors and stood to sea; and at 2 P. M. the pilot boat and the Committee's sloop left her at the distance of three leagues from the Hook.

With Captain Lockyer, in the ship Nancy, went passenger Captain James Chambers.

Many persons still suspecting that Captain James Chambers continues privately in this city, they may be assured that he sailed out of the Hook, for London, on Sunday last, on board the Nancy, Captain Lockyer, who afforded him a very hospitable and gentlemanly reception; and whose whole behaviour, during his stay in this city, proved him to be a sensible, discreet, and a very well bred man.*

* In the same Paper, enclosed by Lieutenant Governor COLDEN to the Earl of DARTMOUTH, in the preceding Letter, was this additional notice of the same transaction.

Mr. RIVINGTON: You declare your paper is impartial; as such please to insert the following particulars relative to the idle paragraphs in Mr. Gaines's Gazette of last Monday.

What is the Committee of Observation? By whom were they appointed, and what authority had they to order Captain Chambers, or any body else, to attend them at Mr. Francis's, or any other place whatsoever? Who says, and upon what authority does he say, that the sense of the city was asked, relatively, either to the sending away Captain Lockyer, or the destruction of the tea on board the London? Has not every London Captain brought tea under the same circumstances? And, if so, what were the Apostates that informed against the unfortunate man, who was threatened with death for obeying the laws of this country? Who were the persons of reputation that were placed below to keep tally, saving ONE, who acted according to honour and principle? Let us know their names, or else we will dispute their pretensions. What did they get by conducting Captain Lockyer in public through the crowd, but a mortifying disgust in finding he would not even pull OFF his hat to the insulting huzzas of ALL the people? ALL, indeed! when I am persuaded that not one twentieth part joined in such outrage: though "the greatest number were collected at and near the Coffee House, that ever was known in this city." Marvellous indeed, and utterly beyond belief! Much like the narrative in the introduction to this noble and authentic history, wherein the historian informs us that the Nancy's "maintopmast was sprung and the ship thrown on her beam-ends;" or when he says, the tea on board the London was cast into the river without doing any damage to the ship or CARGO. This, too, was undoubtedly effected to the joy of all the friends of liberty and human nature.

But, Mr. Printer, to end the matter for the present. Who says that ALL the bells were rung on this solemn occasion? when it is asserted that several did not ring at all; and that several others did not ring but by means of fellows breaking into churches where they had no business, and for which they ought, and every good man hopes, so far as I know, that they will be prosecuted according to law.

I wish the Printers of public Chronicles would be cautious of disgracing their papers by publishing party relations. While they adhere to matters of fact, 'tis all well; but when they expand their columns to either patriot or ministerial minions, without any known evidence - nay, contrary to the truth of fact - they must not, they cannot, they shall not hope to escape the animadversions of a lover of Constitutional liberty, but a sworn foe to Coblers and Tailors, so long as they take upon their everlasting and unmeasurable shoulders, the power of directing the loyal and sensible inhabitants of the city and Province of New York.

April 25, 1774.

The following Notice and Reply, appeared in the two succeeding numbers of the Gazetteer: -

NEW YORK, May 5.

A full Answer to the animadversions on the conduct of the inhabitants of this city, relative to the return of Captain Lockyer, &c., which were inserted in last weeks' Gazetteer, will be presented in our next.

NEW YORK May 12, 1774.

To the Printer of the New York Gazetteer.

SIR: When any man attempts to call the attention of the public to his compositions, under the specious character of an advocate for truth, he should strictly adhere to the principle he pretends to maintain; otherwise, however loud and artful he may be in his profession, they will consider him as an impostor. I was led to these reflections in perusing the animadversions, published in your Gazetteer, on the conduct of the inhabitants of this city, relative to the dismissal of Captain Lockyer, and his tea, and the narrative thereof, in Mr. Gaines's Gazette.

It may justly be expected, that when an anonymous author calls for names to authenticate facts, which he disputes, he will not be deficient in that kind of proof to support his assertions or suggestions, which he requires of others; but the contrary is evident to every one, who will be at the trouble to peruse the paper in question. Every man of information in this Colony, knows that it contains gross misrepresentations, to say no worse; for the Assembly, and the inhabitants of this Colony have, more than once, declared their abhorrence of the Revenue Act, and consequently, of the importation of tea, while the Act exists; and therefore, if Great Britain and the other Colonies

PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL.

MEMORANDUM 16th March, 1774

The Governor this day received the following letter from Lord Dunmore, Governor of Virginia, by express, in answer to his Honor's letter of the 31st of January:

Williamsburg, 3d March, 1774.

SIR: I have been favoured with your letter of the 31st January, 1774, and duplicate of the Same, the occasion of which having been the appointment of certain officers by me in a remote district of the county of Augusta, in this Colony, which includes Pittsburg, which having been done, as is always my rule, with the advice of his Majesty's Council, I could not, till I had an opportunity of laying your letter before them, return you an answer, and it is not till now that I am enabled so to do. From the opinion, therefore, of his Majesty's Council of this Colony, I must inform you, that although the calculations on which you rely in the plan accompanying your letter, may possibly be found exact, yet they can by no means be considered, by us, as the observation, on which they were founded, was were fully informed of our sentiments, relative to the obnoxious Act, it would not be necessary to take any notice of the animadverter. He would in that case be left to the just reproaches of his fellow-citizens, of which, I am persuaded he is not ignorant. But as the paper under consideration, was designed to induce a belief in those places, that we are greatly divided in this city upon the Revenue Act, and the point of returning the tea; and that it was done by the approbation only of an inconsiderable number: I shall, therefore, for the information of those who are at a distance from us, and the honour of the Colony, show these representations to be void of truth. This will appear, by a proper attention to the following facts, viz: In the Session of Parliament of 1767, the Commons of Great Britain gave to his Majesty, the property of the Americans, by granting, among other imposts, three pence sterling per pound, "for every pound weight, avoirdupois, of tea," which should be, "imported from Great Britain into any Colony or Plantation in America." The merchants of this city, and a great number of the other inhabitants of all ranks, being alarmed at this attempt to enslave them, on the 27th of August, 1768, signed an agreement to decline the most valuable part of their commerce with Great Britain, until this Act should be repealed; and the violators of this compact were declared to be "deemed enemies of their country." This compact, commonly called the Non-Importation, met with the general approbation of the citizens, which was demonstrated by their conformity to it. In consequence of this, the Captains of our ships, trading to Great Britain were, by standing orders from their owners, forbid to take on board there any of the goods prohibited by the agreement. In order that the sense of the Colony might be known, the General Assembly in their next Session, on the 31st of December, 1768, passed the following resolution, with several others, declarative of our rights and privileges, viz:

"Resolved, nem. con. That it is the opinion of this Committee "that no tax, under any name or denomination, or on any pretence, "or for any purpose whatsoever, can or ought to be imposed or "levied, upon the persons, estates, or property of his Majesty's good "subjects, within this Colony; but of their free gift, by their Representatives, lawfully convened in General Assembly."*

This resolution had evidently the Revenue Act for its object. The opinion of the Colony, in legal consideration, having been thus declared, against the Parliamentary principle of taxing the Colonies, by Parliamentary authority; it was judged of equal importance to the common cause of America, that a declaration should be representatively made of the public sense, on the means which the merchants and others had adopted, to defeat the execution of that act, which proclaimed to the world, that the Americans had no property they could call their own. Accordingly, on the 10th of April, 1769, Mr. Philip Livingston, an eminent merchant of this City, made the following motion in the Assembly, viz:

"That the thanks of this House be given to the merchants of this "city, and Colony, for their repeated, disinterested public spirit, and "patriotic conduct, in declining the importation, or receiving goods "from Great Britain, until such Acts of Parliament as the General "Assembly had declared unconstitutional, and subversive of the rights "and liberties of the people of this Colony, should be repealed; and "that Mr. Speaker signify the same to the merchants at their next "monthly meeting.

"Ordered, That Mr. Speaker signify the thanks of this House "to the merchants of this city, at their next monthly meeting accordingly."†

After advice was received in 1770, of the partial repeal of the Revenue Act, a number of the merchants were inclined to import such goods from Great Britain as were not subject to the payment of an American duty; and in order to induce the consent of the citizens to depart from the first form of the non-importation agreement, they, on the 12th of June, 1770, published a paper, which they intended as the basis of the new agreement. It contains, among other stipulations, the following, viz. - "If any goods shall "arrive contrary to this and our former agreement, they shall be "re-shipped immediately. And any persons, masters of vessels, "or others, that shall import or receive a consignment of any dutiable goods (that is subject to the payment of duties in America), "shall be deemed enemies to the Colonies, and treated accordingly." From this it appears that the old agreement was confirmed, so far as it prohibited the importation of merchandise, subject to an American duty. The importation of goods was resolved upon the 9th of July, made without the participation of this Government, or the assistance of any person on the part of the Crown; and even if they were admitted, we apprehend they would decide nothing in the present case; for the right of the Proprietaries of Pennsylvania to the country about Pittsburg, must be founded on better authority than is there adduced to make it valid, and we are strengthened in this opinion by the principles you yourselves adopt, and the opinion of Lord Camden, which you have produced in your dispute with Connecticut. With respect to the right of this Colony to that country, the transactions of the late war show sufficiently what was ever the sense of the Government of Virginia with regard to it. And it seems to me that the step which I have taken ought not to have been either unexpected or surprising, as you are pleased to say it was to you, when it is well known that formal declarations were made by the Assembly of Pennsylvania, that Pittsburg was not within the jurisdiction of that Government at the time that requisitions were made to them for the defence of that place, the burden of which, on that account, fell on this Government.

* See the Journal of the Assembly, that ended by dissolution the 2d January, 1769, page 73.

† See the Journal of the Assembly for April, 1769, page 23 and 55.

In conformity to these sentiments you will easily see I cannot possibly, in compliance with your request, either 1770, agreeable to the plan proposed in that paper, the non-importation agreement thus restricted, continued, as it still does, in full force, until we were alarmed with accounts in the latter end of September, 1773, by the arrival of our London ships, that the East India Company intended to ship their own tea for America. The masters of these vessels gave public information, that it had been offered to them on freight; and that they had refused to receive it. For this patriotic and spirited conduct, they at a meeting called for the purpose, by advertisement, received the public thanks in writing, from a great body of merchants, and a number of other inhabitants, in which honour, Captain Chambers, whose apostacy could not be foreseen, had his share. Our citizens, being thus informed of the refusal of our London Captains, it was concluded, that such refusal would discourage the India Company from shipping their tea; and therefore, it was judged unnecessary to call a meeting at that time, to agree on precautions against an event which was not expected; especially as the friends of the intended consignees gave frequent assurances, that they well know the sense of the inhabitants on the subject, and were resolved to refuse the trust on the arrival of the tea.

A number of our citizens, however, fearing that the tea ship would bring the first intelligence that the tea was actually shipped, were jealous that it might be landed, unexpectedly, and therefore, without proper opposition. For this reason, they had frequent meetings, to concert a plan for guarding against the danger. And at one of those meetings, a committee was appointed to present, who accordingly did present to the consignees, the following Questions, viz:

"First, Are you, gentlemen, Commissioners, satisfied that it is "contrary to the general sense of the inhabitants of this city, that the "tea about to be imported by the India Company, should be received "or sold by you?

"Second, Will you, gentlemen, declare upon your honours, that in "case you are appointed the Commissioners, for the sale of the said "tea, that you will not receive, or sell, or be in any respect aiding or "assisting in receiving or selling the same?

"November 24, 1773."

To these queries, they gave the following Answer, in writing:

"GENTLEMEN: At present we have received no appointment from "the East India Company, nor any certain information on what terms "the tea is to come out to this Colony; when it arrives, (if addressed to "us) the community shall be acquainted with the conditions on which "it is sent. Should the tea be shipped, liable to the payment of the "American duty, we believe it is against the sentiments of the inhabitants, that it should be sold by us, or any other person, and therefore we cannot execute the commission; nor shall we in any respect, "act therein contrary to the general sense of our fellow-citizens.

"NEW YORK, November 25th, 1773."

These gentlemen, when they were certainly informed that the tea was shipped, subject to the duty, did, in compliance with their engagement, make the following resignation to a Committee who waited on them for that purpose, to wit:

"The Agents since find, that the tea will come, liable to American "duty; and agreeable to their former promise, have declined receiving "and selling it under that predicament.

"NEW YORK, December 1, 1773."

That no means might be neglected to secure a unanimity of conduct in the several Colonies, on so important a point, an instrument of association was framed; fifteen hundred copies of which were printed, and dispersed through the city; that the inhabitants might be well apprised of its contents, before they were requested to sign it. This association paper, in its preamble, most fully and expressly declares against the unconstitutional imposition of taxes on the Colonies, by authority of Parliament; particularly points at the evil of importing tea, subject to duty; expresses the warmest sense of liberty in the subscribers; their resolution, by all lawful means to defeat the pernicious project; to transmit to posterity the blessings of freedom, derived from their ancestors; and to contribute to the support of the common liberties of America; which were, (as they still are) in danger of being subverted. It contains five resolves, substance declaring, "the abettors of the importation, landing, carting, storing, "sale and purchase of tea, subject to Parliamentary duty, and until "the statute 7 George the Third, chapter 46, commonly called the "Revenue Act, shall be totally and clearly repealed, - enemies to their "country. That whether such duty be paid in Britain or America, "our liberties are equally affected; and that the subscribers will "neither deal with, employ, or have any connection with the trans-voke the commissions and appointments already made, or defer the opportunity of such other officers as I may find necessary for the good government of that part of the country, which we cannot but consider to be within the dominion of Virginia, until his Majesty shall declare the contrary; and I flatter myself I can rely so far on the prudence and discretion of the officers whom I have appointed, that the measure which I have pursued may have no tendency to raise disturbances in your Province, as you seem to apprehend, and if any should ensue I cannot but believe they will be occasioned, on the contrary, by the violent proceedings of your officers; in which opinion I am justified by what has already taken place in the irregular commitment of Mr. John Conolly for acting under my authority, which, however, as I must suppose, it was entirely without your participation, I conclude he is before this time released. But, nevertheless, the act having been of so outrageous a nature, and of a tendency so detrimental to both Colonies, that, with the advice of his Majesty's Council of this dominion, I do insist upon the most ample reparation being made for so great an insult on the authority of his Majesty's Government of Virginia; and no less can possibly be admitted than the dismissal of the "gressors of any of those resolves."In short, it contains the strongest terms of opposition, without actual violence, against the importation of that commodity, under those circumstances, leaving the use of force to prevent the mischief, to be resolved in some future time, in case any emergency might thereafter render that measure unnecessary. Of this association paper, none among us can be ignorant. It was signed by a vast number of our inhabitants, including most of the principal lawyers, merchants, landholders, masters of ships, and mechanics in the city, under the name and style of the Sons of Liberty of New York; was published in Mr. Holt's New York Journal, number 1615.

On the 16th of December last, a Committee of the Associates, published an advertisement in this (No. 35,) and Mr. Holt's paper, No. 1615, and in handbills, dispersed about this City, cordially inviting the Association of the Sons of Liberty, and every other friend of the Liberties and Trade of America, to meet at the City Hall, on the next day, at one o'clock, on business of the utmost importance. At the time and place appointed, about two thousand of the inhabitants, though the weather was bad, attended on the occasion, and were addressed by one of the members of the Association: who informed them, that on request of a number of his fellow citizens, he had several letters to communicate to the assembly, from the Committee of Correspondence at Boston, and a letter from Philadelphia, relative to the importation of the East India Company's tea. The letters were accordingly read, and a committee of gentlemen chosen, by suffrage of the meeting, without a dissenting voice, to correspond with our sister Colonies on the subject. After this, the association paper; which had then been signed, as above mentioned, was publicly read; and the Speaker having put the question, whether they agreed to the resolves it contained? It passed in the affirmative, nem. con.

So respectable was Otis meeting, that Government thought proper to send a message to them by the Mayor and Recorder, which was delivered to the whole body by the first Magistrate of the city, to the following purpose: "That the Governor declared that the tea "should be put into the Fort at noon-day; and engaged his honour that "it should continue there, till the Council should advise it to be "delivered out, or till the King's order, or that of the proprietors should "be known; and that then the tea would be delivered out at noon. "day."

Having communicated his message, he asked, "Gentlemen, is this satisfactory "The question was answered with a general no! no! no! The Speaker of the meeting then read, with a loud voice, the Act of Parliament, imposing the duty on tea; and after some proper remarks on the disposed of American property, by the Commons of Great Britain, and observing that the duty became due on landing the tea, he put the following question, "Is it then, gentlemen, your opinion, "that the tea should be landed under this circumstance? This was carried so generally in the negative, that there was no call for a division.

He having then informed the assembly that the patriotic inhabitants of Philadelphia and Boston had determined that no tea, subject to duty by Parliamentary authority, for raising a revenue in America, should be landed in either of those places; it was Resolved, nem. con., "That this body highly approve of that spirited and patriotic conduct "of our brethren of the city of Philadelphia, and the town of Boston, "in support of the common liberties of America;" and it was voted, that those proceedings should be published, and transmitted by the Committee, to the other Colonies; which was accordingly done.

And to show that our citizens were determined not to preclude themselves from the use of force, if it should be necessary - to prevent the landing of dutied tea, it is notorious, that on the Monday following, a few persons, among whom Messrs. Jacob Walton and Isaac Low, were the most active, endeavoured to procure a subscription to the following paper:

"Whereas an Association has been lately entered into, by the inhabitants of the city of New York, concerning the tea now expected "from England, on account of the East India Company, and a doubt "has arisen, whether it is the general sense of the subscribers, and "the rest of the inhabitants, that the landing or storing of the said "tea should be opposed by force?

"We the subscribers, to remove the said doubt, as far as concerns "our respective sentiments, do declare, and resolve as follows:

"1. That we do concur with the parties to the said association, that "the said tea ought not, on any account, to be suffered to be sold or "purchased while it remains subject to a duty imposed by the authority "of Parliament, for the purposes of an American revenue.

clerk (St. Clair) of Westmoreland county, who had the audacity, without any authority, to commit a Magistrate in the legal discharge of his trust, unless he (St. Clair) can prevail, by proper submission, on Mr. Conolly, to demand his pardon of me. I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

DUNMORE.

John Penn, Esquire.

MEMORANDUM. 31st March, 1774.

The Governor having taken the foregoing letter into consideration, with the advice of the Council, wrote a letter this day to the Earl of Dunmore, in answer thereto, and sent the same by express, which letter follows in these words, viz:

Philadelphia, 31st March, 1774.

MY LORD: I was favoured with yours of the third of this month by express, which arrived when several of the gentlemen of the Council were out of town, and it being also my rule to consult the Council upon all occasions of a "2. That to carry this resolve into execution, a firm and rigorous opposition ought to be given to all persons who shall attempt to betray our liberties, either by purchasing or vending the said tea.

"3. That we are determined to have no agency in landing or storing the said tea.

"4. That as our liberties, with respect to this imposition, must effectually be secured by a strict adherence to the preceding resolves, we do not conceive it necessary or expedient to hazard the peace of the city, by opposing the landing or storing the said tea with force.

"Dated in New York, the -- day of December, 1773."

But the general sense of the citizens ran so much against the last resolve, that they were obliged to abandon the project on Tuesday; having been able, with the utmost industry, to procure, only a few subscribers. In the evening of that day, an express arrived, with an account of the destruction of the tea at Boston; which made so deep an impression on the minds of those who were foremost in promoting the last mentioned resolves, that some of them declared, that the tea expected, would not be safe in the city.

In this state matters continued until the tea ship had arrived, and we had received intelligence from Philadelphia that Captain Chambers had taken on board eighteen boxes of fine tea, at the port of London, attended with a regular clearance. The arrival of the tea ship at the Hook, traduced the Committee of Correspondence, who relied on the well known general sense of the inhabitants, to appoint a Committee of Observation, to attend her, and to watch the arrival of Captain Chambers. When Captain Lockyer came up to town, he was informed by the city Committee, antecedent to the appointment of the Committee of Observation, that the general sense was fully against the landing of the tea; and attended him to the house of the Honorable Henry White, Esquire, one of his Majesty's Council, and one of the consignees, where they informed him that the same general sense was, that he should not presume to go near the custom-house; but make the utmost despatch in procuring necessaries for his voyage. To this declaration, which was fully authorized by the above mentioned transactions, he answered, that as the consignees would not receive the tea, he would comply with the injunction. The city Committee, appointed four other Committees to watch the ship London, on her coming into the harbour, and attend her day and night, till her Cargo should be discharged. Saturday, the 23d of April, being fixed for Captain Lockyer's departure, an handbill was circulated by the Committee: signifying it to be the desire of a number of citizens, that, added to the declaration he had received of the general sense of the inhabitants against landing of the tea, he should, from a convention of the people, have ocular demonstration of our detestation of the measures of the Ministry and East India Company, to enslave us.

The friends of the country were therefore desired to attend his embarkation, at the appointed time, at Murray's wharf; which would be notified an hour before hand, by a general peal of the bells. To add to the striking solemnity, it was fortunately precluded by the arrival of Captain Chambers, on Friday; and the destruction of his tea, by some of the impatient inhabitants, at an earlier hour than was destined for that purpose. The next morning, all the church bells of the city, for it is again repeated, sounded the general joy of the inhabitants, on our deliverance from the odious burden. And this may be relied on, as a true and authentic narrative of our opposition to the scheme of subjecting us to a duty on tea, from its first projection, to the fruitless attempt to execute it.

This state of facts, must abundantly prove the general sense of the loyal, free people of this Colony, to be permanently and unalterably fixed against Parliamentary imposts on America. For, to what other principle, can the non-importation agreement be attributed? Are men easily induced to shut up the main avenues to the support of themselves and their families? Must not the call to such a measure be the loudest, and most irresistible? Or can the trade of the capital of a large and populous country be essentially impeded by the virtue of a few. By no means, nothing less than the sense; nothing short of the determined resolution of a great majority could produce an event so important in its nature; an event which must unavoidably have sharpened the edge of a thousand wants.

But who can pretend that public virtue and public spirit were confined to this city, while the Journals of our Assembly so emphatically declare the sense of the whole Province? How small is the representation of this capital when compared to that of the rest of the Colony? And by what kind of reason or example can it be shown, that a prevalent interest in a representative body, can by a trifling minority, be induced to belie their constituents, and make them speak a language contrary to their sentiments? Again, what may we justly infer from the spirited declaration of our rights, on the 31st of December, 1768, public nature, I could not possibly give your Lordship's letter an answer by the return of your messenger, who stayed but a very short time in town. I am sorry the papers I enclosed you had not the desired effect. I never expected they would be taken as decisive of the boundaries of Pennsylvania, as conclusive upon your Government, but I had reason to hope they contained such information as would show at least a very strong probability that Pittsburg, the place of dispute, was within this Province, and not subject to the Government of Virginia, and from them I concluded you would be convinced of the impropriety of a step which I conceived must have been taken upon a supposition that that place was certainly beyond our limits. But I perceive your Lordship hath taken up an opinion that it is not material whether it be within our charter bounds or not, and that the right of the proprietors of Pennsylvania to the country about Pittsburg must be founded on better authority than the Royal grant! And as your Lordship seems to imagine yourself supported in this sentiment by our own principles in Lord Camden's the resolve and vote of thanks of the 10th of April, 1769, in which the merchants of this city, were so highly, and so justly complimented for their disinterested and self-denying patriotism, manifested in the non-importation agreement? Surely nothing less than that the general voice of the people of all ranks, and in all quarters of the Colony, was raised in favour of liberty, and against Parliamentary impositions.

The restriction of our original non-importation agreement, and its present subsistence, under that modification, is the clearest proof of our permanent resolution, that commerce and liberty shall keep pace with each other; and serves as a standing memorial, that we scorn to have more of the former, than is consistent with our due enjoyment of the latter? Had not the spies of Administration here been fully convinced that the pulse of freedom beat high in every vein; that the constitutional resolves of our representatives, on the most interesting points, spoke the universal language of their constituents, could their information have produced the fruitless and merely verbal suspension of our internal power of legislation? By no means. This would have been an attempt to punish every individual for the transgressions of a few. It is therefore, to a demonstration evident, that the Genius of Liberty spreads her banner over the whole Colony.

Moreover, when we consider that Parliamentary taxations, are not as to their present value, a matter of moment, either to the mother country, or the Colonies; that the contention between us, is upon the points of principle and precedent; that it is not the quantum, but the manner of exacting those unconstitutional imposts, which is the bone of contention, our public jealousies must necessarily be increased.

When the taxation was more general, there was some colour for the assertion in the Revenue Act, that it was intended for the safety and defence of the Colonies. But it is not only true, that this cannot be asserted of the paltry duty on tea; we know, we were assured by our enemies, that when the other articles charged by the Revenue Act were exempted by the partial repeal, the duty on tea was left as a standing memorial of the right of Parliament to tax Americans.

We have, therefore, no reason to believe that our spirit of liberty, founded on a just constitutional basis, waxes cooler as the design of enslaving us grows more evident. The contrary is most true; it has become more inveterate by habit; and is increased by every fresh evidence, of a fixed resolution to reduce us to bondage. Who then can wonder at the firmness and animation of the people of all ranks; so conspicuous in every line of our association paper? Who can wonder that such vast numbers, after the most cool deliberation, gave it their sanction?

Who cannot well account for that universal suffrage of a public meeting of our inhabitants in its favour, after it had been signed, and their laudable and animated rejection of a temporising expedient of Government, ineffectually calculated to cool our ardour, and lay public jealousy asleep? To what principle can our attention to the unanimity of the Colonies, be ascribed; when at the same public meeting, a Committee was unanimously chosen, to correspond with our brethren on the common interest? Can any one in his senses, imagine, that the American Lion, which has once roared so loudly, as to have been heard with astonishment, across the Atlantic, is now fallen asleep? What has been done by Administration, to quell his rage? On the contrary, are they not daily practising every art to exasperate him? And yet an anonymous scribbler has had the unparalleled effrontery to arraign our late political manœuvres; to contrast the tailors and cobblers with the loyal and sensible inhabitants of the city of New York; to attribute that to a few, which is evidently expressive of the sentiments of the whole body of our citizens.

With this view he begins his truly contemptible production, by asking, What is the Committee of Observation? And by whom were they appointed? Let him receive his answer from the above state of facts. They were a select Committee, nominated for the express purpose of watching the tea ship, and Captain Chambers; nominated by the city Committee, who were appointed at a general meeting of its inhabitants, and a number of the citizens, to prevent the landing of dutied tea. This he must know. How impertinent, then, is his other question concerning the authority by which a man, acting in the character of an enemy to his country, was amended to their tribunal. If the fact was really so, it is evident that he was summoned in virtue of a delegation of a general meeting. But the truth is, that it was the city Committee before whom he was arraigned. The cause of his arraignment was a breach of the non-importation agreement, solemnly entered into by his owners; and to which, by his orders, if he was in heart averse to it, he was, nevertheless, bound to pay implicit obedience. How insolently does the scribbler inquire, who, and upon what authority, says that the sense of the city was asked about the dismissal of Captain Lockyer, or the destruction of the tea? If he can want an answer, let him take it from the association paper; from opinion upon our case with Connecticut, the transactions of the late war, and the declarations of our Assembly some time ago, I will take the liberty of endeavouring to set you right in some matters which you do not seem to be fully informed of, being persuaded that if I can be so happy as to place them in a different point of light from what you have heretofore viewed them in, you will be candid enough to change your sentiments.

In the year 1752, the Proprietors of Pennsylvania, understanding that the Government of Virginia were about to erect forts upon the Ohio, in order to repel the encroachments of the French on the properties of the subjects of his Britannic Majesty, they instructed their then Governor, Mr. Hamilton, to assist in any measures of that sort, taking an acknowledgment from the Governor of Virginia that such settlement should not be made use of to prejudice their right to that country, and at the same time allowed him to give assurances that the people should enjoy their lands they bona fide settled on the common quit rent. Of this instruction Mr. Hamilton not long after gave notice to Governor Dinwiddie.

its re-enactment at a public town meeting; from their rejection of the proposal of Government to put the expected tea in a state of safety on its arrival; from their open declaration that it should not be landed; from the fruitless attempt of a few to procure subscribers to a set of resolves calculated to prevent a forcible opposition to its debarkation, and from the appointment of a Committee to correspond and support a harmony of measures with our sister Colonies. From all these he will be instructed, that the public sense required the sending back of the one, and the destruction of the other. Let us suppose, with this vain contemner of the rights of mankind, that every London Captain brought tea to this port. Will he have the assurance to say, they all imported it like Captain Chambers, regularly cocketted and cleared for entry at our custom-house? Will he say, that they, like him, in defiance of repeated warnings, and under the guise of the most solemn and most shamefully false asseverations, persisted in a wicked design to import tea into this Colony subject to duty? Or is it not a public virtue, while this badge of slavery is held over us, to supply the wants of our inhabitants at the risk of a seizure, and by that means to elude the payment of the odious tax? If any of them, but his friend, who so willingly walks with him in chains, have imported tea in any other manner, let the latent and dastardly accuser stand forth with his proofs. We shall then join with him in branding them as apostates; we shall despise them as villainous informers; we shall pronounce them as deserving that infamous death which has been justly inflicted on many less dangerous enemies to their country than Captain Chambers. The spirit of this high-flying zealot for despotism is manifest in his assertion, that the unfortunate man was threatened with death for obeying the laws of his country. A most excellent comment upon the Revenue Act! Let him point out a single passage in that statute which requires or commands all, or any of our ship Captains, to import tea subject to duty. Should such a liberal commentator become a good authority, we should soon be paraphrased out of our liberties. Does he desire to be informed who were the persons of reputation that kept the tally at the destruction of the tea? Let him stand forth himself and meet them, and he will soon know whether he or they will be supported by the public sense. If he would be told what they and their honest fellow citizens got by publicly conducting Captain Lockyer through the crowd: I answer, all that was expected; all that was intended, by one of the above mentioned publications, was, that this servant of the Ministry, and of the East India Company, should have ocular demonstration of our detestation of Parliamentary taxes, and bear the unwelcome tale to his employers. He cannot, surely, be so weak as to believe that he was carried through the greatest crowd that ever was collected in this city, merely to procure the compliment of the hat, or a smile or nod of approbation of a private ship Captain; who, though respectfully treated among us, was indebted for his good treatment to the humanity of our citizens and their regard to due order and decorum. How, then, can it be supposed that any were mortifyingly disgusted at his riot pulling off his hat, or that the huzzas of all the people were intended to insult him? But what principles other than such as would induce a man to put the most public contempt on the character of our great deliverer from slavery and arbitrary power, could induce any one to call a regular and orderly, though striking exhibition of our detestation of unconstitutional impositions, an outrage? Surely, in this fellow's view the revolution itself was an unparalleled outrage; an outrage, however, productive of the fullest security to our civil and religious liberties, and the establishment of the illustrious HOUSE OF HANOVER on the British throne! Did any man in his senses ever doubt whether that happy revolution was brought about by all the people of Britain, because every subject, to a man, did not actually enlist under the banners of the glorious and immortal King William III.? How marvelously does this hero in politics discover his talents, when he attempts to be witty about the ship Nancy's disaster, and the supposed blunder of the narrator, in distinguishing between Captain Chambers's tea and the cargo of his ship? The mention of that disaster, the truth of which has been proved by the Captain's protest before a notary; was evidently the effect of the narrator's intention to give a strict and circumstantial account of the events relating to the tea ship, which had been so long the object of general expectation; and our writer must be truly a novice in trade who knows not how to distinguish between the cargo of a ship and the Captain's private adventure.

But, Mr. Livington, let me assist you to answer the last question of this doughty hero of a Jacobite, and to end the matter with him, by giving him the following evidence, that all the bells in the City rang at the departure of the tea ship. Rudolphus Ritzema, Esq., will inform him that the bell of the Lutheran Church rang on the occasion; the same thing he may learn concerning the bell of Trinity Church from Messrs. Anthony Griffiths and Thomas Tucker; that of St.

In the year 1754, Mr. Dinwiddie came to a resolution of raising men and building forts to the westward, in order to repel the invasions of the French. He had fixed upon the forks of Monongahela as a proper situation for one of these forts, supposing it to be on his Majesty's lands, and issued a proclamation, expressing his purpose of erecting a fort at that place, and inviting the people to enlist in his Majesty's service against the French; and as an encouragement, promising that the quantity of two hundred thousand acres of land should be laid out and divided amongst the adventurers, when the service should be at an end; one hundred thousand acres of which to he laid out adjoining the fort, and the other one hundred thousand acres on the Ohio.

Upon the appearance of this proclamation Mr. Hamilton wrote to Governor Dinwiddie, the 13th March, 1754, reminding him of his former intimation respecting these lands, and enclosing an abstract of the Proprietaries' instructions, and also requesting from him such an acknowledgment as the Proprietaries expected; to which Mr. Dinwiddie, in his letter of the 21st March, 1754, answers:

George's Chapel sounded in the hearing of Messrs. Isaac Sears and Hercules Mulligan; the ringing of the bells of the three Reformed Protestant Dutch Churches can be proved by Mr. Garret Rapalje; that of the French Church by Mr. Frederick Basset; the bell of the English Presbyterian Church was rung by Mr. Brown, their sexton; and that, of the German Calvinist Church by their proper sexton. So that, if the universality of the expression all the bells, can be justified, though those of the City Hall and the College could not join in the enlivening concert, the narrator has spoke the truth, and his impertinent adversary has insinuated an egregious falsehood. He is now called upon to point out which of the churches was broke open on the occasion, and by whom, and what good men hope they will be prosecuted according to law? Let him learn that the respectable public is not to be laughed, jeered, or frightened out of their liberties, by a Jacobitish, ministerial tool, whose most exalted and tremendous character is that of sworn foe to coblers and tailors; whose heart aspires at the glorious satisfaction of seeing us stripped of our cloaths, and stalking in sullen melancholy barefooted, or in rags. But, however despicably he may think of those classes in community, let him recollect with POPE, that

"Honour and shame from no condition rise;
"Act well your part; there all the honour lies.
"Fortune in men has some small difference made"
"One flaunts in rags; one flutters, brocade;
"The cobbler apron'd; and the parson gown'd;
"The friar hooded, and the monarch crowned.
"What differ more (you cry,) the crown or cowl?
"I'll tell you, friend! a wise man and a fool.
"You'll find, if once the monarch-acts the monk;
"Or, cobbler-like, the Doctor will get drunk;
"Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow"
The rest is all but leather or prunella."

But to be serious; there was no alternative loft between the destruction of the tea at Boston and New York, and a submission to the odious duty. Had the tea been landed without opposition, the duty must have been paid, or the commodity would have been seized; and when individuals foolishly or rashly, and against the most certain intelligence, will risk their property in the cause of despotism, or for the sake of sordid and flagitious profit, no good member of society will hesitate to pronounce, that private interest fails a just sacrifice to public utility. Thus much to you, Mr. Printer. A word or two to the public.

My friends and fellow countrymen, be excited by a frequent review of the above narrative, to a steady pursuit of that liberty, your high relish for which you have in so many luminous instances displayed! Continually provoke each other to fresh proofs of your unalterable love for the public weal. Let neither the imperious designs of an arbitrary Ministry, or the insidious machinations of your pretended friends, awe or cajole you out of your birthright. It is a sacred deposit bestowed by the great Parent of the universe on our ancestors, entrusted by their venerable hands to our care, to be preserved and transmitted by us to posterity pure and uncontaminated. Strain every nerve with an honest and spirited zeal in the common cause: Demonstrate to our dear fellow countrymen in the neighbouring Colonies that we have put our hand to the plough, and that far from looking back, we will co-operate with them in tearing out every plant of slavery by the roots. Show them by your every act, that you feel the solemn obligations into which you have, with them, cheerfully engaged. Convince them by a thousand proofs, if possible, that you will never cease, till, with them, you are in full possession of civil liberty, or with them are buried in one common grave. Beware, in particular, of those among you who are well known to excite sedition, or countenance a suppression of the laudable spirit of liberty alternately; and as it suits their private purposes: who are never to be depended on either by Administration or the people; who ever wear two faces; one to recommend them to ministerial favour, another to beguile the sons of liberty into bondage; who have long practised the art of exciting and assuaging tumults, to distinguish themselves as leaders of the people in the eyes of Government, that they may be courted by a sordid Minister into offices and honours. To whom the cause of the people is no longer their cause than while some private ends are to be answered, unconnected with, and often opposed to the good of the people. I need not mention their names - their persons and their threadbare System of politics are well known to you. But for the happiness of the country, the chain of their influence is broke. Oppose it with all your might; their interest is declining; let it never rise again till they have given you the fullest proofs of a permanent attachment to this country's weal. Persist, and if they do not alter their measures, incapable as they now must appear to lead this Colony, they must lose all credit with Government, and the swelling tide of public virtue will speedily whelm them into everlasting oblivion.

BRUTUS.

"Your private letter of the 13th current, I have duly received, and am much misled by our Surveyors if the forks of Monongahela be within the limits of your Proprietaries grant. I have for some time wrote home to have the line run, to have the boundaries properly known, that I may be able to appoint Magistrates on the Ohio, (if in this Government) to keep the traders and others in good order, and I presume soon there will be Commissioners appointed for that service. In the mean time, that no hindrance may be given to our intended expedition, it is highly reasonable, if these lands are in your Proprietor's grant, that the settlers should pay the quit rent to Mr. Penn, and not to his Majesty; and, therefore, as much as lies in my power, I agree thereto, after the time granted by my proclamation, to be clear of quit rent, ceases."

From this correspondence between the Governors of Virginia and Pennsylvania, it appears beyond a doubt, that the terms upon which forts were built, and settlements made in that country, "by the Government of Virginia, were well understood, and the rights of Pennsylvania carefully guarded; and these transactions entirely exclude the idea of that kind of settlement, or acquiescence and agreement of which Lord Camden speaks, and which are the only principles in his opinion from which your Lordship, can draw any conclusions in favour of the right of Virginia."

From this view of the matter I flatter myself your Lordship will readily perceive that the principles of Lord Camden's opinion do not at all apply to the present case. As to the opinion of our Assemblies, on which you seem also to rely, the case is shortly as follows: When Governor Dinwiddie resolved to erect forts on the waters of the Ohio, and to carry an expedition against the French, who had fortified themselves in several parts of the country to the westward, he applied to Governor Hamilton to procure him the assistance of this Province. Unfortunately at this time there was no very good understanding between the Government and the Assembly, and when Mr. Hamilton laid Mr. Dinwiddie's requisition before them they declined complying with it, and urged for reasons, that, by the Royal orders to the several Governors, they were not to act as principals out of their own Governments. That they (the Assembly) would not presume to determine upon the limits of the Province; and that by the papers and evidences sent down to them, and referred to by the Governor, the limits of the Province had not been clearly ascertained to their satisfaction.

It is to be observed, that at this time there had been no real mensurations from Delaware to the westward, except the temporary line between this Province and Maryland, which extends only one hundred and forty-four miles from Delaware. From this line, and from sundry informations of Indian traders, founded on computed distances, and mountainous and crooked roads, Mr. Hamilton concluded that the French forts were considerably within this Province, and it hath since appeared with certainty that the fact was so, though the Assembly were not satisfied with those proofs. And it appears, by a report of a Committee of Assembly, appointed to examine those evidences, that they laid no great stress upon the opinions of traders founded on computed distances.

Upon the whole I cannot find that the Assembly ever made any thing like formal declarations "that Pittsburg was not within this Government, "but that they rather declined making any determination upon the extent of the Province. But if their declarations had been ever so formal or positive, I cannot conceive how any proceedings of theirs could affect the state of the Province, controul the jurisdiction, or prejudice the rights of the proprietors.

Your Lordship is pleased to say: "With respect to the right of this Colony to that country, the transactions of the late war sufficient to show what was ever the sense of the Government of Virginia with regard to it." I do not know to what particular transactions you allude, nor can I apprehend upon what principle the sense of the Government of Virginia can prejudice the right of Pennsylvania, especially when the Governor of this Province was so far from concurring in any such sense, that he took the most effectual measures to guard against any conclusions which might be drawn from it; and I may say, with the strictest truth, that the Government of Virginia, with great justice, concurred in this precaution.

Upon the whole, then, my Lord, I hope the papers I heretofore had the honour of sending you, when properly attended to, will satisfy you that Pittsburg is at least probably within the charter limits of this Province; and I flatter myself that what I have now urged will be sufficient to convince you that nothing can be inferred from the transactions of the late war, the correspondence between the Governors of the two Provinces, the proceedings of our Assembly, or the principles of Lord Camden's opinion, to contract the extent of our charter bounds, or establish the right of Virginia to any part of this Province. I therefore still hope that your Lordship will, upon a review of the subject, be induced to defer attempting to extend the jurisdiction of Virginia within the bounds of this Province, and thereby avoid the occasions of disturbances and dissensions amongst his Majesty's subjects, which will probably ensue from such a step, however prudent and cautious the Magistrates on each side may be inclined to be, and the rather, as a petition for a commission to run out and mark the boundaries between us is now depending before his Majesty. And to prevent the setting up claims, and making conclusions of right by the Government of Virginia, from the circumstances of settlement on the one side, and non-claim on the other, I must take this opportunity of notifying to your Lordship that the Proprietaries of Pennsylvania do claim, by their said petition, as part of their Province of Pennsylvania, all the lands lying west of a south line, to be drawn from Dixon and Mason's line, as it is commonly called, at the westernmost part of the Province of Maryland to the beginning of the fortieth degree of north latitude, to the extent of five degrees of longitude from the river Delaware; and I must request your Lordship will neither grant lands, nor exercise the Government of Virginia within those limits, till his Majesty's pleasure be known.

I am truly concerned that you should think the commitment of Mr. Conolly so great an insult on the authority of the Government of Virginia, as nothing less than Mr. St. Clair's dismissal from his offices can repair. The lands in the neighbourhood of Pittsburg were surveyed for the Proprietaries of Pennsylvania early in the year 1769 and a very rapid settlement under this Government soon took place, and Magistrates were appointed by this Government to act there in the beginning of 1771, who have ever since administered justice without any interposition of the Government of Virginia till the present affair, it therefore could not fail of being both surprising and alarming that Mr. Conolly should appear to act on that stage under a commission from Virginia, before any intimation of claim or right was ever notified to this Government. The advertisement of Mr. Conolly had a strong tendency to raise disturbances, and occasion a breach of the public peace, in a part of the country where the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania hath been exercised without objection, and therefore Mr. St. Clair thought himself bound; as a good Magistrate, to take a legal notice of Mr. Conolly.

Mr. St. Clair is a gentleman who for a long time had the honour of serving his Majesty in the regulars with reputation, and in every station of life has preserved the character of a very honest worthy man; and though perhaps I should not, without first expostulating with you on the subject, have directed him to take the step, yet you must excuse my not complying with your Lordship's requisition of stripping him, on this occasion of his offices and livelihood, which you will allow me to think not only unreasonable, but somewhat dictatorial.

I should be extremely concerned that any misunderstanding should take place between this Government and that of Virginia. I shall carefully avoid every occasion of it, and shall always be ready to join you in the proper measures to prevent so disagreeable an incident, yet I cannot prevail on myself to accede in the manner you require, to a claim which I esteem, and which I think must appear to every body else to be altogether groundless.

I am your Lordship's obedient humble servant,

JOHN PENN

To the Right Honorable Earl of Dunmore, Governor and Commander-in-chief of his Majesty's Province of Virginia, Williamsburg.

MEMORANDUM, 11th April, 1774.

A few days ago the Governor received the following Letter from Jonathan Trumbull, Esquire, Governor of Connecticut, viz:

Lebanon, 24th March, 1774.

SIR: I received your letter of the 24th February last. It is with pleasure I observe, "that you will do every thing in your power to avoid contentions and disorders among his Majesty's subjects." A great number of people possessed of, and settled on, a part of the lands of the Colony of Connecticut, at or near a place called Wyoming, lying west of the river Delaware, within the boundaries and descriptions of our Royal charter, made their application to our Assembly for protection and government. In consequence thereof the town of Westmoreland was made, constituted and annexed to our county of Litchfield, thereby forbearing the exercise of our jurisdiction over a great number of others who have more recently entered under grants from the Proprietaries of Pennsylvania, and claim other parts of the lands belonging to Connecticut. It is not to be doubted that your power and influence may prevent the attempts of others to settle under your claim, and the disagreeable consequences which may follow the want on your part of a similar forbearance towards the people of Westmoreland, until a legal and constitutional decision of the point in question may be obtained, which both you and Mr. Wilmot, sell-citor of the Proprietaries, have acquainted us they will never decline.

It is the duty of our Governor and Company, in faithfulness to the trust reposed in them, to assert and support the rights of this Government and its inhabitants. They do not look upon themselves chargeable with any fault for their exercise of jurisdiction over the people who inhabit land they have good reason to think themselves entitled to by legal purchase from the Aboriginal true proprietors thereof, and hold the primary possession of under the right of pre-emption, for the benefit, and within the limits of this Colony.

I am to acquaint you that several gentlemen from hence, by virtue of an Act of our Assembly, are employed and instructed to ascertain the latitudes of certain places at and beyond Delaware river. They design to set out the 15th of next month for that purpose.

I am, sir, with truth and regard, your obedient humble servant,
JONATHAN TRUMBULL
Honorable John Penn, Esquire.

The said Letter being taken into consideration, the Governor, with the advice of the Council, wrote a letter in answer thereto, in the words following, viz:

Philadelphia, 11th April, 1774.

SIR: I have your letter of 24th March last by the post. My sentiments of exercising the jurisdiction of this Government, in every part thereof, and the impropriety of extending your jurisdiction within our bounds, before you have laid your claim before his Majesty, are so plainly expressed in the several letters I have wrote you, and in those which passed between your Commissioners and me, that they need riot be repeated, and I cannot but think it strange that you should persist in attempting to support a possession gained from the people of this Province in a course of absolute hostility, before your Government had any claim to lands within the bounds of this Province. It appears to me that your taking the latitudes at or beyond Delaware, within the bounds of this Province, is premature, and that no act of your Assembly can authorize such a proceeding. I therefore cannot concur in that step, but, on the contrary, must protest against it, and desire it may not be done, lest it should produce effects which may be injurious to the public peace.

I am, with due regard, your most obedient and humble servant,
JOHN PENN.
To the Honorable Jonathan Trumbull, Esquire, Governor and Commander-in-chief of the Colony of Connecticut, Lebanon.

At a Council held at Philadelphia, on Wednesday, April, 1774.

Present, The Honorable John Penn, Esquire, Governor,

Richard Peters, James Tilghman, Andrew Allen, Edward Shippen, Jun., Esquires.

The Governor laid before the Board a Letter which he received this morning by George Wilson, Esq., express, from William Crawford, Esq., President of the Court of Westmoreland county, with several papers enclosed, relative to the disturbances created, and still continued, by the people of Virginia within that county, which were severally read, and are as follows, viz:

Westmoreland County, April 8th, 1774.

SIR: As some very extraordinary occurrences have lately happened in this county, it is necessary to write an account of them to you. That which I now give is at the request, and with the approbation of all the Magistrates that are at present attending the court. A few weeks ago Mr. Conolly went to Staunton, and was sworn as a Justice of the Peace for Augusta county, in which it is pretended that the country about Pittsburg is included. He had before this brought from Williamsburg commissions of the peace for several gentlemen in this part of the Province, but none of them, I believe, have been accepted of. A number of new militia officers have been lately appointed by Lord Dunmore. Several musters of the militia have been held, and much confusion has been occasioned by them. I am informed that the militia is composed of men without character and without fortune, and who would be equally averse to the regular administration of justice under the Colony of Virginia, as they are to that under the Province of Pennsylvania. The disturbances which they have produced at Pittsburg have been particularly alarming to the inhabitants. Mr. Conolly is constantly surrounded with a body of armed men. He boasts of the countenance of the Governor of Virginia, and forcibly obstructs the execution of legal process, whether from the Court or from single Magistrates. A Deputy Sheriff has come from Augusta county, and I am told has writs in his hands against Captain St. Clair and the Sheriff for the arrest and confinement of Mr. Conolly. The Sheriff was last week arrested at Pittsburg for serving a writ on one of the inhabitants there, but was, after some time, discharged. On Monday last one of Conolly's people grossly insulted Mr. Mackay, and was confined by him in order to be sent to jail. The rest of the party hearing it immediately came to Mr. Mackay's house and proceeded to the most violent outrages. Mrs. Mackay was wounded in the arm with a cutlass; the Magistrates, and those who came to their assistance, were treated with much abuse, and the prisoner was rescued.

Some days before the meeting of the court, a report was spread that the militia officers, at the head of their several companies, would come to Mr. Hanna's, use the Court ill, and interrupt the administration of justice. On Wednesday, while the court was adjourned, they came to the court house and paraded before it. Centinels were placed at the door, and Mr. Conolly went into the house. One of the Magistrates was hindered by the militia from going into it till permission was first obtained from their commander. Mr. Conolly sent a message to the Magistrates informing them that he wanted to communicate something to them, and would wait on them for that purpose. They received him in a private room. He read to them the enclosed paper, together with a copy of a letter to you, which Lord Dunmore had transmitted to him, enclosed in a letter to himself, which was written in the same angry and undignified style. The Magistrates gave the enclosed answer to what he read, and he soon afterwards departed with his men. Their number was about one hundred and eighty or two hundred. On their return to Pittsburg some of them seized Mr. Elliott, of the Bullock Penn, and threatened to put him in the stocks for something which they deemed an affront offered to their commander. Since their return, a certain Edward Thompson, and a young man who keeps store for Mr. Spear, have been arrested by them; and Mr. Conolly, who in person seized the young man, would not allow him time even to lock up the store, in other parts of the country, particularly those adjoining the river Monongahela, the Magistrates have been frequently insulted in the most indecent and violent manner, and are apprehensive that unless they are speedily and vigorously supported by Government, it will become both fruitless and dangerous for them to proceed in the execution of their offices. They presume not to point out the measures proper for settling the present disturbances, but beg leave to recommend the fixing a temporary line, with the utmost expedition, as one Step which in all probability will contribute very much towards producing that effect.

For further particulars concerning the situation of this county, I refer you to Colonel Wilson, who is kind enough to go on the present occasion to Philadelphia.

I am, sir, your very humble servant,
To the Honorable John Penn, Esq. W. CRAWFORD.

Here follows Doctor Conolly's Address to the Magistrates of Westmoreland County, referred to in the foregoing letter.

GENTLEMEN. -

I am come here to be occasion of no disturbances, but to prevent them. As I am countenanced by Government, whatever you may say or conceive, some of the Justices of this Bench are the cause of this appearance, and not me. I have done this to prevent myself from being illegally taken to Philadelphia. My orders from the Government of Virginia not being explicit, but claiming the country about Pittsburg, I have raised the militia to support the civil authority of that Colony, vested in me. I am come here to free myself of a promise made to Captain Proctor, but have not conceived myself amenable to this Court by any authority from Pennsylvania, upon which account I cannot apprehend that you have any right to remain here as Justices of the Peace, constituting a court under that Province; but in order to prevent confusion, I agree that you may continue to act in that capacity in all such matters as may be submitted to your determination by the acquiescence of the people, until I may have instructions to the contrary from Virginia, or until his Majesty's pleasure shall be further known on this subject.

The Answer of the Magistrates of Westmoreland County to the foregoing Address of Doctor Conolly, viz:

The jurisdiction of the Court and officers of the county of Westmoreland, rests on the legislative authority of the Province of Pennsylvania, confirmed by his Majesty in Council That jurisdiction has been regularly exercised, and the Court and officers will continue to exercise it in the same regular manner. It is far from their intentions to occasion or foment disturbances, and they apprehend that no such intentions can with propriety be inferred from any part of their conduct; on the contrary, they wish, and will do all in their power to preserve the public tranquility. In order to contribute to this very salutary purpose, they give information that every step will be taken on on part of the Province of Pennsylvania toaccommodate any differences that have arisen between it and the Colony of Virginia, by fixing a temporary line betwixt them.

The Deposition of Henry Read, relative to the disturbances made in Westmoreland County by the Virginians, viz:

Westmoreland County, ss:

The deposition of Henry Read, of Pittsburg, yeoman, (he being of full age,) taken before us, two of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the county aforesaid, on his solemn oath of the Evangelist of Almighty God, is as follows, viz: That on this day, about eleven o'clock, Doctor John Conolly, at the head of a number of armed men on horseback, came into Pittsburg and alighted near the houses of John Ormsby and Joseph Spear, Esquire, when said John Conolly came into Mr. Spear's house, and soon after went out again; that this deponent, William Amberson, and some others, were tying up Mr. Spear's skins at his door; that Conolly then ordered one Reily to lay hold of that fellow, pointing to said Amberson, who is at Mr. Spear's, and acts for him as storekeeper, and clerk; that Reily laid hold of Amberson by the arm; then Amberson then requested he might have liberty to lock up the store, and was endeavouring to go towards the store door, when Mr. Conolly came up and seized Amberson by the breast, and said, let the skins and store go to the devil, if your master was here I would serve him in the same manner; that then Conolly, with several armed men, took said Amberson down to the Fort; that after some time this deponent saw said Amberson and Edward Thompson brought up from the Fort to the town, and guarded by a number of armed men; that after they had drank some toddy at Mr. Ormsby's porch, they took Amberson and Thompson to William Christy's house, and placed several armed men at the door; that in this state this deponent left them, and came off express to give information to Mr. Spear at Westmoreland court; that there was in Mr. Spear's house, a large quantity of goods and skins. And further this deponent saith not.

HENRY READ.

Sworn and subscribed this 7th day of April, 1774.

W. CRAWFORD

VAN SWEARINGEN

The Board taking the above Letters and papers into consideration, thought it advisable for the Governor to defer writing an answer thereto, or taking any steps in consequence of the intelligence they contain, till the return of the express from Williamsburg, who was lately despatched by this Government to the Earl of Dunmore, on the subject of the above mentioned disturbances.

At a Council held at Philadelphia, on Thursday, 21st April, 1774:

Present, the Honorable John Penn, Esquire, Governor, Richard Peters, Andrew Allen, James Tilghman, Edward Shippen, Jun., Esquires.

The express sent to Williamsburg being returned without any answer from the Government of Virginia, the Governor recommended to the Board the consideration of the subject relative to the disturbances and violences committed by the people of that Colony within the county of Westmoreland, and laid before them three letters he received two days ago by express from Aeneas Mackay, Devereux Smith, and Andrew McFarlane, Esquires, Magistrates of that county, each dated the 9th of April instant, which were severally read, and Messrs. Mackay and Smith's letters follow in these words, viz:

Pittsburg, 9th April, 1774

SIR: I have just time to inform your Honor that the Justices, Devereux Smith, Andrew McFarlane, and myself, returned from court late last night to this place; and that we were all three taken prisoners at half an hour past nine o'clock this morning by order of Doctor Conolly; and because we refused giving bail we are ordered to be sent off this afternoon to Staunton, in Virginia, where I suppose we will spend the most of this summer, which gives me no manner of concern so far as it affects my own person, although I cannot but feel for, and lament the distressing situation of my wife and children, left here exposed to the insults and tyranny of a lawless mob, whose aim is to subvert government and good order and enrich themselves with the spoils of their neighbors.

I am, with due respect, sir, your most humble and most obedient servant,
ÆNEAS MACKAY.

Pittsburg, April 9th, 1774.

SIR: When Justices Mackay, McFarlane, and I, returned from attending the court last evening, we were informed that Doctor Conolly was determined to issue King's warrants for us, which were served on the above mentioned gentlemen and myself this day by Mr. Conolly's Sheriff. The crime which we are charged with is for the answer we gave Doctor Conolly in writing by the concurrence of the Court of Westmoreland, a copy of which was enclosed to your Honor per favour of Colonel Wilson. Mr. Conolly offered to enlarge us on condition of giving bail to take our trial at Staunton court in Virginia, which the other gentlemen and I refused, so that we go to jail this day, where we intend to remain till your Honor's pleasure is known, which we make no doubt will be in a short time. It is true, our going away from our families and business at this time, will be attended with very great inconveniences, but we are willing to suffer that, and a great deal more, rather than bring a disgrace on the commission which we bear under your Honor.

I am, with great respect, your Honor's most obedient and most humble servant,

DEVEREUX SMITH.

Mr. McFarlane's Letter is of the same tenor with the foregoing one from Mr. Smith.

The Board taking into consideration the said letters, as well as the letters and papers laid before them at their last meeting, are of opinion, that the most advisable step to be taken on this occasion by the Government will be to appoint Commissioners to go as soon as possible to Williamsburg, in order to represent to the Government of Virginia the ill consequences which may happen to the persons and properties of his Majesty's subjects, if an immediate stop be not put to the disorders and violent proceedings which have been begun and are now carrying on under the authority of the Government, within the western lands of this Province; and also to confer with the said Government on the most proper measures for establishing peace and good order among his Majesty's subjects of both Governments; and for that purpose to endeavour to agree upon a temporary line of jurisdiction; and further, to request the said Government will, without loss of time, join with the Proprietaries of this Province in an application to the Crown to appoint Commissioners for running and ascertaining the true boundary lines between Pennsylvania and Virginia.

The Board were likewise of opinion that a letter should be wrote to the three Magistrates who have been put under an arrest by Mr. Conolly, thanking them for their spirited behaviour, and acquainting them that proper care shall be taken to supply them at the expense of this Government, with all necessaries which may render their situation as comfortable and easy as possible until their discharge can be obtained; and also that a letter of instructions be sent to the other Magistrates of Westmoreland respecting their future conduct.

At a Council held at Philadelphia, on Friday, 22d April, 1774:

Present, the Honorable John Penn, Esquire, Governor, Richard Peters, Andrew Allen, James Tilghman, Edward Shippen, Jun., Esquires.

A member of Council laid before the Board draughts of two letters proposed to be sent to the Magistrates of Westmoreland colony, which were read, and after a few alterations made to them, were ordered to be fairly transcribed, and despatched to morrow by the express, who came from that county.

The letters follow in these words, viz:

Philadelphia, April 22, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: I received your several letters informing me of your arrest and confinements on warrants issued by Doctor Conolly, and cannot but greatly approve your spirit and the attachment you have shown to the interest of this Province. But as the confinement of your persons at so great a distance from your homes must be very injurious to your private concerns, if you can procure your enlargement, by finding bail, I shall by no means disapprove such a step. I shall with all possible expedition, send Commissioners to my Lord Dunmore, to apply for your discharge; and as Colonel Wilson is so obliging as to offer to call at Staunton, in his way home, I have instructed him to procure for you any security or credit you may stand in need of, and shall do every thing in my power to free you from your disagreeable situation, or to make it as comfortable as may be.

I am, gentlemen, your very humble servant,

JOHN PENN

To Æneas Mackay, Devereux Smith, and Andrew McFarlane, Esquires, Justices of the Peace for the County of Westmoreland.

Philadelphia, April 22, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: The present alarming situation of our affairs in Westmoreland county, occasioned by the very unaccountable conduct of the Government of Virginia, requires the utmost attention of this Government, and therefore I intend, with all possible expedition, to send Commissioners to expostulate with my Lord Dunmore upon the behaviour of those he has thought proper to invest with such power as hath greatly disturbed the peace of that county. As the Government of Virginia hath the power of raising a militia, and there is not any such in this Province, it will be in vain to contend with them in the way of force; the Magistrates therefore, at the same time that they continue with steadiness to exercise the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania with respect to the distribution of justice and punishment of vice, must be cautious of entering into any such contests with the officers of my Lord Dunmore as may tend to widen the present unhappy breach; and therefore as things are at present circumstanced I would not advise the magistracy of Westmoreland county to proceed by way of criminal prosecution against them for exercising the Government of Virginia. I flatter myself that our Commissioners to Virginia will succeed according to our expectations, and that our affairs to the westward will soon be put upon a peaceable and quiet footing. I am gentlemen, your very humble servant.

JOHN PENN.

To William Crawford, Esq., and his Associates, of Westmoreland County.

CORRESPONDENCE LAID BEFORE THE COUNCIL.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO JOSEPH SHIPPEN.

Ligonier, January 15, 1774.

SIR: This will be delivered by Mr. Hanna, one of the trustees for Westmoreland county. To some management of his I believe, the opposition to fixing the county town at Pittsburg is chiefly owing - it is his interest it should continue where the law has fixed the courts, pro tempore; he lives there; used to keep public house there; and has now, on that expectation, rented his house at an extravagant price. Erwen, another trustee, adjoins, and is also public house keeper. A third trustee lives in the neighbourhood, which always make a majority for continuing the courts at the present place. A passage in the law for erecting the county is, that the courts shall be held in the foregoing place (the house of Robert Hanna) till a Court house and jail are built; this puts it in their power to continue them as long as they please - for a little management might prevent a court house and jail being built this twenty years. This is explanation of a petition to the House, which was sent down lately - it was begun and ended on the Friday of the court week. - An unexpected opportunity to Philadelphia offered that day, by reason of which it is to the House only, and signed but by a few people, but the few that have signed it are the principal people; and who acted more from their feelings for multitudes, who they saw suffering than from their own inconvenience. A like petition to the Governor will soon be forwarded, which will be countenanced, by, I am certain, five-sixths of the whole people.

Mr. Hoofnagle I hope will be almost home before you receive this. I beg you will excuse inaccuracies as I wrote in the greatest hurry - Mr. Hanna holding his horse whilst I write. I will see you early in the spring.

And am, sir, your most humble and most obedient servant,

AR. ST. CLAIR.

Joseph Shippen, Jun., Esq.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOR PENN

Ligonier, February 2, 1774

I am honored with your letter of the 20th January, which reached me the 28th, and am happy to find the method pursued at Pittsburg, on the 25th, did not very materially differ from that you had been pleased to direct.

Doctor Conolly was arrested previous to the meeting, by my orders, on his avowing himself the author of the advertisement requiring the people to meet as a militia, and committed on refusing to find sureties for his good behaviour till next court.

I was in hopes the sending him out of the way would have put an end to it altogether; but I was mistaken. About eighty persons in arms assembled themselves, chiefly from Mr. Croghan's neighbourhood, and the country west of and below the Monongahela, and after parading through the town and making a kind of feu de joy, proceeded to the Fort where a cask of rum was produced on the parade, and the head knocked out. This was a very effectual way of recruiting.

As a scene of drunkenness and confusion was likely to ensue, I got the Magistrates (who attended in consequence of the letters I had sent them) together, and read the enclosed paper, which we had concocted that morning, and at the conclusion, when they were required to disperse, they replied they had been invited there, but came with peaceable intentions, and would go home again without molesting any one; on which we left them; however, towards night, their peaceable disposition forsook them, and I should probably have felt their resentment had I not got intimation of their design. I thought it most prudent to keep out of their way.

I have no doubt but the Magistrates will do their duty with spirit, and I shall take the earliest opportunity to make them acquainted with the support your Honor is determined to afford them. In some parts of the country they will have a difficult task, and I am really afraid this affair will be productive of a great deal of confusion. I shall not fail to give them the necessary cautions with regard to the Riot Act, and I think I can judge pretty nearly how far it may be safely extended.

Mr. Conolly has most certainly a commission from Lord Dunmore, expressly for Pittsburg and its dependencies, and his subalterns are John Stephenson, a brother of Mr. Crawford, our senior magistrate, William Harrison, a son-in-law of his, and Dorsey Penticost, who was lately in the commission of the peace here. Mr. Penticost has, I hear, been down to Mr. Conolly since his confinement, and taken the necessary oaths to qualify him for his military office, and is to assemble the people at Red Stone and take possession of Fort Burd. I have wrote to the Justices in that part of the country to watch his motions. Mr. McKee is said to be appointed a Justice by Lord Dunmore, but I would fain hope without his consent; at any rate he behaved very well on the late occasion, and as he was doubted, I made a point of having him there under pretence of his being Indian Agent, but in fact, if he was a friend or abettor of Conolly's measures.

It is, sir, extremely grateful to me that my conduct in any part meets with your approbation; but should I forget to be attentive to any thing that may disturb the happiness of your Government, or from which you may receive a personal injury, I should be guilty of the grossest breach of duty, as well as the blackest ingratitude, neither of which I trust will ever be the case.

I am, sir, your most obedient and most humble servant,
AR. ST. CLAIR,

The Honorable John Penn, Esq.

Paper enclosed in Arthur St. Clair's Letter to the Governor, of February 2, 1774.

As friends and fellow countrymen, which we ought all to consider each other, from whatever different quarters of the globe we have met here, suffer that we make you acquainted with some things of which you ought not to be ignorant

We do not blaim you for having an affection for the laws of the countries and provinces in which you have been born; 'tis a natural, 'tis a praiseworthy affection! And it requires a length of time and diligent application to discover and give the deserved preference to different systems of laws and forms of Government, for which but few have either leisure or opportunity.

We do not tell you the plan of Pennsylvania is a perfect one. Such no human institution is or ever was;

but the rapid progress Pennsylvania has made, the numbers of people that flock to it from every part of the world, and particularly the much greater value of landed property than in the adjoining parts of the neighbouring countries, evince that it is no very defective one; evince that its laws are mild and salutary, and that property and liberty, civil and religious, is well secured, and that it has some advantages over its neighbours.

We doubt not but you will readily acknowledge these matters; but you will reply, it is nothing to us; the soil we live on being no part of Pennsylvania; we can have no part of the advantages or disadvantages arising from its constitution.

We well know much pains have been taken to persuade many of you to a belief of this, and likewise that the Proprietaries have industriously delayed to settle their boundary. There is not the least foundation for either.

The Proprietaries of Pennsylvania claimed the country about Pittsburg, and the settlers quietly acquiesced in that claim; and as soon as doubts began to arise about it they took effectual pains to satisfy themselves whether or not they were right in that claim, and actually found the country a considerable distance west of that place within their Province: And so far are they from delaying the running their boundary line, we have the best authority for saying that a petition has been a considerable time before his Majesty for that very purpose. You must be sensible it would be to little purpose to run it without the concurrence of the Crown; certainly it would never be conclusive.

The jurisdiction of Pennsylvania has been regularly extended to Pittsburg, and exercised there for a number of years, as the records of Cumberland, Bedford, and Westmoreland counties testify; and you yourselves have acknowledged it, by applying for your lands in that Province. Whether that extension has been legally made or not, can be determined by the Crown alone; but must be submitted to till it is determined. And it must be evident to you that Lord Dunmore, as Governor of Virginia, can have no more right to determine this matter than one of us, for this plain reason: the charters of Pennsylvania and Virginia both flowed originally from the Crown; on that footing they are perfectly independent of each other; but they are both parties in this dispute, and consequently neither can be judge.

We would fondly hope no person in this country would wish to be from under the protection of law. A state of anarchy and confusion, and total subversion of property must inevitably ensue. We cannot help thinking contending jurisdictions in one and the same country must produce similar effects, and every attempt to introduce modes or regulations not warranted by the laws or constitution of Pennsylvania will also do so in a certain degree.

Any grievances the inhabitants of this part of the country suffer there is no doubt the Legislature want only to be informed of to redress. Should it be imagined the protection of a military force is necessary, the votes and proceedings of the last winter session of Assembly will shew that, probably, it was owing to the representations of the Indian Agent, that an Indian war would certainly follow, establishing a military force at Pittsburg, that such protection was not then granted, and time seems to have shewn he was not in the wrong.

If that effect would have supervened at a time when his Majesty's troops were just withdrawn, when the country was naked, defenceless, and alarmed, and when the Indians were accustomed to the idea of troops in their neighbourhood, much more is it to be doubted the establishing a militia, which is a military force, will produce that effect now when they have been so long disused to it.

As his Majesty's Justices and Protectors of the public peace of Pennsylvania, it is our duty to tell you your meeting is an unlawful one, and that it tends to disquiet the minds of his Majesty's liege subjects. We do in his Majesty's name require you to disperse, and retire yourself es peaceably to your respective habitations.

Present when this was read.

ALEXANDER MCKEE,	ÆNEAS MACKAY,
WILLIAM LOCHRY,	VAN SWEARINGEN,
JAMES POLLOCK,	WILLIAM BRACHEN,
JAMES CAVET,	ARTHUR ST. CLAIR.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO JOSEPH SHIPPEN, JUN.

Ligonier, February 25, 1774.

DEAR SIR: the disturbances that have begun in this country seem still to be increasing, and, unless some effectual method is soon fallen upon to put a stop to them, will soon come to a formidable head. What that method should be it is difficult to say, but possibly the running a temporary line might quiet the people a little, though I doubt very much if even that would not now be opposed.

As much the greatest part of the inhabitants near the line have removed from Virginia, they are inexpressibly fond of any thing that comes from that quarter, and their minds are never suffered to be at rest. Mr. Croghan's emissaries (and it is astonishing how many he has either duped or seduced to embrace his measures) are continually irritating them against Pennsylvania, and assuring them they are not within its limits; so that unless Lord Dunmore does formally recede from what he has undertaken in this country, it will be next to impossible to exercise the civil authority. From the very beginning I foretold a second Carolina affair was intended, I am now convinced of it.

I have letters from all the Magistrates in that part of the country, complaining of the difficulties they are exposed to, and the open and avowed determination of the people not to submit to their jurisdictions. However, they are all still as yet, and I will do what in my power lies to continue them so; as one step towards it, and to convince the others that we in some measure are in earnest, I intend immediately removing my office to Pittsburg, adjoining, there to live the moment I can get my farm off my hands here.

I enclose you a letter from Mr. Spear, which I received by the bearer. I shall immediately write to Mr. Swearingen to commit, without ceremony, any person who shall attempt to oppose or molest him in the execution of his office. Excuse the haste I am almost always obliged to write to you in; opportunities offer unexpectedly, and the people waiting.

I am, dear sir, your very humble servant,

AR. ST. CLAIR.

Enclosed in Arthur St. Clair's Letter to Joseph Shippen, Jun., of February 25, 1774.

Pittsburg, February 23, 1774.

DEAR SIR: I am just now informed that the Virginians up the Monongahela have had two or three musters lately; one at Red Stone Old Fort, and one yesterday at Paul Froman's, on the other side of the Monongahela; and I am also told they had a meeting at Mr. Penticost's own house, in consequence of which Mr. Penticost wrote to Mr. Swearingen to act no longer there as a Pennsylvania Magistrate at his peril. I therefore think it would be advisable to endeavor to have a stop put to those proceedings, if possible, as it creates the greatest disturbance, and very much retards the execution of our civil process.

I am, in haste, dear sir, your humble servant,

JOSEPH SPEAR.

P.S. This news has just come to hand, otherwise I would have wrote you more full. Dr. Conolty is just now going over the run to Red Stone, I know not what for.

ÆNEAS MACKAY TO GOVERNOR PENN.

Pittsburg, April 4, 1774.

SIR: Since the return of the celebrated Dr. Conolly from Virginia last to this place, which he did on the 28th March, our village is become the scene of anarchy and confusion. The Doctor was taken into the Sheriff's custody here the 24th day of last January, in consequence of his extraordinary advertisement. He was but a few days in jail before he found means to prevail with the Sheriff, and obtained his leave to visit his associates at this place, where he staid a few days, and then, instead of returning to jail, according to his promise to the Sheriff, he went up to Red Stone settlement, where, with the assistance of his friends in that quarter, he assembled about twenty armed men, who guarded him from there to or near the frontiers of Virginia.

On the 30th of March a party from Chaster settlement joined the Doctor at this place. On hearing of that circumstance Sheriff Proctor, and the Justices Smith, McFarlane, and myself repaired to the Fort in order to discover the Doctor's intentions, and if we found them any wise tumultuously disposed, to read them the Riot Act. There we found about twenty odd men, some with and some without arms, and the Doctor before them with two letters in his hands, both of which he said he had just received from Lord Dunmore, with orders to make them (the militia) acquainted with the contents, and this he immediately did by reading the papers to them. In the first of these letters his Lordship greatly applauded the Doctor's conduct, when taken by the Sheriff, for not giving bail, and commanded him to persevere in the prosecution of the plan he begun upon, maintaining the possession of Fort Pitt and its dependencies, and to put the militia and other Virginia laws in force, concluding with a promise of being powerfully supported by his Lordship.

The other letter the Doctor declared to be a duplicate of his Lordship's answer to Governor Penn's letter, relating to the militia muster, when first set on foot in this place last January. Just as the Doctor had done reading these instruments, he turned on his heel, and gave us to understand he would be glad to speak to us in a bar room just at hand, when he said that although he, in obedience to Lord Dunmore's positive orders, had assembled these men, in order to hear the aforesaid letters read, he had no intention to take any step contrary to the established rules of law at this place, until after the court, which would set in a few days, when he said he was determined to deliver himself up, and abide by the judgment of the same, and requested of us to observe the like pacific measures in the mean time. We told the Doctor we are averse to violent proceedings, unless forced to it in our own defence, but expected he, the Doctor, did not mean we should desist from exercising the duty of our station, as conservators of the peace, till that time. To this he replied, he did not.

Next morning, the 31st of March, the Sheriff served a writ on William Christy, a militia Lieutenant, on notice of which the Doctor had the Sheriff taken by a King's warrant, and was actually in custody for some little time; and ever since that time there are parties of armed men in constant pursuit of our Deputy Sheriff and Constables, by which means it is impossible for us to do any business.

The Doctor is now in actual possession of the Fort, with a body guard of militia about him, invested, as we are told, with both civil and military power to put the Virginia law in force in these parts; and a considerable number of the inhabitants of these back parts of this county are ready to join him on any emergency. Every artifice are used to seduce the people; some by being promoted to civil or military employments, and others with the promises of grants of lands on easy terms: and the giddy headed mob are so infatuated as to suffer themselves to be carried away by these insinuating delusions; for instance of which, the two Constables appointed to serve as such in this township, (one of whom; Philip Reily by name, was sworn in at last January court) both deserted us and joined the Doctor's party. It is most certain the Doctor is determined to carry his point, or lose his life in the attempt; and it is equally certain he has all the encouragement and promises of support from Virginia that he can wish for, so that unless an effectual remedy be speedily applied we know not what may be the consequence, for matters are carried to a very dangerous length already, and are likely to become more so every day.

We are told the Colonel of militia of Augusta county is under orders to be in readiness to march to this place on the shortest notice. Lord Dunmore has actually enclosed twelve commissions to the Doctor to fill up for militia officers at his own discretion.

We will have another general muster at this place some time this month, and we are well assured a strong body of the militia will appear with arms at the court, with an intention no doubt, to rescue Conolly, and perhaps will attempt something else.

The Indians are greatly alarmed at seeing parties of armed men patrolling through our streets daily, not knowing but there is hostility intended against them, and their country. I remain, sir, your most humble and most obedient servant, ÆNEAS MACKAY.

GEORGE CROGHAN TO DAVID SAMPLE.

April 4th, 1774.

SIR: I have been long convinced that Fort Pitt and its dependencies was without the limits of Pennsylvania, and no less convinced that the laws of that Province could have no force or power beyond its limits, yet as I have always considered any law better than no law, I have countenanced the law of that Province hitherto, by pleading to some actions brought against me, and being bail to others, though at the same time I have always denied the jurisdiction by not paying any taxes, as in that case my liberty and property was in as much danger as all the rest of my fellow subjects in the Colonies have thought theirs, by submitting to a tax laid on them by the British Parliament, and which they have always withstood. Now, sir, as the Colony of Virginia has this winter extended the laws of that Government to this part of the country, by raising the militia and appointing civil officers, I shall no longer countenance the laws of your Province by pleading to any actions brought against me, unless brought by the Colony of Virginia, for it must be granted, that if any Colony, has a right to extend their laws to this country, Virginia must, till his Majesty's pleasure be known therein. Since this change has happened, two actions have been brought against me from your court, one at the suit of Richard and William Butler, the other at the suit of Joseph Spear. As you are my attorney, I desire, when those actions are called in court, that you wont appear to them, and request that you will inform the Court you have my directions so to act, and inform them of my reasons, which I should wish them to know, though I have many others; but as your court can have nothing to do in adjusting the present disputes I will not trouble you with any thing farther on this head. And am, sir, your most humble servant,

GEORGE CROGHAN

To David Sample, Esq.

THOMAS SMITH TO JOSEPH SHIPPEN.

Westmoreland County, April 7, 1774.

SIR: The present transactions at this place are so very extraordinary that I am persuaded you will be very much surprised at the relation of them, if any thing that is absurd and unwarrantable which originates from Lord Dunmore can surprise you. I think I am warranted in this observation by his Lordship's letter to his Honor, a duplicate of which, together with a letter at the same time to Conolly, we have had just read to us.

After Conolly was committed to jail in the manner you have been informed, the Sheriff let him at large on his word of honour to return at the court. He did return, indeed, and in such a manner as might have been expected from his preceding conduct. We heard, when we came up to this court, that he was mustering a large party in order to prevent the court from sitting. We thought that there could not be any foundation for such a report, but at the same time we thought it prudent to order the Sheriff to raise as many men as he could collect, to prevent us from being insulted by a lawless set of men acting under the colour of authority. The time was so short that few were collected on our side, and those few were ill armed, so that we found ourselves in a very disagreeable situation when we received certain intelligence that Conolly was coming down with two hundred armed men. When we found they were at hand the Magistrates thought it prudent to adjourn the court, as it was near the time. They soon after came down to the number of one hundred and fifty or one hundred and eighty, with colours flying, and their Captains, &c., had their swords drawn. The first thing that they did was to place centinels at the court house door, and then Conolly sent a message that he would wait on the Magistrates and communicate the reasons of his appearance. The Bench and Bar were then assembled in Mr. Hanna's house, where we sent him word we would hear him. He and Pentecost soon came down, and he read the paper which will be sent down to his Honor the Governor with the bearer of this, and then he read a duplicate of Lord Dunmore to our Governor, together with the letter mentioned before.

The Court told him they would soon return an answer to what he had said. (They did not think it prudent to do it without consulting together and taking the opinion of the Bar.) We soon agreed on the terms of the answer, and the gentleman who had the principal hand in forming it, has done it in such a manner as I am persuaded will procure him the thanks of the Government. It contains firmness and moderation, and, as far as I am capable of judging, it was not possible to form one more free from exceptions in our present situation. One in any other form might have been the occasion of altercations, which might have produced undue concessions, or been attended with the most fatal consequences; for I have reason to believe that the greatest part of them were wishing for some colourable reason to quarrel. The Bench purposed to deliver the answer in the court house. However, in that particular they counted without their host, for they were refused admittance, and Conolly waited for them at the court house door, where Mr. Wilson, at the request of the Court, delivered it, and after exchanging copies they departed more peaceably than might have been expected. However, the consequences of such proceedings are too apparent to need be enumerated; the administration of justice must be entirely at a stand, and, indeed, I cannot help thinking that this mob has collected for that purpose, as I am well assured that amongst all those who assembled there was not one single man of any property; on the contrary, the greatest part of them were such as are obliged to hide themselves from their creditors, or such as are under the necessity of taking shelter in this part of the country to escape the punishment due to their crimes. It seems Lord Dunmore gave Conolly blank commissions, trusting to his own prudence to fill them up, by inserting the names of proper persons. Conolly, in order to be consistent with himself, bestowed one of these commissions on one Teagarden, an old fellow, who has several times been committed for felony. I don't, indeed, know that he has been convicted, because he has always broken the jail. Once I think he was committed to Lancaster jail and escaped. His character is so well known, that those who are the strongest advocates for the present disturbances are ashamed of his being appointed one of their Captains.

The people in this part of the country who would wish to enjoy the benefits of society, and would submit to any form of government, are in the most disagreeable situation that can be imagined: their property, their liberty, and their lives, are at the mercy of a lawless desperate banditti! In such a situation they look for, and have the utmost reason to expect, the protection of that Government under which they have settled. What is the most proper method to be taken it would be presumption in me to suggest. There are but two ways: the one to agree on a temporary line of jurisdiction until the matter can be finally settled; the other, to establish a sufficient garrison at Fort Pitt to withstand the rabble who act under Lord Dunmore's commission. It would have been a happy thing for this part of the country, if this last measure had met with success when it was first recommended to the Legislature; and, indeed, sensible people in this part of the country, who are well affected to this Government, cannot help drawing conclusions from the opposition which that measure met with, which I am persuaded could never be the motives of those who may have made the opposition to it.

The conduct of Lord Dunmore is really the most extraordinary, in the light in which the people of this part of the country are obliged to view and feel it, that can be imagined. To establish the jurisdiction of a different Province over the people who have purchased, and settled, and lived for a considerable space of time, peaceably under this; to establish this jurisdiction by a military force, is such an absurd measure, that I believe it will be difficult to suppose any man in his senses would have adopted it.

"I hope you will excuse this incoherent scrawl, when I inform you that it is wrote in a small room amidst the clamour and confusion of a number of people. If you think the contents of it are of consequence enough to be communicated to his Honor the Governor, I will request you to do it; if not, you will please to excuse this impertinence, of, sir, your obliged and most humble servant,

THOMAS SMITH.

Joseph Sharpen, Esquire.

REPRESENTATION OF THE COMMISSIONERS AND ASSESSORS,

To the Honorable John Penn, Esquire, Governor and Commander-in-chief of the Province of Pennsylvania.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONOR: The Board of Commissioners and Assessors for the county of Westmoreland, at this critical junction, humbly beg leave to represent to your Honor the disagreeable situation they are now in, by reason of the present disturbances in this county. The Board beg leave to inform your Honor, that they have duly and regularly laid the assessments of the county, according to the laws of this Province; they have also issued the proper duplicates to the different Collectors by them appointed to collect the same; but the people residing in the back parts of the county, or the greater part of them, absolutely refuse to pay their taxes, or to serve the county in the office of Collector. On which account the Board has been under the necessity to be at a great expense by reason of their frequent meetings, which consequently must come off the public, and are unable without further assistance to execute their duty.

They therefore pray your Honor's advice and assistance in this matter, and for further particulars, refer your Honor to George Wilson, Esquire, who was an eye witness to the disturbance of the Court, by the meeting of a number of armed men; and the Board begs leave to assure your Honor that every step shall be taken in their power for the benefit and advantage of the Province.

By order of the Court,

JOSEPH BEELER: }
JAMES SMITH, } Commissioners.

Westmoreland, April 8, 1774.

THOMAS SMITH TO JOSEPH SHIPPEN, JUN.

Bedford, April 13, 1774.

SIR: if you have received my letter, which I did myself the favour to write by Colonel Wilson, you will not be surprised to be informed of the continuation of the outrages committed by the Virginians. They have now arrested three of the Magistrates of Westmoreland county, who are now on their way to Augusta jail, exposed to the insults of the rabble who are sent as their guard. The crime alleged against them is, I am informed, the answer which the Court gave to Conolly's modest address and proposals. I hope, for the honor of this Province, that it will not set calmly looking on and see its Magistrates, as its Magistrates, taken by a set of lawless men, when they were within its known limits, and hurried away like criminals to the jail of another Province, there to be confined contrary to all law and justice, to satisfy the whim and caprice of a man who seems either to have totally divested himself of any regard of natural justice, (I was going to say to the law of nations, if I might be allowed the expression,) or else be made the tool of a set of desperate men, who have more cunning than himself - for I have many reasons to think that this scheme was hatched at Fort Pitt. The reasons that could induce any man of common sense to take such a step I am at a loss to guess.

The hearer of this was sent down to go to Philadelphia with the account of these proceedings. I thought it my duty to enable him to pursue his journey, by accommodating him with money; he has acted some time as Under Sheriff, and if the High Sheriff had conducted himself in the same spirited, unsuspected manner, that this man has done, I am persuaded that these disturbances might have been prevented. But he, in the first place, had so little regard to his duty, that he let Conolly at liberty on his promise to return at the court, and when he was ordered to raise the posse, his conduct was a little mysterious, and he was extremely backward and remiss. The bearer can give you further information in this particular.

I am sir, your very humble servant,

THOMAS SMITH

FOURTH SERIES.

VIRGINIA ASSEMBLY.

The Speech of his Excellency the Right Honorable John Earl of DUNMORE, his Majesty's Lieutenant and Governor General of the Colony and Dominion of Virginia, and Vice Admiral of the same, to the General Assembly, convened at the Capitol, on Thursday, the 5th of May, 1774.

Gentlemen of the Council, Mr. SPEAKER, and Gentlemen of the House OF BURGESSES:

Having had nothing in particular charge from his Majesty to offer to your consideration, I have consulted only your own ease in the time of assembling you for the necessary business of the Colony, in which I recommend to you to proceed with that despatch which the public convenience requires.

Mr. SPEAKER and Gentlemen of the HOUSE OF BURGESSES:

I have not, at this time, any thing to require of you; but I hope that your resolutions, on the various matters which shall be the subject of your deliberation, may be influenced by prudence and moderation.

Gentlemen of the COUNCIL, Mr. SPEAKER, and Gentlemen of the HOUSE OF BURGESSES:

My ardent desire faithfully to promote the service of his Majesty, who ever evinces the good of his people to be the first object of his thoughts, will make me heartily concur with you in all measures, and assent to all such laws as shall be for the welfare and true interest of this country.

To his Excellency the Right Honorable JOHN Earl of DUNMORE, his Majesty's Lieutenant and Governor General of the Colony and Dominion of VIRGINIA, and Vice Admiral of the same:

The humble Address of the COUNCIL.

Mr LORD: We his Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Council of Virginia, now met in General Assembly, beg leave to return your Excellency our most cordial thanks for your Speech at the opening of this session; and to acknowledge that your Lordship, as well upon this as every other occasion, since the commencement of your administration, hath consulted the ease and convenience of the people committed to your care.

To promote the service of his Majesty, and to advance the interest of our country, ever have been the first objects of our wishes. Actuated by these motives, we will concur with the House of Burgesses in framing such laws as shall be for the welfare and true interest of this Colony; and with that despatch the importance of the subjects will admit of.

Permit us to take this opportunity of congratulating your Excellency on the safe arrival of the Countess of Dunmore, and your family in this country; an event, which while it adds greatly to your Lordship's domestic felicity, gives us a pleasing earnest of your intention of continuing among us.

To which his EXCELLENCY was pleased to return the following Answer:

GENTLEMEN OF THE COUNCIL: The faithful and united assistance which I have constantly received of you, fully convinces me of your zeal for his Majesty's service, as well as of your firm regard to the interests of your country; and makes this fresh declaration of both extremely grateful to me, as it must be likewise to your Sovereign and country.

I thank you very heartily for your kind congratulation upon the arrival of my family, the happiness of which will increase to me as it proves more agreeable to you, from whom I have received every mark of regard and attention.

To his Excellency the Right Honorable JOHN Earl of DUNMORE, his Majesty's Lieutenant and Governor

General of the Colony and Dominion of VIRGINIA, and Vice Admiral of the same:

The Humble Address of the House or BURGESSES.

MY LORD: We his Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects the Burgesses of Virginia, now met in General Assembly, beg leave to return your Excellency our unfeigned thanks for your kind Speech at the opening of this session.

Sensible as we are of the importance of that variety of business which will probably come before us, we shall esteem it our bounden duty to proceed in the discussion of it with coolness, deliberation, and as much despatch as circumstances will admit; and we flatter ourselves that every resolution, we may find it expedient to adopt, will be marked with that prudence and moderation which you are pleased to recommend.

The fatherly attention of our most gracious Sovereign to the happiness of his subjects, in making the good of his people the first object of his thoughts, cannot but impress our minds with the liveliest sense of duty and gratitude; and it is with great satisfaction that we receive from your Excellency those earnest assurances, that you will heartily concur with us in all measures, and assent to all such laws as shall be for the welfare and true interest of this country.

It will ever, my Lord, afford us much pleasure to observe an increase of your domestic felicity: we therefore, with the greatest cordiality, embrace this first opportunity to congratulate your Excellency on the happy arrival of the Right Honorable the Countess of Dunmore, your Lordship's amiable and most respectable lady, with so many promising branches of your noble family, an event which we consider as having brought with it the surest pledges of our mutual happiness.

To which his EXCELLENCY was pleased to return the following Answer:

GENTLEMEN of the HOUSE OF BURGESSES:

The terms of duty and gratitude in which your loyal Address is conceived afford me the highest satisfaction, and must ensure his Majesty's most favourable countenance and protection to this faithful Colony. I shall ever retain a cordial remembrance of the parts you take in my domestic happiness, and of your obliging manner of expressing it on the occasion of the arrival of my family, which event I shall be much pleased to find considered as a pledge of my regard and attachment to this Colony.

[May 12, 1774. By an express, just arrived from Fin-castle county, we are informed that very lately three or four skirmishes happened between the white people and the Shawanese Indians. We cannot affirm what occasioned the dispute, but are told one white man had taken some small matter from the Indians, which irritated them to arms; but were soon repelled by the other party, who killed eleven of them, seven of which they scalped. - Another of the Indians was terribly wounded in the groin, and it was imagined, when this express came away, that he could not possibly recover.]

On the 13th of May, his Excellency the Governor ordered the following Petition, with several Papers relative to the imprisonment of Mr. John Conolly, by the Officers of Pennsylvania, while he was acting as a Magistrate under the authority of this Government, to be laid before the House of Burgesses.

To his Excellency JOHN Earl of DUNMORE, his Majesty's Lieutenant and Governor General of the Colony and Dominion of VIRGINIA, and Vice Admiral of the same, and the Honorable the COUNCIL and HOUSE OF BURGESSES

The Petition of the Inhabitants settled on the Waters of the OHIO sheweth:

That the major part of your Petitioners have formerly lived in his Majesty's Colony of Virginia, and preferring the mild, easy, and equitable Government thereof, to the expensive administration of justice in Pennsylvania, which, being a limited and Proprietary Government, hath extended an unlimited, and (as we think) illegal jurisdiction over his Majesty's subjects, settled many miles west of their bounds, which is oppressive to the poor, and burthensome to all, particularly in trying titles to land, and in recovery of small debts, wherein their officers' fees are so disproportioned that they seem rather calculated for enriching individuals than the public good; their practising attornies being left at liberty to exact such fees as they may choose, in all land trials, and will not plead against their jurisdiction, however far west it may be extended. Officers of Government being generally at the disposal of the Proprietaries' Governor, who will neither appoint nor continue any but those who adhere strictly to their master's interest, however contrary to the good of the settlers, his Majesty's subjects; add to this, a heavy Provincial tax, which they likewise exact, a great part thereof being swallowed up by the officers who lay and collect the same, to the great grievance of the subject.

From the aforesaid several grievances, and the farther ill provided defence of the country in cases of emergency, we humbly conceive our lives and properties in imminent danger, from our contiguity to the faithless and barbarous natives, whose treaties, alliance, and sincerity, are never to be relied on, as well as a hearty conviction that the present Government is usurped.

We humbly entreat your Lordship and Council, and the Honorable House of Burgesses, to make such provision for us, in our present distressed situation, as to you shall seem meet; and your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

Signed by 587 Inhabitants.

Upon which the House addressed his EXCELLENCY as follows:

MY LORD: We his Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Burgesses of Virginia, now sitting in General Assembly, beg leave to return your Excellency our sincere thanks for the written message, and the several papers therein referred to, which you were pleased to lay before us.

It is our most earnest wish and desire to cultivate and improve that good understanding and friendship which hath hitherto subsisted between our sister Colony of Pennsylvania and Virginia, and therefore we cannot sufficiently lament that any unhappy incident should have interposed which may tend to destroy this pleasing harmony, and create any dissension between us. But, my Lord, however strongly we may be impressed by these sentiments, we shall, on all occasions, think it our indispensable duty to support the just rights of our inhabitants, and protect them from oppression, in whatever quarter it may arise.

The imprisoning officers, acting under the authority of Government in either country, upon a dispute about a boundary, which appears to us never to have been established with any degree of accuracy, we cannot but consider as a wide departure and deviation from that plain and simple plan of accommodation which has been observed in former contests of this nature, and should have suggested a more conciliatory conduct on this occasion; much more should we have expected that it would have prevented that sanguinary measure of subjecting men to death, which, with concern, we observe hath been so precipitately and incautiously adopted.

For the present, we take the liberty of recommending to your Excellency to endeavour to have an equitable temporary line fixed between this Colony and Pennsylvania, until his Majesty shall be pleased to direct the proper and true boundary to be established.

It gives us pain, my Lord, to find that the Indians have made fresh encroachments and disturbances on our frontiers. We have only to request that your Excellency will be pleased to exert those powers with which you are fully invested, by the acts of Assembly, for making provision against invasions and insurrections; which, we doubt not, will be found sufficient to repel the hostile and perfidious attempts of those savage and barbarous enemies. *

* Of all the Northern Colonies, Pennsylvania has ever been the most vigilant to discover and active to avail herself of every commercial advantage. Maryland too, of late, has exhibited, some symptoms of attention to her true interests. Aware of the profits accruing from

PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL.

At a Council held at Philadelphia, on Saturday, 7th of May, 1774:

Present, the Honorable John Penn, Esquire, Governor, Benjamin Chew, James Tilghman, Andrew Allen, Esqrs.

Mr. Tilghman, and Mr. Andrew Allen having agreed, at the particular request of the Governor, to undertake a journey to Williamsburg, as Commissioners from this Government, to treat with the Governor of Virginia on the subject of the disturbances in Westmoreland county, occasioned by his extending the jurisdiction of his Government within the western limits of this Province, and to negotiate such other matters with him as were agreed upon in Council the 21st of last month, one of the members laid before the Board a draught of a commission, and a letter of instructions, to the above named gentlemen; and also a letter to be sent with them to the Earl of Dunmore, which being severally considered, were fairly transcribed and signed by the Governor, and follow in these words, viz:

the Indian and frontier trade, in her last Assembly she has taken into consideration the state of her public roads, and levied several thousand pounds to render more tolerable, the capital pass over the Alleghany only. Virginia, regardless of emoluments of this kind, still continues in a profound lethargy; and while the transmontane Territories of Penn and Baltimore, during the space of several years past, have, notwithstanding the senseless prohibiting proclamation, been rapidly peopled, those of this Colony remain in a manner unseated, except a small spot bordering on Pennsylvania, seized on by needy or foreign adventurers. To apply a remedy to this evil, it was destined to the good sense and activity of Lord Dunmore. Not contented with the reports of partial or uncertain fame, disregarding his own ease, and the difficulties of a tedious journey through almost impassible and uninhabited mountains, his Lordship penetrated to the seat of our grievances, and on the spot rendered himself an eye and ear witness, of the indispensable necessity of granting the back lands; and, by doing this, not only to deal justice to his own people, but with the same blow, to give a check to the aspiring and encroaching spirit of the princely Proprietor, who has been boldly venturing to extend his writs and precepts a hundred miles beyond his true limits, far into the Government of Virginia. To this end, his Lordship's leading step was appointing a militia officer to preside at Fort Pitt, and magistrates to transact the business incident to their office in that quarter of Augusta. By this judicious measure, our countrymen there might expect to be relieved from the intolerable inconvenience of being dragged before the tribunal of Penn. These were their hopes. How vain! for, behold the issue: These officers, the Captain commandant, and the Justices, were threatened with the horrors of a jail, if they but ventured to act in virtue of their commissions. This, however, did not deter the spirited Captain Conolly from doing his duty. Notwithstanding these, I will not call them impotent threats, he ordered and appointed a muster; but an unlucky circumstance rendered the Captain incapable of giving attendance, for the day before he was to have met his officers and men, the haughty Pennsylvanians realized their threats, and conducted him to prison.

To the guardians, therefore, of our rights and liberties, I venture to drop these few loose hints, and shall detain neither you nor the public longer than just to close with this query: "Whether the establishing our Courts of Justice upon a certain footing, adjusting the boundaries of our Colony and counties, and in consequence determining what lands may or may not, with propriety and safety, be located and surveyed by the late military grantees, are not objects of that importance as to demand the immediate consideration of the Legislature; or if deferred until the summer, whether that short delay must not prove the sure fruitful source of litigation, confusion, and dispute."

A VIRGINIAN.

WILLIAMSBURG, March 3, 1774.

Extract of a Letter received at WILLIAMSBURG, dated PITTSBURG, March 26, 1774. "You may depend that no disturbances have happened with the Indians on the Ohio this winter, and that more is to be dreaded from the animosities subsisting between the settlers from Pennsylvania and Virginia than those barbarians. Governour Penn has sent up a Proclamation, strictly enjoining all Magistrates and Sheriffs to seize upon any twelve men that shall be found together, for the space of an hour, after being told to disperse. Doctor Conolly is relieved from his confinement, and has lately been qualified in Augusta Court as a Magistrate. He is daily expected to return, and will not let any insult pass that may be offered to the authority reposed in him by Lord Dunmore."

To his Excellency the Right Honorable JOHN Earl of DUNMORE, &c., &c., &c.

MY LORD: Though I know it is an established maxim with your Lordship that, as you are ever open to personal access, to take but little notice of addresses communicated to you through the channel of a common newspaper, yet I dare hope, that should some chance direct your Lordship's eye to this letter, it will engage your closest attention. I do not moan to spread abroad causeless apprehensions, or aggravate reports that have been already disseminated through the country; but it is my intention to give you informations founded on undoubted veracity, and then leave it to your Lordship's wisdom to determine what is most expedient to be done. Doubt it not then my Lord, when I assure you, from testimony scarcely to be invalidated, that the situation of the frontier Counties of this Colony is of the most alarming nature; a situation so truly critical, as to require the instant assistance of both the Executive and Legislative powers.

Our treacherous and clandestine foes, the Indians, have over greedily embraced all opportunities of manifesting their inimical affections to-

John Penn, Esq., one of the Proprietaries of the Province of Pennsylvania, and Counties of New Castle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware,

To James Tilghman and Andrew Allen, Esquires, two of the Council of the said Province and Counties, Greeting:

Whereas his Majesty King Charles the Second, by his letters patent, bearing date the fourth day of March, Anno Domini 1681, did, for the considerations therein mentioned, give and grant the Province of Pennsylvania, by the bounds and limits therein particularly set forth and described, to William Penn, Esquire, his heirs and assigns, forever, constituting him and them Proprietary and Proprietaries thereof, with divers powers, franchises and jurisdictions, for the better government thereof, as by the said letters patent may at large appear: And whereas the western lines and bounds of the said Province, specified in the said letters patent, having never yet been regularly and precisely run, marked out or ascertained, divers differences and disputes have of late arisen between the Right Honorable the Earl of wards us; but some recent transactions of theirs, with which (if report speaks the language of truth) your Lordship has been already made acquainted, leaves us no room to doubt that the storm which has been so long gathering, will, ere long, break forth in all its fury. And should this ill-fated event take place while the inhabitants on the confines of the Colony remain in their present undisciplined, distressed situation, it will not be easy to give your Lordship an adequate idea of the horrid consequences that must ensue. The indiscriminate massacre of men, women and children, the depopulation of an infant Colony, whose fertility has already been sufficient to induce us to foster the most sanguine anticipations of its future value, the forcing from their peaceful habitations those adventurous people whom it ought ever to be the first object of Government to support; these, my Lord, with an infinite series of other melancholy circumstances, must be the certain concomitants of an Indian war, should we tamely suffer those savages to be the first invaders. It is neither by the suggestions of a blood-thirsty nor an avaricious disposition that I am instigated to dictate thus freely to your Lordship on this subject, but by the forebodings of a sympathetic apprehension of the impending destruction which awaits my countrymen in the frontier counties. Their emergency loudly calls for the relief of the Supreme Magistrate, and that, my Lord, must apologize for the freedom which an obscure individual has assumed with your Lordship, should you suppose any apology on that score necessary. Ten thousand incidents conspire to render a war at this time necessary, nay, inevitable; and the innocent lives of numbers might be saved by the timely proclamation of it. The very smiles of those faithless tribes ought to be considered as the harbinger of perfidy; but when they dare openly to annoy us with acts of hostility, surely a more solid resentment is due. Should an instance of any hostile act of theirs be demanded, I need only mention the unhappy murder of young Russell, committed not long ago, and, as has since been ascertained, was perpetrated by a Cherokee Chief. Numberless other examples, of hostilities equally atrocious, might be adduced, were it not hoped that this of itself is sufficient. Whether it would be prudent to wait for a second stroke let the provident determine. The spring, it seems, is the stated period for an invasion; and, in all probability, the attack will be earlier on the more remote inhabitants. The month of May is the time appointed for the convention of the Assembly; so that it is more than probable to suppose those barbarians will be scattering havoc and desolation around, while our House of Burgesses are spending much time in debating in what manner to prohibit such outrages. By convening them a month or two sooner, what mischiefs might not be prevented? You have it now in your power, my Lord, to render the name of Dunmore as memorable in Virginia as that of Marlborough is in Great Britain. Do not let slip the golden opportunity.

WILLIAMSBURG, March 24, 1774.

VIRGINIUS

The subscribers, patentees of land, at the Falls of the Ohio, hereby inform the public, that they intend to lay out a Town there in the most convenient place. The lots to be eighty feet front, and two hundred and forty deep. The number of lots that shall be laid off at first, will depend on the number of applications. The purchase money of each lot to be four Spanish dollars, and one dollar per annum quit rent, for ever. The purchasers to build within the space of two years from the first day of December next, on each lot, a log house, not less than sixteen feet square, with a stone or brick chimney; and, as in that country, it will be necessary the first settlers should build compactly, the improvements must naturally join each other. It is further proposed, for the convenience of the settlers, that an out lot, of ten acres, contiguous to the town, shall be laid off for such as desire the same, at an easy rent, on a long lease.

Attendance will be given by the patentees at Pittsburg, till the middle of June, at which time one of them will set off to execute the plan. The advantageous situation of that place, formed by nature as a temporary magazine, or repository, to receive the produce of the very extensive and fertile country on the Ohio and its branches, as well as the necessary merchandise suitable for the inhabitants that shall emigrate into that country, (as boats of fifty tons may be navigated from New Orleans up to the town,) is sufficient to recommend it; but when it is considered how liberal, nay, profuse, nature has been to it otherwise, in stocking it so abundantly, that the slightest industry may supply the most numerous family with the greatest plenty and amazing variety of fish, fowl, and flesh; the fertility of the soil, and facility of cultivation, that fit it for producing commodities of great value with little labour; the wholesomeness of the waters, and serenity of the air, which render it healthy; and when property may be so easily acquired, we may with certainty affirm that it will in a short time be equalled by few inland places on the American continent.

WILLIAMSBURG, April 7, 1774.

JOHN CAMPBELL
JOHN CONOLLY

Dunmore, Governor and Commander-in-chief, &c., of his Majesty's Colony or Dominion of Virginia, and the Honorable the Proprietaries of the Province of Pennsylvania, their respective grantees, tenants, and officers, respecting the western bounds and limits of the said Province, and the jurisdiction of the said Colony or Dominion and Province, which have been productive of great troubles and disquiets to the settlers and inhabitants there, and endanger the King's peace and the public tranquility: To the end, therefore, that the evils which have already arisen, and which are likely to arise in the premises, may be remedied and prevented, I have nominated and appointed, and do by these presents nominate and appoint you, the said James Tilghman and Andrew Allen, Esquires, to be Commissioners on the part of the Proprietaries of this Province, to confer and treat with his Excellency the Right Honorable the Earl of Dunmore, of and concerning the premises, and to agree upon such measures as you shall judge most expedient for settling and composing the said differences, troubles and disquiets, either by a temporary line or boundary of jurisdiction, or otherwise, as may best answer the good purposes of preserving his Majesty's peace, and quieting the minds of the inhabitants on or near the borders of the two Colonies or Provinces, until the final settlement of the said boundaries shall be effected, hereby ratifying and confirming whatever you shall do in the premises.

In testimony whereof, I have set my hand, and caused the great seal of the said Province to be hereunto affixed at Philadelphia, the seventh day of May, 1774.

JOHN PENN.

Instructions to JAMES TILGHMAN and ANDREW ALLEN, Esquires, Commissioners appointed to treat and agree with the Right Honorable JOHN Earl of DUNMORE, Governor of VIRGINIA, concerning the settlement of the Western bounds and limits of the Province of PENNSYLVANIA, and preserving the public peace and tranquility on the Borders, till a final settlement of the said lines.

1st. You are to proceed, without loss of time, to Williamsburg, the place of his Lordship's residence in Virginia, and enter upon the execution of your commission as soon as possible after your arrival. Should his Lordship be from home, and not gone to too great a distance, you will wait his return, or send an express, (as you judge most proper,) to acquaint him with your being sent from this government to treat with him on public business, and request his return.

2d. Your first point should be to prevail with him to join with the Proprietaries of this Province in a Petition to his Majesty in Council, to appoint Commissioners to run and mark out the boundary or division line - such as his Majesty shall please to order and direct, between this Province and Virginia; the expense of which to be equally borne by the two Colonies.

3d. Whether his Lordship should accede to the above proposal or not, you should urge every argument in your power to induce him to agree to the settling a temporary line of jurisdiction between the two Colonies, till the said boundary line shall be settled, or his Majesty's orders and directions can be obtained respecting the same.

4th. Should his Lordship come into the last mentioned measure, you will no doubt endeavour to fix the temporary line of jurisdiction as favourably as possible for this Province, and as near to the Charter bounds as you can; and in order thereto you will refer yourselves to the map or plan heretofore transmitted by me to him, which shows to demonstration that Fort Pitt is near six miles to the eastward of our five degrees of longitude. At any rate, however, you are not to accede to any proposed temporary line which shall give jurisdiction to Virginia over any lands lying to the eastward of the river Monongahela.

5th. Whatever may be the temporary line agreed on, you should take care to insert a clause in the articles to be drawn up, containing a saving of the rights on both sides, to the lands up to the true lines or boundaries where they shall be finally settled.

6th. If the business is not carried on by the interchange of letters, or written proposals between you, you should take private notes, or minutes, by way of diary, of every thing material that passes, not only to enable you to make an exact report of the whole transaction, but to found affidavits on to be sent to England, if necessary. As great reliance is had on your knowledge and abilities, any further instructions are unnecessary.

JOHN PENN.

Philadelphia, 7th May, 1774

Here follows the Governor's letter to the Earl of Dunmore, Governor of Virginia, viz:

Philadelphia, 7th May, 1774

MY LORD: By accounts received from the westward, since my last letter to your Lordship, I find that the disorders in that quarter are greatly increased by your Lordship's extending the jurisdiction of Virginia to Pittsburg, and the country thereabouts; and that Dr. Conolly's proceedings have been such as are very alarming, and bare a tendency to put the whole country beyond the Alleghany mountains into a state of confusion. The consideration of these unhappy circumstances have induced me to send two gentlemen of my Council, Mr. Tilghman and Mr. Allen, to wait on your Lordship, in order to confer with you on this important subject, and, if possible, to conclude with you upon such measures as may restore and establish the public tranquility until the lines and boundaries of this Province can be finally settled by his Majesty's authority; for which good purpose I flatter myself your Lordship will not hesitate to join with us in representing to his Majesty the necessity of such a settlement. In the mean time, I am in hopes such temporary expedients may be fallen upon as may put an end to the present disturbances, secure the public peace, and quiet the minds of the people concerned in the unhappy differences which at present subsist between the Governments of Virginia and this Province.

I am, with great respect, your Lordship's most obedient humble servant,

JOHN PENN.

To the Right Honorable the Earl of Dunmore, Governor and Commander-in-chief of his Majesty's Provinces of Virginia, Williamsburg.

Memorandum, 1st June, 1774

The Reverend Dr. Peters having, at the instance of the Governor, wrote a letter to Henry Wilmot, Esquire, the same was ordered to be entered on the Minutes of Council, and follows in these words, viz:

Philadelphia, 18th May, 1774

SIR: I am desired by the Governor to give you an account of what I know with respect to an Indian deed, under which some private people, calling themselves the Susquehanna Company, inhabitants of the Colony of Connecticut, claim all the lands in Pennsylvania between the forty-first and forty-second degrees of latitude. This, then, follows will give a true notion of the whole transaction, as far as my remembrance will enable me to recollect the matter.

In the year 1741, the proprietor, Thomas Penn, went from here for England, and from that time to this I have been well acquainted with all sorts of Indian negotiations, and have had a great share in the management of them, either as Proprietary Secretary, or as member of Council, or as Provincial Secretary, so that I can speak from the best grounds of every matter relating to Indians for above thirty years; and I can with truth declare, that before the year 1753, I never, that I can remember, heard of any claim set up by the Government, or any of the inhabitants of the Colony of Connecticut, to any lands within this Province. In the year 1753, I received information of a claim set up by some Connecticut people to a degree of longitude within this Province in virtue of the Connecticut Charter, and that there was a party gone into the Indian country to make a purchase of lands between Susquehanna and Delaware, to begin at or near Wyomink. Mr. Hamilton, and several others, were alarmed at this wicked attempt, and Conrad Weiser, the Indian Interpreter, was ordered to give the Six Nation Indians an account of this intelligence, and to put them upon their guard. Colonel Johnson, the Indian Agent for his Majesty in the New York Government, was likewise made acquainted with this new project, and desired likewise to apprise the Indians of it. The intelligence was likewise communicated to the Governor and Deputy Governor of Connecticut, who both disavowed the thing, and declared that the Government had no concern in it; and the letters which passed between Mr. Hamilton and the Government of Connecticut, were put into the Council books, and a copy of those minutes of Council are exemplified under the great seal and sent to you.

The year following, namely, in the year 1754, there was a Congress, by order of the Crown, at Albany, between the whole body of the Six Nations and the King's Agent, together with the Governments of all the Northern Colonies. Four Commissioners were sent on the part of Pennsylvania; Mr. John Penn and myself on the part of the Governor, and Mr. Isaac Norris and Mr. Benjamin Franklin on the part of the Assembly, were the four Commissioners for this Province at that Congress. This being deemed a proper time to get a purchase from the Indians of more land, and which was become absolutely necessary by the numbers of people that had come into the Province, and could not be kept within the bounds of the purchased lands, Mr. John Penn and myself were instructed and empowered to make as extensive a purchase as the Indians could be prevailed on to make; and belts were sent to the Onondago Council by the Governor, to signify to them his desire to make another purchase of them when they should be altogether at this public treaty at Albany. Accordingly, as both sides were beforehand prepared for a new Indian purchase, the matter was gone upon, and a large extent of country, even as far as the western boundary of the Province, was treated for, and agreed to in open Council, and a deed executed by the Indians; and likewise another deed was executed by them, confirming to the Proprietaries a former deed, wherein the Indians bound themselves not to sell to any persons whatever any of the lands comprised within the bounds of his Majesty's Charter to the Proprietaries.

The Connecticut attempt was likewise made known by the Indians to us; and they, in their speeches, declared their absolute refusal to make any grant to them of any lands they were soliciting for; and, indeed, in their public treaty, they over and over declared that they would sell none of the Wyomink country, either to them or to us, it being what they had reserved for their own use, and for the reception of such other Indians as would want to come and reside amongst them. These, and further particulars, are to be seen in the exemplified copy of the report of that treaty made by Mr. John Penn and myself to Governor Hamilton, as the same is entered in the minutes of the Council.

This will serve to show, that at that time there was no Indian deed made to the people of Connecticut by the Onondago Council, and that if any deed is set up it must have been obtained in a clandestine manner from private Indians. Indeed, it was there currently reported that one Lydens, of the city of Albany, had undertaken this matter for the Connecticut people, and as he lived (and I think kept a public house) at Albany, he made it his business to get the Indians, as they came to trade there, into his house, and by liquor, or private bribes, by two's or three's, as he could find opportunity to prevail with them, to execute a deed, which was lodged with him for this infamous purpose. I have further to observe, that the persons to whom this pretended Indian deed was made were private people, and acting in direct opposition to their own laws, and in open violation of the right, if any, of the Colony of Connecticut to those lands. The Indians themselves, in public treaties, made mention that these very lands were formerly given by them to Colonel Dungan, by deeds regularly and duly executed, but in trust for them, as they said; and that Colonel Dungan sold those lands to the late proprietor, Mr. Penn, who, notwithstanding this purchase from Colonel Dungan, did not hesitate to buy them over again of the Indians, and to give them the full consideration for them. Let it further be observed, that in the general treaty held at Fort Stanwix, by Sir William Johnson, his Majesty's Indian Agent with all the Six Nation Indians, in 1768, for the King's purchase of lands from them, and to settle a general boundary between the Indians and the King's subjects, at which the Governor of Jersey, and the Commissioners from the other Provinces, and from Pennsylvania in particular, were present and assisting, the Indians executed a deed to the Proprietors of Pennsylvania for all the lands within the bounds of this Province, so far as they had then settled the general boundary with his Majesty. That this purchase contains all, or most of the lands claimed by Connecticut, and that the consideration money, together with the expenses attending that treaty, amounted to the sum of eight thousand pounds, or some sum near that; and in that very treaty, this attempt of the Connecticut people was solemnly mentioned, and as solemnly condemned by all the Indians.

As this great treaty is deservedly esteemed the basis and foundation of all matters relating to lands between the Indian nations and his Majesty, it was transmitted by Sir William Johnson to the King's Ministers, and lies among the public papers in the Privy Council, and may he consulted for the truth of what is here set down by the Proprietaries' solicitors at any future time.

As it is supposed that the Susquehanna Company have assigned over their right under this deed to the Government of Connecticut, I have been thus particular; and this detail of the circumstances that attended the obtainment of the Indian deed, may be kept among the Proprietary papers, together with the exemplified minutes of Council that have been sent to you, and may be made use of, in order to furnish ample proof for the invalidating of this pretended Indian deed, if it should ever be set up by the Connecticut Government. I am, sir, your most humble servant,

RICHARD PETERS

To Henry Wilmot, Esquire, Bloomsbury Square, London.

CORRESPONDENCE LAID BEFORE THE COUNCIL.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO BENJAMIN CHEW.

Carlisle, April 28, 1774.

SIR: In conversation with Colonel Wilson the other day, he mentioned a transaction in Virginia, which if it be as he represents it, will throw some light upon what has been the "sense of that Colony, with regard to the country about Fort Pitt." Colonel Stephens, it seems, in the year 1764, when that fortress was besieged by the Indians, sent a detachment of the militia to escort some provisions for the relief of the besieged; for this he was complained of to the Assembly, and censured for sending the militia out of the Government.

I have heard, sir, that you are to go to Williamsburg, and imagined in that case, this hint would not be disagreeable. I wish you a pleasant journey, and am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

AR. ST. CLAIR.

The Honorable Benjamin Chew, Esquire.

ÆNEAS MACKAY TO GOVERNOR PENN.

Staunton, May 5, 1774.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONOR: I have taken the liberty of acquainting your Honor with the proceedings of Doctor Conolly, in regard to the Justices Smith, McFarlane, and myself, the 9th of April last, when we were torn from our families and business by Conolly, and his militia, and sent prisoners to this Colony, where, when we traveled together one day's journey, Messrs. Smith and McFarlane accompanied the Sheriff to this place, and I found means to procure leave to go to Williamsburg, in order to lay Conolly and his militia's conduct before my Lord Dunmore, in as true and clear a light as we had experienced from their tyranny and oppression.

After six days riding, I arrived at Williamsburg, where my Lord heard my story to an end, and then told me that Conolly was authorized by him, as Governor of Virginia, to prosecute the claim of that Colony to Pittsburg and its dependencies, and as to taking of prisoners, he, Conolly, only imitated the Pennsylvania officers, in respect to Conolly's imprisonment by them.

After his Lordship and I spoke our minds very free to each other, relating to Conolly's claims and lines, he dismissed me at that time, desiring I would call upon him the next day, which I did, but all the satisfaction I could obtain, after waiting at Williamsburg three days, was a letter to the Sheriff of this county, to whose custody we were committed, a copy of which, together with one of the proclamations sent to Conolly, by express from this place yesterday, I take the liberty of enclosing with this for your Honor's perusal.

In consequence of the above letter, we are to set off from this place immediately, but how to act after our return, is a matter we are at this time unable to determine, for we are certain Conolly will with his militia force, oppose us in every step we may attempt, in the execution of our office. We would, therefore, be glad to know your Honor's sentiments on that subject as soon as possible. In the mean time, I remain with perfect respect, your Honor's most humble and most obedient servant,

ÆNEAS MACKAY.

Enclosed in the Letter of Æneas Mackay to Governour Penn, of 5th May, 1774

Williamsburg, April 26, 1774

SIR: I send you a packet, containing a Proclamation of which you have herewith one enclosed, which by the advice of his Majesty's Council, I have issued for the Government of the people in the district of your country, wherein is included Pittsburg, which I beg you will forward by express to Mr. Conolly.

With respect to Mr. Mackay, and the other two gentlemen committed to your custody by Mr. Conolly, I desire they may be permitted to return to their homes and occupations; I will become answerable for their appearance, in case it may be required, and bear you harmless therein.

I am, sir, your obedient and humble servant,

DUNMORE.

Daniel Smith, Esquire.

Enclosed in the Letter of Æneas Mackay to Governor Penn, of 5th May, 1774

LORD DUNMORE'S PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, I have reason to apprehend that the Government of Pennsylvania, in prosecution of their claim to Pittsburg and its dependencies, will endeavour to obstruct his Majesty's Government thereof, under my administration, by illegal and unwarrantable commitments of the officers I have appointed for that purpose, and that that settlement is in danger of annoyance from the Indians also; and it being necessary to support the dignity of his Majesty's Government, and protect his subjects in the quiet and peaceable enjoyment of their rights, I have therefore, thought proper, by and with the advice and consent of his Majesty's Council, by this Proclamation in his Majesty's name, to order and require the officers of the militia in that district, to embody a sufficient number of men to repel any insult whatever; and all his Majesty's liege subjects within this Colony, are hereby strictly required to be aiding and assisting therein, as they shall answer the contrary, at their peril. And I do further enjoin and require the several inhabitants of the territory aforesaid, to pay his Majesty's quit rents, and all public dues, to such officers as are, or shall be appointed to collect the same, within this Dominion, until his Majesty's pleasure therein shall be known.

Given under my hand, and the seal of the Colony, at Williamsburg, this 25th day of April, 1774, in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign.

DUNMORE

GOD SAVE THE KING.

Extract of a Journal of the United Brethren Mission on Muskingum, from February 21 to May 20, 1774

April 30. Youngman and Schabosch returned from Pittsburg, who brought information that the Government was changed there, and the place now belonged to Virginia. That they were afraid of the Shawanese, and it was supposed they would fall upon the white people below the Ohio, and opposite them, but the message from Sir William Johnson is come to all the other Nations, warning them not to join the Shawanese.

May 6. Several Indians from Mochwesung came to visit us, and we received the account that one Shawanese Chief on the Ohio, was killed by the white people, and another wounded. It seems an Indian war will break out. We hear the Virginians on the Ohio, threaten to fall upon the Shawanese settlements, and to destroy their towns.

May 8. In the evening arrived an express from Gekelemuckepuck, with the disagreeable news that the white people on the Ohio had killed nine Mingoes, and wounded two; the messenger arrived, making a terrible noise as it is usual in war time. He had also a message from the Shawanese, which the Chief of Gekelemuck sent to us to take notice of "that their grandfather, the Delaware Nation, should not be concerned, but be easy and quiet; let the traders traffic among them, and not hurt them, or any other white people in that quarter; that the women should continue to plant until they could further see what would happen." This seems to signify as if they intended to keep the road to Pittsburg clear, and not hurt the Pennsylvanians, but only to contend with the Virginians.

May 9. In the evening, arrived Mr. Anderson and another white man, in company with the Indian Chief White Eyes, who came from Pittsburg, and went towards the Shawanese; little wanted, or these messengers would have fallen into the hands of the Mingoes, who had fled from the other side of the Ohio, and kept by the road leading to Gekelemuckepuck. But some of our Indians going from here to Kaskaskum, warned them, so that they turned off the common road, and arrived here safely. They are sent to make another trial to persuade the Shawanese to peace, and to desist from all hostilities. So as we now hear it is but a gang of white people on Ohio, who committed the murders of the Indians. And the people of Pittsburg do not believe that they were acting by order of the Governor of Virginia. They have also killed some traders, because they carry merchandise and ammunition to the Indians. We also heard that many people about Pittsburg, and below, on Ohio, have fled to the settlements.

May 15. In the morning arrived a messenger, inviting some of our Italian brethren to a Council at Gekelemuckepuck; at the return of one of them, we heard that the Shawanese and Mingoes had left Gekelemuckepuck, very angry, and threaten to kill all white people they shall meet with. These Mingoes, about twenty in number, were present at the aforesaid massacre at Ohio, stirring up the Shawonese, who have not suffered much; but the Delawares will do their utmost to hinder them. The Indians at Gekelemuckepuck have taken all the white people there within their protection, and keep a watch in the night that they may not be surprised.

May 18. Another of our Indians returned from the Council, who brought an imperfect account, but some hopes that all would turn out well. The Chief has spoke to the Shawanese, who have heard him, and promised to give their answer this day.

May 19. A messenger arrived from Mr. Croghan, at Pittsburg, to the Delawares, Mingoes, and Shawanese, advising them to be quiet, not to think of war, and not hurt the traders; that the people of Pittsburg did their utmost to apprehend the white people that have committed the murder, and that they had taken one of them.

May 20. The rest of our Indians returned, and brought the agreeable news that the Shawanese had accepted of the proposals made to them, so that we hope peace will be re-established, and that they will not hurt the traders among them, but rather assist them, that they may return to their friends. There were about fifty Delawares and Monsys in their first day's journey from Gekelemuckepuck arriving to Mochwesung, where mostly Monsys live; they see them dance the war dance, and, they said, how they heard war was declared, for some of the Mingoes had passed by, having a white scalp. Three of our brethren who were of the Monsy Nation, told them to leave off, and keep to the resolves of their own Nation, and of the Delawares.

Extract of the Missionary's Letter, dated, May 21, 1774

This moment we are informed that another company of traders, from the lower Shawanese Country, have arrived at Gekelemuckepuck, whom we expect to receive here this night, and from hence they will proceed to join the others.

[Extract of a Letter from DAVID ZEISBURGER, Missionary at SCHONBRUNN, dated 24th May, 1774.]

In my last I informed you of the critical situation in which we find ourselves here. We then were in hopes that the dark cloud would pass over soon, and peace be re-established, as the Shawanese in the Council at Woake-tameka, had given seemingly a pretty favourable answer. But it appears now that they were only afraid of the Delaware party in the Council, for we heard since that a party of twenty warriors were gone to make an incursion where the Mingoes have been killed. The Chief Netawatwees brought this account himself mournfully to Gnadenhutten, desiring some messengers might be sent after one Killbuck, who was on the road to Pittsburg, with the traders. We sent directly two men with a letter to Mr. Anderson, that they may know of it at Pittsburg. The messengers returned last night after having delivered their message. The Delawares suppose that the Shawanese will soon move far off. I think our greatest danger would be if the white people would make an incursion into the Indians' land; and if they should strike the Delawares, the war would be general, and we then could not continue here; but we will keep unto the Lord a solemn feast of thanksgiving if he rules things so that we can stay here, for our flight would be subject to many difficulties; and where should such a number of people find a twelve months' subsistence, if they must forsake all that they have planted, for we are more than two hundred souls in this place only, besides the congregation at Gnadenhutten, and to move into the settlements of the white people with our Indians, I cannot find advisable; we know how it was in the last war.

In a Letter dated 27th May

Proth and his family having been hindered from setting off from here till this day, I will mention what we heard since my last. It is but too true that two parties of Shawanese are gone against the settlements; we also heard that some with no good intent would visit us, and other terrifying reports of that sort. But last night a stranger, a sensible Indian, told us that it is only the Shawanese at Woakatemeka, who want war, and are so mad because some of their people have been killed; these only have sent out the parties. The lower Shawanese were peaceable yet, and would have no war; and when the Mingoes came thither to kill the traders there, the Shawanese took them into their protection, and told the Mingoes "if they would war against the white people, they would not hinder them, but they should not kill such people in their town who could not defend themselves; they would take them into their bosom and not suffer that any harm should be done unto them." I believe this to be a true account that the Shawanese are far from unanimous for war, and I am yet in hopes things will be settled again.

The COSH, alias JOHN BULL, writes, dated 24th May last: "About three weeks ago John Jungman and myself were at Fort Pitt. On the way thither we heard that three Cherokee Indians going down the river had killed one trader and wounded another, and plundered the canoe: the traders had imprudently shewn their silver things they had for trading. In the Fort we heard that the Mingoes had stolen that night fifteen horses, and that they were all gone off from below Logtown. The white people began to be much afraid of an Indian war. We hastened to get home again, and after our return received the news that a company of Virginians, under one Cresap, enticed some of the Mingoes, living at the mouth of Yellow Creek, to the other side of the river, and gave them rum to make them drunk, and then they killed five; two others crossing the river to look after their friends were shot down as soon as they came ashore. Five more were going over the river whom they also waylaid, but the Indians perceiving them, turned their canoe to make their escape, but being immediately fired at, two were killed and two wounded. The day following they killed one Shawanese and one Delaware Indian, in a canoe down the river with two traders. The same party killed John Gibson's wife, a Shawanese woman; they further pursued a canoe, killed a Shawanese Chief, and wounded another man. They said they would kill and plunder all that were going up and down the river. But they soon fled and left the poor settlers as victims to the Indians; many are fled and left all their effects behind. The Mingoes took their way up Yellow Creek, and struck our road just where it turns off from the road to Gekelemuckepuck, where they hunted for ten days to catch some traders, but as the Delawares had found them out, they stopped the traders from going that road. The Mingoes having sent word to the Shawanese they fetched them to their town Woakatemeka, where they had a Council of War.

"We are in great distress and don't know what to do; our Indians keep watch about us every night, and will not let us go out of town, even not into our corn fields. If there should be more bad news, we will be forced to move from here, for we are in danger from both sides. I heard from some, that if the white brethren should be forced to leave them, the greatest part would return to the Susquehanna. But if only the Delawares continue in their peaceful mind it may go better than we now think. At the Council at Woakatemeka, were several Headmen of the Delawares present, who live at Schonbrunn and Gnadenhutten, being particularly sent for by Netawatwees for to assist them in the good work of preserving peace. The Chief addressed the Shawanese and Mingoes present in a fatherly manner, shewing unto them the blessing of peace and folly of war; and pressed it very much upon their reason, what misery they would bring upon themselves and others by their madness, and told them positively that they had not to expect any help or assistance from the Delawares, and enjoined them very earnestly not to stop the road to Philadelphia, but to let it be free and open. The Shawanese gave him in answer, they did believe his words to be good, and they would take notice of them, and desired him to give also a fatherly admonition to their wives to plant corn for them; which he did, but they seemed more inclined to move off than to plant."

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOR PENN.

Ligonier, May 29, 1774.

I doubt not before this time you have expected some account from me of the situation of this country, but as I could not write with certainty respecting the intentions of the Indians I choose to defer it.

In my last to Mr. Shippen I think I mentioned that Mr. Croghan had sent a Delaware Chief (White Eyes) with two of our traders with a message to the Shawanese; their return had been impatiently expected. Tired at last with the suspense, I determined to go to Fort Pitt whatever might be the consequence, and am just returned from thence. I was lucky enough to arrive there the day they came in, and though their accounts are alarming enough, yet I cannot think they are equal to the panic that has seized the country.

The Shawanese message is insolent enough; and we have a certain account that twenty of their warriors are gone out, but we have still reason to think they do not mean mischief to the people here, as they lay all to the charge of the Big Knife, as they call the Virginians. The substance of their speech is, that they think what Mr. Croghan and Mr. McKee says to them is lies; that they know the path is open from Philadelphia, and that they will keep it so if they please; but that the Big Knife has struck them, and when they have satisfaction they will speak to him, but not before; that now they have no King, and are all upon their feet, with other threatening expressions in their way. There were several Chiefs of the Delawares, and the Deputy of the Six Nations, (Goyasutha) with eight others of the Seneca tribe, at Pittsburg, by Mr. Croghan's advice. They were called together and I made a short speech to them; they received it with pleasure, and in return gave the strongest assurances that they wished for nothing more than to continue in peace with this Province, and to become as one people. I think there can be no doubt of the sincerity of the Delawares; they have given substantial proofs of it in the care they have taken of the traders that were to have gone to the Shawanese; and if the Six Nations are in the same disposition, the war will be of little consequence, but I fear it is to be doubted whether Goyasutha knows the sense of the league or not.

One of the traders who went with White Eyes was detained at Newcomers Town; they it seems thought it imprudent that more than one should go very soon after the others left it. They were met by a Shawanese man who fired at Duncan, within a very small distance, but fortunately missed him. White Eyes immediately called to him to make back to the town, and he himself got betwixt the Indian and him, and came up with him where he had stopped to load his gun, and disarmed him; they both got safely back to the town, and were immediately shut up in a strong house, and a guard kept on them day and night to preserve them from any attempt that might be made by the Shawanese or Mingoes (a small party of these last live near the Shawanese, and are in a manner incorporated with them) and this was continued till White Eyes went down to the Shawanese town and returned, during all which time they were furnished with provisions and every thing that could be procured for them in the most liberal manner. This I think must be an unequivocal mark of their disposition.

The mischief done by Cresap and Greathouse had been much exaggerated when I wrote to Mr. Shippen, but the number of Indians killed is exactly as I informed Mr. Allen, viz: thirteen. Cresap has lately been in the neighbourhood of Pittsburg, with intention it appeared to pursue the blow he had before struck, but Mr. Conolly sent a message to him forbidding him to attempt any thing against the Indians; this he has taken in high dudgeon, and declares publicly that what he did before was by Mr. Conolly's orders; so that it is to be hoped some of the devilish schemes that have been carrying on here will come to light. I ventured to say that an Indian war was part of the Virginia plan; I am satisfied it must at least be part of Mr. Conolly's plan, for he has already incurred such an expense by repairing the fort and calling out the militia, that I think it is impossible that Colony will ever discharge it unless disturbances be raised that may give his manoeuvres the appearance of necessity.

It is scarcely possible to conceive the distressed situation of this country: one day the spirits of the people are raised a little, and some prospect of their being able to remain on their farms; the next a story worse than any they have heard before, and a thousand times worse than the truth, sinks them in despair; and those about Pittsburg are still in a more pitiable state, being harrassed and oppressed by the militia, who lay their hands on every thing they want without asking questions, and kill cattle at their pleasure; they indeed appraise them, when the owner happens to know of it, and give him a bill on Lord Dunmore, which is downright mockery.

From what I saw it was evident to me that the country must very soon be totally evacuated unless something was done to afford the inhabitants the appearance at least of protection. I therefore consulted with some of the inhabitants at Pittsburg, and Mr. Mackay, Mr. Smith, Colonel Croghan, Mr. Butler and myself entered into an association to raise victuals, and pay a ranging company of one hundred men for one month, to which a number of the inhabitants, as I came down, readily acceded, and I think in a few days we will have it completed. We flattered ourselves indeed that your Honor if you approve the measure, would take such measures with the House as would release us from the expense; but as you may probably want a formal requisition to lay before the House, I have acquainted you with it in another letter. One thing further I had in view: the inhabitants of Pittsburg propose stockading the town; when that is done should your negotiation with Lord Dunmore miscarry, throwing a few men into that place would recover the country the Virginians have usurped.

I beg pardon for so long a letter, and yet I believe I should have given you more but that I am detaining Mr. Montgomery, who charges himself with forwarding this to your honor. I have only to request that you will please to give us your directions as soon as possible.

I am, sir, your most obedient and most humble servant,
AR. ST. CLAIR

The Hon. John Penn, Esq., Governor of Penn'a.

P. S. An affair that has given me much trouble and vexation had like to have escaped my memory, the murder of a Delaware Indian, Joseph Wipey, about eighteen miles from this place. It is the most astonishing thing in the world the disposition of the common people of this country; actuated by the most savage cruelty, they wantonly perpetrate crimes that are a disgrace to humanity, and seem at the same time to be under a kind of religious enthusiasm, whilst they want the daring spirit that usually inspires. Two of the persons concerned in this murder are John Hinkson and James Cooper. I had got information of their design some time before they executed it, and had wrote to Hinkson, whom I knew to be a leader amongst them, to dissuade them and threatened them with the weight of the law if they persisted; but so far from preventing them, it only produced the enclosed letter. The body was discovered hid in a small run of water, and covered with stones. I immediately sent for the Coroner, but before he had got a jury together the body was removed, so that no inquest could be taken. I have issued warrants on suspicion, but they are so much on their guard I doubt they cannot be executed. Your Honor will please to consider whether it may be proper to proclaim, them; it is most unlucky at this time. The letter may perhaps be made use of as evidence.

Mr. McKee had not time to transcribe the speeches of the Indians, but in a few days I shall probably receive them, and will forward them by the first opportunity. Nobody offered the arrest they have threatened me so much with.

A Speech of the SHAWANESE, directed to ALEXANDER McKEE, Esq., GEORGE CROGHAN, Esq., and the Commandant at PITTSBURG, Captain JOHN CONOLLY.

BROTHERS: We are sorry to see so much ill doing between you and us. First you killed our brother Othawakeesquo (or Ben.) next our elder brothers the Mingoes; then the Delawares. All which mischiefs, so close to each other, aggravated our people very much; yet we all determined to be quiet till we knew what you meant; our people were all getting ready to go to their hunting as usual, but these troubles have stopped them. The traders that were amongst us were very much endangered by such doings from the persons injured, but as we are convinced of their innocence, we are determined to protect them, and sent them safe to their relations and other friends, and it will, we hope, be looked upon as a proof of our good intentions.

I, the Cornstalk, do send my brother to be along with the traders in case any of the parties injured should be in their way, and in revenge for the loss of their friends, fall on them; therefore, we request that you will present our good intentions to the Governors of Virginia and Pennsylvania, and request that a stop may be put to such doings for the future. We likewise request that the Commandant, Captain Conolly, of Pittsburg, will do his endeavour to stop such foolish people from the like doings for the future. And I have with great trouble and pains prevailed on the foolish people amongst us to sit still and do no harm till we see whether it is the intention of the white people in general to fall on us, and shall still continue so to do in hopes that matters may be settled. I did intend to go myself, not to talk, but to carry home the traders, but in my stead I send my brother, and expect that Mr. McKee, Mr. Croghan, and Mr. Conolly, and each other of our brothers will shew him the same regard that they would me, as in seeing him they see me all the same as if personally present. This is all that I have to say now to you.

N. B. what concerned the traders I have said to themselves, as the wampum we have given them will testify.

A short Speech to the Chiefs of the DELAWARES and a few of the Six NATIONS, by Mr. ST. CLAIR, at PITTSBURG, May 1774.

Brothers of the Six NATIONS and DELAWARES: The Governor of Pennsylvania has heard your good speeches, and I am come from him to thank you for the care you have taken of our traders, and the pains you have been at to preserve the general peace. Your brothers of Pennsylvania are determined to maintain the friendship subsisting betwixt the Six Nations and Delawares and them entire, but as they are alarmed at the threatenings of the Shawanese, we recommend it to you to prevent your people from hunting on our side of the river for some time, as our people will not be able to distinguish betwixt them and those who may be enemies.

We wish and will endeavour to keep the path open to our brothers, and will on our parts keep bright that chain of friendship which has been so long held-fast by their and our forefathers.

AR. ST. CLAIR

GENERAL HALDIMAND TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Extract.

New-York, May 15, 1774.

The accounts received before the arrival of the packet, as late as the 14th of April, had made known the plan of operation intended to bring Boston to a sense of order and decency, so that on the arrival of Lieutenant General Gage, the inhabitants of that place will not be at a loss what they are to expect if they will prove refractory. It is the opinion of many people here, that they will acknowledge their fault, pay for it, and endeavour to reinstate themselves into his Majesty's favour by a proper submission. *

I wish it may be the case, as there is no knowing how far the factious spirit of a few leading men may carry an inconsiderate multitude, who have imbibed the most romantic notions of independence and liberty; and there will not fail to be such papers propagated amongst them, in order to spirit them up. The Act of Parliament relative to the port of Boston is already reprinted here, with such representations, as may possibly answer that end. I take file liberty to enclose to your Lordship one of those papers handed about this town gratis.

Extracts of private Letters from London, dated April 7 and 8, to persons in New-York and Philadelphia.

[Printed on the back of the Boston Port Bill, and distributed in New-York, on the 14th May, 1774.] †

April 7. With the most anxious and deep concern, I sit down to give you some account of the bitter things that are meditated against America, and through her, against England herself, and that Constitution, by which it has

* A British American, who is a lover of peace, as well as hater of every species of tyranny, whether monarchical or parliamentary, proposes to the consideration of the public of Boston, whether it would not be their wisest course in the present critical situation of affairs, to RAISE IMMEDIATELY, by subscription, a sum equal to the estimated value of the DROWNED TEAS, and deposit it in some public office, ready to be tendered to his Excellency General Gage, immediately on his first requisition for restitution of the India Company's loss, with a solemn declaration (conceived in respectful and conciliating terms,) that they make the reimbursement with real pleasure, as they thereby have at once an opportunity of testifying their readiness to repair every private loss that individuals may sustain, in the present unhappy struggle for the maintenance of their just rights - of manifesting the cheerfulness with which they would load themselves with any burden for the public good, whilst left to the exercise of the constitutional, power of disposing of their own property for that purpose; and showing their promptness to act in consonance with the sentiments of the British Parliament in every thing they can, without sacrificing their liberties. Such a procedure will contain ample declaration of their steady continuance in their patriotic sentiments; and, at the same time, would so entirely conform to the requisitions in the Act of Parliament that now threatens their destruction, as could not fail to place them at once in the light of constitutionally dutiful subjects to the Crown, as well as zealous defenders of the liberty of the subject.

The Querist presumes, that by adopting some such mode of management as this, "good may be brought out of evil;" and that hasty act of violence which moderate men now look on with high disapprobation, be thereby rendered a circumstance honourable to the Bostonians in particular, and advantageous to the Colonies in general, who doubtless would cheerfully bear their proportion in the sum to be raised.

It certainly would be the maddest of all possible Quixotisms to think of making an hostile opposition to such a naval and military force as it is certain is coming out with General Gage, and therefore some plan of constitutional policy that will afford means of evading the heavy threatened evils, should be fallen upon.

NEW-YORK, May 16, 1774.

† A report having been circulated, that a printed paper, published as extracts of letters from London, dated there the 7th and 8th of April, last, which were printed on the back of a copy of the late Act of the English Parliament, for shutting up the port of Boston, and distributed about town on Saturday last, May 14th, were spurious, and that the intelligence was not written from England, but fabricated here. As I am able to prove the said report to be entirely false. I leave every one to judge whether from the friends or the enemies of the rights and liberties of Great Britain and the Colonies. The letters, whose contents are printed on the back of the Act aforesaid, were received on Thursday, the 12th instant, by the Samson, Captain Coupar; the latest ship arrived here from London. They were by one of the writers committed to the particular care of the gentleman who delivered them here, who is now in town, and can prove both the receipt of them in London, and the delivery here. One of the letters which contains the most circumstantial account of the facts, is left in the hands of the printer of the New-York Journal, who can both vouch for the truth of two letters, which were also seen by him and several other persons in town, are now gone to Philadelphia, by a gentleman of that place, who was here when Captain Coupar arrived. These letters (one of which was from a military officer of eminence, both on account of his rank and literary abilities) soon after their arrivall, were read to several gentlemen in town, who thought their contents so important, that they solicited for the copies, and were at the expense of making them public.

NEW YORK, May 17, 1774. 19

FOURTH SERIES.

long been distinguished among the nations, as a land of freedom and happiness, and an asylum against tyranny and oppression. A distinction, alas! that now subsists no more. And must be for ever lost - unless kind Providence should interpose, to save us from that slavery and darkness, which has well nigh overspread the face of the whole earth.

America, the last resort of retiring freedom, is now to be invaded, and the fugitive driven from her peaceful recesses there, that so she may find no resting place on this side heaven.

A plan of despotism and arbitrary power has incessantly been pursued during the present reign; through all the ministerial changes and manoeuvres, that has still been the grand object in view; and may explain all those intricate movements of Government, which otherwise appear quite mysterious, and unaccountable, especially with regard to the Colonies; it may account for that obstinate perseverance in measures palpably inconsistent with every principle of the English Constitution, of justice, and of common sense; which have been attended with almost infinite expense, trouble, and difficulty, both to the Colonies and Great Britain itself; when at the same time, a plain, easy, and certain way to peace, harmony, and prosperity, lies so open before us, that none can mistake it, and yet offers itself in vain. An absolute, arbitrary Government, has infinite charms for a multitude of haughty luxurious parasites and flatterers, that ever surround a throne, and hope to share with it in tyrannizing over the people, and rioting on their spoils. No wonder that such as these should prevail on a young Monarch to be pleased with, to countenance, and adopt their plan. Unlimited power is generally a most desirable object, especially to youth and inexperience; and few are distrustful of themselves, or imagine that it would be unsafe in their hands.

In England, almost every obstruction to the execution of this plan is removed; places of high trust and importance are bestowed upon those who will act in subserviency to the views of the Court; those who might impede those views; are divested of power, and disabled from any effectual opposition. Experience has shown that the pensions and places, in the gift of the Crown, have as great an influence, on the nobility, whose estates might set them above dependence, as upon common men, for luxury is boundless, and can render the possessor of the greatest estate as needy as a beggar, and as vulnerable to the influence of a bribe. As for the Commons, those natural guardians of the liberties and properties of the people, though there are many worthy men among them, who do their utmost to stem the torrent of corruption, and preserve their country; yet, their number is too small to answer the end; the eloquence of Cicero, the most consummate knowledge of the interests of their country, and zeal for its service, the greatest abilities and integrity, are all rendered entirely useless, by a corrupt majority of ministerial tools, who vote just as they are directed; this House, therefore, which used to be the bulwark of the people's security, serves now only to give the form or appearance of legality to acts of real tyranny and oppression, by which they are deprived of their liberty and property. A great majority of the House are returned by little venal boroughs, bribed by the nation's own money, to elect such men as the Ministry choose, and afterwards command to vote as they please. A friend well acquainted with the internal state of Great Britain, assures me, "that many boroughs in the Kingdom have scarce ten persons qualified to vote for a Representative in Parliament, and that all who are qualified, are under the influence of some nobleman, or squire, who, if he has no person of his own family to put in, transfers the election, or rather nomination, to such adventurers as choose to purchase a seat, as a means of climbing the hill of preferment. In some places, there is not even the shadow of an election, or town meeting. The Sovereign, Bailiff, or rather Returning Officer, with two or three Burgesses, go privately to the Session House, an moment name such a one, as duly elected, without the appearance of a candidate. What a farce are such transactions, where the people are thus played away at a game, wherein a corrupt Government, and an ambitious, covetous landlord, are the only gainers! All things being thus ripe in England, for the open introduction of arbitrary power, nothing seems to have prevented it, but the struggles of the Americans to preserve their liberties. These struggles have been doubly mortifying to the Ministry, as they have thereby, been not only prevented from levying a revenue upon America, but from executing their scheme in its full extent upon England. And unless that scheme be very soon executed, it is in danger of being blown up entirely; for matters have risen to such a crisis, the uneasiness and distress of the nation are become so general, that some violent commotion seems inevitable, and near at hand; and if a revolution should happen, and fail to establish despotism in England, it would probably be fatal to those who have attempted to introduce it. The most strenuous efforts, therefore, will now be made, both by force and fraud, to reduce the Americans to a conformity with the measures of the Ministry, who are enraged and distracted at the obstructions they meet with from that quarter.

I therefore earnestly warn you to firmness and vigilance; every art will be used, both to intimidate, and to deceive you; may God direct you to be wise and faithful to yourselves, and to your country, and crown your endeavours with success. You have every thing at stake that can be dear to reasonable creatures; your freedom, your property, your posterity, your honour. The very Ministry who are striving to enslave you, in spite of themselves, both honour and fear you; but if they succeed against you, will despise and spurn you.

About a fortnight ago, an Act of Parliament of a most extraordinary kind, to shut up the port of Boston, was passed in a most extraordinary manner, being smuggled through the House in seventeen days only, from its introduction. The evidence before the Privy Council was suppressed; the agents refused a hearing at the bar; and no member for Boston or America in either House. Nor had the merchants and manufacturers in England, who will be deeply effected by the execution of this Act, any proper notice of it, or opportunity to remonstrate against it. Indeed, it is openly said, that many thousand pounds were issued from the Treasury, to obtain a majority in the House, and hurry it through, before there should be time for opposition: so that, when a body of merchants, trading to Boston and America, waited on Lord North, with a request that a petition might be heard against the Bill, before it passed into a law, they had the mortification to find they were too late, and that the Bill had already passed. As his Majesty has, by the Act, a conditional power to suspend its operation, in case the tea destroyed at Boston should be paid for, the merchants offered Lord North £19,000 or a security to the India Company to pay for the tea, if that suspension of the Act might be procured from his Majesty. But these offers were refused, and the merchants went away much dissatisfied - as thinking people are in general, against the proceedings of the Ministry, especially in respect to this law, and the manner of getting it passed, which was with as much privacy and haste as possible, so that it is hardly yet known in the manufacturing towns, which will be hurt by it. It is expected to raise great clamour and uneasiness as soon as it comes to be generally known, and felt, by the labouring people, and the trade, the stoppage of which, it is imagined, in a few months will convince the Ministry they have acted wrong.

Another new Bill, as extraordinary as the Boston Bill, only more general in its operation, is in agitation in the Privy Council; and like the Boston Bill, it is intended to be smuggled through the House. God grant it may be stopped in its progress, or defeated of its design. It is expected here, that America will be surprised or frightened into a compliance with it, by the intended alarming clauses in it, and the spirited manner of enforcing it.

God give you vigilance, fortitude, and wisdom to avoid the snares laid for you, and enable you to escape them.

General Gage is appointed Governour and Commander-in-chief of Massachusetts Bay, with very extensive powers. Under him are to be a set of officers, approved by the Ministry, to be made Counselors, and enforce the Parliamentary laws, with the (apparent) consent of the people. In short, every art will be used to deceive you, and either cheat, or frighten you out of your freedom and property; however, I can assure you, the Commanders have private orders not to fight, unless they can provoke you to appear the aggressors - nay, they have orders not to commence hostilities, without further orders. But how soon that restriction may be taken off, God only knows; nor do I think that it was from any regard to justice, or tenderness to you, that such a restraint was laid; but purely from fear of the consequences of sanguinary orders; therefore, I think, if you are firm and prudent, you have no occasion at this time, to fear any tragical consequences from a refusal to be taxed by the British Parliament, who have really no right at all to tax you; not, that I would persuade you to this refusal merely upon a supposition that the Ministry will not proceed to hostile and sanguinary measures - for my opinion is, that there is nothing too absurd or wicked for them to do; but that if they should proceed to such measures it will be better for you to die than submit to them; however, as your cause is just, and all the world must see that you are injured and oppressed, your oppressors will be condemned by all the world, both at home and abroad; and if you are but firm and prudent in your opposition, fear not but Providence will interpose in your behalf, and raise you up friends to support and assist you.

Some of the greatest and wisest, as well as the best men in England, are already on your side, and will stand by you; your enemies have nothing but mere power, unjustly obtained and applied, to support their cause; reason and justice are altogether against them; they therefore stand on slippery ground, and totter in their stations. Lord Camden exerted himself nobly in the House of Lords in your favour he told them the Boston Bill would be productive of a train of evils, and they certainly would have cause to repent it. Great care is taken to prevent copies of his speech from getting to America, as well as to deceive you by false intelligence. Every tool of power in America will be called upon, and furnished with means to mislead you, by a misrepresentation of facts, and giving a false turn and colouring to every thing that it concerns you to know. Six hundred pounds per annum, are paid to writers of false intelligence, and letters, as well as newspapers, that might give you such intelligence as the Ministry desire to conceal from you, are all stopped.

It is given out that severe measures are only intended against Boston, to punish their refractory conduct; but depend upon it, if they succeed against Boston, the like measures will be extended to every Colony in America; they only begin with Boston, hoping the other Colonies will not interpose. But you are all to be visited in turn, and devoured one after another. You may depend upon my intelligence my office gives me access to the principals concerned in the measures, and I think it my duty to warn the innocent against the wicked devices that I know to be meditated against them. It behoves the Colonies to be united, in their intelligence, councils, and measures; it is a matter of the last importance to them, to stand by, and support one another; the most favoured can only expect to be last devoured. The Ministry are determined to try your metal to the utmost. Mansfield and Bute are supposed to be the prime directors, and to influence the Royal ear as they please. The spoils of England are insufficient to support the luxury of the minions of power; they have fixed their voracious appetites upon the possessions of the Americans, and intend to make a prey of them, in defiance of reason and justice; of the Charters of Kings, and the divine laws of nature. Depend upon it, every Colony is to be subdued into a slavish obedience to the tyrannical impositions of Great Britain; nothing less will suffice, nothing less is intended. After the subjection of Boston, and perhaps all the New England Governments, New-Jersey and New-York are to be the next in course; and they talk of taking away Penn's Charter. Look to yourselves; exert all your faculties to the utmost; your virtues will be put to a severe trial, and if they are not genuine and well founded, they will not stand the test.

Alas! how is my soul shocked at the present situation of England, my native country - a great, a generous, and late a happy people - but now, how changed, how fallen! The men who are really wise and good, deprived of opportunities of acting; the poor and middling people, ruined and oppressed; the rich, lost in luxury and dissipation; a set of weak and wicked men, misguiding the reins of Government; the people taxed to death, without mercy; placemen and pensioners, without number, &c.

Many of the officers on the intended expedition against Boston and America have nobly thrown up their commissions, and refused to fight against their brethren in the Colonies, without a just cause; and it is expected the soldiers will desert in multitudes, from a mere sense of honour and justice.

April 8. News is just now arrived, by a private hand, that the discontent of the people, has so far prevailed, that orders are sent to unman the fleet, or at least, that it should not sail till further orders. I hope the news will prove true.

The Scots in the House of Commons, have been your great enemies. I think it would be but just in the Bostonians to withhold every farthing due to them in that town, which I am told, is very considerable, especially to the city of Glasgow. Indeed, I think, as the port is shut up, the whole debt due from them to Great Britain should be stopped, and reprisals be made by every means in your power. The preservation of England itself, and her excellent Constitution, require it of you.

May God direct and prosper your counsels.

NEW-YORK COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE.

New-York, Monday, May 16, 1774.*

The Merchants and other inhabitants of the city of New-York, assembled at the Exchange, in the said city, and nominated the following gentlemen to form a Committee to correspond with our sister Colonies upon all matters of moment, and that fifteen be a Board, all being duly summoned.

John Alsop,	Thomas Pearsall,	Gerardus Duyckinck,
William Bayard,	Elias Desbrosses,	Peter Van Schaack,
Theophilact Bachw,	William Walton,	Henry Remsen,
Peter V. B. Livingston,	Richard Yates,	Hamilton Young,
Philip Livingston,	John De Lancey,	George Bowne,
Isaac Sears,	Miles Sherbrook,	Peter T. Curtenius,
David Johnston,	John Thurman,	Peter Goelet,
Charles McEvers,	John Broome,	Abraham Brusher,
Charles Nicholl.	John Jay,	Abraham P. Lott,
Alexander McDougall,	Benjamin Booth,	David Van Horne,
Capt. Thomas Randall,	Joseph Hallett,	Gerard W. Beekman,
John Moore,	Charles Shaw,	Abraham Duryee,
Isaac Low,	Alexander Wallace,	Joseph Bull,
Leonard Lispenard,	James Jauncey,	William McAdam,
Jacobus Van Zandt,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,	Richard Sharpe,
James Duane,	Nicholas Hoffman,	Thomas Marston.
Edward Laight,	Abraham Walton,

On Tuesday the following Notice was published in handbills: -

* At a very general meeting of the inhabitants of this city, on Monday last, May 16, a body of fifty respectable gentlemen were appointed by the public voice, to be a Standing Committee for the important and salutary purposes of keeping up a correspondence with our sister Colonies, and in conjunction with them pursuing in the present important crisis such judicious and constitutional measures as should appear to be necessary for the preservation of our just rights; the maintenance of the public peace; and the support of that general union, which at this time in particular, is so absolutely requisite to be preserved throughout the Continent.

At a time like this, when the public good is concerned, the public good alone should be the object of every individual. Tis therefore anxiously hoped, that at the general meeting to be assembled this day, to declare the universal assent to the choice of the body who made the nomination, all partial attachments and private animosities will be laid aside, and the choice be confirmed without any sinister opposition from narrow and ungenerous sentiments. As the gentlemen appointed are of the body of the merchants; men of property, probity, and understanding, whose zeal for the public good cannot be doubted; their own several private interests being so intimately connected with that of the whole community; and whose situations, connections, and opportunities of an universal knowledge of public circumstances, point them out as the proper persons to hold so important a trust.

On Tuesday evening, May 17, an express arrived in town from Boston, with an account that the inhabitants of that place had received on the 10th instant, by Captain Jenkins, the Act of Parliament for shutting up their port. On Wednesday, the Committees of Correspondence from eight of the adjacent towns, were summoned; and on Thursday they met at Fanueil Hall, and wrote circular letters to the several Committees of Correspondence in the other Colonies. On Friday the inhabitants of the town of Boston met, and agreed to send letters to every to every town in the Massachusetts Government, and to every Colony on the Continent, acquainting them that they were determined to stop all exports and imports to Great Britain and the West Indies. They chose other committees to confer with the inhabitants of Salem, Marblehead, &c.; to collect subscriptions for the employment of the artificers, &c.; and for effectually securing the peace of the city. In short, the inhabitants who had assembled in prodigious numbers, were all united in a firm resolution, not to comply with the Act of Parliament. The purport of their letter to the Committees of Correspondence at this city and in Philadelphia, is to acquaint them with their resolutions, and to desire that they may be supported by their hearty concurrence in the measures which have hitherto been concerted by them.

NEW-YORK, May 19, 1774.

"To the Public: An Advertisement having appeared "at the Coffee House, in consequence of the late extraordinary and very alarming advices received from England, "inviting the Merchants to meet at the house of Mr. "Samuel Francis, on Monday evening, May 16, in order "to consult on measures proper to be pursued on the "present critical and important occasion;

"A very respectable and large number of the Merchants "and other inhabitants did accordingly appear at the time "and place appointed, and then and there nominated for the "approbation of the public, a Committee of fifty persons, "of which fifteen to be a sufficient number to do business.

"That therefore, no formality may be wanting to constitute a Committee, duly chosen, the inhabitants of "this city and county, are requested to attend at the Coffee "House, on Thursday the 19th instant, at 1 o'clock, to "approve of the Committee nominated as aforesaid, or to "appoint such other persons, as in their discretion and "wisdom may seem meet."

New-York, Tuesday, May 17, 1774.

In consequence of the foregoing Advertisement, a great concourse of the inhabitants met at the Coffee House, on Thursday, May 19, to confirm or alter the nomination of a Committee to correspond with our sister Colonies, when Mr. Isaac Low addressed his fellow-citizens in the following words: *

"GENTLEMEN: You have been duly apprised, both by handbills and advertisements in this day's papers, of the intention of your present meeting.

"I hope, gentlemen, you will manifest by your conduct that you are actuated by the dictates of calm reason only, in the choice of the Committee I am to propose for your approbation.

"It is but charitable to suppose we all mean the same thing, and that the only difference amongst us is, or at least ought to be, the mode of effecting it, I mean the preservation of our just rights and liberties.

"Let us, then, call down wisdom to our aid, and endeavour to walk in her hallowed paths.

"Zeal in a good cause is most laudable, but when it transports beyond the bounds of reason it often leaves room for bitter reflection.

"We ought, therefore, gentlemen, to banish from our hearts all little party distinctions, feuds and animosities, for to our unanimity and virtue we must at last recur for

• In addition to this Address of Mr. Low, the following appeals to the people of New-York were published at this time: -

The late Act of Parliament for blocking up the harbour of Boston, is so far from discouraging the inhabitants of that town, that they never were in higher spirits than at the present hour. Confiding in the other Colonies, that they will unite in suspending their exports and imports, to and from Great Britain and the West Indies, they have cheerfully resolved to expend their fortunes and lives in the cause. Several among them, willing to part with all they possess for the public good, have subscribed largely for the support of the poor. They study to preserve good order, and to find employment for those who will be wholly turned out of business.

The liberty and welfare of America is suspended on the issue of the present struggle. If it be successful, our enemies will behold America tending to greatness in spite of all their devilish machinations. They will see her in full possession of that freedom which they look upon with envy, and which they long to destroy. But, if unsuccessful, wretched will be our condition. The sufferings of Ireland will be desirable compared with ours. We shall be at the mercy of revenge, made terrible by power, and inexorable by disappointment. Those very men who are now embarrassed and distracted by the opposition they met with, will then insult and oppress us with all the wantonness of security. They who now dread our firmness will then despise our irresolution. They will spurn us for doing what they now say is rebellion not to do. We shall be in the hands of men who are abandoned to every abominable excess of wickedness; who are of that worst of characters, "alieni appetens, fui profusus;"men of unbounded avarice, and of unbounded intemperance; "men of blood,""who hate not covetousness." "whose God is their belly,"greedy as the grave, and sanguinary as fiends.

Can there be any, then, so lost to feeling, so lost to reflection, to all disinterestedness, and all foresight, as not to be deeply engaged in opposing and frustrating measures big with the fates of America and freedom, of England and posterity? Let us, with the brave Romans, consider our ancestors and our offspring. Let us follow the example of the former, and set an example to the latter. Let us not be like that sluggish people, who, through a love of ease, "bowed themselves and became servants to tribute,"and whom the inspired prophet, their father, justly compared to "asses!"Had I a voice which could be heard from Canada to Florida, I would address the Americans in the language of the Roman patriot: "If you have a mind to keep those "things, be they what they will, you are so fond of,"(whether your money, your freedom, civil and religious, or whether your very super-safety; and that man will approve himself the best friend to his country whose highest emulation is to inculcate those principles both by precept and example."

The nomination of the fifty gentlemen made at the Exchange, on the 16th instant, was then submitted by Mr. Low, and confirmed by the meeting, and Mr. Francis Lewis was added to the number by unanimous consent.

New-York, Monday, May 23, 1774.

The Committee appointed to correspond with our sister Colonies upon all matters of moment, met at the Coffee House, pursuant to notice for that purpose given; Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Nicholas Hoffman,	Edward Laight,
Theophilact Bache,	Philip Livingston,	William McAdam,
Alexander McDougall,	William Bayard,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,
Leonard Lispenard,	Alexander Wallace,	Charles Shaw,
James Jauncey,	Peter Van Schaack,	William Walton,
Isaac Sears,	Benjamin Booth,	Thomas Randall,
Joseph Bull,	Henry Remsen,	Gerardus Duyckinck,
John De Lancey,	Peter T. Curtenius,	Abraham Brasher,
Abraham Duryee,	Abraham Walton,	Jacobus Van Zandt,
John Broome,	John Moore,	Peter V. B. Livingston,
Thomas Marston,	David Johnston,	Charles McEvers,
Charles Nicholl,	Richard Yates,	John Jay,
James Duane,	John Alsop,	Miles Sherbrook,
Richard Sharpe,	Abraham P. Lott,	Hamilton Young.
Peter Goelet,

The Committee proceeded to choose Mr. Isaac Low, to be their Chairman, and Mr. John Alsop, their Deputy Chairman.

The Committee received a Letter from the body of Mechanics, signed by Jonathan Blake, their Chairman, informing them of their concurrence with the other inhabitants of this city, in their nomination.

Ordered, That Mr. Duane, Mr. Jay, and Mr. Van

fluties,) "rouse at length, and stand up for the liberties of your "country."

What is it but for the rich to part with gratifications which nature never called for, and for the poor to be at worst but temporary sufferers for the general good? What but for some to be temperate, and all to be diligent? We have already seen, in one of the greatest towns in America, all ranks consenting thus to deny themselves for their country. Be, then, unanimous, and you shall be successful; be united and be free; be virtuous and be happy.

But let the Bostonians pay for the tea; it is but about eight thousand pounds sterling! As if our enemies were after nothing more than this small sum, doubtless greater than that cargo of seven year old tea was worth, which could not be got off in England, and, like unsavoury salt, was fit only to be trampled under foot, or thrown overboard; as if, in order to get this sum, they would lay out, none can tell how many times as much more, in fitting out a fleet, and bribing men, who could not, without reluctance, concur in their measures. Happy land! where the most deeply concerted stratagems of crafty tyrants are at once seen through by every one! May she never be guilty of forfeiting her liberty! Great would the crime be, since she must do it knowingly.

The English newspapers are stuffed with nonsensical declamations on tim right of Parliament to have every farthing in America at their command, and with virulent invectives against the Bostonians. These writers are beneath contempt. They could not think as they do were they not hired. It is not ignorance in their heads, but, to use a strong scriptural phrase, "ignorance in their hearts", which makes them talk in this manner Common sense refutes them all by this short question: How comes another by a right to take away my money without my consent? But, for our encouragement, let us remember, that some of the greatest and best men in England wish us success; the merchants and manufacturers at home are greatly and generally dissatisfied already, and will soon feel the cause of American liberty to be their own. In a word, let all put merchants unite as one man; let them strive against division in this crisis of jeopardy; let them show themselves worthy of that divine appellation, "the fathers of their country."And let not the Ministers of the Gospel neglect their duty; let them remember the example of the Apostles, who embraced every opportunity of testifying their zeal for the civil and religions liberties of mankind; and while they teach men to consider their oppressors as "the rod of God's anger, and the staff of his indignation,"let them not fail to excite and encourage them to a hope of his interposition in their behalf, while they humble themselves by fasting and prayer, and are in use of all proper means for deliverance.

The following DIALOGUE being conceived, in some measure, calculated to advance the cause of Freedom, in the present critical situation of affairs, is for that purpose presented to the public; -

Question. What think you of the Act of Parliament for shutting up the port of Boston?

Answer. It appears to me an unconstitutional and tyrannical Act, and that a submission to it will greatly endanger the liberties of America.

Question. But would not the Bostonians, making payment to the East India Company for the destruction of their tea, reduce every thing to its former situation?

Answer. I think not. The Act does not enable the King to appoint certain wharfs, quays, &c. for the lading and unlading of goods, until peace and obedience to the laws are restored in the town of Boston; the East India Company paid for the tea; and until the officers of his Majesty's revenue, and others, shall receive satisfaction for what Schaack, be a Committee to draw up a set of Rules for the regulation of the Committee, and present the same to the next meeting.

Ordered, That the first five members on the list, who shall be in town be a Committee to open all letters directed to the Committee, in the absence of the Chairman and Deputy Chairman.

Letters from the Committee of Correspondence of Boston, with the Vote of the town of Boston, of the 13th instant, and a Letter from the Committee of Philadelphia, were read.

Ordered, That Mr. McDougall, Mr. Low, Mr. Duane, and Mr. Jay, be a Committee to prepare and report a draft of an Answer to the Boston Committee, at eight o'clock, P. M.; to which hour the Grand Committee were then adjourned.

New-York, May 23, 1774.

The Committee met at the Coffee House, al 8 o'clock, in the evening, pursuant to adjournment; Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Richard Sharpe,	Gerardus Duyckinck,
Philip Livingston,	Jaeobus Van Zandt,	Charles Nicholl,
Charles McEvers,	Peter V. B. Livingston,	Theophilact Bache,
Nicholas Hoffman,	Abraham Brasher,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,
Henry Remsen,	Peter Van Schaack,	John Moore,
Peter T. Curtenius,	James Jauncey,	Peter Goelet,
Isaac Sears,	John Jay,	Leonard Lispenard,
Abraham P. Loft,	David Johnston,	Alexander McDougall,
Abraham Walton,	William Walton,	Gerard W. Beckman,
James Duane,	Edward Laight,	Charles Shaw,
John Broome,	Miles Sherbrook,	John De Lancey,
Abraham Duryee,	William Bayard,	Thomas Randall.
Thomas Marston,	Hamilton Young,

The Committee appointed this morning to prepare a draft of a Letter in answer to those received from Boston, they have suffered. So that, however reasonable it may appear that the Company should be paid for their less, yet the remaining terms are too humiliating and oppressive to be yielded to by men who have a sense of the blessings of freedom, and who possess the means of securing them. When can the Governour of Boston venture to give a certificate that the officers of his Majesty's revenue, and others, have received full satisfaction? Where will the demands of these officers stop? And how many crouching submissions and offers of obedience to Parliamentary authority, will be expected by his Majesty before he will declare in Privy Council, that the Bostonians have manifested a spirit of peace and obedience to the laws? But I will suppose (not grant) that the Governor may have it in his power soon to discover all the persons who have been injured by the conduct of the Bostonians; that the demands of the sufferers will be moderate; no advantage taken of this golden opportunity to swell their damages; and that his Majesty will be satisfied with general professions of a peaceable and obedient spirit. Can you, however, believe that the Governour will give such certificate, or his Majesty declare his acquiescence, till the unconstitutional duties have been paid? The words of the Act will warrant the demand of them, and I believe so good an opportunity of obtaining the grand desideratum will not be overlooked and neglected. The words of the Act are, "Provided, also, that nothing hereto contained shall "enable his Majesty to appoint such port, wharf, &c., until it shall be "certified that reasonable satisfaction hath been made to the officers of "his Majesty's revenue, and others, who suffered by the riots and "insurrections,"&c. May it not be said, that the officers of his Majesty's revenue have suffered the loss of the duties by means of the riots, (as they are called,) and will it not with propriety be declared, that his Majesty is one of those "others"mentioned in the Act, who have suffered by the means aforesaid? since, had the tea not been destroyed, he would have been entitled to the duty, and, if not paid, might have seized the tea to secure it. To me it appears in a high degree probable, that the duty which we have so nobly and universally testified against as unconstitutional, will be demanded; and that the want of an explicit declaration in the Act to that purpose, is to be attributed to ministerial art and contrivance to lead us on gradually in the business of humiliation till we cannot consistently recede.

I will, however, suppose, that neither the Governour nor his Majesty will make any demand of the duty; but, upon the above mentioned concessions, will proceed to execute the powers vested in him by the Act. In what condition will the Bostonians then be? Will they, after all this distressing submission, be re-instated in their former privileges? By no means. A great part of their property will be ravished from them, or rendered altogether useless. By the Act of Parliament the King may, after all proper concessions made, appoint the bounds and limits of the port or harbour of Boston, and assign so many wharfs and quays for lading and unlading of goods, as his Majesty shall think expedient, and it shall not be lawful to land or put off from any others. Here you see the property of all wharfs and water lots not licensed by his Majesty, is wrested from the hands of their proprietors, and without their consent, in the most arbitrary manner, rendered useless. By this Act, the merchant who had laid down at night lathe possession of well earned affluence, rises in the morning despoiled of his property, and will in vain look for redress from any other source than the spirit of freedom, and the union of his fellow Americans. If the Parliament of Great Britain are allowed to bring their laws upon your farms and your soil; to regulate your internal policy, and snatch from the honest proprietor his peaceable and well earned possessions, adieu to liberty and all the train of blessings that attend her! did you oppose the Stamp Act? Upon what principles make opposition to the Revenue Law? And wherefore is the virtuous struggle yet kept alive against the tyranny of the British Parliament? For no other presented a draft to the Committee, which was unanimously approved of, and ordered to be signed by the Chairman, and transmitted to the Committee of Correspondence, at Boston; in the words following:

New-York, May 23, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: The alarming measures of the British Parliament relative to your ancient and respectable town, which has so long been the seat of freedom, fill the inhabitants of this city with inexpressible concern. As a sister Colony, suffering in defence of the rights of America, we consider your injuries as a common cause, to the redress of which it is equally our duty, and our interest to contribute. But what ought to be done in a situation so truly critical, while it employs the anxious thoughts of every generous mind, is very hard to be determined.

Our citizens have thought it necessary to appoint a large Committee, consisting of fifty-one persons to correspond with our sister Colonies on this and every other matter of public moment, and at ten o'clock this forenoon, we were first assembled. Your letter, enclosing the vote of the town of Boston, and the letter of your Committee of Correspondence, were immediately taken into consideration.

While we think you justly entitled to the thanks of your sister Colonies for asking their advice on a case of such extensive consequences, we lament our inability to relieve your anxiety by a decisive opinion. The cause is general, and concerns a whole Continent, who are equally interested with you and us; and we foresee that no remedy can be of avail unless it proceeds from the joint act and approbation of all; from a virtuous and spirited union which may be expected while the feeble efforts of a few will only ends surely than to retain our freedom and transmit it unimpaired to posterity; and the same noble considerations ought to impel us more strongly in the present case to use every lawful means to procure a repeal of this detestable Act. Should the other Colonies continue inactive spectators of the struggles of the Bostonians, when she is sacrificed to ministerial vengeance, then will a similar Act be forced upon us, and so in succession throughout the Colonies; the teas have been destroyed not at Boston alone, some of them have been thrown overboard at New-York, and the whole sent back from Philadelphia. The cries of humiliation will be too pleasant to ministerial ears to suffer them to forego a sacrifice so agreeable to them, especially when the good end of providing for their friends and dependants, and promoting in future their inimical designs, will be, in some measure, the consequence of appointing particular landing places at most of the sea port towns aa the Continent. Let us, therefore, give our countrymen, the Bostonians. every possible and lawful assistance, and encourage them in a justifiable defence of their rights, by the earliest intimation of our readiness to unite with them; and if a non-importation and non-exportation scheme be the best end most likely method to effect redress, (as I believe it is,) we should signify that sentiment to all our sister Colonies, and desire their judgment upon the occasion. This non-importation agreement should be preceded by a declaration, that as the East India Company have suffered from our exertions in support of the cause of freedom, they, in justice, should be repaid the value of their tea., and that the Colonies in general would contribute to that payment; not because it was the requisition of the Act, but as a dictate of justice, at the very time when a resolution was made not to import till that Act was repealed. Such a generous resolution, replete at once with a sense of regard to the rights of the injured, and with a spirit of firmness to maintain our own freedom and inheritance, would conciliate us the affection of thousands on the other side of the water, and make the enemies of a people so spirited and just, fearful in the execution of their iniquitous designs.

Question. But is not the present situation of the Bostonians similar to that of a man attacked by a highwayman, who puts a pistol to his breast and demands his money? Can any concessions made by them be drawn into precedent, when such a violent act of force compels them to the measure?

Answer. I think the cases by no means similar. From the present distress of the people of Boston, they may be relieved by a virtuous union and agreement of their fellow Americans not to import from the mother country till the Boston Act is repealed. This is like an opportunity of striking the pistol from the hands of the robber, and reducing him to the terms of reason and justice. In the cause of freedom, in the defence of our liberties, every struggle and effort for victory and relief should be made; and poor, indeed, must be the spirit of that man, who, whilst an arm can even feebly be raised for its support, would extend himself under the tyrannical stride of his oppressors, and cry out submission to his force. No, my friend! whilst a single effort can be made, and more especially when we have so noble and effectual a one, let us never resign the only sweetener of all our enjoyments, but put forth every power to maintain and defend it. There are men who think it laudable, and their duty, to die in defence of their liberties; and shall we be afraid of losing a little property, when by that means we in all probability secure in perpetuity the enjoyment of the remainder? The robber may take your property when opposition would endanger your person; but what competition can the loss of such trash be put in, with the wreck of all that is dear and valuable in life. No highwayman, or set of highwaymen upon earth, should be allowed to spoil us of our freedom, of our liberties, whilst a nerve of opposition can be strung against them.

be attended with mischief and disappointment to themselves and triumph to the adversaries of our liberty.

Upon these reasons we conclude that a Congress of Deputies from the Colonies in general is of the utmost moment; that it ought to be assembled without delay, and some unanimous resolution formed in this fatal emergency, not only respecting your deplorable circumstances, but for the security of our common rights. Such being our sentiments, it must be premature to pronounce any judgment on the expedient which you have suggested. We beg, however, that you will do us the justice to believe that we shall continue to act with a firm and becoming regard to American freedom, and to co-operate with our sister Colonies in every measure which shall be thought salutary and conducive to the public good.

We have nothing to add, but that we sincerely condole with you, in your unexampled distress, and to request your speedy opinion of the proposed Congress, that if it should meet with your approbation, we may exert our utmost endeavours, to carry it into execution.

We are, &c.

Ordered, That the Chairman send a copy of this Letter to the Committee at Boston, and to the Committee of Correspondence at Philadelphia, acknowledging the receipt of a copy of their Letter to Boston, and approving the sentiments contained in it.

The Committee adjourned to the Exchange, to meet on the 30th of May, inst., at 6 o'clock, in the evening.

Mr. Low, according to order, transmitted to the Committee of Correspondence in Philadelphia, a copy of the Letter from the Committee in New-York to the Committee at Boston; with a Letter, in the words, following:

New-York, May 24, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: A copy of your letter in answer to those received by express, from Boston, having been communicated to the Committee of fifty-one persons, lately appointed by our citizens to correspond with the other Colonies on all matters of moment, I am desired by the Committee to transmit you, the enclosed copy of their letter to the Committee of Correspondence at Boston.

I am also directed to inform you that the sentiments contained in your letter, to the Committee of Boston, are much approved by our Committee, who will be happy in a free and mutual communication of sentiment on all occasions on matters so important and interesting to the American Colonies.

I have the honour to subscribe myself, with much respect and regard, by order of the Committee,

I. Low, Chairman.

To the Committee of Correspondence, Philadelphia.

New-York, May 30, 1774.

The Committee met at the Exchange, at 6 o'clock, in the evening, pursuant to adjournment: Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Edward Laight,	Peter Van Schaack,
John Alsop,	William Walton,	Henry Remsen,
William Bayard,	Richard Yates,	Hamilton Young,
Theophilact Bathe,	John De Lancey,	Peter T. Curtenius,
Peter V. B. Livingston,	John Thurman,	Peter Goelet,
Philip Livingston,	Thomas Marston,	Abraham Brushser,
Isaac Soars,	John Broome,	Abraham P. Lott,
Charles McEvers,	Benjamin Booth,	Gerard W. Beekman,
Charles Nicholl,	Charles Shaw,	Abraham Duryee,
Alex. McDougall,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,	Josenh Bull,
John Moore,	Nicholas Hoffman,	William McAdam,
Leonard Lisenard,	Abraham Walton,	Richard Sharpe
Jacobus Van Zandt,	Gerardus Duyckinck,
James Duane,

Agreeable to a Resolution of the last meeting, the following Regulations for the government of this Committee in their debates and proceedings, were reported, agreed to, and ordered to be entered upon their minutes, to wit:

1. That the Chairman, and in his absence, the Deputy Chairman, and in the absence of both, a Chairman to be appointed pro tempore, shall preside at every meeting, and keep order and decorum, and that it shall be his duty to sign all letters from the Board.

2. That a Secretary shall be appointed, who is not a member of the Board.

3. That all motions and addresses shall be made to the Chair, and standing.

4. That if more than one shall rise to speak at the same time, the Chairman shall determine who shall first be heard.

5. That the substance of every motion which is seconded, shall be entered on the minutes.

6. That no interruption shall be suffered while a member is delivering his sentiments.

7. That every question shall be determined by a majority of voices; and, after a determination, the same question shall not be resumed, but with the consent of the majority at a subsequent meeting.

8. That when a question shall be determined upon a division, the names of the members shall be entered as they shall vote on each side; and the dissentients, or any of them, shall be at liberty to enter their protest.

9. That the Committee shall meet upon their adjournments. But upon application of any five members, the Chairman, or in his absence, the Deputy Chairman, in the absence of both, the Secretary, shall call a special meeting; printed notice whereof shall be left at the residence of each member.

10. That none but members shall be permitted to take copies of the Committees' letters or proceedings without leave of the Board. That for the despatch of business, and to prevent interruptions, the doors at our meetings shall be shut; but that any citizen shall have free access to our proceedings, in the presence of a member.

11. That when both the Chairman and Deputy Chairman shall be out of town, the five first members named on the list of the body who may be in town, shall be at liberty to open letters directed to the Committee.

12. That every member who shall be absent at any meeting, or shall appear fifteen minutes after the appointed hour, (to be determined by the Chairman) shall forfeit a fine of two shillings; and if any member, after appearing, shall leave the meeting, without obtaining the consent of the Chairman, he shall forfeit eight shillings.

13. That at every meeting these Rules shall be publicly read, previous to the proceeding upon business.

Ordered, That Joseph Allicocke be appointed Secretary, and Thomas Pettit Messenger of the Board.

Ordered, That Messrs. Peter Van Schaack, Francis Lewis, John Jay, Alexander McDougall, and Theophilact Bache, be a Committee to write a Circular Letter to the Supervisors in the different counties, acquainting them of the appointment of this Committee, and submitting to the consideration of the inhabitants of the counties whether it could not be expedient for them, to appoint persons to correspond with this committee, upon matters relative to the purposes for which they are appointed.

The Committee adjourned to meet at the Exchange, on Monday next, the 6th June, 1774, at 6 o'clock, in the evening. *

* Among the Letters written at this time by persons in New-York to their Correspondents in Great Britain, were the following:

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN LONDON.

Notwithstanding the boasted resolutions of many of the principal people of this Colony to stand forth in defence of their rights and liberties, we are well assured that most of them are sorry for embarking in the cause so far, and that they only want an opportunity to throw off the mask, to join with the friends of Government. If the Minister was wicked enough to load us with the heaviest imposition, I doubt not but he would be able to carry his designs into execution, by means of a few men-of-war; for the spirit of the inhabitants here died away as soon as it was known that General Gage, with a fleet of ships, arrived at Boston, to shut up the ports and remove the courts of judicature. I heartily wish that an end were put to all disputes between us and our mother country, that trade and commerce might flourish again, for whilst these contentions last, the merchants of your city must feel the effects of it as well as us. The Spaniards alone have had the advantage: and they are ready to receive us under their protection; but I hope the people are more loyal than to accept of their offers.

EXTRACT OF & LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN LONDON,

I have the pleasure to inform you that General Gage arrived safe, and in good health, at Boston, in twenty-five days from Portsmouth. He landed at the Castle, and immediately sent for the Council, where he made a speech to them which was spirited, but at the same time tempered with very sound and wholesome advice. In two or three days he made his entry lute Boston, and had his commission read; upon which the Bostonians tell us, in their newspaper, that they shewed him every demonstration of their attention; that they made him a grand entertainment at Faneuil Hall, but even could not help affronting him at that grand Bostonian feast, by hissing him, because he gave Governour Hut-

New-York, May 31, 1774.

At a special meeting, held this evening, at 6 o'clock at the Exchange: Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Miles Sherbrook,	Henry Remsen,
F. V. B. Livingston,	John Thurman,	Hamilton Young,
Isaac Sears,	William Bayard,	Peter T. Curtenius,
Charles McEvers,	John Broome,	Peter Goelet,
Charles Nicholl,	Benjamin Booth,	Abraham Brasher,
Alex. McDougall,	Joseph Hallett,	Abraham P. Lott,
Leonard Lispenard,	Charles Shaw,	Gerard W. Beckman,
James Duane,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,	Abraham Duryee,
Edward Laight,	Nicholas Hoffman,	Joseph Bull,
William Walton,	Abraham Walton,	Francis Lewis,
John Moore,	Gerard Duyckinck,	Theophilact Bache.
John De Lancey,	Peter Van Schaack,

The Committee appointed to write Circular Letters to the Supervisors in this different towns in the province, produced a draft of a Letter for that purpose, which was approved of.

Ordered, That Mr. Francis Lewis procure three hundred printed copies thereof, to be transmitted with all convenient speed, enclosed to the Treasurer of each county, with a line signed by toe Chairman, requesting their care in forwarding them, and that intimation be given in the newspapers that such Circular Letters have been sent.

A Letter from Mr. Charles Thomson of Philadelphia, signed by order of, and in behalf of Deputies convened from the different congregations in Philadelphia, dated May 29th, 1774. The Committee conceiving that the subject of this Letter not being in their province:

Ordered, That copies thereof be made out well, and sent to the Clergy of the different denominations in this city, and that a Letter be written by the Chairman, informing Mr. Thomson thereof.

Which was accordingly done; a copy of which is as follows:

New-York, June 1, 1774.

SIR: Your favour of the 29th ultimo, by express, was laid before our Committee of Correspondence last evening.

I am directed to acquaint you, that, conceiving the subject of it to be out of their province, they could only order copies to be delivered to the Clergymen of the different congregations in this city, that they may conduct themselves therein, as to them shall seem fit. By order of the Committee. Sir, your most humble servant,

Isaac Low, Chairman.

Mr. Charles Thomson.

Pursuant to a Resolve of the last meeting, the following is a copy of a Letter transmitted to the respective Treasurers of each county in this Province, enclosing Circular Letters to be by them forwarded to the Supervisors in their respective Districts.

New-York, June 3, 1774.

SIR: It having been thought expedient by the Committee of Correspondence in this city to send circular letters to the Supervisors of the several counties in this Province, I am directed to enclose a sufficient number of them to chinson as a toast. You nor your friends must not imagine there was any honesty in those marks of joy these Bostonians shewed the General on this occasion; - no sir, it was hypocrisy all; for at the same time they were sending express after express to the Southern Colonies, assuring them that at several loyal town meetings, as they call them, they had come to the resolution of shutting up their port; that they would fast and pray, and stand firm to the cause of American liberty, raving cut invocations to their dear sisters to join them in this firm work. But allowing the loyal town of Boston all the merit they assume to themselves, for the very curious and remarkable and no less sensible resolution of shutting up their port, after they and all the other Colonies know very well that Parliament had first done that business for them, yet it won't all do. It is true the Presbyterian junto, or self-constituted Committee of the Sons of Liberty for the city of New-York, (as they style themselves) which had stood ever since the time of the (Stamp Act, had taken upon them to write letters to Boston to their brethren there, assuring them, "that the city of New-York would "heartily join them against the cruel and arbitrary proceedings of the "British Parliament,"&c., which as soon as the gentlemen of property in this city knew, they were very justly alarmed, and a meeting of the inhabitants was desired at the Coffee House, when, in spite of all that could be done by the old Committee, which consisted of eight or ten flaming patriots without property, or any thing else but impudence, a new Committee was chosen, consisting of fifty members, most of them men of sense, coolness, and property; and I understand that nearly the same thing was done at Philadelphia. Now, sir, these two new self-authorized Committees have wrote to the Bostonians, "that they are of "opinion that they certainly ought to pay for the tea they had destroyed, "because it would be no more than justice so to do; that to be sure the "British Parliament had behaved very cruelly to them in making such "an Act, and "they heartily condole with them on account of the "dreadful hard circumstances they were thereby reduced to, but as to yon, requesting the favour of you to direct and forward from to your Supervisors in their several districts.

By order of the Committee, Isaac Low, Chairman.

Directed to the Treasurer of the county of Albany, with forty copies; to the Treasurer of the county of Tryon, with thirty; to the Treasurer of the county of Charlotte, with twelve; to the Treasurer of the county of Cumberland, with twelve; to the Treasurer of the county of Westchester, with thirty; to the Treasurer of the county of Gloucester, with twelve; to the Treasurer of the county of Ulster, with twenty; to the Treasurer of the county of Orange, with twenty; to the Treasurer of the county of Dutchess, with forty; to the Treasurer of the county of Richmond, with six; to the Treasurer of the county of Kings, with six; to the Treasurer of the county of Queens, with thirty; and to the Treasurer of the county of Suffolk, thirty.--Total two hundred and eighty-eight.

New-York, June 6, 1774.

The Committee met, by adjournment, at the Exchange, at 6 o'clock, in the evening: Present,

"shutting up the two ports of New-York and Philadelphia, they could "by no means think of such a measure, because it did not seem to be at "all the general opinion of the inhabitants of the two cities to do so; "that they of themselves were but a small number when compared to "the inhabitants of these cities, and these few could not pretend to dic-"tate to them, much less to the whole Province, which must be reduced "to distress and desperation by such a measure." This, I am told, was the purport of their letter, for I was not present, because I never have chosen to countenance self-appointed meetings of this sort, which appears to me contrary to law. and flying in the face of Government. I would have sent you all the papers printed on the occasion of those meetings, together with the impudent and inflammatory pieces published on account of the Boston Port Bill, but as those latter pieces are m general copied or inserted in the newspapers which, I fancy, you will see at the coffee houses, it is needless; and were I to send the former, it would not be worth the heavy charge of postage. Upon the whole I think there is little doubt but that all will be pretty quiet in all the Colonies in a short time; the most bitter pill will be the acknowledg-meet of the right of taxation in the Parliamcnt. There is a talk of desiring the different Governours to call their wise Assemblies to settle this matter, and that it would be proper to have a Congress Of the most sensible men amongst all the Colonies to meet somewhere to try to ward off the blow aimed at that great goddess of the Dutch East India Company in America called AMERICAN LIBERTY. You will have discovered that I am no friend to Presbyterians, and that I fix all the blame of those extraordinary American proceedings upon them. You would perhaps, think it proper to ask, whether no Church of England people were among them? Yes, there were, to their eternal shame be it spoken! but in general they were interested in the motion, either as smugglers of tea, or as being overburdened with dry goods they know not how to pay for, and would therefore have been glad to have a non-importation agreement, or a resolution to pay no debts to England. But, Sir, these are few in number. Believe me the Presbyterians have been the chief and principal instruments in all these flaming measures, and they always do and ever will act against Government, from that restless and turbulent anti-monarchical spirit which has always distinguished them every where, whenever they had, or by any means could assume power, however illegally. In short, I am myself well convinced, that Government at home, if they mean to look for genuine loyalty, and cordial affection to the State, will no where find it except in the hearts of the professors of the Church of England: And I am as well convinced, that if Government would wish to preserve and encourage loyalty in the Colonies, they must countenance the Church of England much more than they have done hitherto. It is an indubitable fact that previous to and during all these acts of violence committed in the Colonies, especially to the eastward, the Presbyterian pulpits groaned with the most wicked, malicious and inflammatory harangues, pronounced by the favourite orators amongst that sect, spiriting their godly hearers to the most violent opposition to Government; persuading them that the intention of Government was to rule them with a Ted of iron, and to make them all slaves; and assuring them that if they would rise as one man to oppose those arbitrary schemes, God would assist them to sweep away every ministerial tool, (the unstable name these wretches are pleased to bestow on the professors of the Church) from the face of the earth; that now was the time to strike, whilst Government at home was afraid of them; together with a long string of such seditious stuff, well calculated to impose on the poor devils their hearers, and make them run into every degree of extravagance and folly, which if I foresee aright, they will have leisure enough to be sorry for: But in general, the Church of England people during all this time, without any public oratory to spur them, did, from principle, from their own truly loyal principles, in which care is taken to educate them, every thing they could by writing and argument, and their influence, to stop the rapid progress of sedition, which would hard gone much farther lengths if it had not been for them.

I am not a little amazed at reading over the speeches in the House in the debates on the Boston Bill, to find those gentlemen saying such mighty pretty things of the Americans in general, and of Boston in particular; if those things have not been said merely out of opposition to the Ministry, believe me, those gentlemen in the House are egregiously ignorant of the state of the Colonies, and have an opinion of them, they are far from meriting; how:ever, I hope every thing will soon be settled, and that the Americans will be taught to pursue their true interest, viz: the improvement of their commerce; and the cultivation of their lands; if they attend to those particulars, I fancy they will find it full as much to their advantage as the regulation of the State. In short, Administration at home has really nothing further to

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Edward Laight,	Henry Remsen,
William Bayard,	William Walton,	Hamilton Young,
Theophilact Bache,	Richard Yates,	Peter T. Curtenius,
Peter V. B. Livingston,	Miles Sherbrook,	Peter Goelet,
Isaac Sears,	John Thurman,	Abraham Brashcr,
Charles McEvers,	Benjamin Booth,	Abraham P. Lott,
Charles Nicholl,	Joseph Hallett,	Gerard W. Beekman,
Alexander McDougall,	Charles Shaw,	John Broome,
Thomas Randall,	Alexander Wallace,	Joseph Boll,
John Moore,	Abraham Walton,	Richard Sharpe,
Leonard Lispenard,	Gerardus Duyckinck,	Thomas Marston .
James Duane,

Ordered, That a Committee be appointed to write a Letter to the Committee of Correspondence in Boston, acquainting them that we adhere to the measure of a Congress, and that we shall be ready to meet them at any ttnne and place they shall think fit to appoint, either Deputies from the General Assembly, or such other Deputies as shall be properly chosen and authorized to speak the sentiments of their different Colonies.

That the Committee at Boston give a sufficient time for the Deputies of the Colonies to the southward, as far as Carolina, to assemble, and acquaint them with the measure of Congress. Those letters to the southward of us, we shall with pleasure forward.

do but to be determined, and steady, to put an entire stop to smuggling, add to make an example of some few of the ringleaders of the faction, in every principal city on the Continent, and if this is done, I fancy America will afterwards give very little trouble.

New-York, May 31, 1774.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN SCOTLAND.

SIR: I seldom trouble you with politics, but at this time you may like perhaps to know what reception the Boston Port Bill has met with. To give you any tolerable idea of our present system of politics in America in general, would exceed the bounds of a letter. I shall only tell you that the power which it was found necessary to throw into the hands of the mob, during the general opposition to the Stamp Act, was not extinguished with the repeal of that Act. The attempt of the India Company to import their tea was no sooner in agitation, than the leaders of the mob, supported by the Dutch tea smugglers, made their appearance; and finding the men of property careless of shewing themselves, they took upon them to act for the whole community. It was the same body who formed the association for opposing the landing of the tea, and for returning it. which they afterwards deliberately effected. When the account of the Boston Port Bill reached us, the same body assumed the lead, and were hurrying themselves into the most violent measures. The men of property, however, finding affairs began to wear too alarming an appearance for them to stand any longer neuter, determined to attempt wresting the power once more out of their hands. A committee of fifty of the mercantile body was accordingly opposed to these leaders, and the election was carried in their favours, though with some difficulty. In this state has New-York been since file Stamp Act, and that of Philadelphia, Charleston, and Boston, has been pretty much the same. As the management, however, has now fallen into the hands of men averse to precipitate measures, I think the interdict of the Parliament to Boston, and the new meddling of this Government will meet with no opposition. But what alarms us is their suspicion of the third bill. which we have heard is before the House. Should the import of this bill prove to be what is surmised of it., viz: the sending home those suspected or charged with any act against Government, to stand trial in Westminster Hall, you must not be surprised to find all America - in flames. The friends of Government and the advocates for the proper subordination of America to England, have a hard struggle to keep things in the situation they are now in; but should a bill have passed to this effect, we shall no longer find argument, or, what is more, dare to offer them though we should.

NEW-YORK, June, 1774

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN ENGLAND.

You'll see by the papers I sent you by Captains Lawrence and Miller, that we have published the intelligence we received from all our friends in England, by Captain Coupar, and the last vessels. They have had as great an effect as could be wished; and from one end to the other of the British Colonies we shall see but one sentiment, that is, to view the treatment and pretensions of Great Britain with the highest resentment and disdain. We shall all be united, and act as one man; and if you should see any friends to America, pray tell them to be in no pain for us; we shall act as we ought, and to a man, not hesitate to die, rather than submit to be the slaves Briton would make us. We fear not to tell the highest of them that we are as free as they are, and so will live and die. If their force should plunder us of our rights and property, we will tell them with our latest breath, that they are tyrants and robbers, and we shall leave them a land as desolate as our forefathers found it. We shall leave the stings of their own guilty consciences to avenge our wrongs, and present them with a lively view of the horrors they have caused. We are at the same time assured, Great Britain will not long survive the destruction of her Colonies. Alas! that a few traitors should occasion such complicated and extensive calamity! We are well assured it is but a few, comparatively, a contemptible few that are the authors of all this mischief and that the whole body of the nation, as well in England and Ireland, as here, have the same sentiments that we have, and like us are injured and oppressed. We love the nation, its Constitution, and constitutional Government, and have ever been ready to risk our lives in their defence. We lament their fall as well as our own, in which we see it involved, unless Providence interpose. Perhaps he may turn all the mischief upon the heads of the contrivers of it; perhaps, by the united exertions of all the Colonies, which there is no doubt of, we may be delivered and England preserved, though its strength seems now only applied to crush us the best friends it had in the world. The boat waits, adieu.

NEW-YORK, June 9, 1774,

Subcommittee for writing the Letter are Peter V. B. Livingston, John Moore, John Broome, John Thurman, Isaac Low.

Ordered, That the Committee of Boston be requested to give this Committee the names of the persons who constitute the Committee of Correspondence at Boston; that they have made a mistake in answering this Committee's Letter, which mentioned not a word of a suspension of trade, which they say we have so wisely defined, as we leave that measure entirely to the Congress, and we shall readily agree to any measure they shall adopt - to request that their letters for the future be sealed and directed to the Chairman.

The Committee adjourned, to meet at the Exchange, on Monday, the 20th of this instant, June, at 6 o'clock, in the evening.

Copy of the Letter sent to the Committee of Correspondence in Boston:

New-York, June 7, 1774

GENTLEMEN: We have received your favour of the 30th May, and you may rest assured, we shall eagerly embrace all proper opportunities of contributing our mite towards bringing to a favourable issue the unhappy disputes which at present subsist between the parent State and her Colonies.

You say, that a speedy, united, and vigorous effort is "certainly all that can be depended upon, to yield us any effectual relief, and that this effort is on all hands acknowledged to be the suspension of trade, so wisely "defined by you." To the first, we entirely concur with you in sentiments; but in the last, we apprehend you have made a mistake - for on revising our letter to you, so far from finding a word mentioned of a "suspension of trade," the idea is not even conceived. That, and every other resolution, we have thought it most prudent to leave for the discussion of the proposed general Congress.

Adhering therefore to that measure, as most conducive to promote the grand system of politics we all have in view, we have the pleasure to acquaint you, that we shall be ready on our part, to meet at any time and place that you shall think fit to appoint; either of Deputies from the General Assemblies, or such other Deputies as shall be chosen, not only to speak the sentiments, but also to pledge themselves for the conduct of the people of the respective Colonies they represent.

We can undertake to assure you, in behalf of the people in this Colony, that they will readily agree to any measure that shall be adopted by the general Congress. It will be necessary that you give a sufficient time for the Deputies of the Colonies, as far southward as the Carolinas, to assemble, and acquaint them as soon as possible with the proposed measure of a Congress. Your letters to the southward of us we will forward with great pleasure.

You may have seen all the names of our Committee in the public prints; and as we never heard the names of those which constitute your Committee, we request the favour of you to give us that satisfaction in your next. We beg

* Saturday last, the 4th instant, being the anniversary of his Majesty's birth day, when he entered the thirty-seventh year of his age, at 12 o'clock his Excellency General Haldimand, attended by a number of gentlemen. walked to the Commons, where they were received by a Royal salute from the train of artillery, and the Royal Welsh Fusileers then under arms, after which his Excellency returned to his residence, where his Majesty's and other loyal healths were drank, under the discharge of a royal salute from Fort George, his Majesty's ship Swan, James Ayscough, Esquire, commander, and sundry other vessels in the harbour.

In the evening some very curious fire-works were exhibited, and a small number of houses were illuminated; but the generality of the inhabitants (though perfectly well affected to his Majesty's person and family, and preferring the English Constitution to every other form of Government) were too deeply impressed with the melancholy situation of all the British Colonies, to assume the least appearance of public rejoicing, while it remains in suspense, whether we shall remain free-men by maintaining our rights, or submit to be slaves.

Every town in every Colony of America from which we have yet heard, consider the case of Boston as their own, and agree in sentiment, to unite their strength and exert every faculty in the most determined persevering endeavours to preserve their rights and liberties against the tyrannical encroachments of Great Britain. To this end a Congress is soon expected, and a total suspension of all commercial intercourse between the Colonies and Great Britain, and Ireland, at least, it is generally believed will very soon take place.

that your letters for the future may be sealed and directed to our Chairman.

We are, gentlemen, your friends and most humble servants, by order of the Committee,

I. Low, Chairman.

New-York, June 10th, 1774.

At a special meeting held at the Exchange, at 7 o'clock, this evening: Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Richard Yates,	Hamilton Young,
John Alsop,	Miles Sherbrook,	Peter T. Curtenius,
Theophilact Bache,	John Broome,	Peter Goelet,
P. V. B. Livingston,	John Jay,	Abraham Brasher,
Isaac Sears,	Benjamin Booth,	Abraham P. Lott,
Charles McEvers,	Joseph Halett,	G. W. Beckman,
Charles Nicholl,	Charles Shaw,	Joseph Bull,
Alex. McDougall,	James Jauncey,	Richard Sharpe,
Thomas Randall,	Nicholas Hoffman,	Thomas Marston,
John Moore,	Abraham Walton,	Francis Lewis,
Leonard Lispenard,	Gerardns Duyckinck,	John De Lancey,
Edward Laight,	Peter Van Schaack,	John Thurman.
William Walton,	Henry Remsen,

A Letter from the Committee of Correspondence for Connecticut was received and read, and is as follows:

Hartford, June 4, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: Mr. Revere, on his return, acquainted us with the purport of yours by him, to the Committee at Boston, which being agreeable to our sentiments, and similar to what we had previously wrote them on the subject, we take the liberty to enclose you a copy of ours to them of this date, and ask your consideration of the proposal, and your sentiments of the measure, as soon as conveniently they may be had. We have wrote to the same purport to the Committees of the Colonies of Rhode Island and New-Hampshire. And are, with great truth and esteem, gentlemen, yours, &c.

By order and in behalf of the Committee of Correspondence for Connecticut,

SILAS DEANE.

To the Committee of Correspondence for New-York.

P.S. The Resolves of our lower House of Assembly are enclosed; in addition to which they gave us in command to recommend a Congress, and to join therein.

Copy of a Letter from the Committee of Correspondence for Connecticut to the Committee of Correspondence at Boston, enclosed in the preceding Letter to the New-York Committee:

Hartford, June 3, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: The lower House of Assembly, at their session at this place, which closes this day, came into sundry resolutions relative to their rights and privileges, a copy of which you have enclosed; and on the important subject take liberty to add, as our opinion, that a Congress is absolutely necessary previous to almost every other measure, since, as the injury is general, the mode taken for redress ought to be commensurate, which is not probable to be obtained short a general conference and union. The resolves of merchants of any individual town or Province, however generously designed, must be partial when considered in respect to the whole Colonies in one general view; while, on the other hand, every measure recommended, every resolve come into by the whole united Colonies, must carry weight and influence with it on the mind of the people, and tend effectually to silence those base insinuations which our enemies are ever ready to throw out, of interested, motives, sinister views, unfair practices, and the like, for the vile purposes of sowing the seeds of jealousy between the Colonies, to divide and render abortive all our designs in favour of the liberties of America. We conceive little or nothing need be added on the subject, the propriety and utility of which seems to be universally acknowledged. The time and place must be fixed. For the first, the earlier, consistent with having the principal Provinces notified and present, the better; say the last week of July, or first in August, by which time all, as far as Virginia, may be informed of, and invited to attend it; for the place, New-York, is near the centre, but the season of the year make us prefer some agreeable country town to a city, in which there will necessarily be more avocations, besides its being disagreeable in these months. Norwalk or Fairfield are towns in which gentlemen may be well accommodated in this Colony. But we submit this, as well as the time, to the opinion of the other Colonies, to whom we shall write, and expect their answer will be in season. We conceive, as Committees of Correspondence and Inquiry are appointed in every considerable Colony by their Assemblies, they are the proper persons to attend, or to appoint others for that business. But of this you are to judge. And we hint it, as the Assemblies of some of the Colonies will probably not have an opportunity of meeting again till next winter, and consequently will not be able to appoint in any season. We have only to add, that we are sensibly affected with your distressed situation.

We are, gentlemen, with great respect, your obedient servants. By order, and in behalf of the Committee of Correspondence for Connecticut,

SILAS DEANE.

To the Committee of Correspondence for Boston.

P.S. Yours of the 31st ult., in answer to ours of the 26th, is before us. The situation of the town of Boston, particularly of the poor, and such as must now be deprived of employ, and reduced to straits, was considered by both Houses of Assembly, and a resolution come into to contribute to their relief, which passed both Houses. But the time and mode of carrying it into execution is deferred until they hear more directly from you, which doubtless they will before their next meeting.

Ordered, That a Committee be appointed to answer the Letter received from the Committee at Hartford, and enclose them a copy of a Letter wrote the 23d ultimo, by this Committee, to Boston; and also to answer a Letter received from Mr. Bernard Lentot, of Branford, and that they write a letter to the Committee of Correspondence of South Carolina, enclosing a copy of this Committee's first letter to Boston, and to acquaint them that this Committee have, in a subsequent letter to the Committee at Boston, desired them to appoint a time and place for a Congress, an answer to which they expect daily.

The Committee for that purpose were Peter Van Schaack, Henry Rcmsen, Alexander McDougall, John De Lancey, Isaac Low.

Copy of a Letter sent to the Committee of Correspondence of Connecticut :

New-York, June 11, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: Your agreeable favour of the 4th inst., covering a copy of yours of the 3d to the Committee of Correspondence for the town of Boston, and the resolutions of your lower House of Assembly on the second Thursday of May, came duly to hand, which were last night laid before us. We are greatly obliged to you for your communications on the interesting concern of our country. The sentiments contained in the former of the necessity of a Congress, are supported with such reasons as must command the assent of every well-wisher to the rights and privileges of America, and we are happy to find that this measure is so generally adopted, and so much desired by all the Colonies who have given their opinion on the present alarming crisis. Our sense and approbation of the utility of such a Convention, is fully expressed in a letter of the 23d ultimo, to the Committee of Boston, a copy of which is enclosed. We have wrote them on the 7th inst., to appoint the time and place for holding the Congress, where we shall be ready to meet either Deputies of the General Assemblies, or such other Deputies as shall be chosen, not only to speak the sentiments, but also to pledge themselves for the conduct of the people of the respective Colonies they represent. The substance of this will be communicated to the Committee of Charlestown, South Carolina, by a vessel that sails to-morrow. We are, gentlemen, your most obedient and very humble servants.

Signed by order Of the Committee of Correspondence for the city of New-York.

ISAAC Low, Chairman.

To Silas Deane, Esq., and others, of the Committee of Correspondence for Connecticut.

FOURTH SERIES.

Copy of a Letter to Mr. Bernard Lentot, of Branford.
New-York, June 11th, 1774.

SIR: Your favour of the 29th of last month has been laid before our Committee of Correspondence. I am directed to acquaint you that they esteem themselves obliged by the communication of your sentiments at this very important and critical conjuncture. The hints you furnish may be very proper for the consideration and discussion of a general Congress of Deputies from the different Colonies, a measure that seems on all hands agreed will be most likely to produce the desired effect; but what can or will be done must be Submitted to the wisdom of their united councils. We can only join you in our ardent wishes that they may prevail in their endeavours to re-establish that peace and harmony on which so essentially depend the prosperity and happiness of both countries.

We remain, with much respect, sir, your friends and most humble servants. By order of the Committee,
ISAAC LOW, Chairman.

Copy of a Letter from the Committee of Correspondence, appointed by the Assembly of New-York, * to the Committee of Correspondence for Connecticut:

New-York, June 24, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: We have your letter of the 4th before us, enclosing the resolves of your Assembly, and a letter to the Committee of Correspondence at Boston; and we agree with you, that at this alarming juncture, a general Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies would be a very expedient and salutary measure; such a Congress, consisting of men of coolness, prudence, and understanding, would, we conceive, be the best means under Providence, of restoring that peace and harmony between Great Britan and her Colonies, which is the surest foundation of happiness to both, and which every good man, every well wisher to his country, ought to labour strenuously to establish. We are sorry therefore, that we are not sufficiently empowered to take any steps in relation to so salutary a measure; for we are a Committee of Correspondence only, and cannot consistently with good order and propriety interfere in a matter of such importance, without the appointment and concurrence of our whole House of Representatives. After what has been said, it would be needless to mention any thing about the places of meeting, only this, that if the other Colonies, who may have authority for so doing, should meet in Congress, in, or near this city, we shall most gladly and willingly assist with our advice, &c., if necessary, which, circumstanced as we are at present, is all we are enabled to do.

We should be glad however to know before we come to any final determination on this matter, what steps will be taken by the other Colonies, who are in the same situation with us, by not having an opportunity of knowing the sentiments of their Houses of Representatives; when the measures proposed to be adopted by them, shall be communicated to us, we shall be better able to judge what plan will be most likely to procure a redress of our present grievances, and promote the union and prosperity of the mother country and the Colonies; and we expect daily to receive accounts of these matters, of which we shall send you the most early intelligence. We are with great respect, gentlemen, your most obedient servants,

JOHN CRUGER,	S. BOERUM,
FREDERICK PHILLIPS,	DANIEL KISSAM,
BENJAMIN SEAMAN,	ZEB. WILLIAMS, late
JAMES JAUNCEY,	Zeb: Seaman ,
JAMES DE LANCEY,	JOHN RAPALJE.
JACOB WALTON,

To the Committee of Correspondence of the Colony of Connecticut.

Resolved*, nem. con., Theft a Standing Committee of Correspondence and Inquiry be appointed, to consist of the following persons, to wit: John Cruger, Esq., Speaker, James De Lancey, James Jauncey, Jacob Walton, Benjamin Seaman, Isaac Wilkins, Frederick Phillips, Daniel Kissam, Zebulon Seaman, John Rapalje, Simon Boerum, John De Noyelles, and George Clinton, Esquires, or any seven of them, whose business it shall be to obtain the most early and authentic intelligence of all such acts and resolutions of the British Parliament, or proceedings of administration, as do or may relate to or affect the liberties and privileges of his Majesty's subjects in the British Colonies in America, and to keep up and maintain a correspondence and communication with our sister Colonies respecting these important considerations, and the result of their proceedings to lay before the House. - January 20, 1774.

New-York, June 20, 1774.

New-York, July 4, 1774,

The Committee met, by adjournment, at 6 o'clock, this evening, at the Exchange: Present,

The Committee met, by adjournment, at the Exchange, at 6 o'clock, this evening

Isaac Low, Chairman , John Alsop, William Bayard, Theophilact Bache, Peter V. B. Livingston, Isaac Sears, Charles McEvers, Charles Nicholl, Alexander McDougall, Thomas Randall, John Moore,	Edward Laight, William Walton, Richard Yates, John De Lancey, Miles Sherbrook, Thomas Thurman, Benjamin Booth, Joseph Hallett, Charles Shaw, Alexander Wallace,	Gabriel H. Ludlow, Gerardus Duyckinck, Henry Remsen, Hamilton Young, Peter T. Curtenius, Peter Goelet, Abraham Brasher, Joseph Bull, William McAdam, Francis Lewis.
Isaac Low, Chairman , John Alsop, William Bayard, Theophilact Bache, Peter V. B. Livingston, Isaac Sears, Charles McEvers, Charles Nicholl, Alexander McDougall, Thomas Randall, John Moore, Leonard Lispernard, Jacobus Van Zandt,	Edward Laight, William Walton, Richard Yates, John De Lancey, Miles Sherbrook, John Thurman, John Broome, Benjamin Booth, Joseph Hallett, Charles Shaw, Alexander Wallace, Gabriel H. Ludlow, Gerardus Duyckinck,	Hamilton Young, Henry Remsen, Peter T. Curtenius, Peter Goelet, Abraham Brashor, Abraham P. Lott, Gerard W. Beekman, Joseph Bull, William McAdam, Richard Sharpe, Thomas Marston, Francis Lewis.

Mr. Allicocke requested for particular reasons to resign as Secretary to this Committee. John Blagge was unanimously appointed in his stead.

The Committee then adjourned until Monday, the 27th June, instant, then to meet at the Exchange, at 6 o'clock, in the evening.

A Letter, dated Annapolis, 26th June, 1774, with printed Resolves, was received and read; a Letter from Shelter Island, dated June 7th, 1774, with Resolves, was received and read; one from County Hall, in Suffolk county, dated 25th June, 1774; and one from the Committee of Mechanics, dated New-York, 4th July; also one from Dutchess county, dated June 29th, 1774, was received and read.

New-York, June 27, 1774.

Mr. Booth moved, and was seconded by Mr. De Lancey, that the previous question be put, Whether this Committee shall determine upon Mr. McDougall's motion, referring the nomination of Delegates to the Committee of Mechanics for their concurrence, or whether it should be referred only to the town at large.

The Committee met, by adjournment, at 6 o'clock, this evening, at the Exchange: Present,

Mr. Booth moved, and was seconded by Mr. De Lancey, that the previous question be put, Whether this Committee shall determine upon Mr. McDougall's motion, referring the nomination of Delegates to the Committee of Mechanics for their concurrence, or whether it should be referred only to the town at large.

Isaac Low, Chairman , William Bayard, Theophilact Bache, Peter V. B. Livingston, Isaac Sears, Charles McEvers, Charles Nieholl, Alexander McDougall, Thomas Randall, John Moore, Leonard Lispernard, Jacobus Van Zandt,	Edward Laight, William Walton, Richard Yates, John De Lancey, Miles Sherbrook, John Thurman, John Broome, Benjamin Booth, Joseph Hallett, Charles Shaw, Alexander Wallace, Gabriel H. Ludlow,	Nicholas Hoffman, Gerardus Duyckinck, Henry Remsen, Peter T. Curtenius, Peter Goolet, Abraham Brasher, Abraham P. Lott, Gerard W. Beekman, Joseph Bull, Thomas Marston, John Alsop.
William Bayard, John Alsop, Thomas Marston, Hamilton Young, Richard Sharpe, Joseph Bull, Gabriel H. Ludlow, Miles Shorbrook, Gerard W. Beekman, Charles Shaw, Alexander Wallace, Peter Goclet,	Affirmatives. Gerardus Duyckinck, Edward Laight, Benjamin Booth, William Walton, William McAdam, Theophilact Bache, John De Lancey, Richard Yates, Charles Nicholl, Henry Remsen, John Thurman, Charles McEvers.	Dissentients. Peter T. Curtenius, Francis Lewis, Isaac Sears, Peter V. B. Livingston, Leonard Lispernard, Jaebus Van Zandt, Abraham Brasher, John Moore, Abraham P. Lott, Thomas Randall, Joseph Hallett, John Broome, Alexander McDougall .

A Letter from Easthampton, of 17th June, 1774, with Resolves, received and read; a Letter from Philadelphia, of 21st June, 1774, with Resolves, received and read; a Letter from Boston, of 16th June, 1774, received and read.

On motion of Mr. McDougall, it was debated, which was the most eligible mode of appointing Deputies to attend the ensuing general Congress: when it was agreed to postpone the determination of the matter, until Wednesday evening, at 6 o'clock, to which time the Committee adjourned.

Mr. Bache moved, and was seconded by Mr. De Lancey:

"That this Committee proceed to nominate five persons to meet in a general Congress, at the time and place which shall be agreed on by the other Colonies, and that the freeholders and freemen of the city and county of New-York be summoned to appear at a convenient place to approve or disapprove of such persons for this salutary purpose; also, that this Committee write Circular Letters to the Supervisors of the several counties, informing them what we have done, and to request of them to send such Delegates as they may choose to represent them in Congress."

New-York, June 29, 1774.

Captain Sears moved, and was seconded by Mr. P. V. B. Livingston:

The Committee met, by adjournment, at 6 O'clock, this evening, at the Exchange: Present,

"That Messrs. Issac Low, James Duane, Philip Livingston, John Morin Scott, and Alexander McDougall, be nominated agreeable to the question now carried."

Isaac Low, Chairman , John Alsop, Theophilact Bache, Peter V. B. Livingston, Isaac Sears, Charles McEvers, Charles Nicholl, Alexander McDougall, Thomas Randall, John Moore, Leonard Lispernard, Jacobus Van Zandt,	Edward Laight, William Walton, Richard Yates, John De Lancey, Miles Sherbrook, John Thurman, John Broome, Benjamin Booth, Joseph Hallett, Charles Shaw, Alexander Wallace, Gabriel H. Ludlow,	Gerardus Duyckinck, Henry Remsen, Hamilton Young, Peter T. Curtenius, Peter Goelet, Abraham Brasher, Abraham P. Lott, William McAdam, Richard Sharpe, William Bayard, Nicholas Hoffman.
---	--	---

A Letter from Tryon county, dated the 22d June, 1774, was received and read; a Letter from Southampton, dated the 22d June, 1774, was received and read, together with Resolves.

The previous question being on Captain Sears's motion, it was carried as follows:

Mr. McDougall moved, and was seconded by Mr. John Broome, in the following motion, viz:

"That this Committee proceed immediately to nominate five Deputies for the city and county of New-York, to represent them in a Convention of this Colony, or in the general Congress, to be held at Philadelphia, on the first of September next, if the other counties of this Colony approve of them as Deputies for the Colony; and that their names be sent to the Committee of Mechanics for their concurrence; to be proposed on Tuesday next to the freeholders and freemen of this city and county for their approbation."

Debates arising on the foregoing motion,

Ordered, That the same be postponed until. Monday evening, the 4th of July next, then to be finally determined. To which time the Committee adjourned.

Mr. De Lancey moved, and was seconded by Mr. Booth:

"That this Committee immediately proceed to nominate five persons to be held up to this city and county as proper persons to serve them as Delegates in a general Congress."

John Moore, William Bayard, Thomas Marston, John Alsop, Hamilton Young, Miles Sherbrook, Gabriel H. Ludlow, Joseph Bull, Gerard W. Beekman, Henry Remsen, Charles Shaw, Alexander Wallace, John De Lancey,	Affirmatives. Gerardus Doyekinck, Edward Laight, William Walton, Theophilact Bache, William McAdam, Charles Nicholl, Richard Yates, John Thurman, Benjamin Booth, Francis Lewis, Charles McEvers, Peter Goelet.	Dissentients. Isaac Sears, Peter T. Curtenius, Peter V. B. Livingston, Leonard Lispernard, Jacobus Van Zandt, Abraham Brasher, Thomas Randall, Richard Sharpe, John Broome, Abraham P. Lott, Alexander McDougall, Joseph Hallett.
--	---	---

When the following gentlemen had the greatest number of voices for their nomination, viz: Philip Livingston, John Alsop, Isaac Low, James Duane, and John Jay.

Ordered, That an Advertisement, signed by the Chairman, be published, requesting the inhabitants of this city and county to meet at the City Hall, on Thursday, the 7th instant, at 12 o'clock, to concur in the nomination of the foregoing five persons, or to choose such others in their stead as in their wisdom shall seem meet.*

The Committee then adjourned, until 6 o'clock, on Thursday evening, the 7th instant, then to meet at the Exchange.

New-York, 7th July, 1774.

The Committee met, by adjournment, at 6 o'clock, this evening, at the Exchange: Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Leonard Lispenard,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,
John Alsop,	Edward Laight,	Nicholas Hoffman,
William Bayard,	William Walton,	Henry Remsen,
Theophilact Bache,	Miles Sherbrook,	Hamilton Young,
P. V. B. Livingston,	John Thurman,	Peter T. Curtenius,
Isaac Sears,	Benjamin Booth,	Peter Goelet,
Charles McEvers,	Joseph Hallett,	Abraham P. Lott,
Charles Nicholl,	Charles Shaw,	Gerard W. Beekman,
Alex. McDougall,	Alexander Wallace,	Joseph Bull,
Thomas Randall,	Francis Lewis,	Richard Sharpe.
John Moore,

A Letter, dated Albany, 29th June, 1774, from Jacob Lansing, was received and read.

Agreeable to the meeting advertised to be held at the City Hall this day, a number of citizens attended, and it

* While the question on appointing Delegates to the General Congress was pending, the following publications appeared:

To the INHABITANTS of the BRITISH Colonies in AMERICA. Never did AMERICA behold so alarming a time as the present. The parent State is big with resentment against us for our late proceedings; and seems determined, at all events either to make us obedient to the laws of the British Parliament, or to cast us off, or let us cast off ourselves, and leave us freely to follow our own inventions. We seem as determined as they are, to abide by the issue; otherwise, we should not certainly encourage the people of BOSTON to refuse the payment of a just demand. And yet, ALL are ready to declare, that we cannot hope to withstand the POWER of Britain, if once she was to let loose her military indignation against us. God forbid that we should ever feel it - the consequences might be ruinous to her; to us they must assuredly prove utterly destructive. The British Legislature claims a right of regulation which we professedly deny.

How shall the dispute between us be adjusted? How shall a FIRM FOUNDATION be laid for a future PERMANENT UNION? Surely not by opposing a military force, which, in the event, must infallibly overpower us; and then we shall have no claim of right - as being a conquered country. Surely not by making RESOLVES in town and county, and parish meetings: - for they can do nothing, if we may judge by experience, but *inflamm*e and irritate. Surely not by a GENERAL CONVENTION; for that is a measure which never should be adopted, unless we were resolved on the last extremes. Whatever may be the proceedings of such a body, it is too much to be apprehended that they will have no salutary influence on the British policy; because the Convention itself will be deemed unconstitutional, and having no existence in law, it may also be judged to be illegal. These, I hope, are the harshest terms it will be distinguished by; but much softer ones, I am too clear, it will not experience.

But we are aggrieved, and must have redress. Redress, I am confident, may be obtained; but, I fear, not by any of the means that we have hitherto fallen upon. We talk much of the CONSTITUTION: Constitutionally then let us act.

Let EVERY COLONY instruct its REPRESENTATIVES in GENERAL ASSEMBLY, to present an HUMBLE ADDRESS to THE KING, requesting the liberty of sending a certain number of their body to England at a fixed time, for the EXPRESS PURPOSE of settling with the National Council, a CONSTITUTION FOR AMERICA, which hitherto we have not enjoyed, but in idea; and let that settlement be FINAL.

This is a request which a most gracious SOVEREIGN would most gladly accede to; this is a measure which despotism itself could find no fault with; and in my humble opinion, it is the only measure which can ensure to us our liberties, save the effusion of human blood, and make our children's children adore the memory, and bless the wisdom of their ancestors, who not only preserved their country from destruction, but procured for them blessings - the blessings of right ascertained and acknowledged, with which former ages were almost wholly unacquainted.

Should it be objected that some of the Assemblies are dissolved, and not likely to be called again, so that their constituents could not have an opportunity of instructing their Representatives; the answer is obvious, that when such a disposition shall appear in the people, it cannot be doubted that all the Governours upon the Continent would readily embrace the favourable season, and give us all what ought to be our most ardent, and is our most patriotic wish to obtain.

NEW-YORK, July 5, 1774.

To the Author of a piece addressed to the Inhabitants of the BRITISH Colonies in AMERICA, dated NEW-YORK, July 5, 1774.

SIR: You Address as above, I have read with much attention; and happening to differ in opinion from you, in matters of importance only to the public, I hope you'll indulge me with the liberty of publishing my sentiments.

I agree with you, Sir, that America never did behold so alarming a time as the present; and that the parent State is big with resentment against us for our late proceedings. But who are to blame for our alarming situation, and for our late proceedings? The parent State was unanimously agreed that this Committee appoint a Committee of their body to attend with the Committee from the Mechanics, at Mr. Francis's, at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, in order to appoint two or more persons in each Ward in this city, to take with them a list of the five persons nominated by this Committee, and also a list of the five persons nominated by the Committee of Mechanics, as Delegates to the proposed Congress; and exhibit to the freeholders, freemen, and such of the inhabitants who pay taxes, both lists, leaving it to their election to sign either; for the five names nominated by this Committee, or for the five nominated by the Committee of Mechanics, as they shall think fit.

Ordered, That the following persons be a Committee to attend the Committee of Mechanics for the aforesaid purpose: Joseph Hallett, Charles Shaw, Isaac Sears, Peter Goelet, Francis Lewis, Peter T. Curtenius, Richard Sharpe, Edward Laight, Joseph Bull.

The following motion was made by Mr. Thurman, and seconded by Mr. McEvers:

"Mr. Chairman: An advertisement appeared yesterday in the following words, viz:

*"The enemies of the liberties of America being unwea-
-ried in misrepresenting the attachments of the inhabit-ants of this city to the common cause of this country to
-the neighbouring Colonies, a number of the citizens* or we? They for endeavouring to impose such laws upon us, or to deprive us of all our right to our own property; or we, for endeavouring to prevent the imposition? Surely Sir, the answer is obvious to all mankind. The parent State is to blame, and not we. But, you say, they seem determined to make us obedient to the laws of the British Parliament, or to cast us off. What then, Sir? Should the only happy country upon the face of the earth, should the great asylum for the distressed of all Europe, give up its right to its own property, because a present Ministry, and a present House of Commons seem determined that they should? I will venture to affirm, Sir, that if you consider this matter again, you will agree with me, that they ought not; and as to the casting us off, I am told that Britain receives too much advantage from the connection, to admit the idea. But we seem as determined as they to abide by the issue; otherwise, you say, we should not certainly encourage the people of Boston to refuse payment for the tea lately destroyed there. In this I have the honour of agreeing with you again; but you'll excuse my dissent when you say, Sir, that we encourage Boston to refuse the payment of a just demand. How is it possible, Sir, that the well known honour and honesty of the British Colonies could encourage a sister Colony to refuse the payment of a just demand. No, Sir, they do not; you quite mistake the encouragement the Colonies give upon that head; it is only to refuse the payment of an unjust demand; and a demand too that is as unjustly made. But you implicitly take it for granted, that the demand is just. What then, Sir, does that prove it to be so? Or is it a reason that the Colonies should do so too? I believe I may venture to inform you, that they consider particular circumstances, which that tea was under, which I think you would do well to consider too, before you attempt to publish again upon the subject. And pray, Sir, in the interim give free scope to your thoughts, and judge from your own reason, whether that same tea was not a felonious instrument wafted over the Atlantic, with the express and malicious design of murdering the rights and liberties of a whole Continent. The Colonies viewing the matter in this just point of light, can no more condemn its destruction, than you or I could the destruction of a weapon raised by the hand of an assassin to deprive us of life, limb, or private property. And let me assure you Sir, that while there is any private property left in the world, it will ever be defended by those who have it; though to the damage of those who would unjustly attempt to take it away. But you add, that the British Legislature claims a right of regulation, which we professedly deny. True, Sir, such a right of regulation, as would deprive us of all right to our own property, we both professedly and sincerely deny: and I believe will continue to do so, till the old principles of natural reason and justice are no more. But then you ask, "how can the dispute be adjusted?" I'll tell you, Sir, when our oppressors are convinced that it is more for their interest to treat us justly, than otherwise; and then, and not till then, will a firm foundation be laid for a permanent Union; and justice being the corner stone, then every subject of the Empire shall be acknowledged to have an equal right to his own property; and that no power on earth can take the whole or any part of it from him, but by his own consent, or that of his Representatives. I grant with you, Sir, that this foundation cannot be laid by opposing a military force; but should it be otherwise, should we be forced into a state of the most absolute slavery; I should take the liberty of denying your consequence, that, when conquered, we should have no claim of right, as being a conquered country; for even in that case we should have all the rights you are pleased to vouchsafe to us now, the sole right of petitioning. You seem to be very sure that our general resolves can do us no service; and that a General Convention will be ineffectual; for you say, "that is a measure that should never be adopted, unless we were resolved on the last extremes." True, Sir, no more it ought. But America is now brought to the last extremity, to the very brink of the arbitrary gulf opened wide to devour her. And these being in our apprehensions necessarily tending to the last extremes, consequently in your opinion, a General Convention ought now to be adopted to resolve upon them. But you say again, that Convention will be deemed unconstitutional. I hope not by you Sir, who have been so good as to allow it a right to meet upon the last extremity, to resolve upon the last extremes. But having no existence in law, you say also it may "think it highly necessary to convene the good people of this metropolis in the Fields on Wednesday next, which will be the 6th instant, at six o'clock, in the evening, where every friend to the true interest of this distressed country is earnestly requested to attend, when matters of the utmost importance to their reputations and security as freemen will be communicated. Tuesday, 5th July, 1774."

"The above advertisement is conceived in such mystic and ambiguous terms, that no person out of the secret could imagine from whence it could proceed. Much surprised, therefore, was I, to learn that a member of this Committee acted as Chairman to the promoters of the said advertisement.

"I conceive, Mr. Chairman, that no individual whatever, especially a member of this Committee, had a right to call a meeting by an anonymous advertisement, much less to exhibit a set of resolves calculated for particular purposes, no motion ever having been made for resolves in this Committee, and that no resolves whatsoever should have been entered into, until when well digested by this Committee, and held up to the public for their consideration.

"I therefore move that this Committee disavow all such proceedings, evidently calculated to throw an odium on this Committee, and to create groundless jealousies and suspicions of their conduct, as well as disunion among our fellow-citizens."

Mr. McDougall moved, and was seconded by Mr. Lispenard, That the previous question be put, on Mr. John Thurman's motion, disavowing the proceedings in the Fields on the 6th instant.

Carried in the negative.

Affirmatives.		Negatives.
Francis Lewis,	John Alsop,	Edward Laight,
Peter V. B. Livingston,	Charles McEvers,	William Walton,
Leonard Lispenard,	Gerard W. Beekman,	Charles Shaw,
Isaac Sears,	Richard Sharps,	Peter Goelet,
Thomas Randall,	Hamilton Young,	John Moore,
Peter T. Curtonius,	Benjamin Booth,	Nicholas Hoffman,
Alexander McDougall,	Alexander Wallace,	Miles Sherbrook,
Abraham P. Lott,	John Thurman,	William Bayard,
Joseph Hallett,	Charles Nicholl,	Gabriel H. Ludlow.
Joseph Bull,	Theophilact Bache.
Henry Remsen,

Mr. Thurman's motion being then put, it was carried in the affirmative.

Affirmatives.		Negatives.
John Alsop,	William Walton,	Francis Lewis,
Charles McEvers,	Charles Shaw,	Peter V. B. Livingston ,
Gsrard W. Beekman,	Peter Goelet,	Leonard Lispenard,
Richard Sharpe,	John Moore,	Isaac Sears,
Hamilton Young,	Nicholas Hoffman,	Thomas Randall,
Benjamin Booth,	Miles Sherbrook,	Peter T. Curtenius,
Alexander Wallace,	William Bayard,	Alexander McDougall,
John Thurman,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,	Abraham P. Lott,
Charles Nicholl,	Joseph Bull,	Joseph Hallett.
Theophilact Bache,	Henry Remsen.
Edward Laight,

Resolved, therefore, That such proceedings are evidently calculated to throw an odium upon this Committee, and to cause groundless jealousies and suspicions of their conduct, as well as disunion among our fellow-citizens.

be judged to be illegal; by no means, Sir, when you have allowed that the last extremes will make it legal. You are confident that redress may be obtained, but not by any means we have hitherto fallen upon. If the CONGRESS or CONVENTION which you have permitted to meet upon the last extremes, do fall upon means of redress, we shall be quite satisfied; though we have hitherto been unsuccessful. As to your method of redress, which you say is the only one that a most gracious sovereign would most gladly accede to, and which can insure to us our liberties, I do humbly affirm, that I think it a method so little calaulated to insure to us our liberties, that, with ninety-nine Americans out of every hundred, it would be thought a most effectual way to destroy them; unless, Sir, you would be pleased to give security that our Deputies sent to Parliament should not be polluted by the well known fountains of corruption, that at present have too much existence there. In one place you grant that we have a Constitution, or why do you call upon us to act constitutionally? And in another, you are pleased to inform us that hitherto we have had no Constitution, but in idea. Pray, Sir, be pleased to inform us of your design in these sentiments; lost we might be led to think you had been guilty of a small contradiction. For my own part, could I believe that hitherto we have had no Constitution, but in idea, I should be led to think that our several Governments were ideal also; that our courts of justice were ideal, and that the glorious CONGRESS itself will be but ideal; if so, surely it cannot be an object worthy of your future opposition. However that may be, we shall trust to the wisdom of its members, and to their uncorrupted patriotism commit our cause; the cause of God; the cause of nature; the cause of America,

Mr. Lewis moved, and was seconded by Mr. Curtenius: "That a Committee be appointed to draw and report, without delay, a set of Resolutions to be proposed to the city, expressing their sense of the Boston Port Act, and our concurrence with such of the neighbouring Colonies as have declared what may be proper to be done for the relief of the town of Boston, and the redress of America grievances."

Ordered, unanimously, That the seven following persons be a Commintee for that purpose, viz: Mr. Low, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Moore, Captain Sears, Mr. Remsen, Mr. Shaw, Mr. McDougall.

Mr. McEvers moved, and was seconded by Mr. Booth, "That Mr. Thurman's motion of this evening, with the resolve thereon, be immediately printed at large.

Which was carried as follows:

Affirmatives.		Negatives.
Mr. McEvers,	Walton,	Mr. Curtenius,	Mr. Bull,
Beekman,	Laight,	McDougall,	Lispenard,
Sherbrook,	Bache,	Randall,	P.V.B. Livingston,
Alsop,	Nicholl,	Lott,	Captain Sears.
Shaw,	Thurman,	Hallett,
Goelet,	Booth.
Moore,

The Committee then adjourned until Wednesday, the 13th of July, at 6 o'clock, in the evening.

Proceedings in the Fields, referred to in Mr. THURMAN'S motion of this Evening.

At a numerous meeting of the inhabitants of the city of New-York, convened in the Fields by public advertisement, on Wednesday, the 6th of July, 1774.

Mr. ALEXANDER McDUGALL, Chairman.

The business of the meeting being fully explained by the Chairman, and the dangerous tendency of the numerous and vile arts used by the enemies of America, to divide and distract her councils, as well as the misrepresentations of the virtuous intentions of the citizens of this metropolis, in this interesting and alarming state of the liberties of America, the following Resolutions were twice read, and the question being separately put on each of them, they were passed without one dissentient:

1st. Resolved, nem. con., That the statute commonly called the Boston Port Act, is oppressive to the inhabitants of that town, unconstitutional in its principles, and dangerous to the liberties of British America; and that, therefore, we consider our brethren at Boston as now suffering in the common cause of these Colonies.

2d. Resolved, nem. con., That any attack or attempt to abridge the liberties, or invade the Constitution of any of our sister Colonies, is immediately an attack upon the liberties and Constitution of all the British Colonies.

3d. Resolved, nem. con., That the shutting up of any of the ports in America, with intent to exact from Americans a submission to Parliamentary taxation, or extort a reparation of private injuries, is highly unconstitutional, and subversive of the commercial rights of the inhabitants of this Continent.

4th. Resolved, nem. con., That it is the opinion of this meeting, that if the principal Colonies on this Continent shall come into a joint resolution to stop all importation from, and exportation to Great Britain, till the Act of Parliament for blocking up the harbour of Boston be repealed, the same will prove the salvation of North America and her liberties; and that, on the other hand, if they continue their exports and imports, there is great reason to fear that fraud, power, and the most odious oppression, will rise triumphant over right, justice, social happiness, and freedom: Therefore,

5th. Resolved, nem. con., That the Deputies who shall represent this Colony in the Congress of American Deputies, to be held at Philadelphia, about the first of September next, are hereby instructed, empowered, and directed to engage with a majority of the principal Colonies, to agree for this city upon a non-importation from Great Britain, of all goods, wares and merchandises, until the Act for blocking up the harbour of Boston be repealed, and American grievances be redressed; and also to agree to all such other measures as the Congress shall in their wisdom judge advancive of these great objects, and a general Securi-ty of the rights and privileges of America.

6th. Resolved, nem. con., That this meeting will abide by, obey, and observe all such resolutions, determinations and measures, which the Congress aforesaid shall come into, and direct or recommend to be done, for obtaining and securing the important ends mentioned in the foregoing resolutions. And that an engagement to this effect be immediately entered into and sent to the Congress, to evince to them our readiness and determination to co-operate with our sister Colonies for the relief of our distressed brethren at Boston, as well as for the security of our common rights and privileges.

7th. Resolved, nem. con., That it is the opinion of this meeting that it would be proper for every county in the Colony, without delay, to send two Deputies, chosen by the people, or from the Committees chosen by them in each county, to hold, in conjunction with Deputies for this city and county, a Convention for the Colony, (on a day to be appointed,) in order to elect a proper number of Deputies to represent the Colony in the general Congress. But that, if the counties shall conceive this mode impracticable or inexpedient, they be requested to give their approbation to the Deputies who shall be chosen for this city and county to represent the Colony in Congress.

8th. Resolved, nem. con., That a subscription should immediately be set on foot for the relief of such poor inhabitants of Boston as are, or may be deprived of the means of subsistence, by the operation of the Act of Parliament for stopping up the port of Boston. The money which shall arise from such subscription to be laid out as the city Committee of Correspondence shall think will best answer the end proposed.

9th. Resolved, nem. con., That the city Committee of Correspondence be, and they are hereby instructed, to use their utmost endeavours to carry these resolutions into execution.

Ordered, That these Resolutions be printed in the public newspapers of this city, and transmitted to the different counties in this Colony, and to the Committees of Correspondence for the neighbouring Colonies.

To the Inhabitants of the City and County of NEW-YORK.

GENTLEMEN: The trust you were pleased to repose in us, in appointing us members of the Committee of Correspondence, renders it necessary to inform you of the above proceedings, as well as to justify our conduct upon the points on which we divided. We voted against Mr. Thurman's motion, because the people have an undoubted right to convene themselves, and come into whatever resolutions they shall think proper, if they be not contrary to law; and although the manner of calling them might not be deemed so regular as might be wished, though practised heretofore in the debates on the Stamp Act, yet considering that a respectable number of our fellow-citizens did meet, and did no acts but what were conformable to the general spirit of all the Colonies in this alarming state of our public affairs, we therefore conceived that our disavowing their conduct would naturally tend to hold up the idea of a division, if not a disapprobation of the resolutions; and as the resolutions do not so much as insinuate that they came from the Committee, no charge could lie against them for any matter contained in them. For these reasons, also, we voted against Mr. McEvers's motion to publish the proceedings, and because he declared, before the question was put, that these proceedings should be published, in order that they might be sent home by the packet. This declaration from a member of the Committee, has, in our opinion, such a tendency to hold up a disunion amongst us, which must impede the public business, and retard a redress of our grievances, especially as the gentlemen who voted for his motion heard the reasons offered against their being published, that we conceive we cannot, with such a majority, answer the end of our appointment; and, therefore, in justice to ourselves, and from a regard to the public interest, we desire that our names may be erased out of the list of the Committee. And we are humbly of opinion, that the temper manifested by the majority for publishing Mr. McEvers's motion, is destructive to, and subversive of, the end for which the Committee of Correspondence was appointed. All of which is, nevertheless, humbly submitted to you.

FRANCIS LEWIS,	ISAAC SEARS,
JOSEPH HALLETT,	THOMAS RANDALL,
ALEXANDER McDUGALL,	ABRAHAM P. LOTT,
P. V. B. LIVINGSTON,	LEONARD LISPENARD.

We, whose names are hereunto subscribed, though not present at the debates, do likewise request our names may be struck out of the list of the Committee.

JOHN BROOME,
ABRAHAM BRASHER,
JACOBUS VAN ZANDT.

N.B. It may be proper to inform the reader, that printing the proceedings of the Committee has been agitated several times, and judged inexpedient, because every citizen, by the rules of the Board, may have access to them in the presence of one of the members; that Mr. McEvers's motion was made after the Committee adjourned to Monday next, and some of the members were gone, and one going down stairs.

New-York, July 8th, 1774.

To the worthy Inhabitants of the City and County of NEW-YORK.

FELLOW-COUNTRYMEN: Your Committee of fifty-one having laid before you their proceedings on Thursday evening, I should not have troubled you at this time, had not eleven of the Committee made a formal resignation, and published an appeal to you in justification of their conduct.

You are told, that "the people have an undoubted right to convene themselves, and come into whatever resolutions they shall think proper, if they be not contrary to law." This is granted by every one; but you would think me a very impudent fellow, and deserving of the severest reprehension, if I, as a member of that Committee, was to call you together this evening by an anonymous advertisement, and propose a set of resolves to you of the last importance, without either giving you the least previous notice of their contents, or consulting your Committee upon the occasion. Would you not be all of opinion that I deserved the highest censure, both from you and the Committee? This was the ground of your Committee's conduct; and their disapprobation, as you have seen, was conceived in the mildest terms the nature of the case could admit of. And let those who quitted the chamber in a rage, ordering their names struck off, and afterwards bawling along the streets, "the Committee is dissolved - the Committee is dissolved" - let them, I say, be answerable for the consequences of a division, if a division must take place. Your Committee, notwithstanding the evident designs of a faction to dissolve them, are determined to persevere in promoting, to the utmost of their ability, the important ends of their appointment, so long as you, their constituents, shall signify your approbation of their conduct.

The remainder of the appeal is taken up with a declaration of Mr. McEvers's, artfully selected to throw an oblique slur upon that gentleman's character. You are told, "that he declared, before the question was put, that these proceedings should be published, in order to be sent home by the packet." But they forgot to tell you, that Mr. McEvers previously declared that the resolves were printed in Mr. Holt's paper on purpose to be sent home by the packet, and that he wished our proceedings might accompany that paper wherever it went. This is all that your Committee had in view in publishing their proceedings. They conceived that the resolves were printed and held up to the world, not only as the act of this Committee, but of the city at large, and that they would evidently pass under such a construction, unless the mode of obtaining them was publicly disavowed. But you will readily discover how artfully this has been represented, with a view of tarnishing one of the most amiable characters among us; a character that is strongly marked in the breast of every-good citizen, as exhibiting not only a true friend to the liberties of this country, but a friend to mankind.

ONE OF THE COMMITTEE.

New-York, July 9th, 1774.

New-York, July 13, 1774.

The Committee met, by adjournment, at six o'clock, in the evening.

[The Committee appointed on the 7th instant, presented a set of Resolutions to be proposed to the City.]

Ordered, That the same be forthwith printed, and distributed in handbills, tbr the consideration of the public, who are requested to attend at the Coffee House on Tuesday next, at 12 o'clock in the morning, to signify their sense of the said resolves.

Mr. Laight moved, and was seconded by Mr. McEvers: "That the five gentlemen nominated by this Committee as Delegates to the general Congress, viz: Mr. Duane, Mr. Philip Livingston, Mr. John Alsop, Mr. Isaac Low, and Mr. John Jay, be proposed to the citizens for their approbation at the same time and place;"

Which being unanimously agreed to,

Ordered, That printed Notices be immediately dispersed.

The Committee adjourned until Tuesday, the 19th of July, instant, to meet at 6 o'clock, in the evening.

New-York, 19th July, 1774.

The Committee met, by adjournment, at 6 o'clock, this evening: Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Peter Goclet,	John Jay,
John Alsop,	Charles McEvers,	Joseph Bull,
Peter T. Curtenius,	Alexander Wallace,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,
Henry Remsen,	Charles Shaw,	Edward Laight,
John De Lancey,	John Moore,	Hamilton Young,
Benjamin Booth,	Abraham Walton,	Gerardus Duyckinck,
William Walton,	William Bayard,	Richard Yates .
Gerard W. Beekman,

A Letter, dated Charlestown, S. C., 8th July, 1774, with Resolves, was received and read.

The Resolves proposed by this Board to the inhabitants of this city, having been published and dispersed through the town several days previous to this meeting, and every person thereby furnished with an opporrtmity of considering them with due deliberation, and as only a small proportion of the citizens attended the meeting at the Coffee House to signify their sense of same, and the sentiments of the majority still remaining uncertain:

Therefore, to remove all doubts and uneasiness on that head, it is ordered, that certain amendments be made to the said resolves, [see Resolves, 2d, 3d, and 7th,] and that two or more persons be appointed in each Ward to take the sense of the freeholders, freemen, and such others who pay taxes, respecting the said resolutions so amended; as also the Delegates nominated by this Committee to attend the Congress. But, in the mean time, although the said resolves cannot with certainty be said to correspond with the sentiments of the major part of the citizens, though in Several handbills on the Times have been printed and distributed in this city since the 9th instant, viz:

Mr. McDougall's Address to the Freeholders and Freemen of this City and County, upon the nomination of five gentlemen to represent the Province in the Continental Congress. In this performance, the proposed method of taking the sense of the city upon the nomination, that ought to be adopted, is censured as an infringement of the liberties of the electors; for which reason, and to end a controversy that might prove injurious to the common cause, this gentleman declines a nomination to the Congress.

A MODERATE MAN'S Address to the free-born Citizens of NEW-YORK, approving of the Resolves, disapproving of the manner in which they were obtained, and recommending that the eleven members be desired to resume their seats in the Committee Chamber; and yesterday was published an Address to the Inhabitants of this City and County, by AGRICOLA. The author of this last exhibition undertakes to justify the mode in which the Committee proposed, agreeable to that ordained for their direction by the electors at the City Hall, on the 6th instant, to collect the sense of the city and county, touching the choice of Deputies for the Congress. He makes very free, in other respects, with Mr. McDougall's Address, and treats the Moderate Men (who would gladly conciliate all differences, and wishes the eleven members may resume their seats at the Committee Board,) with ineffable contempt.

Last night the Committee of Correspondence met, and concluded upon a set of resolves on our present alarming situation, which will be this day communicated to the public for their further consideration, and on Tuesday next the inhabitants will be desired to meet at the Coffee House to signify their sense of the said resolves.

NEW-YORK, July 14, 1774.

all probability they do, yet, as they contain our sentiments, it is further ordered, that they be immediately published as such, leaving those who may dissent from us to declare their opinions in such other phrases or modes of expression as they shall think proper.

1st. Resolved, That his most sacred Majesty George the Third, King of Great Britain, is our liege, lawful, and rightful Sovereign, and that it is our indispensable duty, to the utmost of our power, by all constitutional means, to maintain and support his crown and dignity; that it is our greatest happiness and glory to have been born British subjects, and that we wish nothing more ardently than to live and die as such; that we are one people, connected by the strongest ties of affection, duty and interest, and that we lament as the greatest misfortune, every occurrence which has the least tendency to alienate or disturb that mutual harmony and confidence, which, if properly cultivated, could not fail of rendering the British Empire the admiration and envy of the world. That we, therefore, view with inexpressible concern and grief, some late acts of the British Parliament, claiming rights, and exercising powers, which we humbly conceive are replete with destruction, and may be attended with the most fatal consequences to the Colonies and their parent State.

2d. Resolved, That all Acts of the British Parliament, imposing taxes on the Colonies, are unjust and unconstitutional, and particularly that the Act for blocking up the port of Boston, is in the highest degree arbitrary in its principles, oppressive in its operation, unparalleled in its rigour, indefinite in its exactions, and subversive of every idea of British liberty, and therefore justly to be abhorred and detested by all good men.

3d. Resolved, That the destruction of the tea at Boston was not the only motive for bringing such unexampled distress on that people, because the alternative of suffering it, or paying for the tea, had otherwise been left in their option. But we truly lament that the enforcing the right of taxation over the Colonies seems to have been the main design of the said Act of Parliament.

4th. Resolved, That vengeance separately directed has a more dangerous tendency, and is more destructive of the liberties of America than conjunctively; and that therefore it is the indispensable duty of all the Colonies, according to their different circumstances, to afford every reasonable assistance to a sister Colony in distress, especially when that distress is evidently calculated to intimidate others from contributing what may be in their power to procure the desired relief.

5th. Resolved, That the proposed Congress of Delegates from the different Colonies, to consult on the mode of procuring relief from our difficulties, is the most prudent measure that could have been devised at this alarming crisis.

6th. Resolved, That as the wisdom of the Colonies will, in all probability, be collected at the proposed Congress, it would be premature in any Colony to anticipate their conduct by resolving what ought to be done; but that it should be left to their joint councils to determine on the mode which shall appear most salutary and effectual to answer the good purposes for which they are convened.

7th. Resolved, That nothing less than dire necessity can justify, or ought to induce the Colonies to unite in any measure that might materially injure our brethren, the manufacturers, traders, and merchants in Great Britain; but that the preservation of our inestimable rights and liberties, as enjoyed and exercised, and handed down to us by our ancestors, ought to supersede all other considerations; and that, therefore, we doubt not the cool, dispassionate people of England, whose friendship on former occasions we have experienced, will, on mature consideration, not only applaud our motives, but co-operate with us in all constitutional measures, for carrying these our virtuous resolutions into execution, in order to obtain the desired and just redress of our grievances.

8th. Resolved, That if a non-importation ageement of goods from Great Britain should be adopted by the Congress, it ought to be very general and faithfully adhered to; and that a non-importation, partially observed, like the last, would answer no good purpose, but on the contrary, only serve to expose all the Colonies to further injuries.

9th. Resolved, therefore, That the Delegates to the Congress ought to be so chosen or instructed, that they may "be able, not only to speak the sentiments, but to "pledge themselves for the good conduct of the people of "the Colonies they represent."

10th. Resolved, That the tribute of our most grateful thanks is justly due to all the friends of the Colonies in Great Britain who are opposed to the severe measures now exerting against them; and particularly to those illustrious patriots who so ably distinguished themselves in both Houses of Parliament, in opposing laws, which, at the same time that they subvert the liberties of America, have a manifest tendency to injure those of the another country, and may eventually entirely overthrow their once excellent Constitution.

The following motion was made by Mr. Jay, and seconded by Mr. Laight:

"That a Committee be appointed to take the distresses of the poor of the town of Boston, and ways and means for their relief/into consideration, and make their report with all convenient speed."

Ordered, That Mr. Alsop, Mr. Jay, Mr. Curtenius, Mr. Laight, Mr. Duyckinck, and Mr. De Lancey, be a Committee for that purpose.

Ordered, That the following persons be a Committee to prepare answers to the Letters which have been received, viz: John Alsop, Theophilact Bache, Miles Sherbrook, Richard Yates, Joseph Bull, Peter Goelet, Gerardus Duyckinck.

Ordered, That Mr. Shaw, Mr. William Walton, Mr. Curtenius, Mr. Goelet, Mr. Remsen, Mr. Laight, and Mr. Bull, be a Committee to apply to the Committee of Mechanics, and request them to appoint certain persons of their body to join our nominating body to go round the Wards to take the sense of the inhabitants on the matters above mentioned.

The Committee adjourned, to Monday, the 25th instant, at 6 o'clock, in the evening, to meet at the Exchange.

New-York, July 20th, 1774.

To the Respectable Public. - We conceive the sense of our fellow-citizens, relative to the Delegates to represent them at the proposed Congress, (notwithstanding the proceedings of yesterday at the Coffee House,) remains so uncertain, that until the sentiments of the town are ascertained with great precision, we can by no means consider ourselves, or any others, nominated as Delegates, duly chosen or authorized, to act in so honourable and important a station.

JOHN ALSOP,
ISAAC LOW,
JOHN IAY.

New-York, 20th July, 1774.

To the Respectable Public. - Certain Resolves having been proposed by the Committee of Correspondence, to a number of citizens assembled at the Coffee House yesterday, and rejected,* and instead of desiring that amendments or additions might be made, or a new set drawn up by the said Committee, more agreeable to their sentiments, they proceeded to nominate a new Committee for the purpose, and appointed us, the subscribers, on it; and being summoned this morning to attend their meeting, thought it incumbent on us to return the following answer:

GENTLEMEN: We have received your notice to attend the Committee appointed yesterday to draw up resolves for this city. When we consider that the appointment of this Committee was proposed and carried without any previous notice of such design having been given to the inhabitants, and made no part of the business for which they were requested to assemble, we think our election too irregular to assume any authority, in consequence of it, to draw resolves for the town; especially as the nomination of this Committee seems to cast an invidious reflection

By a very late letter we are informed that the people of New-York have unanimously voted, that the resolves proposed to them were destitute of vigour, sense, and integrity; that they have chosen a Committee of fifteen persons to draw up new resolves, and that two unexceptionable friends of liberty were added to the Delegates.

BOSTON, July 25, 1774.

tion on the Committee of Correspondence, and manifestly tends to divide the citizens into factions and parties, at a time when they should be distinguished by concord and unanimity. Besides, we conceive our attendance could answer no purpose, nor afford you any assistance. The resolves read yesterday, with a few amendments, contain our sentiments; as such they will be published, and (some seemingly exceptionable parts being omitted) offered to the consideration of the public.

We are, gentlemen, your most obedient humble servants,
ISAAC LOW, HENRY REMSEN,
JOHN MOORE, JOHN IAY.

To the Gentlemen of the Committee at Mr. Doran's.

New-York, July 25, 1774.

The Committee met, by adjournment, at the Exchange, at 6 o'clock, in the evening: Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Richard Yates,	Gerardus Duyckinck,
John Alsop,	John De Lancey,	Henry Remsen,
William Bayard,	Miles Sherbrook,	Hamilton Young,
Theophilact Bache,	John Jay,	Peter T. Curtenius,
Charles McEvers,	Benjamin Booth,	Abraham Duryee,
Charles Nicholl,	Charles Shaw,	Joseph Bull,
John Moore,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,	Richard Sharpe,
Edward Laight,	Abraham Walton,	Alexander Wallace.
William Walton,

A Letter dated Boston, July, 1774, received and read.

Mr. Remsen, seconded by Mr. Duryee, made the following motion, viz:

"Mr. Chairman, I move that a poll be opened at the usual places of election in each Ward in this city, on Thursday, the 28th instant, at 9 o'clock, in the morning, to elect five Deputies for the city and county of New-York, to meet in Congress, at Philadelphia, the first of September next; and in order that the same may be conducted in the most unexceptionable manner:

"I further move, that this Committee request the Aldermen, Common Council, and Vestry in each Ward to superintend the same, and that the Committee of Mechanics be also requested to appoint two persons in each Ward to attend with two of this Committee for the same purpose; that not only the freeholders and freemen, but also persons who pay taxes be deemed qualified to vote."

Which being unanimously agreed to;

Ordered, That the same be forthwith carried into execution, and public notice thereof be immediately given by printed handbills.

Ordered further, That the following persons be a Committee: For the East Ward, Theophilact Bache and Charles McEvers; for the South Ward, Charles Shaw and Gabriel H. Ludlow; for Montgomerie Ward, James Bull and Edward Laight; for the North Ward, William McAdam and Miles Sherbrook; for the West Ward, Benjamin Booth and Peter T. Curtenius; for the Out Ward, William Bayard and Abraham Duryee.

An Amendment having been made, by upwards of fifteen persons of this Committee, in their third resolve, and ordered to be printed in Mr. Gaine's paper of this day,* different from what was inserted in Mr. Rivington's and Holt's papers of Thursday last, the said Amendment is unanimously adopted by this Committee, and ordered to remain as such.

The Committee adjourned, to meet on Thursday evening, the 27th instant.

*Whereas a set of Resolves were published in Mr. Gaine's Gazette of the 25th instant, by some gentlemen and others, styling themselves a Committee of the city of New-York, wherein among other things it was proposed to the Committee of Correspondence to send expresses to the Supervisors of the different precincts or districts of each county, in order to collect the sentiments of the people upon the present alarming and critical situation of affairs in America.

In case such expresses arrive, an inhabitant of this county would be glad to have answers to a few queries, which may enlighten the minds of some, and facilitate the measure of joining with their fellow-subjects in publishing a proper set of resolves.

First, Does the King of Great Britain's authority, or his right of dominion over the American Colonies, stand in any need of being established by such resolves of town and parish meetings, as appear in the newspapers?

Secondly, Does our resolving that we are his Majesty's true and faithful liege subjects, make us one jot the more so?

Thirdly, Have or have not the Bostonians for a series of years past, by many of their transactions and publications, discovered an inclination to subvert the Constitution both in Church and State?

New-York, July 27, 1774.

The Committee met, by adjournment, this evening Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	John De Lancey,	Henry Remsen,
William Bayard,	John Jay,	Peter T. Curtenius,
Philip Livingston,	Benjamin Booth,	Abraham Duryee,
Charles Nicholl,	Charles Shaw,	Joseph Bull,
John Moore,	Alexander Wallace,	Richard Sharpe,
Edward Laight,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,	Peter Goelet,
William Walton,	Gerard Duyckinck,	Joseph Hallett.
Richard Yates,	Peter Van Sehaack,

A Note from the Committee at Mr. Marriner's, to the Delegates nominated by this Committee, with their Answer was read, and is in the words following:

New-York, July 26, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: As you are upon the nomination as Delegates to represent this city and county of New-York, at the proposed Congress, in order to avoid the inconveniences which may arise from contested elections, we are requested as a Committee from a number of citizens to ask you, whether on your part you will engage to use your utmost endeavours at the proposed Congress, that an agreement not to import goods from Great Britain until the American grievances be redressed, be entered into by the Colonies there to be represented. If you will so engage, the body by whom we are nominated will support you, if not, that body have a set of candidates who will comply with the proposed engagement.

Presented by Messrs. ABRAHAM BRASHER, THEOPHILUS ANTHONY, FRANCIS VAN DYCK, JEREMIAH PLATT, CHRISTOPHER DUYCKINCK.

Answer to the foregoing Note:

Now-York, July 27, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: Should we become your Delegates, we beg leave to assure you that we will use our utmost endeavours to carry every measure into execution at the proposed Congress that may then be thought conducive to the general interest of the Colonies; and, at present, are of opinion that a general non-importation agreement, faithfully observed, would prove the most efficacious means to procure a redress of our grievances.

Permit us to add, that we are led to make this declaration of our sentiments, because we think it right, and not as an inducement to be favoured with your votes; nor have we the least objection to your electing any gentlemen as your Delegates, in whom you think you can repose greater confidence, than in your humble servants,

PHILIP LIVINGSTON,	JOHN ALSOP,
ISAAC LOW,	JOHN JAY.

The following was received in Answer to the above:
New-York, July 27, 1774.

At a meeting of a number of citizens, convened at the house of Mr. Marriner, it was unanimously agreed, That they acquiesce in the nomination of the following gentlemen, as Delegates to represent the city and county of New-York, at the ensuing Congress to be held at Philadelphia, on the first of September next, viz:

Mr. Philip Livingston ,	Mr. James Duane ,
John Alsop ,	John Jay .
Isaac Low ,

Presented by Messrs. ABRAHAM BRASHER, THEOPHILUS ANTHONY, FRANCIS VAN DYCK, JEREMIAH PLATT, CHRISTOPHER DUYCKINCK.

Fourthly, Was the destruction of the tea at Boston the sole cause of the grievances under which that city now labours?

Fifthly, Does not our resolving, that the people of Boston are suffering in the common cause of America, involve us in an imputation that we concur with them in sentiments and inclinations in such schemes as may have created a jealousy in the mother country, and brought on them their present sufferings?

Sixthly, Will not a general agreement of non-importation from England bring on an entire non-exportation, by justly causing our ports to be blocked up like that of Boston; and then what will become of our produce, of which we are like to have such vast quantities?

Lastly, Would not a general agreement, (religiously observed) not to use tea, or any other article unconstitutionally taxed; together with the united representation or application of their legal Representatives in the several Provinces, to our most gracious Sovereign, be the most likely and unexceptionable means for Americans to have their present grievances redressed?

ULSTER COUNTY, New-York, July 30, 1774.

The Committee appointed to wait on the Magistrates, Common Council, and Vestry, to request their superintendence in each Ward, at the election for Delegates, to attend the proposed Congress, reported, that they had accordingly waited on them, and received for answer, that they would comply with their request.

The Committee of Mechanics returned the names of the fourteen persons they were requested to appoint to attend the said election.

A Letter from Charles Thomson, dated Philadelphia, 25th July, 1774, received and read, with Resolves.

The Committee adjourned to 28th instant.

New-York, July 28, 1774.

The Committee met this evening, at 6 o'clock, at the Exchange: Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	John Moore,	Charles Shaw,
John Alsop,	Edward Laight,	Alexander Wallace,
William Bayard,	William Walton,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,
Theophilact Bache,	John De Lancey,	Nicholas Hoffman,
Philip Livingston,	Miles Sherbrook,	Gerardus Duyckinck,
Charles McEvers,	John Jay,	Peter T. Curtenius,
Charles Nicholl,	Benjamin Booth,	Peter Goelet.

The Committee observing a mistake in the account given in Mr. Holt's paper, of the opinion declared by the Delegates nominated to attend the Congress, relative to the more proper measures to be adopted by the Colonies in the present alarming situation, *

Ordered, That the proceedings of this Committee relative to the matter, be published in the next paper.

The gentlemen of this Committee appointed to attend the poll held in the different Wards of the city, for the election of five Delegates to represent this city and county, at the ensuing Congress, delivered the poll lists taken at the said election in each Ward of this city, subscribed by the Magistrates and others under whose superintendence the same was held, which said several poll lists being read and examined, it appears that Philip Livingston, Isaac Low, John Jay, John Alsop, and James Duane, the persons nominated by this Committee, were unanimously elected Delegates for the aforesaid purpose.

The Committee appointed to take the distresses of the poor of the town of Boston, and ways and means for their relief into consideration, reported that they have entered on the inquiry, and will make a full report upon the matters submitted to them at the next meeting of the Committee.

Copy of a Letter to the Committee of Correspondence at Charlestown, South Carolina:

New-York, July 26, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: Your favour of the 8th instant, enclosing the resolutions entered into by the inhabitants of your Colony, was delivered to us by Captain Hunt; and the resolutions being read to this Committee, were much approved of.

It gives us the greatest pleasure to perceive that at this time, when the liberties of America are so unjustly invaded, your sentiments so exactly correspond with our own, as nothing but a strict union among all the Colonies can ever effect a restoration of our just rights; it is our sincere wish that every Colony will exert themselves to the utmost to preserve that union strict and inviolable; for our parts, you may depend we will readily concur in every constitutional measure that carries with it any probability of success in obtaining a redress of our grievances.

You will please to observe, there has been three different sets of resolves entered into by the inhabitants of this city; but that which is signed by our Chairman, we have adopted. Thursday next is the day appointed to choose Delegates to represent this city and county in the general

The following is the publication referred to: -

"There seems to be at present, a coalition of parties in this city, with respect to the measures previous to a general Congress of Delegates from the several British Colonies. Both parties acquiesced in the Delegates nominated for this city; and those gentlemen have declared their present opinion, that a non-importation agreement will be necessary, but are left at liberty to conform to the general opinion of the Delegates at the Congress."

Congress, to be held at Philadelphia, the first of September next, and we make no doubt the other Colonies will soon follow our example. When the choice is made, we shall acquaint you therewith, as well as with every other measure entered into by the inhabitants of this Province.

In the mean time, we remain, gentlemen, your most obedient servants. By order of the Committee.

P.S. The packets enclosed in yours, were carefully forwarded, and the proper direction put on that for Quebec. This Committee think themselves highly obliged to Captain Hunt for his civility, in detaining his vessel for your despatches.

July 28th. This day a poll was opened in the different Wards for choosing Delegates to represent this city and county at the Congress, the first of September next, at Philadelphia; and the following five gentlemen, James Duane, Philip Livingston, John Alsop, John Jay, and Isaac Low, were unanimously elected for that purpose.

Copy of a Letter to the Committee of Correspondence at Philadelphia:

New-York, July 28, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: After various contests and other intervening circumstances to prevent our endeavours for terminating the appointment of our Delegates to represent this city and county in the general Congress, we have at length the pleasure to acquaint you, that a mode has been adopted which has given universal satisfaction; that of opening a regular poll in each Ward of this city. In consequence whereof, the following five gentlemen, James Duane, Philip Livingston, John Alsop, John Jay, and Isaac Low, were unanimously elected.

Circular Letters have also been despatched to the different counties in this Province, informing them of what we have done, and requesting them each to appoint, with all possible speed, one or more Delegates to join and go with ours to Congress; or if they choose to confide in our Delegates, to signify such their determination, in the most clear and explicit terms the first opportunity after the sense of the counties can be known on so interesting a subject.

We received your favour, enclosing the Resolves and Instructions of your Provincial Committee to the House of Assembly; they are approved, and do great honour to the authors. We are gentlemen, your most humble servants.

By order of the Committee.

Copy of a Letter to Matthew Tilghman, Esquire, Chairman for Maryland:

New-York, July 28, 1774.

We have received your favour of 26th ultimo, which brought us your Resolutions for the people Of the Province of Maryland. They were read, and their firmness and spirit much approved.

You mention the 20th September, at Philadelphia, as the time and place for the general Congress; but the Colony of Massachusetts has fixed on the 1st of September, at Philadelphia, for that purpose; and we with the rest of the Eastern Colonies have agreed to the same time and place, New-Hampshire excepted, from whence we have not yet been favoured with their sentiments on the present situation of our American affairs, so that we are uncertain how they intend acting, but are in hopes they will join in the general plan of operation.

This city and county have this day elected their five Delegates to attend at the ensuing Congress: their names are Philip Livingston, John Alsop, Isaac Low, James Duane, and John Jay; whose names will be sent up to the other counties of this Province to know if they approve of them to represent the whole Province, if not, to add such others as they shall think proper.

You have herewith the Resolves of this Committee, which seem to be principally adopted in this city; notwithstanding, there are two other sets of resolves in the public newspaper.

The delay that has happened in fixing upon our Delegates, has prevented our answering your favour until now, for which we must beg your excuse, and remain, with great respect, gentlemen, your most humble servants.

FOURTH SERIES.

Copy of a Letter sent to the Committee, or Treasurer of the different Counties:

New-York, July 29, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: we should have answered your letter sooner, but were induced to defer it by the prospect we had of having all disputes relative to our Delegates (the only matter of moment we had to communicate) settled before now; but various cross-circumstances have continually intervened to prevent our endeavours for terminating so important a controversy.

At length, however, we have the pleasure to acquaint you, that a mode has been adopted which gave universal satisfaction; that of opening a regular poll in each Ward of this city; in consequence whereof, the following five gentlemen, James Duane, Philip Livingston, John Alsop, Isaac Low, and John Jay, were unanimously elected to represent this city in the general Congress, the 1st of September next, at Philadelphia.

It therefore becomes necessary that the Delegates to represent the other counties in this Province, be speedily appointed. The counties will judge of the propriety of confiding in the same persons only which we have chosen, or to appoint such others to go with them to the Congress, as they may think fit to depute for that purpose. Permit us to observe, that the number of Delegates is immaterial, since those of each Province, whether more or less, will conjointly have only one vote at the Congress.

In order, however, that the representation of the different counties may be quite complete, it is absolutely necessary that your county appoint, with all possible speed, one or more Delegates, to join and go with ours to the Congress, or, if you choose to repose your confidence in our Delegates, that you signify such your determination in the most clear and explicit terms, by the first opportunity after the sense of your county can be known on so interesting a subject.

The Committee adjourned, until Monday, August 7th, 1774.

New-York, August 7, 1774.

The Committee met, by adjournment, at the Exchange, at 6 o'clock, in the evening: Present:

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Miles Sherbrook,	Peter Van Schaack,
John Alsop,	John Jay,	Henry Remsen,
Philip Livingston,	Benjamin Booth,	Peter T. Curtenius,
James Duane,	Charles Shaw,	Gerard W. Beekman,
Edward Laight,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,	Abraham Durjee,
William Walton,	Nicholas Hoffman,
John De Lancey,	Gerardus Duyckinck,

A Letter from Elizabethtown, dated August 5, 1774, was received and read.

Ordered, That John Jay, James Duane, Philip Livingston, and Henry Remsen, be a Committee to answer a Letter from Boston; and to wait on the Chairman of the Mechanics' Committee, to request the favour of the Boston Letter to them.

Ordered, That the following persons be a Committee to procure proper persons to go round in the different Wards of this city, with a subscription for the relief of the poor in the town of Boston, and to draw up the form of such subscription, Peter T. Curtenius, Peter Van Schaack, Charles Shaw, Edward Laight, Nicholas Hoffman, Gerardus Duyckinck, Joseph Bull.

The above persons to request the Committee of Mechanics to appoint a Committee from their body, to assist this Committee in the above office. That the moneys when collected, be paid into the hands of Messrs. Gerardus Duyckinck, Peter T. Curtenius, and G. W. Beekman.

The Committee adjourned until to-morrow evening, at 8 o'clock.

* NEW-YORK, August 25. On the 16th instant there was a meeting of the several Committees of the County of Orange, when Henry Wisner and John Waring, Esquires, were chosen Delegates for that county, to meet at the Congress at Philadelphia on or about the first day of September next.

We hear from Albany; that on the 10th instant there was a meeting of the inhabitants at the Market Place in that city, on the business of appointing Delegates for the general Congress. That on the 13th they had another meeting, when it was resolved that Robert Yates, Peter Sylvester, and Henry Van Schaack, Esquires, if approved by the majority of the Delegates from the several Districts, at a general meeting for the county, should be deputed for the said city to attend the Congress at Philadelphia. We hear several other counties have adopted the measure of sending each for itself, Delegates to the Congress.

New-York, August 8, 1774.

The Committee met, by adjournment, this evening:
Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Edward Laight,	Peter T. Curtenius,
William Bayard,	Miles Sherbrook,	Abraham Duryee,
Philip Livingston,	Benjamin Booth,	Joseph Bull,
Charles Nicholl,	Charles Shaw,	William Walton,
John Moore,	Nicholas Hoffman,	Peter Van Schaack.
James Duane,	Hamilton Young,

Copy of a Letter to the Committee of Correspondence, at Boston:

New-York, August 9, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: It gives us pain to be informed that you have the least reason to impute our silence to any but the true cause, viz: our having had nothing of importance to communicate, even in point of ceremony, which at such a juncture might be dispensed with. We do not think we have been deficient. When all depends on mutual confidence and harmony, much is it to be lamented that the letters or whisperings of individuals should become the foundation of jealousy for the rectitude of our intentions, and our sincere desire of supporting the general cause. We can cheerfully appeal to our acts, our letters, our resolves, and the unreserved and open declarations which we have frequently and publicly made of our sentiments, in the present alarming state of our Colonies; and by these alone we ought to be judged. Permit us to add, that whatever grounds you have to question the patriotism of the order of Merchants, which is so strongly implied in your letter to our Committee of Mechanics, it is a debt of justice to affirm that the spirited and disinterested conduct of the commercial part of this city, ought to place them above the reach of suspicion, since at all times, and upon every occasion, they have proved themselves the unshaken friends of constitutional liberty, and have virtuously sacrificed the advantages of their profession to the public good.

To justify ourselves to you and to the world, far from declining, we think it our indispensable duty, and therefore must demand, as a right, that you will candidly furnish us with copies of the letters, and the dates of the newspapers, in which they were published, and a detail of the facts which have given rise to your uneasiness; and you may be assured that they shall become the subject of serious consideration. In times like these it is highly necessary that the foes to truth and liberty should be known and detected; and if they cannot be reformed, at least that a period may be put to their power of sowing the seeds of discord, one of the most fatal evils which can befall our country.

We have the pleasure to acquaint you that we have at length chosen five Delegates to represent this city in Congress, viz: Philip Livingston, John Alsop, Isaac Low, James Duane, and John Jay. They were elected by the people, without one dissenting voice. Circular letters have been sent to the counties informing them of it, and requesting them either to signify their acquiescence in our Delegates, or immediately appoint others to represent them. Enclosed you have a copy of our Resolves, which have been generally adopted in this metropolis.

The distresses of the poor of your town, and ways and means for their relief, have engaged the earnest attention of our Committee; and for this necessary and benevolent purpose, we have agreed that a subscription shall be set on foot throughout the Colony, which we do not doubt will meet with the wished for success. On our parts, we beg leave to assure you that nothing shall be omitted which we shall think conducive to your welfare and redress, or which may have a tendency to promote the restoration and establishment of our common rights and privileges.

We are, gentlemen, &c.

Copy of a Letter to the several Counties of this Province:

New-York, August 9, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: The distresses of the poor of the town of Boston, now sinking under the hand of power, and exposed to all the miseries which must attend so fatal a calamity, call aloud for our tender and compassionate concern. Every motive of policy and humanity should excite us to contribute with a liberal hand to their immediate redress. They are our countrymen and brethren, suffering in the common cause of liberty, and their hard condition may one day be our own, and we stand in need of that bounty which it now becomes our duty cheerfully to dispense.

From considerations so interesting, this Committee of Correspondence have unanimously recommended to their constituents a generous subscription for the support of the indigent inhabitants of that oppressed town, and entertain no doubt but it will meet with all the success to be expected from a people equally distinguished for their charity and benevolence, and their unshaken zeal for constitutional liberty. All the collections are appointed to be paid into the hands of Messrs. Gerard William Beekman, Gerardus Duyckinck; and Peter T. Curtenius, of this city, merchants, and to be expended under the direction of this Committee, for such necessities as the condition of the poor inhabitants require.

After laying before you this example, we earnestly recommend it to the imitation of your county. Perhaps, in some instances, it may be most convenient to the inhabitants to contribute in wheat or flour, which will be equally serviceable. Permit us, gentlemen, to submit this salutary measure to your immediate patronage. The interest and welfare of a whole Continent require that a provision should be made for all who become sufferers in our common cause, and the immediate honour and reputation of this Colony must animate us to distinguish ourselves on so patriotic and benevolent an occasion.

We are, gentlemen, your obedient humble servants;

By order, &c.

The Committee adjourned to Monday evening, the 22d instant, at 6 o'clock, in the evening.

New-York, August 22, 1774.

The Committee met, by adjournment, at the Exchange, this evening: * Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	James Duane,	Nicholas Hoffman,
William Bayard,	Edward Laight,	Peter Van Schaack,
Theophilact Bache,	Miles Sherbrook,	Henry Remsen,
Philip Livingston,	Benjamin Booth,	Peter T. Curtenius,
Charles McEvers,	Charles Shaw,	Peter Goelt;
John Moore,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,	Abraham Duryee.

A Letter, dated Suffolk County, 11th August, 1774, received and read.

Copy of a Letter to William Floyd, Esq.; Suffolk County:

New-York, August 23, 1774.

Sift: Your favour of the 11th instant, acquainting that Colonel William Floyd is appointed a Delegate to represent your county at the ensuing general Congress at Philadelphia, has been communicated to the Committee of Correspondence in this city.

I am, sir, your most humble servant

Copy of a Letter to Zephaniah Platt, Esquire, Poughkeepsie, Dutchess County:

SIR: We received your favour of the 20th instant, enclosing the Resolves of the inhabitants of your precinct, and acquainting that you confide in the Delegates chosen by our citizens to represent them in the general Congress. What good can be effected time must discover, but we are

* On Monday evening, August 22d, the Committee of Correspondence met, according to adjournment; and as this was the last time of their assembling before the departure of our Delegates, the business of the ensuing Congress was discussed with a manly firmness, and a becoming freedom of sentiment. Three of the Delegates were present, and paid great attention to the opinions of their fellow citizens, declaring themselves happy to receive information on those important points that were shortly to come before them; the whole scope, extension, and consequences of which, they were unable, as yet, to comprehend. The points mostly insisted upon in these debates, were, that if it was recommended to the Bostonians to pay for the tea, as an act of justice, their port would soon be opened, and then we should stand upon our former ground of importing no goods liable to a duty. That nothing but "dire necessity," according to our own resolves, should induce us to break off our connections with the parent country; and that whenever we should be reduced to the last sad alternative of entering into a non-importation agreement, it ought not to be a partial one, like the last, when some men made fortunes by the ruin of others, but that it should include and suspend the importation of every European commodity from all parts of the world.

confident our Delegates, (and we trust those from the other Colonies,) will go with hearts most sincerely and zealously disposed to render the measure productive of every happy consequence that can be reasonably expected from their united councils on matters of so truly important and serious a nature. We are, gentlemen, your most humble servants,
By order of the Committee.

The Committee adjourned until Monday, 29th August, 1774.

New-York, August 29th, 1774.

The Committee met, by adjournment: Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	William Walton,	Nicholas Hoffman,
John Alsop,	Miles Sherbrook,	Peter Van Schaack,
William Bayard,	John Thurman,	Hamilton Young,
Theophilact Bache,	Benjamin Booth,	Peter T. Curtenius,
Charles Nicholl,	Charles Shaw,	Abraham Duryee,
James Duane,	Alexander Wallace,	Joseph Bull.
Edward Laight,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,

A Letter dated Kingston, 19th August, 1774, received and read; a Letter dated Kingston, 19th August, 1774; a Letter dated New Windsor, 26th August, 1774; a Letter with Proceedings of Bedford, dated August 9th, 1774; a Letter dated Mamaroneck, 7th August, 1774; a Letter dated White Plains, 27th August, 1774; received and read, approving of the Delegates adopted for the city and county of New York.

The Committee adjourned until Monday, 5th September, 1774.*

* On Monday evening, September 5, the Inhabitants of this City were greatly alarmed with the following Accounts, brought by express, which had been forwarded with great despatch to our Committee of Correspondence:

POMFRET, CONNECTICUT, September 3, 1774.

CAPTAIN CLEVELAND: Mr. Keys this moment brought us the news that the men-of-war and troops began to fire upon the people last night at sunset at Boston, when a post was immediately sent off to inform the country. He informs, that the artillery played all night; that the people were universally rallying from Boston as far as here, and desire all the assistance possible. The first was occasioned by the country's being robbed of their powder from Boston as far as Farmingham, and when found out, the persons who went to take them were immediately fired upon; six of our number were killed the first shot, and a number wounded, and beg you will rally all the forces you can, and be upon the march immediately for the relief of Boston, and the people that way.

ISRAEL PUTNAM.

Send an express along to Norwich and elsewhere.

AARON CLEVELAND.

Forwarded from Norwich per JOHN DURKEE.

NEW-LONDON, September 3.

Pray send forward an express to Saybrook, and elsewhere on the sea shore, and to East Haddam, immediately. I desire those towns to forward expresses to their neighbouring towns.

RICHARD LAW,
NATHANIEL SHAW,
SAMUEL H. PARSONS.

To Messrs. John Lay, Esquire, and the rest of the Committee of Correspondence at Lyme.

NEW-LONDON, September 3.

You will see, by a Letter to your Committee of Correspondence, the necessity of rallying all your forces immediately. Pray let every man who values his own, or his Country's liberty, appear immediately. We shall march before noon to-morrow. I came home today; shall set out with our forces on the morrow. Let your Captains call their men as early as possible, and make no delay in joining.

S. PARSONS.

To the Committee of Correspondence in SAYBROOK, or to the Select-men in SAYBROOK:

It is desired that this may be forwarded to Killingsworth, to be forwarded westward.

Ele. Matther, John Lay, 2d, John McCurdy, William Noyes, Samuel

Matther, Jun., Committee of Correspondence.

TO DR. NATHANIEL RUGGLES, AND SAMUEL BROWN, ESQUIRE,

GENTLEMEN: You will doubtless think it prudent, on the receipt of this intelligence, to forward it at least as far as New-Haven, where, doubtless, intelligence will be received by the upper road.

AARON ELLIOTT,
BENJAMIN GALE

GUILFORD, September 4.
SAMUEL BROWN.

Forwarded by the subscriber to Branford.

BRANFORD, September 4.

Forwarded to John Whiting, Esquire, and the rest of the Committee of Correspondence at New-Haven, per

SAMUEL BAKER,
SAMUEL JONES.

NEW-HAVEN, September 4.

GENTLEMEN: We have to communicate the fatal news of an attack by the King's fleet and troops upon the town of Boston. Enclosed you have the foundation and conveyance of the melancholy intelligence. We thought it necessary and expedient to communicate by express, expecting your speedy aid to forward the same to the Congress at Philadelphia. We are, gentlemen, your friends and brethren in the common cause. Signed for the Committee of Correspondence.

TIMOTHY JONES, Clerk of the said Committee.

To the Committee of Correspondence of New-York.

New-York, September 5, 1774.

The Committee met, by adjournment: Present,

Abraham Duryee,	John De Lancey,	Peter T. Curtenius,
Theophilact Bache,	Alexander Wallace,	Benjamin Booth,
Charles Nicholl,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,	Charles Shaw,
Edward Laight,	Peter Van Schaack,	Gerard W. Beekman,
William Walton,	Hamilton Young,	Joseph Bull.

Mr. Low, the Chairman, and Mr. Alsop, the Deputy Chairman of this Committee, being out of town, they proceeded to choose a Chairman pro tempore, when Mr. Abraham Duryee was unanimously chosen.

A Letter dated Albany, August 27, 1774, with Resolves and Proceedings, received and read; a Letter dated Poughkeepsie, August 31st, 1774, received and read, approving the resolves and Delegates for New-York.

The Committee adjourned to Monday, 19th September.

The Committee met, by adjournment: Present,

A. Duryee, Chairman ,	Alexander Wallace,	Edward Laight,
William Walton,	Henry Remsen,	Joseph Bull,
John Moore,	Peter T. Curtenius,	Charles Nicholl,
Peter Goelet,	Nicholas Hoffman,	John De Lancey,
Gabriel H. Ludlow,	Peter Van Schaack,

A Letter from Mr. Isaac Low, dated Philadelphia, 17th September, 1774, was received and read.

Ordered, That Mr. Van Schaack, Mr. Moore, and Mr. W. Walton, be a Committee to prepare a draught of a Letter to be sent to the counties of Richmond, Kings, Queens, and Tryon, requesting them to send Delegates from their respective counties to represent them in the general Congress now sitting at Philadelphia, or to signify their acquiescence in those already assembled there for the Province of New-York.

The Committee adjourned to Monday, 3d October next, 1774.

New-York, September 30, 1774.

At a special meeting of the Committee-at the Exchange, at 9 o'clock, A.M.: Present,

Henry Remsen,	Gerardus Duyckinck,	William Walton,
Charles McEvers,	Peter Goedet,	William McAdam,
Charles Nicholl,	Gerard W. Beekman,	John Moore,
Richard Sharpe,	Peter T. Curtenius,	Theophilact Bache,
William Bayard,	John De Lancey,	Edward Laight,
Charles Shaw,	Miles Sherbrook,	Peter Van Schaack,
Hamilton Young,	Joseph Bull,	Gabriel H. Ludlow.

Mr. Abraham Duryee, the Chairman of this Committee, being out of town, they proceeded to choose one in his stead, when Mr. Henry Remsen was unanimously chosen.

The Chairman laid before the Committee a representation of a number of the inhabitants of this city, signed by Joseph Totten, their President. And the Committee taking into their serious consideration the subject matter of the said Address, and being desirous on all occasions to conform themselves to the true sense of their constituents, thought proper to publish a notification, immediately to be dispersed throughout the city for convening the inhabitants at the City Hall at one o'clock this day.

The Committee then adjourned to this evening at six o'clock.

New-York, September 30, 1774,

The Committee met, by adjournment, at 6 o'clock, this evening: Present,

H. Remsen, Cham'n.	William Walton,	Nicholas Hoffman,
Theophilact Bache,	Hamilton Young,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,
Richard Sharpe,	Miles Sherbrook,	John Moore
Nicholas Hoffman,	John De Lancey,	Edward Laight,
Peter Van Schaack,	Charles McEvers,
Peter T. Curtenius,	Charles Nicholl,	Gerard W. Beekman.
Joseph Bull,

It was unanimously Resolved, That the following Narrative of the proceedings of the Committee on this day be published.

At a meeting of the Committee of Correspondence of this city, specially summoned, the following representation, being the result of the deliberations of a number of their constituents assembled last night, was presented to the Committee and read:

"To the respectable body of gentlemen nominated by the public voice as a Committee for managing the affairs of the inhabitants of this city in the present exigency of our public concerns,

"The Representation of a number of the Citizens who chose you to act in their behalf in all matters relating to the public weal, respectfully sheweth:

"That within a few days past a number of persons, very inconsiderable in comparison to the number who constitute the body of freeholders and freemen of this city, have taken upon themselves to disturb the peace and order of the town, by assembling, without any notification from you, to whom the public voice gave the care of the community's interest in all affairs of a public nature; and have presumed to call themselves a Committee from the body of the inhabitants of the city, and in that character have arbitrarily censured and threatened several worthy and respectable persons amongst our fellow-citizens.

"We, therefore, respectfully desire you will call a meeting of the inhabitants to assemble at the City Hall, at one o'clock, to-morrow, and there declare to them our sentiments of such proceedings, and make such public resolves for the preservation of the peace, good order, and general weal of the community, as the state of affairs makes requisite

"We are, gentlemen, with great respect, and the fullest confidence in your wisdom and integrity, as the guardians of your fellow-citizens' true interest and liberties, your sincere friends.

"Signed by the unanimous desire of the assembly,

"JOSEPH TOTTEN, President."

New-York, September 29th, 1774.

The Committee taking into their serious consideration the subject matter of the said Address, and being desirous of giving to our fellow-citizens every satisfaction in our power, in the important capacity they did us the honour to appoint us to, we give this public notice, that, agreeable to their desire; we shall attend at the City Hall at one o'clock this day, and we earnestly request all the inhabitants of this city to meet us, and assist our deliberations with their counsel and support.

Signed by order of the Committee,

HENRY REMSEN, Chairman.

In consequence of the above Notice. the Committee, at the time appointed, repaired in a body to the City Hall, when Mr. Henry Remsen, their Chairman, was proceeding to open and explain the business of the meeting to a very respectable body of his fellow-citizens, but being interrupted by the noise and clamour of sundry persons, it was agreed to adjourn to the Coffee House; and, notwithstanding the attempts which were then again made use of to prevent his being heard, the Chairman addressed himself to the people as follows:

"GENTLEMEN: In consequence of an application from a number of respectable citizens, communicated by Mr. Joseph Totten, their Chairman, which has been published in handbills, it was thought proper to summon a special meeting of the Committee of Correspondence, at which meeting it has been resolved, that the inhabitants of this city should be called together, and that the following questions should be proposed for their consideration

"Whether those persons who style themselves a Committee, and have called upon several of our fellow-citizens to inquire into their private business, were authorized by you? And whether you approve of their conduct in so doing?"

Which questions being severally and distinctly put, passed in the negative by a very great majority, who declared that the said persons, styling themselves a Committee, had acted without authority from the public; that their conduct was highly disapproved of, and that such their sentiments, should be published.

Therefore, in conformity to the sentiments of a very great majority of our constituents, and being ourselves fully persuaded that all such irregular proceedings have a direct tendency to promote a disunion amongst ourselves, we thus publicly declare our disapprobation of all such measures. By order of the Committee,

HENRY REMSEY, Chairman.

The Committee adjourned to Monday, October 10, 1774.

New-York, October 4, 1774,

The Committee had a special meeting at 6 o'clock: Present,

H. Remsen, Chairman, Benjamin Booth,
John Thurman, Joseph Bull,
Peter Van Schaack, Gerardus Duyckinck
Charles Nicholl, Peter Goelet,
Edward Laight, Hamilton Young,
Charles Shaw,

Gabriel H. Ludlow,
Nicolas Hoffman,
Abraham Walton,
William Walton,
Charles McEvers.

The Committee taking into consideration the exorbitant price to which sundry articles of goods have advanced, but more particularly some of the necessities of life:

Ordered, That Mr. Van Schaack, Mr. McEvers, Mr. Bull, and Mr. Booth, be a Committee to draw up an advertisement, requesting the Importers of Goods in this city, to meet on Friday morning, the 7th instant, at 11 o'clock, in the morning, in order to consider of the most effectual ways for stopping this growing evil.

Committee Chamber, New-York, October 5, 1774.

The Committee of Correspondence, having taken into consideration the present dissatisfaction prevailing in the city on account of the advance upon several articles imported from Great Britain, and foreseeing that these discontents will be likely to increase, when a non-importation agreement shall have taken place, have judged it necessary to request a meeting of all the Importers at the Exchange, on Friday morning next, at 11 o'clock, to consider and determine upon such a plan as will be best likely to remedy these inconveniences.

By order of the Committee,

HENRY REMSEN, Chairman.

New-York, October 13, 1774.

At a meeting of Importers of goods from Great Britain, to take into consideration the dissatisfaction that has already appeared, upon the advance of divers articles, some of them the real necessities of life: And being determined, as far as in us lies, to preserve the peace of the city, we think it necessary, in order to remove the cause for any future murmurings to make the following declarations:

That we will not from the apprehension of a non-importation agreement put any unreasonable advance upon our goods; and when such an agreement shall have taken place, we will continue to sell them for a moderate profit, and no more.

That we will do our utmost to discourage all engrossers and persons who buy up goods with a view of creating an artificial scarcity, thereby to obtain a more plausible pretext for enhancing the prices.

That if any retailer or other person, should by a contrary conduct, endeavour to defeat these our good intentions, we will, as one man, decline dealing with him, and shall consider him or them as the author or authors of all the disturbances that shall be consequent thereupon.

Signed, by order of a large number of Importers, met at the Exchange.

HENRY REMSEN,

New-York, November 7, 1774.

The Committee met at the Exchange, at 6 o'clock: Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Abraham Duryee,	Peter T. Curtenins,
David Johnston,	John De Lancey,	Gerard W. Beekman,
Charles Nicholl,	John Alsop,	James Duane,
Gerardus Duyckinck,	Joseph Bull,	John Thurman,
Gabriel H. Ludlow,	Philip Livingston,	John Moore,
William Walton,	Alexander Wallace,	Charles Shaw.

A Letter dated Malbro' Town, October 17th, 1774, was received and read.

Mr. Duane moved, That this Committee inquire what progress has been made in the subscriptions and collections for the poor of the town of Boston.

Ordered, That Peter Van Schaack, Peter T. Curtenius, ardus Duyckinck, John Jay, and Joseph Bull, be a Committee for that purpose; who are authorized to take such further measures for carrying the above into execution, as they may think necessary.

Mr. Duane moved, that the following Advertisement be published in the papers for the purpose therein mentioned

New-York Committee Chamber, November 7, 1774

Whereas, at the Continental Congress, held at Philadelphia, it was

"Resolved, That a Committee be chosen in every county, city, and town, by those who are qualified to vote for Representatives to the Legislature, whose business it shall be attentively to observe the conduct of all persons touching the Association entered into by the members of the said Congress in the name, and on the behalf of themselves and their respective constituents; and when it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the majority of any such Committee that any person within the limits of their appointment has violated the said Association, that such majority do forthwith cause the truth of the case to be published in the Gazette, to the end that all such foes to the rights of British America, may be publicly known, and universally condemned as the enemies of American liberty; and thaltheceforth the parties to the said Association will respectively break off all dealings with him or her."

Which said resolve of the Congress being this day taken into consideration by the Committee of Correspondence of the city of New-York, they do herehy reconamend to the freeholders and freemen of the said city, to assemble together at the usual places of election in their several Wards, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, on Friday, the 18th inst., then and there to elect and appoint eight fit persons in each respective Ward, to be a Committee of Inspection for the purpose expressed in the said resolve of the Congress.

By order of the Committee,
Isaac Low, Chairman.

The following persons were appointed to prepare a Circular Letter to the different Counties recommending them to appoint Committees of Inspection, agreeable to the eleventh resolve of the Congress, viz: John Jay, Peter T. Curtenius, Isaac Low, and James Duane.

The Committee adjourned to Monday evening, the 14th instant.

New-York, November 14, 1774.

The Committee met, by adjournment, at 6 o'clock, in the evening: Present:

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Miles Sherbrook,	James Duane,
John Alsop,	Joseph Bull.	Gerard W. Beekman,
John Thurman,	Hamilton Young,	Abraham Duryee,
William Walton,	Richard Sharpe,	Peter T. Curtenius,
Henry Remsen.	John Jay,	Peter Van Schaack.
Gerardus Duyckinck,	Peter Goelet,

Copy of a Letter to Mr. Daniel Dunscomb, Chairman of the Committee of Mechanics:

Committee Chamber, November 14, 1774.

SIR: Some difficulties have arisen relative to the advertisement published by this Committee for choosing a Committee of Inspection; and this Committee being desirous of adopting a mode that shall be agreeable to their fellow-citizens in general, have postponed the further consideration of this subject until to-morrow evening, at six o'clock, to the end that they may have a conference with your Committee on a matter which is conceived of so much importance to the peace and welfare of this city. You are therefore requested to call a meeting of your Committee, some time to-morrow, and beg the favour of the whole body to meet us here in the evening, precisely at six o'clock, and you will oblige, sir, your most humble servant.

By order of the Committee,
ISAAC LOW, Chairman.

To Mr. Daniel Dunscomb, Chairman of the Committee of Mechanics.

Committee Chamber, November 14, 1774.

Whereas it is intended very soon to transmit the donations that have been collected in the Colony, for the support of the poor of Boston to that city. The Committee of Correspondence request the favour of the benefactors and collectors of that laudable charity as soon as possible to pay the several contributions into the hands of Messrs. Gerard W. Beekman, Gerardus Duyckinck, and Peter T. Curtenius, of the city of New-York, merchants, or either of them, who are appointed by this Committee and have undertaken to transact that business.

By order of the Committee,
ISAAC LOW, Chairman.

The Committee adjourned until to-morrow evening, at 6 o'clock, November 15, 1774.

New-York, November 15, 1774.

The Committee met, by adjournment, this evening: Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Nicholas Hoffman,	Charles Shaw,
John Alsop,	William Walton,	John Thurman,
James Duane,	Hamilton Young,	Benjamin Booth,
Philip Livingston,	Charles Nicholl,	William McAdam,
John Jay,	Henry Remsen,	Peter T. Curtenius,
William Bayard,	Peter Van Schaack,	Abraham Duryee,
Theophilaet Bache,	Joseph Bull,	John Moore.
John De Lancey,

Ordered, That when a Committee for carrying the Association of the Congress into execution shall be elected, this Committee do consider themselves as dissolved; and that this resolution be immediately made public.

New-York Committee Chamber, 15th Novcmber, 1774

Whereas it is apprehended that inconveniences may arise from the mode lately recommended by this Committee for electing a new Committee to superintend the execution of the Association entered into by the Congress; and this Committee of Correspondence having taken the same into further consideration, and consulted many of their fellow-citizens, and also conferred with the Committee of Mechanics thereupon, and having agreed to dissolve their body as soon as such new Committee shall be appointed:

Public notice is, therefore, hereby given, that it is now thought fit, that, instead of the mode prescribed by the former advertisement, sixty persons, to continue in office until the first day of July next, shall be chosen by the freeholders and freemen of the said city, to be a Committee for the purposes mentioned in the said Association; and that the said election shall be held at the City Hall, on Tuesday next, at ten o'clock, in the forenoon, under the inspection of the Vestrymen of this city, who shall be requested by the inhabitants for that purpose.

By order of the Committee,
ISAAC LOW, Chairman.

At the before mentioned conference with the Committee of Mechanics, it was mutually agreed

1st. That the Committee nominated and held up to the public are not to exceed seventy; nor to be less them sixty persons.

2d. To be chosen by the freeholders and freemen, at the City Hall, on Tuesday next, under the inspection of the Vestrymen of the city.

3d. To continue in office until the first day of July next.

4th. Each Committee to interchange one hundred names, out of which the Committee is to be nominated.

5th. To be styled, "The Committee for carrying into execution the Association entered into by the Continental Congress."

The Committee adjourned until to-morrow evening, 16th November, 1774, at six o'clock.

Tuesday, November 22, 1774.

The Election of a Committee of sixty persons, for the purposes mentioned in the Association, entered into by the Congress, having this day come on, pursuant to advertisements in the public newspapers, a respectable number of the freeholders and freemen of this city, assembled at the City Hall, where the election was conducted under the inspection of several of the Vestrymen, and the following persons were chosen without a dissenting voice, viz:

Isaac Low,	Henry Remsen,	John Anthony,
Philip Livingston,	Peter T. Curtenius,	Francis Basset,
James Duane,	Abraham Brasher,	Victor Bicker,
John Alsop,	Abraham P. Lott,	John White,
John Jay,	Abraham Duryee,	Theophilus Anthony,
P. V. B. Livingston,	Joseph Bull,	William Goforth,
Isaac Sears,	Francis Lewis,	William Denning,
David Johnston,	John Lasher,	Isaac Roosevelt,
Charles Nicholl,	John Roome,	Jacob Van Voorhees,
Alex. McDougall,	Joseph Totten,	Jeremiah Platt,
Thomas Randall,	Samuel Jones,	William Ustick,
Leonard Lispenard,	John De Lancey,	Comfort Sands,
Edward Laight,	Frederick Jay,	Robert Benson,
William Walton,	William W. Ludlow,	William W. Gilbert,
John Broom,	John B. Moore,	John Berrian,
Joseph Hallett,	George Janeway,	Gabriel H. Ludlow,
Charles Shaw,	Rodolphus Ritzema,	Nicolas Roosevelt,
Nicholas Hoffman,	Lindley Murray,	Edward Flemming,
Abraham Walton,	Lancaster Burling,	Lawrence Embree.
Peter Van Schaack,	Thomas Ivers,

TOWN MEETING IN BOSTON
Friday, May 13, 1774

On this day there was a numerous and respectable meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of this town, legally warned and assembled at Fanueil Hall, to consider an edict lately passed by the British Parliament, for shutting up the harbour; and otherwise punishing the inhabitants; * and to determine upon proper measures to be taken by the town thereon,

After making choice of Mr. Samuel Adams, Moderator of the meeting, the edict was distinctly read by the Clerk; and the nature and tendency, as well as the design of it, being explained in the observations of several gentlemen upon it, the town came into the following vote, nem. con:

Voted, That it is the opinion of this town, that if the other Colonies come into a joint resolution to stop all importations from Great Britain, and exportations to Great Britain, and every part of the West Indies, till the Act for blocking up this harbour be repealed, the same will prove the salvation of North America and her liberties. On the other hand, if they continue their exports and imports, there is high reason to fear that fraud, power, and the most odious oppression, will rise triumphant over right, justice, social happiness, and freedom,

And, Ordered, That this vote be forthwith transmitted by the Moderator to all our sister Colonies, in the name and behalf of this town. †

Then it was moved for consideration what measures were proper for the town to take on the present emergency; whereupon several judicious, spirited and manly proposals were made, which being debated with a candour, moderation, and firmness of mind becoming a people resolved to preserve their liberty, it was voted, that the Moderator, with John Rowe, Esq., Mr. Thomas Boylston, William

Phillips, Esq., Dr. Joseph Warren, John Adams, Esq., Josiah Quincy, Esq., Thomas Cushing, Esq., Mr. Henderson Inches, Mr. William Mollineaux, and Mr. Nathaniel Appleton, be a Committee to take the several proposals that have been, and others that may be made, into consideration, and report to the town as soon as may be.

After which the town made choice of Mr. Oliver Wendell, Isaac Smith, Esq., Mr. William Dennie, Mr. William Powell, and Mr. John Pitts, to repair immediately to the towns of Salem and Marblehead, to communicate the sentiments of this metropolis to the gentlemen there, consult with them, and make report at the adjournment.

Then the meeting was adjourned to Wednesday next, the 18th instant, at ten of the clock in the forenoon,

Wednesday, May 18, ‡ 1774

The freeholders and other inhabitants of this town, met again this day, at Fanueil Hall, by adjournment; and the Committee which had been appointed to receive and consider of proposals for the support and employment of such as will be sufferers by the operation of the cruel edict of the British Parliament, reported that several judicious proposals had been made, and that they conceived that ways and means would be found for the relief of such inhabitants in the time of distress. They recommended to their fellow-citizens patience, fortitude, and a firm trust in God, and desired further time to agree upon a report.

* The Port Bill was received at Boston by Captain Jenkins, who arrived there on Tuesday, the 10th of May, 1774. On Friday, the 13th, about noon, General Gage arrived in the Lively frigate, and landed at the Castle,

† On Saturday, the 14th, Mr. Paul Revere was despatched by the Committee of Correspondence with important letters to the Southern Colonies.

‡ On Tuesday, the 17th, his Excellency General Gage landed at the long wharf, where several of his Majesty's Council, of the House of Representatives, and many of the principal gentlemen of the town, together with the Cadet Company under arms, waited his arrival, and escorted him to the Council Chamber. The Troop of Horse, the Company of Artillery, the Company of Grenadiers, and the several companies of militia under arms, saluted him as he passed. His commission was read, and after the usual ceremonies he was sworn in Governor and Vice-Admiral of the Province. His Proclamation for continuing all officers, &c., in their places, till further order's, was then read by the High Sheriff which was answered by three huzzas, firing the cannon from the battery and artillery company, and three volleys of small arms. After receiving the compliments, &c., and reviewing the militia, he was escorted to Fanueil Hall, where an elegant entertainment was provided at the expense of the Province. After dinner and drinking several loyal toasts, his Excellency went to the Province House.

The meeting was therefore adjourned to Monday, the 31st instant, at ten of the clock in the forenoon, by which time it is expected we shall have encouraging news from some of the sister Colonies.

Previous to the adjournment the town thought it their duty to pass the following Votes, viz:

1st. That the trade of the town of Boston has been one essential link in that vast chain of commerce, which, in the course of a few ages, has raised New England to be what it is, the Southern Provinces to be what they are, the West India Islands to their wealth, and, in one word, the British Empire to that height of opulence, power, pride and splendour, at which it now stands.

2d. That the impolicy, injustice, inhumanity and cruelty of the Act aforesaid, exceed all our powers of expression. We, therefore, leave it to the just censure of others, and appeal to God and the world.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED IN BOSTON.

Philadelphia, May 17, 1774.

The post has just brought us an account of General Gage's arrival, which I hope will give you quiet and security. Many people here were of opinion that neither Governour Hutchinson's, nor the Commissioners' lives were safe before. I sincerely hope that your town and Province will, at length, learn a little wisdom and moderation. I assure you that their friends here are much cast down; their enemies (of which we have a great many) rejoice, and moderate people are almost silent; but all concur in wishing moderation and peace. Your patriots will find themselves deceived in the general support of the other Provinces; from this they will find none; and, if they were so inclined, we are likely to have work enough on the frontiers, where above fifty Indians have just now been cruelly murdered, which will certainly bring on an Indian war. God bless you, and grant you peace and quiet.

SAMUEL ADAMS TO ARTHUR LEE,

Boston, May 18th, 1774.

MY DEAR SIR: The edict of the British Parliament, commonly called the Boston Port Act, came safely to my hand. For flagrant injustice and barbarity, one might search in vain among the archives of Constantinople to find a match for it. But what else could have been expected from a Parliament too long under the dictates and controul of an Administration which seems to be totally lost to all sense and feeling of morality; and governed by passion, cruelty and revenge. For us to reason against such an Act, would be idleness. Our business is to find means to evade its malignant design. The inhabitants view it, not with astonishment, but with indignation. They discover the utmost contempt of the framers of it; while they are yet disposed to consider the body of the nation (though represented by such a Parliament) in the character they have sustained heretofore, humane and generous. They resent the behaviour of the merchants in London: those, I mean, who receive their bread from them, in infamously deserting their cause at the time of extremity. They can easily believe, that the industrious manufacturers, whose time is wholly spent in their various employments, are misled and imposed upon by such miscreants as have ungratefully devoted themselves to an abandoned Ministry, not regarding the ruin of those who have been their best benefactors. But the inhabitants of this town must and will look to their own safety, which they see does not consist in a servile compliance with the ignominious terms of this barbarous edict. Though the means of preserving their liberties should distress, and even ruin the British manufacturers, they are resolved (but with reluctance) to try the experiment. To this they are impelled by motives of self-preservation. They feel humanely for those who must suffer, but being innocent, are not the objects of their revenge. They have already called upon their sister Colonies, (as you will see by the enclosed note,) who not only feel for them as fellow-citizens, but look upon them as suffering the stroke of Ministerial vengeance in the common cause of America; that cause which the Colonists have pledged themselves to each other not to give up. In the mean time, I trust in God this devoted town will sustain the shock with dignity; and, supported by their brethren, will gloriously defeat the designs of their common enemies. Calmness, courage, and unanimity prevail. While they are resolved not tamely to submit, they will, by refraining from any acts of violence, avoid the snare that they discover to be laid for them, by posting regiments so near them. I heartily thank you for your spirited exertions. Use means for the preservation of your health. Our warmest gratitude is due to Lords Camden and Shelburne. Our dependence is upon the wisdom of the few of the British nobility. We suspect studied insult in the appointment of the person who is Commander-in-chief of the troops in America to be our Governour; and I think there appears to be in it more than a design to insult upon any specious pretence. We will endeavour, by circumspection and sound prudence, to frustrate the diabolical designs of our enemies.

I have written in haste, and am, affectionately, your friend,
 SAMUEL ADAMS,
Arthur Lee, Esq., London.

GOVERNOUR GAGE TO THE EARL OF DARIMOUTH.
 Extract.

Boston, May 19, 1774.

His Majesty's ship, the Lively, in which I embarked at Plymouth, on the 16th of April, arrived here on the 13th of this month.

The late Governour Hutchinson, the Chief Justice, the Commissioners of the Customs, and the Consignees, were either at the Castle, or dispersed in the country, not daring to reside in Boston. I went to Mr. Hutchinson, and remained with him at Castle William, till preparations were made for my reception in Boston, where my commission was read and published in the usual forms, on the 17th instant.

The Act for shutting up the port got here before me; and a town meeting was holding to consider of it at the time of my arrival in the harbour. They determined to invite the other Colonies to stop all exports and imports to and from Great Britain and Ireland, and every part of the West Indies, till the Act be repealed; and appointed persons to go to Marblehead and Salem to communicate their sentiments to the people there, and bring them into like measures; which persons were to make their report at the adjournment, on the 18th, when the meeting was again held, and I am told, received little encouragement from Salem and Marblehead, and transacted nothing of consequence.

I do not propose laying any thing before the new Assembly at their meeting, except the common business of the Province, if any occurs.

I hear from many, that the Act has staggered the most presumptuous; but minds so inflamed cannot cool at once; so it may be better to give the shock they have received, time to operate; and I may find the Assembly in a better temper than usual, and more inclined to comply with the King's expectations at Salem, to which place they will be removed after the first of June.

At a town meeting held at Providence, Rhode Island, on the 17th day of May, A. D., 1774, called by warrant: SAMUEL NIGHTENGAL, Esquire, Moderator.

Resolved, That this town will heartily join with the Province of the Massachusetts Bay and the other Colonies, in such measures as shall be generally agreed on by the Colonies, for the protecting and securing their invaluable natural rights and privileges, and transmitting the same to the latest posterity.

That the Deputies of this town be requested to use their influence at the approaching session of the General Assembly of this Colony, for promoting a Congress as soon as may be, of the Representatives of the General Assemblies of the several Colonies and Provinces in North America, for establishing the firmest Union, and adopting such measures as to them shall appear the most effectual to answer that important purpose, and to agree upon proper methods for executing the same.

That the Committee of Correspondence of this town be desired to assure the town of Boston, that we do consider ourselves greatly interested in the present alarming conduct of the British Parliament towards them, and view the whole English American Colonies equally concerned in the event, and that we will, with the utmost firmness, act accordingly, whenever any plan shall be agreed on: in the mean time, we are of opinion that an universal stoppage of all trade with Great Britain, Ireland, Africa, and the West Indies, until such time as the port of Boston shall be reinstated in its former privileges, &c., will be the best expedient in the case; and that a proper time should be generally agreed on for the same universally to take place.

Whereas, the inhabitants of America are engaged in the preservation of their rights and liberties; and as personal liberty is an essential part of the natural rights of mankind, the Deputies of the town are directed to use their endeavours to obtain an act of the General Assembly, prohibiting the importation of negroe slaves in this Colony; and that all negroes born in the Colony should be free at attaining to a certain age.

Voted, That James Angell, Esquire, be added to the Committee of Correspondence of this town, and that he sign their letters as Clerk.

Chestertown, Maryland, May 18, 1774.

It must be universally allowed, that the essential circumstance which constitutes the political happiness of a free people, consists in their being governed by laws of their own making, or to which their consent given by Delegates of their own choice and nomination. This maxim founded on the genius of the British Constitution - the most perfect under Heaven - cannot be supposed partial or confined; but must be as extensively diffusive in its benign operations, as are the regions subordinate to, and claiming protection under that Constitution.

The Act of Parliament, therefore, subjecting the British Colonies in America to the payment of a duty on tea, for the purpose of raising a revenue, being passed without their consent, and calculated to enslave them, cannot but be deemed unconstitutional and oppressive; from whence it clearly follows, that it highly behoves the Americans as loyal and free-born subjects of Great Britain, to take every prudent and justifiable measure in order to evade its baneful effects; thus to baffle the designs of a corrupt and despotic Ministry. Our brethren of the Northern Colonies have already declared their opposition to this Act; and as it equally affects the good people of this loyal Province of Maryland, a number of respectable gentlemen, friends to liberty, met at a public house in Chestertown, on Friday, the 13th of May, 1774; when a Chairman was chosen; a Committee appointed; and it was agreed upon to have a general meeting of the inhabitants of the county, on Wednesday, the 18th of the same month, to declare their sentiments respecting the importation of tea, while subject to a duty. A numerous and very respectable meeting was accordingly held, when the Committee was enlarged, and the following resolutions were repeatedly read, and unanimously agreed to, viz:

1st. Resolved, That we acknowledge his Majesty George the Third, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, to be our rightful and lawful Sovereign, to whom we owe and promise all dutiful allegiance and submission.

2d. Resolved, That no duties or taxes can constitutionally be imposed on us, but by own consent, given personally, or by our Representatives

3d. Resolved, That the Act of the British Parliament of the 7th of George the Third, (Chapter 46th,) subjecting the Colonies to the payment of a duty on tea, for the purpose of raising a revenue in America, is unconstitutional, oppressive; and calculated to enslave the Americans.

4th. Resolved, therefore, That whoever shall import, or in any way aid or assist in importing, or introducing from any part of Great Britain, or any other place whatsoever into this town or county, any tea, subject to the payment of a duty imposed by the aforesaid Act of Parliament; or, whoever shall wilfully and knowingly sell, buy, or consume, or in any way assist in the sale, purchase, or consumption of any tea imported as aforesaid, subject to a duty, he, or they, shall be stigmatized as enemies to the liberties of America.

5th. Resolved, That we will not only steadily adhere to the foregoing resolves, but will endeavour to excite our worthy neighbours to a like patriotic conduct; and whoever amongst us shall refuse his concurrence, or after complying, shall desert the cause, and knowingly deviate from the true spirit and meaning of these our resolutions, we will mark him out, as inimical to the liberties of America, an unworthy member of the community, and a person not deserving our notice or regard.

6th. Resolved, That the foregoing resolves be printed, that our brethren in this and the other Colonies may know our sentiments as they are therein contained.

Signed by order of the Committee,

W. WRIGHT, Clerk.

N.B. The above resolves were entered into upon a discovery of the late importation of the dutiable tea, (in the brigantine Geddes, of this port) for some of the neighbouring counties. Further measures are in contemplation, in consequence of a late and very alarming Act of Parliament.

TO THE FREEMEN OF AMERICA.

It is impossible to review the advantages we derive from our connection with Great Britain, without wishing it to be perpetual. We were formed by her laws and religion. We are clothed with her manufactures, and protected by her fleets and armies. Her Kings are the umpires of our disputes, and the centre of our Union. In a word, the island of Britain is the fortress in which we are sheltered from the machinations of all the Powers of Europe. No wonder therefore, we look forward with horror to those convulsions that must attend (ages hence,) our separation from that country.

The councils of a State, like the faculties of the mind, are liable to prejudice and decay. The conduct of the British Parliament towards America for several years past, carries strong marks of insanity and folly. The laws of mechanics, apply in politics as well as philosophy; a grain of wisdom properly managed, will outweigh in this science the whole armies and navies of Britain.

We have been in some measure passive spectators of the manoeuvres of our mother country. A Stamp Act; Revenue Acts; a Board of Commissioners; Judges of Admiralty, invested with new powers; the Military set over the Civil Governours, and both rendered independent of the people; Restrictions on our trade; Dissolutions of our Assemblies; and disregarded petitions for redress of these grievances, have all been borne with a temper and moderation, which show how much we value peace and order, and how inestimable we esteem the advantages of being connected with Great Britain. We have only asserted our right to freedom. This has produced in some places, a few trifling commotions, but these were conducted only by mobs, which are always the first-born offspring of oppression, and which are not unknown even in Britain; and particularly remembered there for having insulted our King a few years ago at his Palace gates. Future ages will hardly believe that we were descended from British ancestors, when they read of our having borne so long, and resented so feebly, the outrages committed by a British Parliament, upon the dearest birth-right of a Briton.

Moderation and gratitude are sometimes an over-balance for self-preservation. The first law of nature cannot be contradicted by any social or national obligations. The man who refuses to assert his right to liberty, property, and life, is guilty of the worst kind of rebellion; he commits high treason against God.

Liberty, property, and life, are now but names in America. Liberty is levelled by the Declarative Act of Parliament to tax us without our consent; property is now annihilated by the late Act of Parliament, which destroys the trade of Boston; our countrymen are condemned without being heard; a whole community suffer for the conduct of a few individuals. Newspapers, and a private letter from a Governour, are their only accusers; and thousands, accustomed to affluence, are reduced to the lowest species of poverty: "they cannot work, and to beg, they are ashamed." We dare not even call our lives our own. The next act of Parliament may summons our Assemblymen and patriots to expiate their virtue at Tyburn.

New-York, Philadelphia, and Charlestown, cannot expect to escape the fate of Boston. Our doom is delayed only with a view of dividing and weakening us. We have offered the same indignity to the British Parliament, and have done nearly the same injury to the property of the East India Company. When the spirits of our brethren in Boston are subdued, our rivers and shores will probably be crowded with men-of-war, and lined with tide waiters.

An union of the Colonies, like an electric rod, will render harmless the storms of British vengeance and tyranny. Remember my dear countrymen, we are contending for the crown and prerogative of our King, as well as for liberty, property, and life. The British Parliament have violated the Constitution in usurping his supreme jurisdiction over us. Our brethren in Boston may perhaps stand in need of our counsels; every stroke aimed at them, is levelled against the vitals of all America. Success has hitherto crowned our attempts to save our country. Virtue, unanimity, and perseverance, are invincible.

Philadelphia, May 18, 1774.

Farmington, Connecticut, May 19, 1774.

Early in the morning was found the following handbill, posted up in various parts of the town, viz:

"To pass through the fire at six o'clock this evening, in honour to the immortal goddess of Liberty, the late infamous Act of the British Parliament for farther distressing the American Colonies; the place of execution will be the public parade, where all Sons of Liberty are desired to attend."

Accordingly, a very numerous and respectable body were assembled, of near one thousand people, when a huge pole, just forty-five feet high was erected, and consecrated to the shrine of Liberty; after which the Act of Parliament for blocking up the Boston harbour was read aloud; sentenced to the flames, and executed by the hands of the common hangman; then the following Resolves were passed, nem. con.:

1st. That it is the greatest dignity, interest, and happiness of every American to be united with our parent State, while our liberties are duly secured, maintained, and supported by our rightful Sovereign, whose person we greatly revere; whose Government while duly administered, we are ready with our lives and properties to support.

2d. That the present Ministry, being instigated by the Devil, and led on by their wicked and corrupt hearts, have a design to take away our liberties and properties, and to enslave us for ever.

3d. That the late Act which their malice hath caused to be passed in Parliament, for blocking up the port of Boston, is unjust, illegal, and oppressive; and that we, and every American, are sharers in the insults offered to the town of Boston.

4th. That those pimps and parasites who dared to advise their master to such detestable measures, be held in utter abhorrence by us and every American, and their names loaded with the curses of all succeeding generations.

5th. That we scorn the chains of slavery; we despise every attempt to rivet them upon us; we are the sons of freedom, and resolved, that, till time shall be no more, that god-like virtue shall blazon our hemisphere.

COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE AT WESTERLY TO THE COMMITTEE OF BOSTON.

Westerly, May 19, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: With mingled concern and indignation, the Committee of Correspondence for this town have seen an Act for blocking up the harbour of Boston.

Rome designing to destroy the city of Carthage, barbarously required of the Carthaginians that they should forsake their city, and remove their habitations twelve miles from the sea. The consideration of the inveterate hatred occasioned by the long and bloody wars which had subsisted between Rome and Carthage; the remembrance of several hundred thousand Romans killed in those wars, and several hundred towns plundered by the Carthaginians, are some excuse for the Roman severity; but the cruel and unnatural treatment which the town of Boston has received from Great Britain, will admit of no palliation. The metropolis of a most affectionate and loyal Colony, which in all the wars of Great Britain hath gloriously supported the British interest in America, and even by their wise and vigorous efforts made a conquest which gave peace to Europe, is now threatened with destruction, for no other cause, but because the people have bravely determined not to become slaves.

We have long felt for the town of Boston; we heartily sympathize with our brethren upon this alarming occasion; we are much pleased with the noble firmness with which this cruel edict is received in Boston. We highly approve the measures taken by the town, and are entirely of opinion that the joint resolution of the Colonies to stop all importations from and exportations to Great Britain and the West Indies, until the Act is repealed, will infallibly produce the desired effect.

The country which we possess, blessed be God! affords every necessary of life. We are morally certain, that with the common blessings of Heaven upon our industry and frugality, we can live comfortably, without importing a single article from Britain or the West Indies; and we are equally certain, that neither England nor the West Indies can subsist long without us; their own preservation therefore, will compel them to do us justice.

This horrid attack upon the town of Boston, we consider not as an attempt upon that town singly, but upon the whole Continent. We are therefore determined to use our whole influence for the support of the town of Boston, in the same manner as if the attack had been made on the metropolis of this Colony; and we doubt not but the other Colonies will consider this arbitrary and tyrannical edict in the same light, and heartily unite with the friends of liberty in Boston in support of the common cause.

That infinite wisdom may direct and preserve all the Colonies, is the ardent prayer of, &c., &c.

COMMITTEE OF PORTSMOUTH, NEW-HAMPSHIRE, TO THE COMMITTEE OF BOSTON.

Extract.

Portsmouth, May 19, 1774.

We think the late Act of Parliament, to shut up the port of Boston, of the most extraordinary nature, and fatal tendency. Administration are taking every method to disunite the Colonies, thereby to render the noble opposition to their arbitrary and destructive measures abortive. We hope a firm union of all the Colonies will still subsist, and that such a plan may be devised, and resolutely pursued by all as may prevent the cruel effects of this Act.

We heartily sympathize with you under your present difficult and alarming situation; and we will exert ourselves to carry any plan into effect which may be concerted by the Colonies for the general relief. We sincerely wish you resolution and prosperity in the common cause; and shall ever view your interest as our own. And are with the highest esteem, &c.

Williamsburg, Virginia, May 19, 1774.

The following Letter is supposed to be written by Mr. Edmund Burke, of the House of Commons.

To the Right Honourable Lord NORTH:

MY LORD: As questions of the highest national importance are now to be decided, and as measures pregnant with danger and ruin are meditated, permit an American to relate a few historical facts, which merit your most serious attention. This is probably the only address you will receive on behalf of the Colonies; when, friends, convinced of the efficacy of reason or truth in the present contest, have resolved to leave the British Government, to gain wisdom by the more certain, but expensive means of unhappy experience; concluding, that the consequences which must result from one hostile effort against America, will produce more conviction than volumes of argument. But as the public papers have been for some weeks abandoned to those incendiaries who wish to spread carnage and devastation through America, I shall make one solitary attempt to frustrate their hopes, and vindicate the claims of the Colonies.

At the discovery of America, no person imagined any part of that Continent to be within the Realm of England, which was circumscribed within certain known and established limits. Whatever was the title of the Kings of England, at that time, to any share of America, it must have been an acquired title: and the Sovereign then had, and still has, an undoubted prerogative right, to alienate for ever from the Realm without consent of Parliament, any acquisition of foreign territory. This right has been constantly exercised by the Kings of England, at almost every treaty of peace, and at the sale of Dunkirk, &c., and it was particularly manifested by the Act for annexing Gibraltar to the Realm. Conformable to this prerogative right King James the First, and Charles the First, did alienate unto certain persons large territories in America, and by the most solemn compacts, did form them into separate civil States, with all the powers of distinct legislation and Government; particularly those of making peace and war, coining money, pardoning crimes, conferring titles and dignities, erecting and incorporating boroughs and cities, establishing ports, harbours, &c., with a grant and release of all subsidies and customs, to be levied within the same, and an express exemption from foreign taxation. This is evident from the most ancient Charters of Virginia and Massachusetts Bay, but especially from that of Maryland, which I have particularly stated in another performance. From these charters it manifestly appears to have been the Royal intention, to form these Colonies into distinct States like Jersey, Guernsey, Isle of Man, &c., dependent on the Crown, but not on the Parliament of England; and conformable to this intention, we find that when a bill was several times brought into the House of Commons, to secure the people of England a liberty of fishing on the coasts of America, messages were sent to the Commons by those Monarchs, requiring them to proceed no further in the matter, and alleging that "America was without the Realm and jurisdiction of Parliament;" and on this principle the Royal assent was withheld, during all those reigns, from every bill affecting the Colonies. These and other facts, which appear on the journals of Parliament, joined to the charters of the Colonies, fully demonstrate that they were really and intentionally created distinct States, and exempted from the authority of Parliament. And their inhabitants having on the faith of such fundamental terms and conditions, accepted, cultivated, and improved the territories thus granted, have an indefeasible right to maintain and enjoy the privileges so acquired; and nothing but an act of union, made with their own consent, can annex them to the Realms, or subject them to its Legislature.

The fight of the Crown to alienate the soil of the Colonies, has not been disputed; but the right of exempting their inhabitants from the jurisdiction of Parliament, has been denied without cause. Allegiance and subjection are due from a people to their Sovereign; but the allegiance of subjects to subjects, is an absurdity unknown to the laws of this Kingdom. The freedom of Britains consists in this, that they participate the power of making those laws by which they are governed; and wherever this freedom is enjoyed, the Legislative power must necessarily be confined to those who partake of it, either in person or delegation. So long as the people of America resided within the Realm, shared in its Government, and were protected by it, so long they were necessarily bound to obey, and support that Government; but when, by the consent of their Sovereign, they migrated to Ireland and America, though they continued within the King's allegiance, yet ceasing to participate or enjoy the Legislative power of this Realm, the operation of that power over them necessarily terminated; and nothing more was necessary to emancipate the people of America from the authority of Parliament, than to permit them to leave the Realm; which nobody will deny the King's right of doing; and should the people of England, by their Delegates, continue to exercise the powers of legislation and taxation upon the Colonies, after such separation from the Realm, they must exalt themselves to the sovereignty of America, and render the inhabitants of that country the subjects of subjects; a condition, more humiliating than those of the Spartan Helotes; for if a people be subject to any supreme power, in which they have no participation, whether it be legal in a single person, or in thousands, the power is despotism, and the subjects of it are slaves.

After the death of King Charles the First, the Commonwealth Parliament, which usurped the rights of the Crown, naturally concluded, that by those rights they had acquired some kind of supremacy over the Colonies of America; the people of New England, had indeed approved their proceedings, and were therefore left without any exercise of such supremacy by the Commonwealth Parliament; but Virginia, and other places, having held out for the King, were reduced by force; and the conditions on which they submitted, clearly discover that the supremacy, claimed by this Parliament, was no more than nominal.

The Articles of the Treaty were as follow:

"1st. The Plantation of Virginia, and all the inhabitants thereof, shall be and remain in due subjection to the Commonwealth of England; not as a conquered country, but as a country submitting by their own voluntary act: and shall enjoy such freedoms and privileges as belong to the free people of England.

"2d. The General Assembly, as formerly, shall convene and transact the affairs of the Colony.

"3d. The people of Virginia shall have a free trade, as the people of England, to all places, and all nations.

4th. Virginia shall be free from all taxes, customs, and impositions whatsoever, and none shall be imposed on them, without the consent of their General Assembly; and that neither forts nor castles shall be erected, nor garrisons maintained, without their consent."

From hence your Lordship may discover, that the rights of the Colonies, in those early days, were acknowledged; and that even those who had brought a Monarch to the scaffold, had the moderation and justice to respect, and preserve those rights. Nor did the Virginians esteem the privileges granted by this treaty as any valuable acquisition; for (considering themselves as a distinct State) they in January, 1609, invested Sir William Berkley with the Government, and proclaimed Charles the Second King of England, Scotland, France, Ireland, and Virginia, some time before his restoration to England.

After the restoration, the Act of Navigation, and that of fifteenth of Charles Second, were passed; but these I have fully considered in another place; as also that of the twenty-fifth of the same reign, which for the regulation of Commerce (as the preamble expresses) first laid duties on certain articles in the Colonies. This, however, was held to be such an infringement of their rights, that a general revolution ensued in Virginia, and the King's Governour was deposed; and when after Bacon's death, this insurrection subsided, agents were sent to England, to remonstrate "against taxes and impositions being laid on the Colony "by any authority but that of the General Assembly." And this remonstrance produced a declaration from the King, under the privy seal, dated the 19th of April, 1676, declaring "that taxes ought not to be laid upon the proprietors and inhabitants of the Colony, but by the common consent of the General Assembly, except such "impositions as the Parliament should lay on the commodities imported into England, from the Colony." And though the duties which had given rise to this remonstrance and declaration were not wholly repealed until some time after, yet when a supply was wanted for the support of Government in Virginia, the King, in 1679, framed (in England) an Act for the purpose, and sent it thither by Lord Colepeper when it was passed into a law, and "enacted, by the King's most excellent Majesty, by "and with the consent of the General Assembly of the "Colony of Virginia, &c." Here we see the Sovereign naming himself as a part of the Legislature of that Province, and thereby manifesting that he considered it as a supreme Legislature. For if the Colonies be a part of the Realm it is a violation of the great Charter of King John and the bill and Declaration of Rights, for the King personally, or by his Governours, to join any other Assembly than the Parliament, in any act for raising money from them; it is to subject them to complex taxations, which are repugnant to the British Constitution.

In the year 1663 the Territory of Carolina was erected into a Principality, with the powers of a distinct state; and so jealous were the Lords Proprietaries of these privileges, that they even denied the King's right of appointing a Vice Admiral therein, for trying offences committed without the Principality: and Joseph Morton, the Governour, was dismissed from the Government for having accepted a commission of Vice Admiral from the King. -

In 1691, when the new Charter of Massachusetts Bay was granted by King William, the agents thought it not adequate to the deserts and expectations of the Province, and were unwilling to accept it. This, however, the majority of them, after consulting the most able lawyers, resolved to do, and in justification of their conduct subscribed an instrument containing the reasons of it. The last article of which will shew the idea then entertained of the rights of that Province: "The Colony," say these gentlemen, "is now made a Province, and the General Court has, "with the King's approbation, as much power in New England, as the King and Parliament have in England. "They have all English privileges and liberties, and can "be touched by no law and by no tax, but of their own "making." Nor had the people of New England any reason to alter this opinion of their rights until since the conclusion of the last war; no imposition upon them having in that long interval been attempted by Parliamentary authority. There are many other facts which might be adduced to the same purport; but these will suffice to shew that the claim of the Colonies to the privileges of distinct Legislation and Government, and to an exemption from Parliamentary taxation, are not new, as some have ignorantly or wickedly pretended. They will also shew, that from the earliest years of their settlement the rights of the Colonies have been known, and with but little variation have been acknowledged, respected, and maintained, even by the Legislature of this country, and the few instances which have happened to the contrary, may be considered as usurpations of the strong against the weak; and "quod ab initio injustum est, nullum potest habere juris effectum." - Grotius.

There are other grounds, however, on which the adversaries of the Colonies have chosen to manage this contest; and upon these grounds I shall meet them in my next.

I am, my Lord, yours, &c., &c.

E.B.

FROM A MEMBER OF THE VIRGINIA ASSEMBLY TO HIS CORRESPONDENT IN LONDON,

Extract.

Williamsburg, May 20, 1774.

Infinite astonishment, and equal resentment, has seized every one here on account of the war sent to Boston. It is the universal determination to stop the exportation of tobacco, pitch, tar, lumber, &c., and to stop all importation from Britain while this act of hostility continues. We every day expect an express from Boston, and it appears to me incontestably certain, that the above measures will be universally adopted. We see with concern, that this plan will be most extensively hurtful to our fellow-subjects in Britain; nor would we have adopted it, if Heaven had left us any other way to secure our liberty, and prevent the total ruin of ourselves and our posterity to endless ages. A wicked Ministry must answer for all the consequences. I hope the wise and good on your side will pity and forgive us. The House is now pushing on the public business for which we were called here at this time; but before we depart our measures will be settled and agreed on. The plan proposed is extensive; it is wise, and I hope, under God, it will not fail of success. America possesses virtue unknown and unfelt by the abominable sons of corruption who planned this weak and wicked enterprise.

At a Meeting of between two and three hundred of the respectable Inhabitants of the City of Philadelphia, at the City Tavern, on Friday evening, May 20th, 1774, the Letters from the Boston Committee were read: when it was Agreed, That a Committee be appointed to correspond with our sister Colonies.

That John Dickinson, Esq., William Smith, D. D.,* Edward Pennington,* Joseph Fox, John Nixon,* John M. Nesbit, Samuel Howell,* Thos. Mifflin,* Jos. Reade, Thomas Wharton, Jun., Benjamin Marshall, Joseph

Moulder,* Thomas Barclay,* George Clymer,* Charles Thomson,* Jeremiah Warder, Jun.,* John Cox,* John Gibson,* and Thomas Penrose, compose the Committee of Correspondence until an alteration is made by a more general meeting of the inhabitants.

That the Committee be instructed to write to the people of Boston, that we truly feel for their unhappy situation. That we consider them as suffering in the general cause; that we recommend to them firmness, prudence and moderation; and that we shall continue to evince our firm adherence to the cause of American liberty.

That the above resolutions be transmitted by the Committee to the other Colonies.

That the Committee be instructed to apply to the Governour to call the Assembly of the Province.

That they be authorized to call a meeting of the inhabitants when necessary.

On the day following, these gentlemen of the Committee whose names are marked thus, * having met, the following letter was drawn up and signed by them, to be immediately forwarded by Mr. Paul Revere to Boston. Copies of it were transmitted to New-York, and most of the Southern Colonies. The gentlemen of the Committee who did not attend at the first meeting were prevented by necessary business, but the proceedings of that meeting have been since fully approved by them.

A Letter from the Committee of the City of Philadelphia to the Committee of Boston, sent by Mr. Paul Revere, dated May 21st, 1774:

GENTLEMEN: We have received your very interesting letter, together with another from the town of Boston, and the vote they have passed on the present alarming occasion; and such measures have been pursued thereon as the shortness of the time would allow. To collect the sense of this large city is difficult; and when their sense is obtained they must not consider themselves as authorized to judge or act for this populous Province in a business so deeply interesting as the present is to all British America.

A very respectable number of the inhabitants of this city was, however, assembled last evening, in order to consult what was proper to be done, and after reading the sundry papers you transmitted to us, and also a letter from the Committee of Correspondence at New-York, the enclosed resolves were passed, in which you may be assured we are sincere, and that you are considered as suffering in the general cause. But what further advice to offer on this sad occasion, is a matter of the greatest difficulty, which not only requires more mature deliberation, but also that we should take the necessary measures to obtain the general sentiments of our fellow-inhabitants of this Province, as well as our sister Colonies. If satisfying the East India Company for the damage they have sustained would put an end to this unhappy controversy, and leave us on the footing of constitutional liberty for the future, it is presumed that neither you nor we could continue a moment in doubt what part to act; for it is not the value of the tea, but the indefeasible right of giving and granting our own money; a right from which we never can recede. That is the matter now in consideration.

By what means the truly desirable circumstance of a reconciliation and future harmony with our mother country on constitutional grounds may be obtained, is indeed a weighty question. Whether by the method you have suggested of a non-importation and non-exportation agreement, or by a general Congress of Deputies from the different Colonies, clearly to state what we conceive our rights, and to make a claim or petition of them to his Majesty, in firm, but decent and dutiful terms, so as that we may know by what line to conduct ourselves in future, we now the great points to be determined. The latter, we have reason to think, would be most agreeable to the people of this Province, and the first step that ought to be taken; the former may be reserved as our last resource, should the other fail, which, we trust, will not be the case, as many wise and good men in the mother country begin to see the necessity of a good understanding with the Colonies upon the general plan of liberty as well as commerce.

We shall endeavour, as soon as possible, to collect the sentiments of the people of this Province, and the neighbouring Colonies, on these grand questions, and should also be glad to know your sentiments thereon; in the mean time, with sincere fellow-feelings of your sufferings, and great regard to your persons, we are, gentlemen,

Yours, &c., &c.

GOUVERNEUR MORRIS TO MR. PENN.

New-York, May 20th, 1774.

DEAR SIR: You have heard, and you will hear, a great deal about politics, and in the heap of chaff you may find some grains of good sense. Believe me, sir, freedom and religion are only watchwords. We have appointed a Committee, or rather we have nominated one. Let me give you the history of it. It is needless to premise, that the lower orders of mankind are more easily led by specious appearances than those of a more exalted station. This, and many similar propositions, you know better than your humble servant.

The troubles in America, during Grenville's administration, put our gentry upon this finesse. They stimulated some daring coxcombs to rouse the mob into an attack upon the bounds of order and decency. These fellows became the Jack Cades of the day, the leaders in all the riots, the belwethers of the flock. The reason of the manoeuvre in those who wished to keep fair with the Government, and at the same time to receive the incense of popular applause, you will readily perceive. On the whole, the shepherds were not much to blame in a politic point of view. The belwethers jingled merrily, and roared out liberty, and property, and religion, and a multitude of cant terms, which every one thought he understood, and was egregiously mistaken. For you must know the shepherds kept the dictionary of the day, and, like the mysteries of the ancient mythology, it was not for profane eyes or ears. This answered many purposes; the simple flock put themselves entirely under the protection of these most excellent shepherds. By and bye behold a great metamorphosis, without the help of Ovid or his divinities, but entirely effectuated by two modern Genii, the god of Ambition and the goddess of Faction. The first of these prompted the shepherds to shear some of their flock, and then, in conjunction with the other, converted the belwethers into shepherds. That we have been in hot water with the British Parliament ever since every body knows. Consequently these new shepherds had their hands full of employment. The old ones kept themselves least in sight, and a want of confidence in each other was not the least evil which followed. The port of Boston has been shut up. These sheep, simple as they are, cannot be gulled as heretofore. In short, there is no ruling them; and now, to leave the metaphor, the heads of the mobility grow dangerous to the gentry, and how to keep them down is the question. While they correspond with the other Colonies, call and dismiss popular assemblies, make resolves to bind the consciences of the rest of mankind, bully poor printers, and exert with full force all their other tribunitary powers, it is impossible to curb them.

But art sometimes goes farther than force, and, therefore, to trick them handsomely a Committee of patricians was to be nominated, and into their hands was to be committed the majesty of the people, and the highest trust was to be reposed in them by a mandate that they should take care, quod respublica non capiat injuriam. The tribunes, through the want of good legerdemain in the senatorial order, perceived the finesse; and yesterday I was present at a grand division of the city, and there I beheld my fellow-citizens very accurately counting all their chickens, not only before any of them were hatched, but before above one half of the eggs were laid. In short, they fairly contended about the future forms of our Government, whether it should be founded upon aristocratic or democratic principles.

I stood in the balcony, and on my right hand were ranged all the people of property, with some few poor dependants, and on the other all the tradesmen, &c., who thought it worth their while to leave daily labour for the good of the country. The spirit of the English Constitution has yet a little influence left, and but a little. The remains of it, however, will give the wealthy people a superiority this time, but would they secure it they must banish all school-masters and confine all knowledge to themselves. This cannot be. The mob begin to think and to reason. Poor reptiles! it is with them a vernal morning; they are struggling to cast off their winter's slough, they bask in the sunshine, and ere noon they will bite, depend upon it. The gentry begin to fear this. Their Committee will be appointed, they will deceive the people, and again forfeit a share of their confidence. And if these instances of what with one side is policy, with the other perfidy, shall continue to increase, and become more frequent, farewell aristocracy. I see, and I see it with fear and trembling, that if the disputes with Great Britain continue, we shall be under the worst of all possible dominions; we shall be under the domination of a riotous mob.

It is the interest of all men, therefore, to seek for reunion with the parent State. A safe compact seems, in my poor opinion, to be now tendered. Internal taxation is to be left with ourselves. The right of regulating trade to be vested in Great Britain, where alone is found the power of protecting it. I trust you will agree with me, that this is the only possible mode of union. Men by nature are free as air. When they enter into society, there is, there must be, an implied compact, for there never yet was an express one, that a part of this freedom shall be given up for the security of the remainder. But what part? The answer is plain. The least possible, considering the circumstances of the society, which constitute what may be called its political necessity.

And what does this political necessity require in the present instance? Not that Britain should lay imposts upon us for the support of Government, nor for its defence; not that she should regulate our internal police. These things affect us only. She can have no right to interfere. To these things we ourselves are competent. But can it be said that we are competent to the regulating of trade? The position is absurd, for this affects every part of the British Empire, every part of the habitable earth. If Great Britain, if Ireland, if America, if all of them are to make laws of trade, there must be a collision of these different authorities, and then who is to decide the vis major? To recur to this, if possible to be avoided, is the greatest of all great absurdities.

Political necessity, therefore, requires, that this power should be placed in the hands of one part of the Empire. Is it a question which part? Let me answer by taking another. Pray, which part of the Empire protects trade? Which part of the Empire receives almost immense sums to guard the rest? And what danger is in the trust? Some men object that England will draw all the profits of our trade into her coffers. All that she can, undoubtedly. But unless a reasonable compensation for his trouble be left to the merchant here, she destroys the trade, and then she will receive no profit from it.

If I remember, in one of those kind letters with which you have honoured me, you desire my thoughts on matters as they rise. How much pleasure I take in complying with your requests let my present letter convince you. If I am faulty in telling things which you know better than I do, you must excuse this fault, and a thousand others, for which I can make no apology. I am, sir, &c.

Mr. Penn,

GOUVERNEUR MORRIS

Newport, Rhode Island, May 20, 1774.

At a town meeting, called and held at Newport, in the Colony Of Rhode Island, the 20th day of May, 1774:

HENRY WARD, Esq., Moderator.

Voted, That we have the deepest sense of the injuries done to the town of Boston, by the Act of Parliament lately passed for putting an end to their trade, and destroying the port. And that we consider this attack upon them as utterly subversive of American liberty; for the same power may at pleasure destroy the trade, and shut up the ports of every Colony in its turn; so that there will be a total end of all property,

Voted, That we will unite with the other Colonies in all reasonable and proper measures to procure the establishment of the rights of the Colonies upon a just and permanent foundation; and particularly, in case the other Colonies shall, upon this alarming occasion, put a stop to their trade to Great Britain and the West Indies, that we will heartily join with them in the measure.

Voted, That the Committee of Correspondence for this town, immediately transmit a copy of these resolutions to the Committee of Correspondence for the town of Boston.

Voted, That the Committee of Correspondence of this town immediately send a copy of the above resolutions to each town in this Colony.*

WILLIAM CODDINGTON, Town Clerk.

GENERAL GAGE TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

Boston, May 20th, 1774.

SIR: His Majesty having judged fit to order me to return to my command of his forces in North America, and also to appoint me to be Governour of his Province of the Massachusetts Bay, I think it necessary to acquaint you therewith, and at the same time to assure you of my readiness to co-operate with you in all matters that concern the good of his Majesty's service, and the welfare of his subjects.

I have the honour to be, with great regard, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

THOMAS GAGE.

To the Honourable John Trumbull, &c.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO SUNDRY GENTLEMEN IN NEW-YORK.

Boston, May 21, 1774.

On receipt of your letter by express, on advice of the late tyrannical Acts of Parliament, we of the Committee specially assembled, and feasted on the welcome repast. A general joy spread through the whole city, who had the most pleasing resentment of the noble and patriotic generosity of our worthy brethren in New-York, who even prevented our solicitations for assistance. We are in the most assiduous and vigorous motion here. We have sent circular letters to every town and district in the Province; and though we have not had time to receive answers from distant towns, we have this day received from an inland town a full declaration of their resolution to stand by us with their lives and fortunes: another topic for Wedderburne to harangue upon. The British merchants themselves have already begun to anticipate our non-importation agreement, which will be confirmed by a brig which sailed yesterday for London, with countermands and letters enough expressive of the general sense of the Colonies, as far as we have been able to collect it.

The friends of Government (or rather despotism) here, finding their patron Hutchinson in the deepest distress, have been handing about an address to him, applauding his virtue and public spirit, declaring his letters quite harmless, and imploring his interposition with his Majesty on their behalf; at least that the port may be opened; some of them have talked loudly of giving largely to the sum proposed to be raised by them to compensate the East India Company's loss in their tea; but this project drags heavily, though Mr. Hutchinson sent word to the town, that in case they would pay only the first cost of the tea, he would engage that every thing else should be made easy. They absolutely tremble with a dread of the junction of the Colonies. and a suspension of the trade with Great Britain, which, at this critical season, must bury the authors of this complicated, treasonable conspiracy against the peace and security of the nation, in the ruins of their own scheme.

It is given out here, by some of the crew, that your Chamber of Commerce have written letters to Captain Chambers, offering, if he will be easy, and return, they will pay him for his tea, and provide him the command of a good ship, but this report gains no credit here.

* The above votes were passed in a very full meeting, and it is with great pleasure we inform the public that there never appeared a more universal spirit, firmness, and determined resolution, to stand by and support our brethren of Boston against the diabolical Ministerial plan of slavery, there being but one or two hands held up against every thing bearing the least imaginable appearance of liberty. It is proposed that a number of gentlemen immediately form a company for carrying on the woollen manufacture in this Colony in the most extensive manner, there being quite wool enough raised here to clothe all the inhabitants.

Philadelphia, May 23, 1774.

By intelligence from Pittsburg of the 1st of May, we learn that about the 26th of April, as one Stephens, with two Indians, (a Shawanese and a Delaware,) were going down the Ohio in a canoe, (that had been a few days before robbed by three men and a woman of the Cherokee nation, after they had killed one white man, and wounded another,) he discovered a canoe with people near Whaling, coming up the river, which he suspected to be Indians, and strove to avoid them by making towards the opposite shore, when they were fired upon twice, and the two Indians in his canoe killed; but he could not perceive who it was that fired, as the enemy lay concealed in the bushes. He then threw himself into the river, and observed the canoe that was coming up to contain white men. He made towards it, and found therein Colonel Michael Cresap, and some other men, who pretended entire ignorance of his misfortune, although he, the said Stephens, declares, that, from several circumstances, he suspects the murder was committed by persons in confederacy with Cresap, as he heard him threaten to put every Indian to death he should meet with on the river; and that if he could get a number of men together sufficient for the undertaking, he was determined to mark a small Indian village on Yellow Creek.

We also learn, that Major Macdonald, of Virginia, on his return to Pittsburg from the Big Runaway, gives account that a skirmish had happened between some Virginians and Indians, in which some were killed on both sides, which had occasioned the surveyors and grantees of land from that Colony to return; and that on his way to Pittsburg, on the 27th of April, he stopped at the house of Colonel Cresap, near Whaling, where one Mahon came and informed that fourteen Indians, in five canoes, had called at his house going down the river, and asked him for provisions, which he refused, telling them that two of their brethren, the day before, had been killed by the white people, which these Indians heard nothing of before, and proceeded down the river. That, upon this news, Cresap collected fifteen men, followed and overtook them at the mouth of a small creek, where they had hauled up the canoes, and were waiting with expectation of being attacked as a consequence of what they had heard. That Cresap, spying the canoes, fired among them, upon which a skirmish ensued: and the Indians retired after the loss of one man on each side, and left in the canoes sixteen kegs of rum, and some saddles and bridles.

Captain Crauford, and Mr. Neville, of Virginia, from Pittsburg, informed, that about the 3d instant, in their way there, they met a number of the inhabitants moving off their places, and with them a party who produced several Indian scalps, and said they got them as follows: "That a number of Indians encamped at the mouth of Yellow Creek, opposite to which two men named Greathouse and Baker, with some others, had assembled themselves, at a house belonging to the said Baker, and invited two men and two women of the Indians over the creek to drink with them, when, after making them drunk, they killed and scalped them; and two more Indian men then came over, who met with the like fate. After which six of their men came over to seek their friends, and on approaching the bank where the white men lay concealed, perceived them, and endeavoured to retreat back, but received a fire from the shore, which killed two Indians, who fell in the river; two fell dead in the canoe, and a fifth was so badly wounded that he could hardly crawl up the bank." Among the unfortunate sufferers was an Indian woman, wife to a white man, one of the traders; and she had an infant at her breast, which these inhuman butchers providentially spared and took with them. Mr. Neville asked the man who had the infant if he was not near enough to have taken its mother prisoner without killing her? He replied, that he was about six feet from her when he shot her exactly in the forehead, and cut the hoppers with which the child's cradle hung at her back; and he thought to have knocked out its brains, but remorse prevented him, on seeing the child fall with its mother. This party further informed them, that after they had killed these Indians they ran off with their families, and that they thought the whole country was fled, as Cresap, who was the perpetrator of the first offence, was then also on his way to Redstone.

Address of the Episcopal Ministers and Wardens in BOSTON, to Governour HUTCHINSON, presented MONDAY, MAY 23, 1774, at the Castle.

SIR: The Ministers of the Episcopal Churches in Boston, and the neighbouring towns, with as many of the Wardens. as could conveniently attend, hearing of your intention to embark in a short time for England, beg leave to express our unfeigned gratitude for your generous attention, and unwearied application to the important interests of this Province, in which your wisdom and integrity have been equally conspicuous. If any of our fellow-citizens have viewed your administration in a less favourable light, we are persuaded it must be owing to some misapprehension of your Excellency's intentions. But that which falls more immediately within our province, is the regard you have always paid to the interests of religion, and the favourable notice you have taken of the Church of England within your Government. Be pleased, sir, to accept this sincere testimony of our respect and gratitude, together with our earnest prayers that the divine blessing may attend you through the remaining stages of your life, and reward you with an eternity of happiness in the life to come.

To which his EXCELLENCY was pleased to return the following Answer:

GENTLEMEN: Whatever favourable notice I may have taken of the Church of England, the grateful return you have made in this mark of respect, is alone an ample reward, and will be an additional inducement to me, in whatever station I may be the remaining part of my life, sincerely to wish your prosperity, and to contribute every thing in my power to the advancement of the interest of religion among you.

Address of the Justices of the Court of General Sessions of the Peace, for the County of SUFFOLK, in MASSACHUSETTS, to his Excellency Governour GAGE. Presented on TUESDAY, MAY 24, 1774.

Province of MASSACHUSETTS BAY:

To his Excellency the Honourable THOMAS GAGE, Esq., Governour, Commander-in-chief, and Vice Admiral of said Province, and Lieutenant General of his Majesty's Forces in NORTH AMERICA:

SIR: The Justices of his Majesty's Court of General Sessions of the Peace for the county of Suffolk, are happy in having an opportunity before the close of the present term, at once to testify their loyalty to the King, and to pay your Excellency their dutiful respects, on your advancement to the Chair of Government in this Province.

The appointment of a gentleman of your Excellency's eminence and character, we esteem as a mark of the royal favour; we flatter ourselves that it will be acceptable to the people over whom you preside, as it may afford them encouragement that the powers with which you are invested, will invariably be applied to the promotion of their peace and prosperity, and thereby they may lose the remembrance of their former troubles.

We are sensible that the cares of Government are at all times burthensome, and more peculiarly so when increased by any public dissensions. We therefore wish your Excellency that wisdom which is from above, to direct you in every department both of office and duty, and that under your auspices the people of your charge may ever enjoy the benefits resulting from a just and due execution of the laws, even security to their persons and property, and the happiness of British subjects.

The administration of justice, we consider as the principal duty of Kings; in this view, conformable to our duty, we would tender to your Excellency the earliest assurances that the Executive powers wherewith we are intrusted, by our commission, shall in all respects be employed for the preservation of the peace and good order of this county; and that both as citizens and Magistrates, we will afford every assistance in our power, towards rendering your Excellency's administration easy and happy to yourself, and effective of the most permanent tranquillity and welfare of this community.

To which Address his EXCELLENCY was pleased to return the following Answer:

GENTLEMEN: The loyalty you express to the King, and your kind Address to me on my appointment to this Government, claim my warmest acknowledgments.

I receive the greatest satisfaction in the assurances you give of your intentions towards the preservation of the peace and welfare of the community, and return you thanks for the assistance you offer to render my administration easy and happy.

I beg you to believe, that as it is my duty, so it is my inclination to give a close attention to the administration of justice, and the due execution of the laws; and that I shall exert every power lodged in my hands, for the protection of his Majesty's subjects, that every individual may enjoy the blessings peculiar to a British Constitution, by being secured both in his person and property.

FROM PHILADELPHIA TO THE BOSTON COMMITTEE,
Extract.

Philadelphia, May 24, 1774.

We lament with you the distress of Boston, and think Great Britain must be out of her senses. We are fully sensible your cause is the common cause of all the Colonies; we must have a push for it, with all our strength against the whole strength of Great Britain; by sea they will beat us; by land, they will not attempt us; we must try it out in a way of commerce.

1st. By suspending all trade with Great Britain, we can lessen the revenue of the Crown near a million sterling per annum.

2d. By suspending all trade with the West Indies, we can starve them and ruin their plantations; by withholding our provisions and lumber, in six months, which will stop the four and a half per cent to the Crown, ruin a great number of merchants in London, who are concerned in the West Indies, and deliver us from the slow poison we usually import from thence.

3d. By withholding flax-seed from Ireland, we can ruin the linen manufactory in twelve months. This will reduce about three hundred thousand people to a want of employ; which, with near an equal number of British manufacturers in Great Britain reduced to the same state, will soon muster tumults enough to fill their hands and hearts at home, for there is no satisfying starving people, but by killing or feeding them.

These are the means we are coolly deliberating; we have other things in contemplation; as stopping our ports entirely, and laying up all our shipping; and some other things; we shall try to convene a general Congress of all the Colonies as soon as may be. May God give wisdom and firmness, prudence, and patience, in this time of trial.

Talbot Court House, Maryland, May 24, 1774.

Alarmed at the present situation of America, and impressed with the most tender feelings for the distresses of their brethren and fellow-subjects in Boston, a number of gentlemen having met at this place, took into their serious consideration the part they ought to act, as friends to liberty, and to the general interests of mankind.

To preserve the rights, and to secure the property of the subject, they apprehend is the end of Government. But when those rights are invaded - when the mode prescribed by the laws for the punishment of offences, and obtaining justice, is disregarded and spurned; when, without being heard in their defence, force is employed, and the severest penalties are inflicted; the people, they clearly conceive, have a right not only to complain, but likewise to exert their utmost endeavours to prevent the effect of such measures as may be adopted by a weak or corrupt Ministry to destroy their liberties; deprive them of their property; and rob them of their dearest birth-right as Britons.

Impressed with the warmest zeal for, and loyalty to their most gracious Sovereign; and with the most sincere affection for their fellow-subjects in Great Britain, they are determined calmly and steadily, to unite with their fellow-subjects in pursuing every legal and constitutional measure, to avert the evils threatened by the late Act of Parliament for shutting up the port and harbour of Boston; to support the common rights of America; and to promote that union and harmony between the mother country and her Colonies, on which the preservation of both must finally depend.

1. TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE BRITISH COLONIES IN AMERICA

Philadelphia, May 24, 1774.

BRETHREN: Divine Providence has been pleased to place us, in this age and country, under such circumstances as to be reduced to the necessity of choosing one of these conditions: either to submit to the dominion of others holding our lives, liberties, and properties, by the precarious tenure of their will; or, to exert that understanding, resolution, and power, with which Heaven has favoured us, in striving to maintain our rank in the class of freemen.

The importance of these objects is so immensely great, and the treatment of one of these Colonies so extremely alarming, as to call for your most earnest and immediate consideration.

The subject of the present dispute between Great Britain and us is so generally understood, that to enlarge upon it is needless. We know the extent of her claims; we begin to feel the enforcement of those claims; we may foresee the consequences of them; for, reason teaching us to infer actions from principles, and events from examples, should convince us what a perfection of servitude is to be fixed on us and our posterity; I call it perfection, because the wit of man, it is apprehended, cannot devise a plan of domination more completely tending to bear down the governed into the lowest and meanest state in society, than that now meditated, avowed, and in part executed on this Continent.

If this system becomes established, it may with truth be said of the inhabitants of these Colonies, "that they hold their lives, liberties, and properties, by the precarious tenure of the will of others."*

Allowing the danger to be real at the prospect of so abject and so lasting a subjection, what must be the sentiments of judicious and virtuous Americans? They will quickly determine whether the first part of the alternative should be adopted.

Here arguments would be absurd; not more ridiculous would be an attempt to prove vice preferable to virtue; the climate of St. Vincent more pleasant than that of Pennsylvania; the natives of Indostan, under the Government of the East India Company, as happy as English freeholders; or the inhabitants of Great Britain more loyal subjects than those of the Colonies.

That liberty is inestimable, and should if possible, be preserved, you know. To pretend to convince you of the truth of the former proposition, or of the duty of the latter, would be to insult you. You must be; you are resolved to observe the most proper conduct for securing your best and dearest interests. What that may be, deserves, demands, your closest attention, your calmest deliberation.

On this head, I venture to submit some observations to your consideration. I am by every tie of interest and duty an American; and, unless my heart deceives me, I am an American in affection; my fortunes, hopes, and wishes are bound up in your prosperity; with my countrymen I must mourn or rejoice; and therefore, though I am perfectly sensible I cannot present to them reflections arising from great abilities, or extensive learning, and adorned by elegance of composition; yet, I trust they will lend a careful and candid attention to plain thoughts; dictated by honest intentions, and a participation of afflictions. Aiming solely at your welfare, and not at the trifling reputation of a writer, far be from me, the over-weening presumption that my opinions are free from error; conscious of my frailties, I desire those opinions to be severely examined; the correction of them will confer a real obligation upon me, if it serves my country; and happy shall I esteem myself, if the detection of my mistakes shall open to you a clear view of the most expedient measures to be pursued.

* Non nobis nati sumus. It is for our posterity we desire to provide - that they may not be in worse case than villains. For a free-man to be a tenant at will for his liberty! I will not agree to it. It is a tenure not to be found in all Littleton." - Speech of Sir EDWARD COKE, Lord Chief Justice. - Par. His. Vol. 8. p. 61.

There are some men who say that the late Act of Parliament, abolishing the privileges of the port of Boston, was occasioned by the particular imprudence of the inhabitants, and in no manner concerns the other Colonies.

To form a true judgment on this point, it will be proper to take a short review of some other transactions.

Great Britain, triumphant by your assistance in the late war, found at the conclusion of it, by a peace hastily bestowed on her haughty and hereditary foes, her Dominions enlarged; her fleets formidable; her armies disciplined; her trade flourishing; her enemies intimidated and exhausted; her Colonies thriving, affectionate, and dutiful.

The cup of prosperity large and full, courted her lips. Deep she drank of the enchanted beverage, as if the vessel like the cruise of Serepta's widow, could not fail; after a short but feverish repose she roused herself, may I say, as one of Homer's giants; a race,

"By whom no statutes and no rights were known."

to injure those that never injured her. She had conquered her enemies; that, other Kingdoms had done. Should no exploits of a more transcendent energy illustrate the annals of George the Third? no achievements so shockingly great and advantageous, that even the pensioned historians of the animated era must weep in tracing them, and blush in reciting them. Luckily for her fame, perhaps for her profit, the near-sighted policy and low-spirited humanity of every State, in every period, had left untouched for her, the novel glory of conquering friends, children, flesh of her flesh, and bone of her bone, unstained by any former reproach; resting in perfect tranquillity, acknowledged loyalty, and actual obedience to every kind of authority hitherto by her exercised over them; perpetually pouring into her lap those fruits of their industry, which she would permit them to collect from the different parts of the world proud of their connection with her; confiding in her; loving, revering, almost adoring her; and ready and willing as they ever had been, to spend their treasure, and their blood, at her request, in her cause.

"Parcere superbis, et debellare subjectos," was a thought that had escaped the sagacity of statesmen, and even the fancy of poets. The subtlety of Machiavel's Italian brain had missed it, and no Bæotian had blundered upon it.

The temptation was too great to be resisted; the parent resolved to seize that treasure, and if not tamely resigned, to spill that blood herself. † "O sapiens et beata regina."

The greatest ‡ Ministers who had heretofore conducted her affairs, had discovered, and declared, that we were continually toiling for her benefit; that she was sure of receiving, in the course of commerce, all those emoluments of our labour which reason could require; and, therefore, tenderly cherished and supported us. Notions too dull! and advantages too just! to merit the slightest regard from his Majesty's enlightened and magnanimous Counsellors.

"They lavish gold out of the bag, and weigh silver in the balance; they fall down; yea! they worship"(them.) Remember this, and show yourselves men.

P.P.

* "To spare the proud and to subdue the subject."

† "O wise and happy Queen."

‡ Sir Robert Walpole, and every other Minister to whom the project of taxing the Colonies was mentioned, rejected it.

"When I had the honour of serving his Majesty, I availed myself of the means of information which I derived from my office. I speak therefore, from knowledge. My materials were good; I was at pains to collect, to digest, to consider them; and I will be bold to affirm that the profit of Great Britain from the trade of the Colonies, through all its branches, is two millions a year; this is the fund that carried you triumphantly through the last war; the estates that were rented at £2,000 a year, three score years ago, are £3,000 at present; those estates sold then from fifteen to eighteen years purchase; the same may now be sold for thirty. You owe this to America; this is the price that America pays you for her protection. I dare not say how much higher these profits may be augmented. Upon the whole, I will beg leave to tell the House what is really my opinion: it is that the Stamp Act be repealed absolutely, totally, and immediately; that the reason for the repeal be assigned, because it was founded on an erroneous principle."- MR. PITT'S Speech.

All the most distinguished writers on the trade of Great Britain previous to the present reign, held a language entirely agreeing with Mr. Pitt's sentiments. - See Davenant, Child, Tucker, Beaves, Postlethwaite, &c.

Williamsburg, May 30, 1774.

The House of Burgesses, of Virginia, on the 24th of May, adopted the following Resolution, which was directed to be forthwith printed and published:

Tuesday, 24th of May, 14th George III., 1774.

"This House being deeply impressed with apprehension of the great dangers to be derived to British America from the hostile invasion of the city of Boston, in our sister Colony of Massachusetts Bay, whose commerce and harbour are on the first day of June next to be stopped by an armed force, deem it highly necessary that the said first day of June be set apart by the Members of this House, as a day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer; devoutly to implore the Divine interposition, for averting the heavy calamity which threatens destruction to our civil rights, and the evils of civil war; to give us one heart and one mind firmly to oppose, by all just and proper means, every injury to American rights; and that the minds of his Majesty and his Parliament may be inspired from above with wisdom, moderation, and justice, to remove from the loyal people of America all cause of danger from a continued pursuit of measures pregnant with their ruin.

"Ordered, therefore, That the members of this House do attend in their places at the hour of ten in the forenoon, on the said first day of June next, in order to proceed with the Speaker and the mace to the church in this city for the purposes aforesaid; and that the Reverend Mr. Price be appointed to read prayers, and to preach a sermon suitable to the occasion. *

"By the House of Burgesses,
"GEORGE WYTHER, C. H. B."

Thursday, May 26. Between three and four o'clock, P. M., the Right Honourable the Earl of Dunmore, sent a message to the honourable the House of Burgesses, by the Clerk of the Council, requiring their immediate attendance in the Council Chamber; when his Excellency spoke to them as follows:

"MR, SPEAKER AND GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF BURGESSES: I have in my hand a paper published by order of your House, conceived in such terms as reflect highly upon his Majesty, and the Parliament of Great Britain, which makes it necessary for me to dissolve you, and you are dissolved accordingly."

Friday, May 27. At ten o'clock this day, the honourable Members of the late House of Burgesses, met by agreement, at the long room of the Raleigh tavern, in Williamsburg, called the Apollo; when, having formed themselves into a Committee, and appointed the Honourable Peyton Randolph, Moderator, the following Association was unanimously entered into by the patriotic Assembly, in support of the constitutional liberties of America, against the late oppressive Acts of the British Parliament, respecting the town of Boston, which, in the end, must affect all the other Colonies.

AN ASSOCIATION, BY the MEMBERS OF THE LATE HOUSE OF BURGESSES.

We his Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the late Representatives of the good people of this country, having been deprived by the sudden interposition of the Executive part of this Government from giving our countrymen the advice we wished to convey to them in a legislative capacity, find ourselves under the hard necessity of adopting this, the only method we have left, of pointing out to our countrymen such measures as in our opinion are best fitted to secure our dearest rights and liberty from destruction, by the heavy hand of power now lifted against North America. With much grief we find that our dutiful applications to Great Britain, for security of our just, ancient, and constitutional rights, have been not only disregarded, but that a determined system is formed and pressed for reducing the inhabitants of British America to slavery, by subjecting them to the payment of taxes, imposed without the consent of the people on their Representatives; and that in pursuit of this System, we find an Act of the British Parliament, lately passed, for stopping the harbour and commerce of the town of Boston, in our sister Colony of Massachusetts Bay, until the people there submit to the payment of such unconstitutional taxes, and which Act most violently and arbitrarily deprives them of their property in wharfs erected by private persons, at their own great and proper expense, which Act is, in our opinion, a most dangerous attempt to destroy the constitutional liberty and rights of all North America.

* The order originally was, "that the Reverend Mr. Price be appointed to read prayers; and the Reverend Mr. Gwatkin to preach a "sermon suitable to the occasion." But upon Mr. Gwatkin's petitioning to be excused from complying with his appointment, Mr. Price, the Chaplain to the House, was directed to preach in his stead.

It is further our opinion, that as tea, on its importation into America, is charged with a duty, imposed by Parliament for the purpose of raising a revenue, without the consent of the people, it ought not to be used by any person who wishes well to the constitutional rights and liberty of British America. And whereas the India Company have ungenerously attempted the ruin of America, by sending many ships loaded with tea into the Colonies, thereby intending to fix a precedent in favour of arbitrary taxation; we deem it highly proper and do accordingly recommend it strongly to our countrymen, not to purchase or use any kind of East India commodity whatsoever, except saltpetre and spices, until the grievances of America are redressed.

We are further dearly of opinion, that an attack, made on one of our sister Colonies, to compel submission to arbitrary taxes is an attack made on all British America, and threatens ruin to the rights of all, unless the united wisdom of the whole be applied. And for this purpose it is recommended to the Committee of Correspondence, that they communicate, with their several Corresponding Committees, on the expediency of appointing Deputies from the several Colonies of British America, to meet in general Congress, at such place annually as shall be thought most convenient: there to deliberate on those general measures which the united interests of America may from time to time require.

A tender regard for the interest of our fellow-subjects, the merchants and manufacturers of Great Britain, prevents us from going further at this time; most earnestly hoping, that the unconstitutional principle of taxing the Colonies without their consent will not be persisted in, thereby to compel us against our will, to avoid all commercial intercourse with Britain. Wishing them and our people free and happy, we are their affectionate friends the late Representatives of Virginia.

Signed by eighty-nine Members of the late House of Burgesses.

May 27, 1774.

We the subscribers, Clergymen and other inhabitants of the Colony and Dominion of Virginia, having maturely considered the contents of the above Association, do most cordially approve and accede thereto.

Signed by a number of Clergymen and other Inhabitants.

On Sunday afternoon, May 29, letters were received by express from Boston, Philadelphia, and Annapolis, in Maryland, testifying the resentment of those different places, and the Northern Provinces in general, against the late oppressive Act of the British Parliament which is intended so materially to injure the port of Boston, and recommending an union of measures to their Southern brethren, to induce the Ministry to abate in their rigorous and unconstitutional designs against American freedom, which they consider themselves equally entitled to with their fellow subjects in Britain.

Immediately upon receiving the letters the Honourable Peyton Randolph, Esquire, moderator of the Committee of the late House of Representatives, thought it proper to convene all the members that were then in town; who on considering those important papers, came to a resolution to call together the several other members near this city, to whom notice could be given. Twenty-five of them accordingly met next day, Monday, May 30, at ten o'clock, when it was unanimously agreed to refer the further consideration of this matter to the first day of August next; at which time it is expected there will be a very general attendance of the late members of the House of Burgesses, and that a non-importation agreement will be then entered into, as well as resolutions to suspend, at some future day, exporting any of our commodities to Britain, should the present odious measures, so inimical to the just rights and liberty of America, be pursued. *

EARL OF DUNMORE TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Williamsburg, May 29, 1774.

MY LORD: The General Assembly of this Colony met here on the 6th of May, for despatch of the necessary business, and a few days after an account arrived in this country of the Act of Parliament, passed for discontinuing the shipping or discharging goods in the harbour of Boston, which has induced the House of Burgesses again, on this occasion to declare, what they are fond of having it thought always originates with them, a determined resolution to deny and oppose the authority of Parliament. Accordingly Robert Carter Nicholas, the Treasurer of this Colony, made a motion for the order, which passed, and which I herewith transmit to your Lordship.

It was intended by the solemnity of a public fasting and praying to prepare the minds of the people to receive other resolutions of the House, the purport of which I am not informed of, but from such a beginning may naturally be concluded could tend only to inflame the whole country, and instigate the people to acts that might rouse the indignation of the mother country against them; in hopes therefore of preventing the progress of these ill effects by the only means in my power, which I fear will not be effectual, I have with the unanimous consent of the Council, dissolved the Assembly, and I have determined not to issue new writs until I hear from your Lordship, and am informed whether his Majesty shall think it necessary to give me any command in respect to this undutiful part of the Legislature of Virginia.

I have heard from many of the dissolved members, and I hope it is true, that the House in general in the hasty manner the measure was proposed and agreed to, did not advert to the whole force of the terms in which the order I transmit is conceived, and that if it had, it is believed a strong opposition would have been made to it, and probably that it might have met a different fate.

I am, &c.

DUNMORE

Annapolis, Maryland, May 26, 1774.

At a meeting of the Inhabitants of the City of Annapolis, on Wednesday, the 25th day of May, 1774, after notice given of the time, place, and occasion of this meeting:

Resolved, That it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting, that the town of Boston is now suffering in the common cause of America, and that it is incumbent on every Colony in America, to unite in effectual means to obtain a repeal of the late Act of Parliament for blocking up the harbour of Boston.

That it is the opinion of this meeting, that if the Colonies come into a joint resolution to stop all importations, from, and exportations to, Great Britain, till the said Act be repealed, the same will preserve North America and her liberties.

Resolved therefore, That the inhabitants of this city, will join in an Association with the several counties of this Province, and the principal Colonies of America, to put an immediate stop to all exports to Great Britain, and that after a short day hereafter to be agreed on that there be no imports from Great Britain till the said Act be repealed, and that such Association be on oath.

That it is the opinion of this meeting that the gentlemen of the law of this Province, bring no suit for the recovery of any debt due from any inhabitant of this Province to any inhabitant of Great Britain, until the said Act be repealed.

* On the first of June, the Honourable the Speaker and as many members of the late Assembly, as were in town, with the citizens of Williamsburg, and numbers from a distance, assembled at the Court House and went in procession to the Church, where an excellent sermon, well adapted to the present unhappy disputes between Great Britain and her Colonies, was preached by the Reverend Mr. Price, chaplain to the House of Burgesses, agreeable to the late order of that patriotic and very respectable body.

That the inhabitants of this city will, and it is the opinion of this meeting, that this Province ought immediately to break off all trade and dealings with that Colony or Province which shall refuse or decline to come into similar resolutions with a majority of the Colonies.

That Messrs. John Hall, Charles Carroll, Thomas Johnson, Jun., William Paca, Matthias Hammond, and Samuel Chase, be a Committee for this city, to join with those who shall be appointed for Baltimore town, and other parts of this Province, to constitute one general Committee, and that the gentlemen appointed for this city immediately correspond with Baltimore town, and other parts of this Province, to effect such Association as will best secure American liberty.

To the Printers of the MARYLAND GAZETTE

Your Gazette of the 26th instant, contains an anonymous publication of the Resolutions entered into by the meeting of the inhabitants of this city, held for the purpose of taking into consideration Letters from Boston and Philadelphia, which it is presumed is entitled to no other than an anonymous answer. The public are desired to suspend forming any judgment of the sentiments of this city on a subject of so momentous a concern, until they are furnished with more authentic grounds.

Annapolis, May, 26, 1774.

Annapolis, (A. M. 11 o'clock,) May 27, 1774.

A paper having been circulated this morning, in this city, and distributed with the Gazette, desiring the public to suspend forming any judgment of the sentiments of this city, on the subject matter of letters from Boston, and Philadelphia, until they are furnished with more authentic grounds than the resolutions entered into by the meeting of the inhabitants held for that purpose, ALL the CITIZENS, and particularly those who dissent from the printed resolutions, are earnestly requested to meet at the Playhouse, precisely at three o'clock, this afternoon.

At a meeting of the inhabitants of the city of Annapolis in consequence of the foregoing notice, after reading the several letters and papers communicated from Boston, and Philadelphia, the first, second, and third resolutions of this city, on Wednesday last, were distinctly read, one by one, and the question being put on them, severally, that they be confirmed, the first was unanimously confirmed, and, on a division, the second and third were also confirmed, very few dissenting. The fourth resolution being read, the question was moved and put, that the same be expunged, and on a division, resolved by a considerable majority, that it be not expunged. The other resolutions were read, and on the question being put on each, were confirmed without any division.

Resolved, That this day's proceedings be immediately printed, and made public. Per order,

JOHN DUCKET, Clerk.

Annapolis, May 30, 1774.

A publication of the enclosed Protest, supported by a considerable number of the Inhabitants of the City of Annapolis, will, it is presumed, furnish the most authentic grounds for determining the sense of the majority on a question of the last importance.

We whose names are subscribed, inhabitants of the city of Annapolis, conceive it our clear right, and most incumbent duty, to express our cordial and explicit disapprobation of a Resolution which was carried by forty-seven against thirty-one, at the meeting held on the 27th instant.

The Resolution against which we protest in the face of the world is the following:

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that the gentlemen of the law of this Province, bring no suit for the recovery of any debt due from any inhabitant of this Province to any inhabitant of Great Britain, until the said Act be repealed."

Dissentient,

1. Because we are impressed with a full conviction, that this resolution is founded in treachery and rashness, inasmuch as it is big with bankruptcy and ruin to those inhabitants of Great Britain, who, relying with unlimited security on our good faith and integrity, have made us masters of their fortunes; condemning them UNHEARD, for not having interposed their influence with Parliament in favour of the town of Boston, without duly weighing the force with which that influence would probably have operated, or whether, in their conduct, they were actuated by wisdom and policy, or by CORRUPTION and AVARICE.

FOURTH SERIES.

2. Because, whilst the inhabitants of Great Britain are partially despoiled of every legal remedy to recover what is justly due to them, no provision is made to prevent us from being harrassed by the prosecution of internal suits, but our fortunes and persons are left at the mercy of domestic creditors, without a possibility of extricating ourselves, unless by a general convulsion; an event, in the contemplation of sober reason, replete with horreur.

3. Because our credit as a commercial people will expire under the wound; for what confidence can possibly be reposed in those who shall have exhibited the most avowed and most striking proof, that they are not to be bound by obligations as sacred as human invention can suggest.

Lloyd Dulany,	Thomas Neal,	Lewis Jones,
William Cooke,	William Tonry,	William Willatt,
James Tilghman,	James McKenzie,	John King,
Anthony Stewart,	Nicholas Minsky,	William Prew,
William Steuart,	Martin Water,	Thomas Wowson,
Charles Steuart,	John Warren,	William Howard,
David Steuart,	William Chambers,	John Donaldson,
Jonathan Pinkney,	James Clarke,	D. Dulany, of Walter,
William Tuck,	Denton Jacques,	William Worthington,
Thomas Sparrow,	Joseph Dowson,	Thomas B. Hodgkin,
John Green,	Thomas Macken,	William Wilkins,
James Brice,	Richard Burland,	Thomas French,
George Gordon,	Dan. Dulany, of Dan.	Joseph Selby,
John Chalmers,	R. Molleson,	William Gordon,
John Anderson,	Robert Couden,	Thomas Hyde,
John Unsworth,	William Aikman,	John Maconochie,
James Taylor,	George French,	Philip Thomas Lee,
William Cayton,	John Parker,	John Ball,
George Ranken,	Archibald Smith,	Samuel Owens,
Robert Moor,	Thomas Bonner,	Samuel Ball,
Jonathan Parker,	Matthias Mae,	Thomas Braithwaite,
Brice Selden,	Alexander McDonald	James Murray,
John Varndel,	David Crinnig,	Richard Mackubin,
John Annis,	John Timmis,	Michael Wallace,
Robert Ridge,	David Atchison,	William Hyde,
Robert Nixon,	James Maynard,	Nathan Hammond,
Thomas Kirby,	William Harrison,	Peter Psalter,
William Edwards,	Robert Kirkland,	Joseph Brouing,
Robert Lambert,	William Ashton,	Thomas Hincks,
William Eddis,	Robert Morrison,	Lewis Neth,
John Clapham,	Charles Bryan,	Edward Dogan,
Elie Vallette,	John Haragan,	J. H. Anderson,
Robert Buchanan,	Hugh Hendley,	Richard Burr,
William Noke,	Richard Thompson,	Henry Horsley,
James Brooks,	Reverdy Ghiselin,	Cornelius Fenton,
Richard Murrow,	Charles Marckel,	Richard Addams,
John Brown,	John Randall,	George Ranken, Sen.
John Hepburn,	William Stiff,	Edward Wilmot,
Colin Campbell,	James Mitchell,	Robert Long,
Nathaniel Ross,	Charles Roberts,	George Nicholson,
William Niven,	Samuel Skingle,	Benjamin Spriggs,
James Kingsbury,	Thomas Stiff,	John Horton,
James Barnes,	Henry Jackson,	Charles Wright,
John Sands,	William Devenish,	Constantine Bull,
James Williams,	James Hackman,	Amos Edmons,
Joseph Williams,	Charles Barber,	Henry Sibell,
John Howard,	John Evitts,	Joshua Cross,
William Munrce,	James Maw,	John Woolford,
John D. Jaques,	Jordan Steiger,	Samuel H. Howard,
John Norris,	Joseph Richards,	Oliver Weeden,
John Steele,	Edward Owens,	Alexander Finlater,
N. Macubbin,	Thomas Prysse,	Cornelius MoCarty,
Thomas Hammond,	J. Wilkinson,	Jonathan Simpson
Thomas Pipier,	Robert Key,

DANIEL DULANY, JUN. TO ARTHUR LEE.

Annapolis, May, 1774.

DEAR SIR: I received your favour, which I made it my business to communicate to my acquaintances, who all agreed in your proposal. It would give me the highest satisfaction to continue a correspondence with you. Our town was assembled a few days ago to consider letters sent from Boston and Philadelphia. The subject of the Boston letter was, to request the Colonies to join in a non-importation and non-exportation scheme, as the readiest method to compel Parliament to restore them to their just rights. The Philadelphians were very cool, indeed, upon the application. There is a stroke of insulting pity in their answer which I am sure will raise your indignation to the highest pitch.

We came here to the following resolves:

1st. This is the opinion of the meeting that the town of Boston is now suffering in the common cause of American liberty.

2d. That the best method to redress the evils they now labour under, would be to put a total stop to imports and exports and from Great Britain.

3d. That the Association be upon oath for that purpose.

4th. That it is the opinion of this meeting that no lawyer should bring an action for any merchant in Great Britain against an inhabitant till this Act be repealed.

5th. That no trade be carried on with any Colony that does not come into similar resolutions.

There are not to be obligatory till they are agreed to by a majority of the Colonies and the several counties of this Province. Every thing passed unanimously except the fourth resolution, which I confess I opposed, with about thirty more. It seems to me to carry with it so much injustice and partiality, that I am afraid it will give a handle to our enemies to hurt the general cause. I would have agreed to it if it had extended to merchants in this country as well as foreign merchants.

Every just, indeed, every efficient measure, should be taken against the British Parliament in their designs to tax America; for I am convinced, that if once the principle of taxing were established, property here would not be worth holding. But, at the same time, let us never give them an opportunity, by our resolves, to accuse us of injustice. I hope you will agree with me in this.

It gives me great pleasure to hear that our friend Alleyne succeeded so well in the four and a half per cent. cause. I have expected to hear from him on business for some time past, his management of which I requested, but I have not had the pleasure, Present my compliments to him, and inform him that I should be glad of a line from him. Remember me to your brother,

I am, with great esteem, dear sir, your most humble servant,

D. DULANY, JUN.

Arthur Lee, Esq., London

CONNECTICUT RESOLUTIONS

In the House of Representatives of the ENGLISH Colony of CONNECTICUT.

This House, taking into their serious consideration sundry Acts of the British Parliament, in which their power and right to impose duties and taxes upon his Majesty's subjects in the British Colonies and Plantations in America, for the purpose of raising a revenue, are declared, attempted to be exercised, and in various ways enforced and carried into execution; and especially a very late Act, in which pains and penalties are inflicted on the capital of a neighbouring Province, a precedent justly alarming to every British Colony in America, and which being admitted and established, their lives, liberties, and properties, are at the mercy of a tribunal where innocence may be punished upon the accusation and evidence of wicked men, without defence, and even without knowing the accuser; a precedent calculated to terrify them into silence and submission whilst they are stripped of their invaluable rights and liberties - do think it their duty and expedient at this time, to renew their claim to the rights, liberties and immunities of freeborn Englishmen, to which they are justly entitled by the laws of nature, by the Royal Grant and Charter of his late Majesty King Charles the Second, and by long and uninterrupted possession; and thereupon do declare and resolve as follows, viz:

1st. In the first place, we do most expressly declare, recognise and acknowledge his Majesty King George the Third to be the lawful and rightful King of Great Britain, and all other his Dominions and Countries; and that it is the indispensable duty of this Colony, as being part of his Majesty's dominions, always to bear faithful and true allegiance to his Majesty, and him to defend to the utmost of their power, against all attempts upon his person, crown and dignity.

2d. That the subjects of his Majesty in this Colony ever have had, and of right out to have and enjoy, all the liberties, immunities and privileges of free and natural born subjects within any of the Dominions of our said King, his heirs and successors, as fully and amply as if they, and every of them, were born within the Realm of England. That they have a property in their own estate, and are to be taxed by their own consent, only given in person, or by their Representatives, and are not to be disseized of their liberties and free customs, sentenced or condemned, but by lawful judgment of their peers; and that the said rights and immunities are recognised and confirmed by the inhabitants of the Colony, by the Royal Grant and Charter aforesaid, and are their undoubted right, to all intents, constructions and purposes whatsoever.

3d. That the only lawful representatives of the freemen of this Colony, are the persons they elect to serve as members of the General Assembly thereof.

4th. That it is the just right and privilege of his Majesty's liege subjects of this Colony to be governed by their General Assembly in the article of taxing, and internal police, agreeable to the powers and privileges recognised and confirmed in the Royal Charter aforesaid, which they have enjoyed for more than a century past, and have neither forfeited nor surrendered, but the same have been constantly recognised by the King and Parliament of Great Britain.

5th. That the erecting new and unusual Courts of Admiralty, and vesting them with extraordinary powers above, and not subject to, the controul of the Common Law Courts in this Colony, to judge and determine in suits relating to the duties and forfeitures contained in said Acts, foreign to the accustomed and established jurisdiction of the former Courts of Admiralty in America, is, in the opinion of this House, highly dangerous to the liberties of his Majesty's American subjects, contrary to the great Charter of English liberty, and destructive of one of their most darling rights, that of trial by juries, which is justly esteemed one chief excellence of the British Constitution, and a principal branch of English liberty.

6th. That the apprehending and carrying persons beyond the sea to be tried for any crime alleged to be committed within this Colony, or subjecting them to be tried by Commissioners, or by any court constituted by Act of Parliament, or otherwise within this Colony, in a summary way, without a jury, is unconstitutional, and subversive of the liberties and rights of the free subjects of this Colony.

7th. That any harbour or port duly opened and constituted, cannot be shut up and discharged but by an Act of the Legislature of the Province or Colony in which such harbour or port is situated, without subverting the rights and liberties, and destroying the property of his Majesty's subjects.

8th. That the late Act of Parliament inflicting pains and penalties on the town of Boston, by blocking up their harbour, is a precedent justly alarming to the British Colonies in America, and wholly inconsistent with, and subversive of, their constitutional rights and liberties.

9th. That whenever his Majesty's service shall require the aid of the inhabitants of this Colony, the same fixed principles of loyalty, as well as self-preservation, which have hitherto induced us fully to comply with his Majesty's requisition, together with the deep sense we have of its being our indispensable duty, (in the opinion of this House,) will ever hold us under the strongest obligations which can be given or desired, most cheerfully to grant his Majesty, from time to time, our further proportion of men and money, for the defence, protection, security, and other services of the British American Dominions.

10th. That we look on the wellbeing and greatest security of this Colony, to depend (under God) on our connection with Great Britain, which it is ardently wished may continue to the latest posterity; and that it is the humble opinion of this House that the Constitution of this Colony being understood and practised upon, as it has, ever since it existed, (till very lately,) is the surest bond of union, confidence, and mutual prosperity of our mother country and us, and the last foundation on which to build the good of the whole, whether considered in a civil, military, or mercantile light; and of the truth of this opinion we are the more confident, as it is not founded on speculation only, but has been verified in fact, and by long experience found to produce, according to our extent, and other circumstances, as many loyal, virtuous, industrious and well governed subjects, as any part of his Majesty's Dominions; and as truly zealous of, and as warmly engaged to promote the best good and real glory of the grand whole, which constitutes the British Empire.

11th. That it is an indispensable duty which we owe to our King, our country, ourselves, and our posterity, by all lawful ways and means in our power, to maintain, defend and preserve, these our rights and liberties, and to transmit them entire and inviolate to the latest generations; and that it is our fixed, determined, and unalterable resolution, faithfully to discharge this our duty.

At their Sessions at Hartford, on the second Thursday of May, 1774, in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign, the foregoing Resolutions, reported to the House by their Committee, were unanimously voted, and ordered to be entered on their Journal or Record.

Boston, Wednesday, May 25, 1774.

This being the anniversary day appointed by the Royal Charter, for convening a great and general Court or Assembly of this Province, and for the election of his Majesty's Council, the gentlemen who were returned to serve and represent the several towns, met a Committee from the Honourable Board, authorized and appointed by his Excellency the Governour, administered the oaths required by Act of Parliament to the members of the House, who, after having taken the oath of abjuration, and subscribed the declaration, they unanimously chose Mr. Samuel Adams for their Clerk; the House then proceeded to the choice of a Speaker, when the Honourable Thomas Cushing, Esquire, was unanimously chosen and approved.

The following gentlemen were elected Counsellors for the ensuing year:

For the late Colony of MASSACHUSETTS BAY. - The Honourable Samuel Danforth, John Erving, James Bowdoin, James Pitts, Samuel Dexter, Artemas Ward, Benjamin Greenleaf, Caleb Cushing, Samuel Phillips, John Winthrop, William Phillips, John Adams, James Prescott, Timothy Danielson, Richard Derby, Jun., Michael Farley, Benjamin Austin, Norton Quincy, Esquires.

For the late Colony of PLYMOUTH. - James Otis, William Sever, Walter Spooner, Jerathmeel Bowers, Esquires.

For the Provinnce of MAINE. - Jeremiah Powell, Jedediah Prebble, Enoch Freeman, Esquires.

For SAGAHOCK. - Benjamin Chadburne, Esq.

At Large. - George Leonard, Jun., Jedediah Foster, Esquires.

Before the election of Counsellors, letters were received from the Honourable Isaac Royall and James Gowan, Esquires, resigning their seats at the Board.

Thursday, May 26.

The list of Counsellors chosen yesterday, being, this day, agreeable to the direction of the Royal Charter presented to the Governour, his Excellency was pleased to consent to the gentlemen before mentioned, except James Bowdoin, Samuel Dexter, John Winthrop, William Phillips, John Adams, James Prescott, Timothy Danielson, Michael Farley, Benjamin Austin, Norton Quincy, Jerathmeel Bowers, Enoch Freeman, Jedediah Foster,

This day his EXCELLENCY was pleased to make the following Speech to both Houses:

Gentlemen of the COUNCIL, and Gentlemen of the GENERAL ASSEMBLY:

His Majesty having been pleased to appoint me Governour and Captain General of his Province of the Massachusetts Bay, and my commissions having been read and published, I have met you for the election of Counsellors for the ensuing year; on which business you have been convened agreeable to your Charter, and as that work is finished, you will proceed as you shall judge fit to the consideration of such other matters as may properly come before you, and that you judge ought to be entered upon previous to the first of next month. And you will be assured that I shall with pleasure concur with you to the utmost of my power in all matters that tend to the welfare and prosperity of the Province. I make mention of the first of next month, because I have the King's particular commands for holding the General Court at Salem from that day, until his Majesty shall have signified his royal will and pleasure for holding it again at Boston.

The honour of my appointment to the command of this Government being so lately conferred, and the time since I took it upon me so very short, I have not at present any matter to lay before you, farther than to acquaint you, that the Provincial Treasurer having informed me that sufficient provision is made for the redemption of the Government securities that are now, and will become due in June, 1775, you will have no other burden upon you but to supply the Treasury for the support of Government for the ensuing year.

T. GAGE.

Council Chamber, May 26, 1774.

Marblehead, May 25, 1774.

AN ADDRESS PRESENTED TO GOVERNOR HUTCHINSON BY SUNDRY GENTLEMEN OF MARBLEHEAD.

TO Governour HUTCHINSON:

SIR. His Majesty having been pleased to appoint his Excellency the Honourable Thomas Gage, Esquire, to be Governour and Commander-in-chief over this Province, and you (as we are informed) being speedily to embark for Great Britain, we, the subscribers, merchants, traders and others, inhabitants of Marblehead, beg leave to present you our valedictory Address on this occasion; and as this is the only way we now have of expressing to you our entire approbation of your public conduct during the time you have presided in this Province, and of making you a return of our most sincere and hearty thanks for the ready assistance which you have at all times afforded us when applied to in matters which affected our navigation and commerce, we are induced from former experience of your goodness, to believe that you will freely indulge us in the pleasure of giving you this testimony of our sincere esteem and gratitude.

In your public administration we are fully convinced, that the general good was the mark which you have ever aimed at, and we can, sir, with pleasure assure you, that it is likewise the opinion of all dispassionate drinking men within the circle of our observation, notwithstanding many publications would have taught the world to think the contrary; and we beg leave to entreat you, that when you retire at the Court of Great Britain, you would there embrace every opportunity of moderating the resentment of the Government against us, and use your best endeavours to have the unhappy dispute between Great Britain and this country brought to a just and equitable termination. We cannot omit the opportunity of returning you, in a particular manner, our most sincere thanks for your patronizing our cause in the matter of entering and clearing vessels at the Custom House, and making the fishermen pay hospital money. We believe it is owing to your representation of the matter that we are hitherto free from that burthen.

We heartily wish you, sir, a safe and prosperous passage to Great Britain; and when you arrive there, may you find such a reception as shall fully compensate for all the insults and indignities which have been offered you.

Richard Hinkly,	Robert Hooper, 3d.,	Robert Hooper,
Samuel Reed,	John Prince,	John Gallison,
John Lee,	George McCall,	Jacob Fowle
Robert Ambrose,	Joseph Swasey,	John Pederick,
Jonathan Glover,	Nathan Bowon,	Richard Reed
Richard Phillips,	Thomas Robin,	Benjamin Marston,
Isaac Mansfield,	John Stimson,	Samuel White,
Joseph Bubler,	John Webb,	Joseph Hopper,
Richard Stacey,	Joseph Lee,	John Pentice,
Thomas Proctor,	Sweet H0oper,	Robert Hooper, Jun.,
John Fowle,	Henry Saunders,	Thomas Lewis.

GOVERNOUR HUTCHINSON'S ANSWER.

So kind an Address from so many gentlemen of respectable characters in the town of Marblehead, requires my most grateful acknowledgments. You may be assured of my endeavours, as far as shall fall within my sphere, to obtain what you desire.

THOMAS HUTCHINSON.

A Declaration of IMARBLEHEAD, relative to the Address from sundry inhabitants of the town to Governour HUTCHINSON.

Be it known to the whole world, its present generation, and every future one:

Tha the town of Marblehead, now legally assembled, pursuant to appointment, taking into consideration an Address which appeared in the last Essex Gazette, from sundry inhabitants of this town, to the late Governour Hutchinson is clearly of opinion,

1st. That as the Address did originate since the commencement of this meeting, and as the warrant for the meeting enabled the inhabitants to take any suitable steps upon the present critical situation of public affairs, whether by addressing instructions, or otherwise, the Addressers, by the secret and clandestine manner in which they have conducted this Address, have manifested a disposition to destroy the harmony of the town in its public affairs, and thus planted the seeds of dissensions, animosities and discords.

2d. That a public address to a person just leaving a high and public office in the Province, who is not only neglected by the two honourable branches of the present Legislature of it, but has likewise been censured by both Houses of a former Assembly as an inveterate enemy to the liberties of the Province, is such an indignity offered to those branches of the Government, as this town is in duty and gratitude bound to bear testimony against; more especially as it conceives itself under lasting obligations as to them for their steady and virtuous attachment to the liberties and true interest of the Province, which they have strenuously contended for.

3d. That the Addressers have, to the utmost of their power, strengthened the hands of a subtle enemy to the Province by their Address; and this instrument, although but a fantastical shadow of public respect, will be naturally improved by Mr. Hutchinson to justify his own conduct, and raise still higher the prejudices which so unjustly rage against this injured Province and Continent.

4th. That the Address aforesaid is not only in substance exceptionable, but insulting and affrontive to this town; as the Addressers first say to Mr. Hutchinson, "In your public administration we are fully convinced that the general good was the mark you ever aimed at," (which, however, this town could never believe, and having been fully convinced of the contrary, hath publicly declared it.) And then they go on to assert, that this, their sentiment, is likewise the opinion of all "dispassionate thinking men" within the circle of their observation, notwithstanding "many publications would have taught the world to think the contrary." By which paragraph this town conceives that the Addressers have plainly adjudged all the inhabitants of it who are not, in this their opinion relative to Mr. Hutchinson, to be passionate thoughtless men; and at least nineteen-twentieths of the inhabitants must fall under this indecent censure.

5th. That the thirty-three inhabitants of this town who could publicly pass such an encomium on an! opinion of their own, which appears to the town both flattering and absurd, as that it- is likewise the opinion of all dispassionate thinking men; who could not only declare themselves, and those, in their opinion, entitled to the characters mentioned, but that no other persons in the community of which they were a part, were deserving of them; and who could in the public papers appear subscribers of such a conduct have exposed themselves to be censured by the world as persons in this instance both vain and inattentive.

6th. That the Addressers have needlessly agitated the matter of "fishermen paying hospital money;" which being an affair that nearly affects many considerable towns in this Province, could not with propriety have been taken up so publicly by any particular town, without consulting the other towns, as it has been by the Addressers, and without noticing an error in the Address, Mr. Hutchinson is told by the signers, "that they believe it is owing to his representation of the matter that we are hitherto free from the burthen." By which clause the Government of Great Britain may have great reason to think that a demand of hospital money from the fishery is expected here, and should the poor men who can now scarcely support themselves and families alive by fishing, have an increased burthen of hospital money brought upon them hereafter, they may have great reason to condemn this impudent measure of the Addressers. This town cannot but express, on the present occasion, a great satisfaction at the unanimity which appears in the collective body of this Province with respect to its enemies. The number addressing Mr. Hutchinson, compared with the body of freeholders in the Province, are but as a drop in the bucket. May it continue to be the fixed principle of the latter, "that the persons who are declared by the righteous Government of a people to be their inveterate enemies, ought so to be esteemed and treated by them; and may we heartily join with our brethren in this Province in supporting the honour and dignity of our General Assembly, by treating with neglect and contempt those persons who are or may be under just censures."

The preceding is a true copy of a Declaration this day unanimously voted at a legal meeting of this town, and published by its order.

BENJAMIN BODEN, Town Clerk.
Marblehead, June 3, 1774.

In the House of Representatives of the Province of NEW-HAMPSHIRE.

Thursday, May 26, 1774.

Voted, That there be allowed and paid unto the Captain General of this Province for payment of officers, soldiers, billeting, firewood, and candles, for support of his Majesty's Fort William and Mary, for one year, viz: from the 25th of March, 1774, to the 25th of March, 1775, the sum of two hundred pounds lawful money, to be paid in four quarterly payments, out of the money that is or shall be in the Treasury, with advice of Council. Sent up by Mr. Jenness.

Friday, May 27, 1774.

The Secretary brought from the Board the vote for an allowance for Fort William and Mary, with a verbal message from his Excellency that he thought the allowance insufficient, and desired some alteration might be made by allowing a larger sum, or appointing a number of soldiers sufficient, with proper allowance.

The House took into consideration the Message from the Governour by the Secretary, and came to the following vote, viz:

Voted, That his Excellency the Captain General be desired to give orders for the enlisting three men, to be posted at his Majesty's Fort William and Mary, for one year, commencing the 25th day of March, 1774, under such officer as he shall appoint; the pay of the officer to be three pounds per month, and each private twenty-five shillings per month, and five shillings per week for billeting, and that there be allowed thirty cords of wood for the use of the Fort for the said year, to be paid out of the money in the Treasury when the muster roll shall be allowed by the General Assembly.

Sent up by Colonel Folsom and Captain Waldron.

Friday, P. M., May 27, 1774.

Mr. Secretary and Mr. Warner came from the Board with the vote for soldiers for the Fort, and observed that it was insufficient, which he took notice of in sundry particulars, and left the vote for the consideration of the House; also a written Message from his Excellency, viz:

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Assembly:

The vote of Assembly for the support of his Majesty's Castle William and Maw, dated this day, appears to me to be so inadequate, that it is my duty to inform the Assembly that I do not think it safe to entrust so important a fortress to the care and defence of three men and one officer. Also that the wages, billeting and fuel mentioned in said vote, will by no means engage able men in the service proposed, more especially as the money for the whole is to be paid when the muster roll shall be allowed, which necessarily implies an advance, the issue whereof is not provided. I therefore earnestly recommend to the Honourable Assembly to make such provision for the support of the Castle aforesaid, as may enable me to carry into execution the intention of the grant.

J. WENTWORTH.
Council Chamber, New Hampshire, May 27, 1774.

Saturday, May 28, 1774.

Voted, That the Honourable John Wentworth, Esquire, of this House, Samuel Cutts, John Gedding, Clement March, Josiah Bartlett, Henry Prescott, and John Pickering, Esquires, be a Committee of this House to correspond, as occasion may require, with the Committees that are or may be appointed by the several Houses of Representatives in our sister Colonies, and to exhibit to this House an account of such their proceedings when required.

The House taking into consideration the many and great difficulties that have arisen, and still subsist, between our parent country and the Colonies on this Continent, and in particular the present distressing circumstances of the town of Boston, came to the following Resolution, viz:

Resolved and Voted, That the Speaker of this House be directed to answer such Letters, from time to time, as he may receive from any of the Houses of our sister Colonies relative to the aforesaid difficulties, and to assure them that this House is ready to join in all salutary measures that may be adopted by them at this important crisis, for saving the rights and privileges of the Americans, and promoting harmony with the parent State.

Voted, That his Excellency, the Captain General, be desired to give orders for enlisting five men, to be posted at his Majesty's Fort William and Mary, from the 25th of March, 1774, until the 25th of March, 1775, under such officer as he shall be pleased to appoint; and the pay of the officer shall be three pounds lawful money per month, and five shillings lawful money per week for billeting, to be paid quarterly by warrant from his Excellency on the Treasurer. The muster roll to be adjusted, and allowed by the General. Assembly. And that there be thirty cords of firewood allowed, and paid for out of the Treasury, for the use of the aforesaid officer and soldiers during said time.

ADDRESS OF MERCHANTS AND OTHERS, OF BOSTON, TO GOVERNOUR HUTCHINSON.

To Governour HUTCHINSON:

SIR: We, Merchants and Traders of the town of Boston, and others, do now wait on you, in the most respectful manner, before your departure for England, to testify, for ourselves, the entire satisfaction we feel at your wise, zealous, and faithful administration, during the few years that you have presided at the head of this Province. Had your success been equal to your endeavours, and to the warmest wishes of your heart, we cannot doubt that many of the evils under which we now suffer, would have been averted, and that tranquillity would have been restored to this long divided Province; but we assure ourselves, that the want of success in those endeavours will not abate your good wishes when removed from us, or your earnest exertions still, on every occasion, to serve the true interest of this your native country.

While we lament the loss of so good a Governour, we are greatly relieved that his Majesty, in his gracious favour, hath appointed as your successor a gentleman, who, having distinguished himself in the long command he hath held in another department, gives us the most favourable prepossession of his future administration.

We greatly deplore the calamities that are impending, and will soon fall on this metropolis, by the operation of a late Act of Parliament for shutting up the port on the first of next month. You cannot but be sensible, sir, of the numberless evils that will ensue to the Province in general, and the miseries and distresses into which it will particularly involve this town in the course of a few months. Without meaning to arraign the justice of the British Parliament, we could humbly wish that this Act had been couched with less rigour, and that the execution of it had been delayed to a more distant time, that the people might have had the alternative, either to have complied with the conditions therein set forth, or to have submitted to the consequent evils on refusal; but, as it now stands, all choice is precluded, and however disposed to compliance or concession the people may be, they must unavoidably suffer very great calamities before they can receive relief. Making restitution for damage done to the property of the East India Company, or to the property of any individual, by the outrage of the people, we acknowledge to be just; and though we have ever disavowed, and do now solemnly bear our testimony against such lawless proceedings, yet considering ourselves as members of the same community, we are fidly disposed to bear our proportions of those damages whenever the sum and the manner of laying it can be ascertained. We earnestly request that you, sir, who know our condition, and have at all times displayed the most benevolent disposition towards us, will, on your arrival in England, interest yourself in our behalf, and make such favourable representations of our case, as that we may hope to obtain speedy and effectual relief.

May you enjoy a pleasant passage to England, and under all the mortifications you have patiently endured, may you possess the inward and consolatory testimonies of having discharged your trust with fidelity and honour, and receive those distinguishing marks of his Majesty's royal approbation and favour, as may enable you to pass the remainder of your life in quietness and ease, and preserve your name with honour to posterity.

Boston, May 28, 1774.

William Blair,	Isaac Winslow,	David Mitchelson,
James Selkrig,	Lewis Deblois,	Abraham Savage,
Archibald Wilson,	Thomas Aylwin,	James Asby,
Jeremiah Greene,	William Bowes,	John Inman,
Samuel H. Sparhawk,	Gregory Townsend,	John Coffin,
Joseph Turill,	Francis Greene,	Thomas Knight,
Roberts & Co.	Philip Dumaresq,	Benjamin Greene, Jr.,
John Greenlaw,	Harrison Gray,	David Greene,
Benjamin Clark,	Peter Johannot,	Benjamin Greene,
William McAlphine,	George Irving,	Henry H. Williams,
Jonathan Snelling,	Joseph Green,	James Warden,
James Hall,	John Vassall,	Nathaniel Coffin, Jun.,
William Dickson,	Nathaniel Coffin,	Sylvester Gardiner,
John Winslow, Jun.,	James Perkins,	John S. Copley,
Theophilus Lillie,	John White,	Edward Foster,
Miles Whitworth,	Robert Jarvis,	Colbourn Barrell,
James McEwen,	William Perry,	Nathaniel Greenwood,
William Codner,	J. and P. McMasters,	William Burton,
Daniel Silsby,	William Coffin,	John Timmins,
William Cazneau,	Simeon Stoddard, Jun.	William Taylor,
James Forrest,	John Powell,	Thomas Brinley,
Edward Cox,	Henry Laughton,	Harrison Gray, Jun.,
John Berry,	Eliphalet Pond,	John Taylor,
Richard Hiron,	M. B. Goldthwait,	Gilbert Deblois,
Ziphion Thayer,	Peter Hughes,	Joshua Winslow,
John Joy,	Samuel Hughes,	Daniel Hubbard,
Joseph Goldthwait,	John Semple,	Hugh Tarbett,
Samuel Prince,	Hopestill Capen,	Henry Lyddell,
Jonathan Simpson,	Edward King,	Nathaniel Cary,
James Boutineau,	Byfield Lyde,	George Brinley,
Nathaniel Hatch,	George Lyde,	Richard Lechmerc.
Martin Gay,	A. F. Phillips,	John Erving, Jur.,
Joseph Scott,	Rufus Greene,	Thomas Gray,
Samuel Minot,	David Phipps,	George Bethune,
Benjamin M. Holmes,	Richard Smith,	Thomas Apthorp,
Archibald McNiel,	George Spooner,	Ezekiel Goldthwait,
John Winslow,	George Leonard,	Benjamin Gridley,
Isaac Winslow, Jun.,	John Borland,	John Atkinson,
Thomas Oliver,	Joshua Loring, Jun.,	Ebenezer Bridgham,
Henry Lloyd,	William Jackson,	John Gore,
Benjamin Davis,	James Anderson,	Adino Paddock.

To which his late EXCELLENCY was pleased to return the following Answer:

GENTLEMEN: You may be assured that I have nothing so much at heart as to contribute to the relief of my country in general, and of the town of Boston in particular, from the distresses which you have described so fully in your Address to me.

Your persons and characters are so well known to me, that I am sure you wish to do what may be necessary on your part, and your sentiments declared in this open manner, together with your known disposition to promote peace and good order in the Government, will, I flatter myself, have a tendency to facilitate the success of my endeavours.

I entirely agree with you in your just sentiments of his Excellency the present Governour, whose administration I hope you will strive to make easy to himself, as well as prosperous to the Province. I thank you for so warm, affectionate, and respectful an Address.

Boston, Tuesday, 24th May, 1774.

Protest of the Merchants and Traders of BOSTON, unanimously voted at a very full meeting this day.

Whereas a paper called an Address to Governour Hutchinson, has been handed about and signed in a private manner by sundry persons, who style themselves merchants and others of the town of Boston; and whereas the merchants and traders, duly notified and met, having been refused a copy of said paper, although requested by their Committee, and apprehending said Address is intended to justify the administration of Mr. Hutchinson, when Governour of this Province, we hereby utterly disclaim said Address, and disavow a measure so clandestinely conducted, and so injurious in its tendency.

ADDRESS PRESENTED BY SEVERAL GENTLEMEN OF THE LAW TO GOVERNOUR HUTCHINSON.

To his Excellency Governour HUTCHINSON:

SIR: A firm persuasion of your inviolable attachment to the real interests of this your native country, and of your constant readiness, by every service in your power, to promote its true welfare and prosperity, will, we flatter ourselves, render it not improper in us, Barristers and Attorneys at Law in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, to address your Excellency upon your removal from us, with this testimonial of our sincere respect and esteem.

The various important characters of Legislator, Judge, and First Magistrate, over this Province, in which, by the suffrages of your fellow-subjects, and by the royal favour of the best of Kings, your great abilities, adorned with a uniform purity of principle and integrity of conduct have been eminently distinguished, must excite the esteem, and demand the grateful acknowledgments of every true lover of his country and friend to virtue.

The present perplexed state of our public affairs, we are sensible, must render your departure, far less disagreeable to you than it is to us. We assure you, sir, we feel the loss; but when, in the amiable character of your successor, we view a fresh instance of the paternal goodness of our most gracious Sovereign when we reflect on the probability that your presence at the Court of Great Britain will afford you an opportunity of employing your interest more successfully for the relief of this Province, and particularly of the town of Boston, under their present distresses, we find a consolation which no other human source could afford. Permit us, sir, most earnestly to solicit the exertion of all your distinguished abilities in favour your native town and country, upon this truly unhappy and distressing occasion.

We sincerely wish you a prosperous voyage, a long continuation of health and felicity and the highest rewards of the good and faithful.

We are, sir, with the most cordial affection, esteem and respect, your Excellency's most obedient and very humble servants,

Robert Auchmuty,	Andrew Cazneau,	David Ingersoll,
Jonathan Sewall,	Daniel Leonard,	Jeremiah D. Rogers,
Samuel Fitch,	John Lowell,	David Gotham,
Samuel Quincy,	Daniel Oliver,	Samuel Sewall,
William Pinchon,	Sampson S. Blowers,	John Sprague,
James Putnam,	Shearjashub Bourn,	Rufus Chandler,
Benjamin Gridley,	Daniel Bliss	Thomas Danforth,
Abel Willard,	Samuel Porter,	Ebenezer Bradish.

Boston. May 29, 1774

To which his EXCELLENCY was pleased to return the following Answer:

GENTLEMEN: The relation to the Bar which I stood in for many years together, makes this mark of your affection and esteem peculiarly acceptable. I feel the distress coming upon the town of Boston. I am confident nothing will be wanting on your part which may tend to promote the free course of law and that peace and good order in government which seems to have been made the conditions of obtaining relief from this distress. You may be assured that nothing shall be wanting on my part which may tend to procure this relief as speedily and effectually as may be. You certainly may be happy under the administration of his Excellency the present Governour, and I have great reason to join with you a testimony to his amiable disposition and character.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED IN PHILADELPHIA,
Bedford, Pennsylvania, May 30, 1774.

I suppose you have heard of the Indians being killed at Whaling. Since that time, Indian White Eyes, Mr.

Duncan, and Mr. Saunderson, who were sent down the river from Fort Pitt, in order to accommodate matters with the Shawanese, are returned, but had hard work to get back. The Delawares, who at present seem to be friends, had enough to do to save their lives, and as to the poor traders down among the Shawanese, no person can tell whether they are dead or alive.

White Eyes, on his return to Fort Pitt, said the Shawanese were for war, and that forty odd of them are at present out, intending a stroke, as is supposed, at some part of Virginia. The Delawares say they will not go to war; but there is no dependence on them. We expect every day to hear of their striking in some quarter.

It is lamentable to see the multitudes of poor people that are hourly running down the country; such of them as stay are building forts. God knows how it will turn out with them. We intend, as soon as we hear of any damage being done, to erect fortifications here. The Shawanese themselves say, that they have nothing against Pennsylvania, but only Virginia; though we may depend, as soon as they strike Virginia, they will also fall on us.

"JOIN OR DIE!"

The Act of Parliament for blocking up the harbour of Boston, in order to reduce its spirited inhabitants to the most servile and mean compliances ever attempted to be imposed on a free people, is allowed to be infinitely more alarming and dangerous to our common liberties, than even that hydra the Stamp Act, (which was defeated by our firmness and union,) and must be read with a glowing indignation by every real friend of freedom in Europe and America. Though the town of Boston is now intended to be made a victim to Ministerial wrath, yet the insult and indignity offered to our virtuous brethren in that capital, who have so nobly stood as a barrier against slavery, ought to be viewed in the same odious light as a direct hostile invasion of every Province on the Continent, whose inhabitants are now loudly called upon, by interest, honour and humanity, to stand forth, with firmness and unanimity, for the relief, support and animation of our brethren in the insulted, besieged capital of Massachusetts Bay. The generals of despotism are now drawing the lines of circumvallation around our bulwarks of liberty, and nothing but unity, resolution and perseverance, can save ourselves and posterity from what is worse than death - slavery!

Newport, Rhode Island, May 30, 1774.

ADDRESS FROM THE MAGISTRATES OF THE COUNTY OF MIDDLESEX TO T. HUTCHINSON, LATE GOVERNOUR.

To his Excellency Governour HUTCHINSON:

SIR: The Magistrates of the county of Middlesex, impressed with a deep sense of the miseries and calamities in which the town of Boston and this county will, especially, be involved, by the operation of a late Act of the British Parliament, prohibiting imports and exports to and from the port of Boston, beg leave to address your Excellency on this most interesting occasion, and to beseech the exertion of those powers and talents for its relief, of which we have so long and so often experienced the great and beneficial effects; and we assure you, sir, that notwithstanding the popular delusion, which prevails in some parts of this Province, your Excellency's administration of the Government has ever appeared to us so replete with evidence of your sincere and uniform desire to promote its best interests, as leaves us no room to doubt your willingness to employ your great abilities, to extricate the Province from those calamities in which, notwithstanding your utmost endeavours to prevent them, it is now unhappily plunged. We can assure you, sir, that the Magistrates of this county, have long beheld, with an indignant eye, those riotous and tumultuous proceedings which have, in so great a measure destroyed public peace and order, rendered the safety of persons and property precarious, and drawn the resentment of Parliament on this Province; and that none of his Majesty's subjects more ardently wish for the restoration, and establishment of order and good Government, than we of this loyal county. We hope and trust that the future conduct of this whole Province will be such, as that, aided by your good offices at the Court of Great Britain, we may be restored to his Majesty's favour, and quietly and peaceably enjoy all the rights and privileges to which English Colonists are constitutionally entitled. And we humbly hope that the policy of Great Britain will ever be such, as shall induce them to view every desirable benefit they can rationally expect to receive from their Colonies, as founded in the principles of commerce, and not of taxation.

With the most unfeigned sincerity we wish your Excellency a safe and easy voyage; that you may find that favour in the eyes of the King which your long and faithful services afford you the best grounds to expect from a wise and virtuous Sovereign; and, above all, that after many more years happily spent in doing good, you may finally receive the approbation of the King of Kings.

We have the honour to be, with the umost gratitude, and sincerest respect, your Excellency's most obedient and very humble servants.

Signed by thirty-one of the Magistrates.
Monday, May 30, 1774.

To which his Excellency was pleased to return the following Answer:

I thank you, gentlemen, for this honour done me by your Address. You may depend on my improving every favourable circumstance in order to obtain for the people of this Province, a restoration to his Majesty's favour, and securing to them the enjoyment of all those rights and privileges which English Colonists are constitutionally entitled to; and I join with you in humbly hoping that the expectation of benefit from the Colonies to the Kingdom will be founded on the principles of commerce, and not of taxation.

This public declaration from the Magistrates of so large a county, of their abhorrence of those riotous and tumultuous proceedings which have drawn the resentment of Parliament upon the Province, and of their ardent wishes for the restoration and establishment of order and good Government will, I conceive, have a tendency to promote the success of my endeavours.

Philadelphia, May 30, 1774.

Observing in the Pennsylvania Packet of this day, a notification, "that a number of persons, composed of the members of all societies in this city, met, and unanimously agreed, that it would be proper to express their sympathy for their brethren at Boston, by suspending all "business on the first day of the next month;"* the people called Quakers, though tenderly sympathizing with the distressed, and justly sensible of the value of our religious and civil rights, and that it is our duty to assert them in a Christian spirit, yet in order to obviate any misapprehen-

* It having been suggested that the first day of June, which will be so distinguished an era in the American history, when the Boston Port Bill is to take effect, should have some particular notice taken of it, a number of persons, composed of the members of all societies in this city, met and unanimously agreed that it would be proper to express their sympathy for their brethren at Boston, by suspending all business on that day. Such a pause is intended, not only to show the real concern we feel for the distresses of our brethren and fellow-subjects, but to give an opportunity of seriously reflecting on our own dangers, and the precarious tenure of our most valuable rights. - PHILADELPHIA, May 30, 1774.

This being the first day of June, when the inhabitants of the town of Boston, our brethren and fellow-subjects, suffering in the common cause of liberty, are to have their port and harbour shut up, and to be excluded from all commercial intercourse, except an allowance of wood and provisions, just necessary to keep them from perishing with want and cold, in consequence of an Act of Parliament lately passed for that purpose, many of the inhabitants of this city, of most denominations, propose to express their sympathy and concern for their distressed brethren, by suspending business on this day, and will be glad of the concurrence of such of their fellow citizens as approve of the measure. - June 1.

Yesterday we had a pause in the business of this city, and a solemn pause it indeed was. If we except the Friends, I believe nine-tenths of the citizens shut up their houses. The bells were rang muffled all the day, and the ships in the port had their colours half hoisted. - June 2.

Whereas, in the Pennsylvania Packet of this day, it is mentioned, that "on Wednesday last, being the day when the Act for shutting up "the port of Boston took effect, the bells of Christ Church were muffled "and range solemn peal, and that the houses of worship were crowded," &c. We are desired by the Rector of that Church to acquaint the public that the bells were not rung with his knowledge or approbation and that, by his express direction, there was no particular observance of that day in either of the Churches under his care. It is well known that the established Church is restrained from any religious observance of days, except those appointed by the Church, or the public authority of Government. - June 6.

sions which may arise concerning us, think it necessary to declare, that no person or persons were authorized to represent us on this occasion, and if any of our community have countenanced or encouraged this proposal, they have manifested great inattention to our religious principles and profession, and acted contrary to the rules of Christian discipline established for the preservation of order and good government among us.

Signed, on behalf and at the desire of the elders and overseers of the several meetings of our religious society in Philadelphia, and other friends met on the occasion, the 30th of the fifth month, 1774,

JOHN REYNELL,
JAMES PEMBERTON,
SAMUEL NOBLE.

QUEEN ANNE (MARYLAND) RESOLUTIONS,

At a Meeting of a considerable number of the Magistrates, and other the most respectable Inhabitants of Queen Anne's County, at Queentown on the thirtieth day of May, 1774, in order to deliberate upon the tendency and effect of the Act of Parliament for blocking up the port and harbour of Boston.

Duly considering and deeply affected with the prospect of the unhappy situation of Great Britain and British America, under and kind of disunion, this meeting think themselves obliged by all the ties which ever ought to preserve a firm union amongst Americans, as speedily as possible to make known their sentiments to their distressed brethren of Boston; and therefore publish to the world:

That they look upon the cause of Boston, in its consequences to be the common cause of America.

That the Act of Parliament for blocking up the port and harbour of Boston, appears to them a cruel and oppressive invasion of their natural rights, as men, and constitutional rights as English subjects, and if not repealed, will be a foundation for the utter destruction of American freedom.

That all legal and constitutional means ought to be used by all America for procuring a repeal of the said Act of Parliament.

That the only effectual means of obtaining such repeal, they are at present of opinion is an Association under the strongest ties, for breaking off all commercial connections with Great Britain until the said Act of Parliament be repealed, and the right assumed by Parliament for taxing America, in all cases whatsoever be given up, and American freedom ascertained, and settled upon a permanent constitutional foundation.

That the most practicable mode of forming such an effectual Association, they conceive to be a general meeting of the gentlemen who are already or shall be appointed Committees to form an American intercourse and correspondence upon this most interested occasion.

That in the mean time they will form such particular Associations as to them shall seem effectual; yet professing themselves ready to join in any reasonable general one that may be desired as aforesaid.

That these sentiments be immediately forwarded to be printed in the Maryland and Pennsylvania Gazettes,

That Edward Tilghman, Solomon Wright, Turbut Wright, John Brown, Richard Tilghman Earle, James Hollyday, Thomas Wright, William Hemsley, Adam Gray, Clement Sewell, Richard Tilghman, James Kent, John Kerr, James Bordley, and William Bruff, be a Committee of Correspondence and Intercourse, until some alteration is made in this appointment by a more general meeting.

Attested by JAMES EARLE, Clerk to Committee.

BALTIMORE COUNTY RESOLUTIONS

At a General Meeting of the Freeholders, Gentlemen, Merchants, Tradesmen, and other Inhabitants of Baltimore County, held at the Court House of the said county, on Tuesday, the 31st of May, 1774:

Captain CHARLES RIDGELY, Chairman.

1st. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting that the town of Boston is now suffering in the common cause of America, and that it is the duty of every Colony in America to unite in the most effectual means to obtain a repeal of the late Act of Parliament for blocking up the harbour of Boston. [Dissentient three.]

2d. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that if the Colonies come into a joint resolution to stop importations from and exportations to Great Britain and the West Indies, until the Act for blocking up the harbour of Boston be repealed, the same may be the means of preserving North America in her liberties. [Dissentient three.]

3d. Resolved, That, therefore, the inhabitants of this county will join in an Association with the several counties in this Province, and the principal Colonies in America, to put a stop to exports to Great Britain and the West Indies, after the first day of October next, or such other day as may be agreed on, and to put a stop to the imports from Great Britain after the first day of December next, or such other day as may be agreed upon, until the said Act shall be repealed, and that such Association shall be upon oath [Dissentient nine.]

4th. Resolved, unanimously, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that as the most effectual means of uniting all parts of this Province in such Association as proposed, a general Congress of Deputies from each county be held at Annapolis at such time as may be agreed upon, and that, if agreeable to the sense of our sister Colonies, Delegates shall be appointed from this Province to attend a general Congress of Delegates from the other Colonies, at such time and place as shall be agreed on, in order to settle and establish a general plan of conduct for the important purposes aforementioned.

5th. Resolved, unanimously, That the inhabitants of this county will, and it is the opinion of this meeting, that this Province ought to break off all trade and dealings with that Colony, Province, or town, which shall decline or refuse to come into similar resolutions with a majority of the Colonies.

6th. Resolved, That Captain Charles Ridgely, Charles Ridgely, son of John, Walter Tolley, Jun., Thomas Cockey Dye, William Lux, Robert Alexander, Samuel Purviance, Jun., John Moale, Andrew Buchanan, and George Risteau, be a Committee to attend a general meeting at Annapolis. And that the same gentlemen, together with John Smith, Thomas Harrison, William Buchanan, Benjamin Nicholson, Thomas Sollars, William Smith, James Gittings, Richard Moale, Jonathan Plowman and William Spear, be a Committee of Correspondence to receive and answer all letters, and on any emergency to call a general meeting, and that any six of the number have power to act.

7th. Resolved, That a copy of the proceedings be transmitted to the several counties of this Province, directed to their Committee of Correspondence, and be also published in the Maryland Gazette, to evince to all the world the sense they entertain of the invasion of their constitutional rights and liberties.

8th. Resolved, That the Chairman be desired to return the thanks of this meeting to the gentlemen of the Committee of Correspondence from Annapolis, for their polite personal attendance in consequence of an invitation by the Committee of Correspondence for Baltimore town.

Signed per order, WILLIAM LUX, Clerk.

DEPUTY GOVERNOUR PENN TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Philadelphia, 31st May, 1774

MY LORD: I take the opportunity of the Packet to acquaint your Lordship, that as soon as the people of Boston knew of the late Act of Parliament for shutting up that port, an express was despatched from thence with the intelligence to this city, with a proposal to concur with them in putting a total stop to the importing or exporting any kind of goods whatsoever until the above Act should be repealed. In consequence of this, a considerable number of merchants and others had a meeting at a tavern in this city, where I understand the matter was taken into consideration and debated. The only resolution that I can learn they came into was to prefer a petition to me to convene the Assembly on the occasion; and I am told a petition has been framed for that purpose, and is now handed about the town to be signed, and will be presented to me in a few days. Should so affrontive an application be really made to me, your Lordship may be assured I shall treat it as it deserves. I have, however, been informed, that the movers of this extraordinary measure had not the most distant expectation of succeeding in it, but that their real scheme was to gain time by it to see what part the other Colonies will take in so crucial a conjuncture.

Should any further steps be taken here that may be worthy your Lordship's information, I shall not fail immediately to communicate them. I have the honour to be, &c.,
JOHN PENN.

GOVERNOUR FRANKLIN TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH,
Extract.

Burlington, 31st May, 1774.

Since my last I have received two circular despatches from Mr. Pownall, dated March 10th and April 6th, enclosing copies of his Majesty's Message to both Houses of Parliament relative to the late disturbances in America, their Resolutions thereupon, and the Act of Parliament respecting the port of Boston. The latter has been published in the usual manner, though the people in this Colony are not concerned in carrying on any commerce with the Province of Massachusetts Bay.

It is difficult as yet to foresee what will be the consequence of the Boston Port Act. It seems as if the merchants of Philadelphia and New-York, at their late meetings, were inclined to assist or co-operate with those of Boston, in some degree, but not to carry matters so far as to enter into a general non-importation and exportation agreement, as was proposed to them by the town of Boston. However, I believe it may be depended upon, that many of the merchants, on a supposition that a non-importation agreement (so far as respects from Great Britain) will be certainly entered into by next autumn, have ordered a much greater quantity of goods than common to be sent out by the next fall ships from England.

A Congress of members of the several Houses of Assembly has been proposed in order to agree upon some measures on the present occasion; but whether this expedient will take place it is as yet uncertain. The Virginia Assembly, some time ago, appointed a Committee of Correspondence to correspond with all the other Assemblies on the Continent, which example has been followed by every other House of Representatives. I was in hopes that the Assembly of this Province would not have gone into the measure; for though they met on the 10th of November, yet they avoided taking the matter into consideration, though frequently urged by some of the members, until the 8th of February, and then I believe they would not have gone into it, but that the Assembly of New-York had just before resolved to appoint such a Committee, and they did not choose to appear singular.

GOVERNOUR GAGE TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Extract.

Boston, 31st May. 1774.

I wish I had met with a ready dispositkm to comply with the terms of the Act of Parliament, instead of a resolution to ask assistance from the other Colonies; but I don't find there is any inclination in the rest to shut up their ports, which was not to be expected considering what they before suffered from their non-importation agreements. If they intend, or not, to take any resolutions in behalf of Boston, farther than giving good words, is not known here.

The violent party seems to break, and people fall off from them, but no means are yet adopted to comply with the Act. The Assembly has shown no disposition to begin upon it, but were hurrying the business of supplies through their House, to throw it off themselves, and to avoid meeting at Salem, by adjourning themselves when the supplies had passed their House; but receiving intelligence of their designs, I adjourned them, on a sudden, to the 7th of June, and then to meet at Salem.

They, as yet, have only presented me with a petition to proclaim a day of fasting and prayer, but as they have lately had a day of the kind, according to custom, and as I saw no cause for an extraordinary day of humiliation, I have judged it best not to comply.

I had a meeting with the late Governour, the Admiral, and Commissioners of the Customs, on the subject of putting the Act in force, in which, after putting some questions to the Attorney General, the Chief Justice being absent, they appeared to agree in the manner of it. The officers of the Customs remove to-morrow, when I also purpose to leave Boston, and the Admiral has stationed his ships.

No design has appeared of opposing the execution of the Act, nor do I see any possibility of doing it with effect; but many are impatient for the arrival of the troops, and I am told that people will then speak and act openly, which they now dare not do. General Haldimand took the opportunity of a vessel in the service to send a detachment of sixty artillerists, and eight pieces of ordnance, from New-York to Castle William, which I propose to encamp with the troops.

JOHN SCOLLAY TO ARTHUR LEE.

Boston, May 31st, 1774.

SIR: Mr. Adams informs me that you kindly received the letter I wrote you in December last. This information prompts me to address you again. Letter writing, and on politics, is not my province, but such are the times, that that man's heart must be callous indeed that does not feel for his country, and that does not give it out in every way. In short, we have all, from the cobbler up to the senator, become politicians.

On the morrow, that Act, cruel Act of our parent State, (or, rather, hard-hearted step-mother,) called the Boston Port Bill, is to take place, a Bill fraught with vengeance against this town. However, Lord North will find out himself, and that very soon, that he overshot his mark. That which he intended should operate against Boston only, will affect every town in this Province. the seaport towns will feel the operation of the Act, in a degree as much as Boston, Boston being the grand engine that gives motion to all the wheels of commerce. This being stopped, it will sensibly affect the whole trade of the Province. All the seaport towns depend on this to take off by far the greatest part of their imports; they cannot send a vessel to sea again after her return from a voyage, till they send her cargo to Boston to be sold. In short, all the running cash in the Province centres in this town. To this market all the trading towns repair with their goods to make money of them. Newburyport, Marblehead, and Salem, will most sensibly feel the shock, and if the blockade continues long they must haul up their vessels, for no place but Boston can take off their cargoes. It is a most melancholy consideration, that this town, which was, and is now, the most flourishing in trade and commerce, must be devoted to destruction, and in a few days be brought to the forlorn condition of a deserted village. Thousands that depend on their daily labour for support, must be reduced to the greatest degree of distress and want. However, they will suffer in a good cause, and that righteous Being who takes care of the ravens who cry unto him, will provide for them and theirs. * * * * *

 For that purpose we have it in contemplation, if the blockade continues any length of time, to employ the poor in building a horse bridge over Charles river, a river about as wide as the Thames. By this bridge, Charlestown, a large and opulent town, will be joined to Boston. This bridge will greatly facilitate the intercourse between Boston, Marblehead and Salem, and other trading towns.

When the news first arrived of Lord North's proposing this Bill in Parliament, it was looked on as a mere hum. People could not think that a British House of Commons would be so infatuated as to pass such a Bill, to punish a whole town for a trespass that was committed in it by nobody knows who, and to carry it into execution without giving the town an opportunity to answer to the charge, is an unheard of proceeding. Although it was designed this town should be ruined, yet I doubt not but that it will finally end in great good, not only to this town, but to all the Colonies. I believe, by this management, his Lordship's fabric, which cost him so much labour, and afforded him so much delight, will be demolished, and instead of despotism and tyranny over the Colonies, a foundation will be laid for lasting peace and harmony between Great Britain and these Colonies. This may be looked on as visionary, but I think the crisis is near when this must take place, which is the warmest wish of every free-hearted North American. We have too great a regard for our parent State (although cruelly treated by some of her illegitimate sons) to withdraw our connection. Of her we have no idea of an independency, and the Colonies are too precious a jewel for the Crown to part with; therefore I think that the wisdom of the English nation, and that of the Colonies united, might fall on some plan of conciliating their differences, and fix on some principles for each party to resort to, as the great charter of agreement between the King and his Colonies. Such an event would make the Colonies happy, and the British nation great and prosperous.

FOURTH SERIES.

As you will no doubt have the particulars of these matters handed to you by some of your friends, it will be needless for me to enlarge.

I hope you will excuse my troubling you with this epistle, and believe me to be, with great regard, sir, your most humble servant,

JOHN SCOLLAY.

Arthur Lee, Esquire, London.

Charlestown, South Carolina, May 31, 1774.

This morning a packet was received here, despatched from on board the brigantine Sea Nymph, Captain Moore, from a very respectable Committee at Philadelphia, enclosing letters from the Committees, and containing the first intelligence of the passing of the Act of Parliament for blockading of the town of Boston; which, if we may judge from the indignation with which it is every where received, will prove the crudest policy that ever disgraced a British Senate, and be the very means to perfect that union in America which it was intended to destroy, and finally restore the excellent constitution even of the mother country itself.

A LETTER TO THE INHABITANTS OF CHARLESTOWN, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Norfolk, May 31, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: the occasion is too serious to admit of apologies for this unsolicited communication of our sentiments to you, at this alarming crisis to American freedom; for the time is come, the unhappy era has arrived, when the closest union among ourselves, and the firmest confidence in each other, are our only securities for those rights, which as men and freemen, we derive from nature and the Constitution. The late hostile Parliamentary invasion of the town of Boston we deem an attack upon the liberties of us all. Of the particulars of that unhappy transaction, we presume, you are already fully informed, and, we doubt not, shudder with us at this systematic mode of depriving the unrepresented American of his rights and possessions, and vesting the Crown with such despotic power over the free-born inhabitants of the capital of the Massachusetts Bay. What measures are most proper to be adopted on this sad occasion we are at a loss to point out; but we look to the wisdom of your city, in conjunction with the other large commercial towns on this Continent, to take more immediately the lead in these important matters, and to fix upon such expedients in the regulation of trade, as may be most productive of relief to our suffering brethren of Boston, and the general establishment of the rights of these Colonies. And you may rest assured that in every measure conducive to this grand Continental object, you will always meet with our most hearty concurrence. We are under great apprehensions for the people of Boston, least they may sink under the weight of their misfortunes. And at the same time that we highly approve of the expediency of a Congress, as proposed by several of the Colonies, we think the trading part of the community ought particularly to interfere; for nothing but the most speedy and efficacious measures can relieve them; and if after all, there should be found an unhappy necessity to reimburse the India Company for that just punishment they received for their ungenerous attempts on our liberties, we trust there is no inhabitant of these Colonies who feels and thinks himself a freeman, but will cheerfully put his hand to his purse, and join in the general expense.

Enclosed we transmit you the proceedings of the inhabitants of the borough of Norfolk and town of Portsmouth, together with the letters and other papers from Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, as also copies of the resolutions and other proceedings of the Members of our late House of Burgesses, both before and after their dissolution. We hope to be able to inform you more particularly of the collected sense of the trade of this Colony at the general meeting of the merchants next week at Williamsburg, when we expect further despatches from the Northward. We hope the favour of a free and full communication of your sentiments on this important occasion, and trust that your flourishing and respectable Province will still continue their generous endeavours for the establishment of the rights of the Colonies, that the opposition of all America may be as extensive as the oppression,

With the warmest attachment to the interest of the Colonies, we are, gentlemen, most respectfully, your most obedient humble servants,

THOMAS NEWTON, Jun., JOHN GREENWOOD,
JOSEPH HUTCHINGS, ALEXANDER SKINNER,
PAUL LOYALL, WILLIAM HARVEY,
ALEXANDER LOVE, NIEL JAMIESON.
SAMUEL INGLIS,

THE COMMITTEE OF NORFOLK AND PORTSMOUTH TO THE BALTIMORE COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE,
Norfolk, June 2, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: We acknowledge the receipt of your interesting favour, and hope you will still continue to communicate your sentiments to us on the important subject of your letter, in the freest and fullest manner. We are happy in so general a concurrence in opinion with you, and are ready to unite in any measures that may be generally thought for the advantage of the Colonies, and the relief of our unhappy brethren of Boston. We sympathize most sincerely with them in their sufferings; our hearts are warmed with affection for them; and we trust they will never be deserted, nor left the solitary strugglers against arbitrary power. The Act for blocking up their harbour and stopping their trade, and the Bill for altering and amending the Charter of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, which Lord North has lately brought into the House of Commons, we view as fatal Strokes to the liberties of these Colonies, and as a public robbery of our rights; but we rest with a firm assurance that the paltry policy, of attacking a town or a Province singly, will never so unhappily delude, as to disunite us from that joint, firm and universal opposition of all British America, which, we trust, will always render abortive every such pernicious measure.

As we have had occasion to write to South Carolina, previous to this, our earliest opportunity of answering your favour, we transmit you a copy of that letter, which you may please to communicate as you think proper. You have also enclosed, some other papers, from which you will be hilly sensible that we are ready to join in any measures for the public good.

We are with great esteem and regard, gentlemen, your most obedient, humble servants,

JOSEPH HUTCHINGS, PAUL LOYALL,
ALEXANDER SKINNER, WILLIAM HARVEY.
JAMES TAYLOR,

THE COMMITTEE OF NORFOLK AND PORTSMOUTH TO THE BOSTON COMMITTEE.
Norfolk, June 3, 1774,

GENTLEMEN: We gladly take this first opportunity of assuring our brethren of Boston, on this melancholy occasion, that we are not indifferent spectators of their distressing situation, under the present cruel exertion of British power, to support an edict calculated to ruin their trade, and for ever subject a very considerable property to the arbitrary pleasure of the Crown; our bosoms glow with tender regard for you; we sympathize with you in your sufferings I and thought it our duty devoutly to observe the appointment of the first of June as a day of fasting and prayer, solemnly to address the Almighty Ruler to support you in your afflictions, and to remove from our Sovereign pernicious Counsellors that have been the wicked instruments of your oppression. Be assured, we consider you as suffering in the common cause, and look upon ourselves as bound by the most sacred and solemn ties to support you in every measure that shall be found necessary to regain your just rights and privileges.

As we have had occasion to communicate our sentiments to Charlestown and Baltimore, we refer you to those letters, and the other papers transmitted to you; and although we are not one of the larger commercial towns on the Continent, yet, as the trade is more collected here than in any other place of this well watered and extensive Dominion, we thought it our duty to communicate what we apprehended to be the sense of the mercantile part of the community among us.

That the Almighty arm may support you and shield you in the hour of danger, is the fervent prayer of, gentlemen, your affectionate brethren,

THOMAS NEWTON, Jun., HENRY BROWN,
JOSEPH HUTCHINGS, ALEXANDER SKINNER,
MATTHEW PHRIPP, THOMAS BROWN,
SAMUEL KERR, ROBERT TAYLER.
ROBERT SHEDDEN,

LIEUT-GOVERNOUR COLDEN TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.
Extract.

New-York, 1st June, 1774.

The Act of Parliament shutting up the port of Boston, was brought to this place by a merchant vessel a few days before I received it from your Lordship's office.

The Act was immediately published in all our newspapers, and was the subject of all conversation. I knew that people universally in this Colony had received such ideas of being taxed at the pleasure of Parliament, that I was particularly anxious upon this occasion to discover the sentiments of those who might have most influence over others, and was assured by the gentlemen of the Council, and others of weight in me city, that no means would be omitted to prevent the hot-headed people taking any measures that might endanger the peace and quiet of the Colony,

The men who at that time called themselves the Committee, who dictated and acted in the name of the people, were many of them of the lower rank, and all the warmest zealots of those called the Sons of Liberty. The more considerable merchants and citizens seldom or never appear among them, but I believe were not displeased with the clamour and opposition that was shown against internal taxation by Parliament,

The principal inhabitants, being now afraid that these hot-headed men might run the city into dangerous measures, appeared in a considerable body at the first meeting of the people after the Boston Port Act was published here. They dissolved the former Committee, and appointed a new one of fifty-one persons, in which care was taken to have a number of the most prudent and considerate people of the place. Some of them have not before joined the public proceedings of the Opposition, and were induced to appear in what they are sensible is an illegal character, from a consideration, that if they did not, the business would be left in the same rash hands as before.

Letters had been received from Boston with an invitation from that town to the sister Colonies; immediately to come into a resolution to refrain from any commerce with Great Britain and the West India Islands, till the Act for shutting up the port of Boston was repealed. A printed handbill of this proposal is enclosed.

I am informed that the new Committee, in their answer to Boston, have given them no reason to expect that the merchants of this place will adopt so extravagant a measure, and people with whom I converse assure me, that they think it cannot be brought about by the meet zealous advocates of opposition. As yet no resolutions have been taken by the people of this Colony, and the cool, prudent men will endeavour to keep measures in suspense till they have an opportunity of adopting the best. I am told they have proposed that the Colonies be invited to send Deputies to meet together, in order to petition the King for redress of grievances, and deliberate upon some plan whereby the jealousies between Great Britain and her Colonies may be removed. It is allowed by the intelligent among them, that these assemblies of the people, without authority of Government, are illegal, and may be dangerous, but they deny that they are unconstitutional when a national grievance cannot otherwise be removed. What resolutions will be taken I cannot yet say. The Government of this Province has no coercive power over these assemblies of the people, but the authority of the Magistrates, in all other cases, is submitted to as usual.

MAJOR GEN. HALDIMAND TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Extract.

New-York, 1st June, 1774.

I think it my duty to acquaint your Lordship with the apparent effect which the late vigorous measures adopted by the Parliament of Great Britain have made on the minds of the people of this country; the few who entertained more loyal and liberal ideas of Government, are now induced and encouraged to speak their minds with more freedom, and fear not to disapprove the rash proceedings of their countrymen, blindly led by a few hot-headed and designing men. This has operated so far as to prevent, hitherto, the effect of the resolution warmly urged by a number of violent enthusiasts, to shut up their ports themselves, both here and at Philadelphia, and to decline any importation from Great Britain and Ireland, or exportation to any of the West India Islands, until the Act against the town of Boston should be repealed.

The more timid amongst them, actuated by self-interest and common prudence, have joined the few who dared to stand forth against such outrageous and illegal combinations. In consequence of which the measure was rejected; but it is to be feared that the fire is only smothered at present, and might break out anew unless the measures said to be adopted subsequent to the Boston Port Bill, should prove sufficient to restore the good order and harmony so essential to Britain and her Colonies, to assure the dependence of the latter on the Kingdom of Great Britain, and in time remove the prejudices now subsisting.

Williamsburg, June 2, 1774.

By advices from Fincastle, we learn that there has been a smart skirmish, on the branches of New River, between a party of white people, who were out surveying lands, and a number of Indians, whom they fell in with, supposed to be Shawancse. Our people drove the Indians off, and killed eight of them, with the loss of eight men and a boy of their own party; among them the noted Captain John Ashby, who, in the last war, brought the first account of General Braddock's defeat to this city with amazing expedition.

We likewise hear, that the frontier inhabitants are all in motion at the alarming behaviour of the Indians, and seem determined to drive from among them so cruel and treacherous an enemy.

FREDERICKSBURG (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Inhabitants of Fredericksburg, in the County of Spottsylvania, and Colony of Virginia, at the Town House, on Wednesday, the first day of June, 1774:

Resolved, That it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting to concur in every proper measure that may be thought expedient by our sister Colonies, on this important occasion, respecting the hostile invasions of the rights and liberties of the town of Boston.

Resolved, That Messrs. Fielding Lewis, Charles Dick, Charles Mortimer, James Mercer, Charles Washington, William Woodford, James Duncanson, William Porter, George Thornton, and Charles Yates, be appointed a Committee for this town to correspond with the neighbouring towns and counties for the purpose of communicating to each other, in the most speedy manner, their sentiments on this present interesting and alarming situation of America.

Resolved, That Benjamin Johnston be appointed Clerk to this Committee.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this Committee, as well as those of other Provinces and Colonies, laid before them this day, be fairly transcribed by the Clerk in a book to be kept for that purpose.

Per order of the Committee,

BENJAMIN JOHNSTON, Town Clerk.

II. TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE BRITISH COLONIES IN AMERICA.

Philadelphia, June 1, 1774.

BRETHREN: It is not my design to travel through all the Ministerial manoeuvres respecting us since the commencement of this Reign; it is not necessary. Sufficient, I trust, it will prove, to lay before you such a series of correspondent facts as will thoroughly convince you that a plan has been deliberately framed, and pertinaciously adhered to, unchanged even by frequent changes of Ministers, unchecked by any intervening gleam of humanity, to sacrifice to a passion for arbitrary dominion, the universal property, liberty, safety, honour, happiness and prosperity of us, unoffending yet devoted Americans; and that every man of us is deeply interested in the fate of our brethren of Boston.

If such a series is not laid before you, the combined force of which shall tear up by the roots, and throw out of your bosoms every lurking doubt, censure me as an enthusiast, too violently warmed by a sense of the injustice practised against my beloved country.

The danger of a father's life once racked words from a dumb son. Worse than death, in my view, threatens our common mother. Pardon, therefore, a brother's imperfections.

Amidst a volume of institutions called regulations, wrong at first, corrected in other errors, again corrected, still requiring regulation, and remaining, after all their editions, if not like Draco's codes of blood, yet codes of plunder, confounding, by the intricacy and multiplicity of their inventions, and confiscating for having confounded, * appears the Fourth of George the Third, chapter 15th styled, "An Act for granting certain duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America," &c. This was the first comet of this kind that glared over these Colonies since their existence. Here first we find the Commons of Great Britain "giving and granting" our money for the express purpose of "raising a revenue in America."

We, busy in guiding our ploughs, felling our timber, or sailing in the circuits of traffic prescribed us, and still veering like bees to our hive, with millions of our gains to Great Britain, the centre of our toils by land and sea, poor harmless husbandmen and traders! scarce observed the blow given us. Our hearts filled with confidence by contemplating the pleasing images of her generous, distinguished virtues, from the splendour of which, in our judgment, those of ancient Greece and Rome hid their diminished heads - suspicion could find no entrance. We saw, in the preamble, something of the usual forms "for extending and securing navigation and commerce," were lulled into security, nor could suppose the stroke was aimed at our vitals. An infant that had tottered along a directed walk in a garden, and loaded with flowers had presented them to a mother, would as soon have expected to be knocked down by her.

Not long were we suffered to enjoy our tranquillity. The fifth of George the Third, chapter the 12th, the ever memorable Stamp Act quickly followed. By this, reciting the former Act, the Commons of Great Britain "gave and granted" duties, so called, of our money, on almost every piece of parchment, vellum, or paper, to be used in these Colonies, and declared every instrument of writing without a Stamp to be void. Tax gatherers of a new kind were appointed to collect these duties. The petitions of our Assemblies, previous to its passing, on notice received of the design, asserting our rights, and sup-plicating a respect for them, were treated with contempt. You remember the time and its distress. You behaved as you ought.*

* Omitting the immense increase of people, by natural population, in the more Northern Colonies, and the migration from every part of Europe, I am convinced the whole commercial system of America may be altered to advantage. You have prohibited where you ought to have encouraged; and you have encouraged where you ought to have prohibited. Improper restraints have been laid on the Continent in favour of the Islands. You have but two Nations to trade with in America. Would you had twenty! Let Acts of Parliament in consequence of treaties remain, but let not an English Minister become a Custom House officer for Spain, or for any foreign Power. Much is wrong, much may be amended for the general good of the whole."-MR. PITT'S Speech.

Convinced that a people who wish to be free, must resolve to be free, you abolished the "abominable thing," and proceeded in your usual business, without any regard to the illegal edict obtruded upon you.

Permit me to add two observations relating to remarkable attendants on the taxation comprised in that Act, the memory of which is perhaps grown faint, from length of time, in some minds.

By the statutes granting Stamp Duties in England or Great Britain, especial caution has been taken that nothing more should be levied upon the subject under any pretence whatsoever, than the duties themselves. These words run through those Acts, "That the officers shall receive the "several duties, and stamp and mark the vellum, parchment, and paper, &c., without any other fee or reward;" "which stamp or mark shall be a sufficient discharge for "the respective duties," &c. And "the Commissioners "shall take care that the several parts of the Kingdom "shall, from time to time, be sufficiently furnished with "vellum, parchment, and paper, stamped and marked as "is directed, TO THE END that the subjects, &c., MAY "HAVE IT IN THEIR ELECTION, either to buy the same of "the officers and persons to be employed, &c., at the "usual and most common rates above the said duties, or "to bring THEIR OWN vellum, parchment, or paper, to "be stamped or marked as aforesaid."†

Was the Stamp Act for America like other statutes? Judge. By this it is enacted, "That the High Treasurer, "or any three or more of the Commissioners of the Treasury, shall once in every year SET THE PRICES, at which "all sorts of stamped vellum, parchment, and paper, shall "be sold," &c.

The Stamps were kept in England. Ship loads of "all "sorts of stamped vellum, parchment, and papers" were sent over to us. We had no choice, either to take these or to carry other vellum, parchment, or paper to be stamped. We must not only have paid the certain duties imposed, but the uncertain "prices" which the Commissioners should please to "set" for the value of their "vellum, "parchment, and paper;" and "penalties and forfeitures" fell upon us every step we took, without paying these impositions. This surely was not only to be taxed by the Parliament, but over again for the same articles by the Commissioners.

Here some men, whose minds are strongly impressed with ideas of equity, may ask, if it is possible that even a British Parliament should so wantonly degrade us? It is as true as that the port of Boston is THIS DAY shut up.

The "forfeitures and penalties thereby imposed were to "be sued for and recovered in any Court of Record, OR "IN ANY COURT OF ADMIRALTY OR VICE ADMIRALTY, "appointed, or to be appointed, and having jurisdiction in "the respective Colony where the offence should be committed," &c.

THIS was no regulation of trade. The facts, to be tried in any dispute, must have arisen on land - within the body of a county as remote from Admiralty jurisdiction on every constitutional principle, as a suit on a bond, or an ejectment for a freehold. Yet thus, by a few lines, was the inestimable privilege of trial by jury to be torn from you and your posterity. Thus the decision of the rights of property, not in controversies between man and man, on the question of "meum vel tuum," where, though rung by oppression, the wretched loser might draw a degree of consolation, by reflecting that he had received some consideration for the substance taken away; or, at least, that a countryman gained his spoils - but in litigations founded on rigid forfeitures and arbitrary penalties - was to be referred to the corrupt tribunals of single Judges appointed from

* "I rejoice that America has resisted. Three millions of people, so dead to all the feelings of liberty as voluntarily to consent to be slaves, would have been fit instruments to make slaves of the rest."-MR. PITT'S Speech.

† Fifth and sixth William and Mary, chapter 21; thirtieth George Second, chapter 19, and other statutes."

another country filled with its prejudices - holding their commissions during pleasure totally independent of you - claiming fees and salaries to be paid out of your money - condemned by themselves.*

If this be "wisdom," it is not of that kind, the "ways whereof are past finding out."

The Act, thus revoked by you, received soon after a formal repeal in Parliament. This was done by the sixth

* "When the Jury have delivered in their verdict, and it is recorded in Court, they are then discharged. And so ends a trial by jury. A trial which, besides the other vast advantages which we have occasionally observed in its progress, is also as expeditious and cheap as it is convenient, equitable, and certain; for a commission out of Chancery, or the civil law courts, for examining witnesses in one cause, will frequently last as long, and of course be full as expensive, as the trial of a hundred issues at nisi prius; and yet the fact cannot be determined by such Commissioners at all; no, not till the depositions are published and read at the hearing of the cause in Court.

"Upon these accounts the trial by jury ever has been, and I trust ever will be, looked upon as the glory of the English law. And, if it has so great an advantage ever others in regulating civil property, how much must that advantage be heightened when it is applied to criminal cases! But this we must refer to the ensuing book of these commentaries: only observing for the present, that it is the most transcendent privilege which any subject can enjoy, or wish for, that he cannot be affected either in his property, his liberty, or his person, but by the unanimous consent of twelve of his neighbours and equals. A Constitution, that I may venture to affirm has, under Providence, secured the just liberties of this nation for a long succession of ages. And, therefore, a celebrated French writer (a) who concludes, that because Rome, Sparta, and Carthage have lost their liberties, therefore those of England in time must perish, should have recollected that Rome, Sparta, and Carthage, at the time when their liberties were lost, were strangers to the trial by jury.

"Great as this eulogium may seem, it is no more than this admirable Constitution, when traced to its principles, will be found in sober reason to deserve. The impartial administration of justice, which secures both our persons and our properties, is the great end of civil society. But if that be entirely entrusted to the Magistracy, a select body of men, and those generally selected by the Prince, or such as enjoy the highest offices in the State, their decisions, in spite of their own natural integrity, will have frequently an involuntary bias towards those of their own rank and dignity. It is not to be expected from human nature, that the few should be always attentive to the interests and good of the many. On the other hand if the power of judicature were placed at random in the hands of the multitude, their decisions would be wild and capricious, and a new rule of action would be every day established in our Courts. It is wisely, therefore, ordered, that the principles and axioms of law, which are general propositions, flowing from abstracted reason, and not accommodated to times or to men, should be deposited in the breasts of the Judges, to be occasionally applied to such facts as come properly ascertained before them. For here partiality can have little scope; the law is well known, and is the same for all ranks and degrees: it follows as a regular conclusion from the premises of fact pre-established. But in settling and adjusting a question of fact, when intrusted to any single Magistrate, partiality and injustice have an ample field to range in; either by boldly asserting that to be approved which is not so, or more artfully, by suppressing some circumstances, stretching and warping others, and distinguishing away the remainder. Here, therefore, a competent number of sensible and upright jurymen chosen by lot, from among those of the middle rank, will be found the best investigators of truth, and the surest guardians of public justice. For the most powerful individual in the State will be cautious of committing any flagrant invasion of another's right, when he knows that the fact of his oppression must be examined and decided by twelve indifferent men; and that, when once the fact is ascertained the law must of course redress it. This, therefore, preserves, in the hands of the people that share which they ought to have in the administration of public justice, and prevents the encroachments of the more powerful and wealthy citizens. Every new tribunal, erected for the decision of facts, without the intervention of a jury, (whether composed of Justices of the Peace, Commissioners of the Revenue, Judges of a court of conscience, or any other standing Magistrates,) is a step towards establishing aristocracy, the most oppressive of absolute Governments. The feudal system which, for the sake of military subordination, pursued an aristocratical plan in all its arrangements of property, had been intolerable in times of peace, had it not been wisely counterpoised by that privilege so universally diffused through every part of it, the trial by the feudal Peers. And in every country on the Continent, as the trial by the Peers has been gradually disused, so the nobles have increased in power, till the State has been torn in pieces by rival factions, and oligarchy in effect has been established, though under the shadow of regal Government, unless where the miserable commons have taken shelter under an absolute monarchy, the lighter evil of the two. And particularly it is a circumstance well worthy an Englishman's observation, that in Sweden the trial by jury, that bulwark of Northern liberty, which continued in its full vigour, so lately as the middle of the last century, (b) is now fallen into disuse; (c) and that there, though the regal power is in no country so closely limited, yet the liberties of the commons are extinguished, and the Government is degenerated into a mere aristocracy. (d) It is, therefore, upon the whole, a duty which every man owes to his country, his friends, his posterity, and himself, to maintain to the utmost of his power, this valuable Constitution of all his rights, to restore it to its ancient dignity, if at all impaired by the different value of property, or otherwise deviated from its first institution; to amend it wherever it is defective; and, above all, to guard with the most jealous circumspection against the introduction of new and arbitrary methods of trial, which, under a variety of plausible pretenses, may in time imperceptibly undermine this best preservative of English liberty."BLACKSTONE'S Com, 3d vol. p. 378, 381.

(a) Montesq, Sp. L. xi, 6. (b) Whitelocke of Patl. 427. (c) Mod. Un. Hist. xxxiii, 22, (d) Mod. Un. Hist. xxxiii, 17, of George the Third, chapter the 11th. Because it was unconstitutional, as we were not and could not be represented there; No. Because it deprived "three millions of loyal subjects of their darling privilege of trial by jury, 'the best preservative of English liberty;" "No. Because "the continuance of the Act would be attended "with many inconveniences, and might be productive of "consequences greatly detrimental to the commercial interests of Great Britain.

Cool, guarded expressions! breathing the true spirit of the modern philosophy, so prevailing among the higher ranks in that polished Kingdom. How much care to avoid inconveniences and detriment to their own commercial interests! How sovereign a contempt for all the agonies that bowed us down to the earth, while indignation, shame, grief, affection, veneration, and gratitude combatted within our breasts! They were advised to speak peace to our souls, by nobly assigning an "erroneous principle," for the repeal. * No. The freedom of America is the Carthage of Great Britain - delenda est. "Let us repeal the Act, "but never resign the principle on which it was founded."

One generous step they did take, becoming Britons. It demands our acknowledgments; nor should we withhold them. Why will they not suffer us to thank them for other favours?

The repealing Act spoke an indecisive language, subject to comments, that might differ on different sides of the Atlantic. We might have been too much agitated between hopes and apprehensions. It would have been unkind to leave us in such a state of anxiety. It would have been unworthy of a free people, who were determined to subjugate another free people. "Parmenio may steal victories, Alexander scorns it."

Therefore, the same day, I think, on which they repealed the Stamp Act, in the next chapter, however, they candidly explained to us their sentiments and resolutions, beyond a possibility of a mistake by the "Act for the better "securing the dependency of his Majesty's Dominions in "America upon the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain."

"Lift up thine eyes round about, and behold: all these "gather themselves together, AND COME TO THEE: Thou "shalt SURELY CLOTHE thee with them all, as with an "ornament, and BIND them on thee as a bride doth."

Philadelphia, June 1, 1774.

TO ALL THE ENGLISH COLONIES OF NORTH AMERICA.

Remember the fable of the bundle of sticks given by the father to his sons; it could not be broken until it was divided. We must stand or fall together. For the Boston Port Act carries in its principle and effects the certain, if not the immediate destruction of all the liberties of America, the ruin of all our property, and greatly endangers the safety of our persons; its nature is so malignant, and its operations will be so fatal to our whole temporal happiness, that it cannot fail to awaken the attention of all America. The most deliberate wisdom, the steady counsel, and firm resolution of America, never was, and it is hardly conceivable, ever can be more necessary than in this dreadful crisis.

I don't pretend to be able to comprehend all the evils, or to point out half the consequences of that alarming statute; but a few that occur appear to me to deserve great consideration.

1st. The Legislative power, by which it was enacted, is founded in a direct violation of the most essential and fundamental principle of the English Constitution, viz: that no ENGLISHMAN shall be bound by any law to which he has not consented.

2d. The ordinary object of human laws, is either the attainment of some benefit, resulting therefrom, or the remedy of a mischief. But this is a mere statute of vengeance, wreaked on the Bostonians, for opposing the Parliamentary duty on tea, and is, therefore, a practical proof as well as dreadful sample of the disposition of the British Parliament to hurl mighty destruction against all who oppose their impositions, whenever it is in their power to cause their resentment to be felt.

8d. The interest ruined by this Act of Parliamentary vengeance is immense, 'tis the trade and navigation of an ancient metropolis of one of the richest and oldest Provinces of English America, whose dignity and merit is second to none on this Continent; whose inhabitants are almost wholly of English descent; whose affections for the English nation, and attachment to Hanoverian succession have been rapturously warm; whose patience and perseverance, whose expense of lives and treasure in commencing and extending the conquests and settlements of English America, all far exceed the utmost claim or boast of any other English Colony. But they oppose the Tea Duty, therefore their merits are forgotten, their honour is laid in the dust; their interest, obtained by long and painful industry to the amount of hundreds of thousands, is ruined; their traitors are cherished and encouraged, their humble and dutiful petitions are rejected, their claims of right, founded in nature, in the English Constitution, and in their Charter, under the sacred sanction of the public faith, are spurned ought of sight with anger and contempt.

4th. The extent and operation of this baneful Act is mostly confined to the harbour of Boston, and its appendages, but its principle extends to every inch of English America. The Bostonians have as good a right to their harbour, their shipping, their wharfs and landing places, as they have to their houses, gardens, streets, commons, country seats, and plantations, and as good a right as the Philadelphians have to theirs, and, therefore, nothing can be more manifest than this, viz: That the same principle, the same power, that can seize on and wrest the one, can, with equal right and authority, seize on and wrest all the others out of the hands and use of their present proprietors, and, therefore, it follows by a consequence, which I dare say the British Parliament don't mean to deny, that if we presume to oppose any Act they may make, however oppressive and tyrannical we may deem it, or even to affront any peevish officer they may appoint over us, or without any of these, if they should even conceit we affront them, or if, without even such conceit, they should take it into their heads to exercise the absurd plenitude of their power over us, I say, in any of these cases, the same Parliamentary power which has deprived the Bostonians of their harbour, wharfs, landing places, &c., can, with equal authority, deprive any and every English Colony on the Continent of theirs, and accordingly send a sufficient force of ships and soldiers to stop every port in them, and put an end to all their navigation and trade; and not that only, but drive them all from their houses, streets, cities, and plantations. I appeal to the public if these are strained consequences, and if the power that can do the one cannot, with equal right, do all the rest.

5th. This fatal Act, as far as it relates to personal covenants and contracts, not only makes void all bills of lading, charter parties, &c., relating to vessels and cargoes destined to the port of Boston, and which may arrive there after the first day of June next; but the principle of this manifestly extends to all written contracts and covenants whatsoever, sealed or unsealed; to all deeds of lands, mortgages, indentures, covenants, bonds, bills, notes, receipts, &c., for there can be no doubt that the same power which is able to vacate, by sovereign authority, covenants and contracts relative to navigation made by private persons on reasonable and lawful considerations, can vacate also all covenants and contracts relating to inland affairs, so that if we should happen to disapprove of the Tea Duty, the Boston Port Act, or any other law the British Parliament may see fit to make, we may expect soon to be visited with a law from them, vacating all our deeds of lands, indentures of servants, bonds, &c., empowering all our servants to run away, and every rascal that pleases to enter on our estates and turn us out of our houses, &c.

6th. This dreadful extent of power is claimed by the British Parliament, on whom we have not the least check, and whose natural prejudices will ever induce them to oppress us - they are not of our appointment, they do not hope for our votes, or fear the loss of them at a future election; they have no natural affection for us; they don't feel for us; they never expect to see us, and therefore do not court our smiles, or dread meeting our angry countenances.

* "Upon the whole, I will beg leave to tell the House what is my opinion; it is, that the Stamp Act be repealed, absolutely, totally, and immediately; that the reason for the repeal be assigned, because it was founded on an erroneous principle."- Mr. PITT'S Speech.

ces. When. they vote away our money, they don't, at the same time, give that of their own and their best friends with it, but, on the contrary, they ease themselves and their friends of the whole burthen they lay on us, and, therefore, will always have strong inducements to make our burdens as heavy as possible that they may lighten their own. Indeed, in every view of this Act, it appears replete with horror, ruin, and woe, to all America; it matters not where it begins to operate, no Colony on the Continent is exempt from its dreadful principle, nor can any one that has a seaport avoid its execution. But however ghostly, grinning, and death-like this awful threatening power lowers over us, I doubt not there are means left to America to avoid its effects, and virtue enough to induce every individual to throw aside every little consideration and unite with immoveable firmness in the important business of self-creation.

We have reason to think this is the last effort of the power that would oppress us; if, it takes place we are undone, undone with our posterity. If we oppose and avoid it, we may still continue to enjoy our liberties, and posterity will look back to this alarming period, and will admire and boast the virtue of their ancestors that saved them from slavery and ruin.

KENT COUNTY (MARYLAND) RESOLUTIONS.

A numerous and very respectable Meeting of the Inhabitants of Kent County, in Maryland, was held at the Court House in Chestertown, on Thursday, the 2d day of June, 1774, pursuant to public notice given for that purpose.

THOMAS SMITH, Esq., was unanimously chosen Chairman.

And, after reading the Act of Parliament for blocking up the harbour of Boston, and sundry letters and papers received from the Committee of Correspondence at Annapolis, the following gentlemen were chosen to correspond with the Committees of the other counties of this Province, and of the Colonies in general, viz: William Ringgold. (Eastern Neck,) Robert Buchanan, John Maxwell, Emory Sudler, Colonel Richard Lloyd, Colonel Joseph Nicholson, John Cadwallader, Joseph Nicholson, Jun., Thomas Ringgold, Thomas B. Hands, Joseph Earle, Ezekiel Foreman, James Anderson, James Hynson, James Pearce, and Isaac Spencer, Esquires, and Messrs. William Carmichael, John Vorhees, Donaldson Yeates, William Ringgold, (Chestertown,) Eleazer McComb, Dr. John Scott, Jeremiah Nicols, Dr. William Bordley, and Captain James Nicholson.

The gentlemen present then desired the Committee to nominate a select number of their members to meet the Committees from the different counties in one Grand Provincial Committee, at the city of Annapolis, on a day thereafter to be appointed, to deliberate on proper measures to be taken in conjunction with the other Colonies, in order to bring about a repeal of the above Act of Parliament, so destructive in its consequences to the liberties of America in general, and of the town of Boston in particular.

The following gentlemen were appointed for that purpose, viz: Mr. Chairman, William Ringgold (Eastern Neck,) Joseph Nicholson, Jun., Thomas Ringgold, and Joseph Earle, Esquires, who were directed to use every means in their power to promote unanimity of counsels, in order that a rational and well concerted plan may be laid down and prosecuted to attain the end proposed.

The gentlemen of the Committee being moved with the most tender sympathy for the distresses of their suffering brethren of Boston, particularly of the labouring poor, who are deprived of the means of supporting themselves and families by the operation of the Act for blocking up their harbour, opened a subscription for their relief, which in a little time was filled up to a considerable amount, and is left in the hands of the Chairman to be collected and shipped to them in such articles of provisions as may be most wanted, whenever it shall be necessary.

The Committee then adjourned to the house of Mr. Edward Warrell, in the said town, where their future meetings are to be held.

Signed by order of the Committee,
WILLIAM HALL, Clerk.

Extract of a Letter from one of the members of the House of Assembly of NEW-JERSEY, and one of the Committee of Correspondence, which consists of nine members. Dated JUNE 2, 1774.

"I returned yesterday from New-Brunswick, where six of our Committee met. We answered the Boston letters, informing them that we look on New-Jersey as eventually in the same predicament with Boston, and that we will do every thing which may be generally agreed on. We have signed a request to the Governour to call the General Assembly, to meet at such time as his Excellency may think proper, before the first of August next. Our Committee is well disposed in the cause of American freedom."

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED IN PHILADELPHIA.

Boston, June 2, 1774.

We have been, for three weeks past, in a general hurry in business; most of our navigation is gone, and by the 13th instant I do not expect to see six vessels in our harbour. One regiment of the troops arrived yesterday, and they are marking out the lines in our Common to fix tents. How many are to be fixed here we cannot tell, and indeed we can know nothing certain till the operations take place. Our Custom House Officers all take their departure to-day, if they did not set out last night, to Plymouth, (being in this port,) to carry on business there. Governour Hutchinson sailed yesterday morning in Captain Callahan, for London, with his second son, one of our consignees, and a daughter. Governour Gage sets out from Cambridge this day, for Salem, to meet the General Court there the 7th instant. Five gentlemen, in their private capacity, waited on him three or four days since, to know what the amount of the tea was, and to whom they might apply; but they could only obtain from him that they would know, but did not say when. He was much on the reserve: but from the conversation I have had with two of them, we shall not be able to know any thing, with certainty, till either this town, as a town, or the General Court, apply to him. He sent a written order to our Provincial Treasurer, to move the Province money down to Salem; but he refused complying, well knowing he could not answer it without the special orders of the Assembly. I hope the Southern Governments will view our case in its true light, which I take to be a besieged city, in which is a great diversity of opinions and interests, and in a very little time will be the city of a great multitude without business, and ready to break through stone walls for subsistence.

THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO GOVERNOUR GAGE.

Extract.

Whitehall, 3d June, 1774.

Since you left England the Parliament has made a very considerable progress in the American business, and I send you herewith, by the King's command, two Acts to which His Majesty gave the royal assent a few days ago.

These Acts close the consideration of what relates to the state of your Government, and it is hoped that they will have the good effect to give vigour and activity to civil authority; to prevent those unwarrantable assemblings of the people, for factious purposes, which have been the source of so much mischief; and to secure an impartial administration of justice in all cases where the authority of this Kingdom may be in question.

The Act for the better regulation of the Government of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, provides, that from the 1st of August next, all elections of the Council under the authority of the Charter, shall be void, and that, for the future, the Council shall be appointed by the King.

In consequence of that provision, his Majesty has, with the advice of the Privy Council, nominated thirty-six persons, qualified as the Act directs, to be the Council of Massachusetts Bay, from and after the time limited for the continuance of the present Council; and enclosed herewith, I send you his Majesty's additional instruction, under the sign manual, authorizing and requiring you to assemble the said Council, and containing such further directions as are thought necessary and incident to this new establishment, and as correspond with the provisions of the Act in relation thereto.

It would, perhaps, have been in some respects desirable that it might have been left to the King's discretion, to have directed that, in case of the death or absence of both Governour and Lieutenant Governour, the administration of Government should have been devolved on the Seniour Counsellor, as in other Governments; but as the Act reserves to the new Council all the liberties, privileges, and immunities enjoyed by the other, except in cases provided for, it is apprehended that such direction cannot be given, and for the same reason it has appeared, at least doubtful whether the Crown could delegate to you the powers of suspension and appointment to vacancies pro tempore, exercised in the other Royal Governments. In this situation it became the more necessary that a Lieutenant Governour should be immediately appointed; and the King having, upon Mr. Hutchinson's recommendation, nominated Mr. Oliver, of Cambridge, to that office, enclosed I send you his Majesty's sign manual, containing his appointment.

There is little room to hope that every one of the persons whom his Majesty has appointed to be of his Council, will be induced to accept that honour, for there can be no doubt that every art will be practised to intimidate and prejudice. I trust, however, that the number of those who decline will not be so considerable as to involve you in any difficulty on that account, or to create any embarrassment in the execution of a measure upon which so much depends.

Whatever vacancies may be created by any of the present members refusing to act, ought to be filled up as soon as possible, and, therefore, you will transmit to me, by the first opportunity, the names of such persons as you think best qualified for that trust, and the most likely to give weight and authority to the measures of Government; taking care, at the same time, not to propose any from whom you have not received assurances of their readiness to accept the office.

It is to be expected that every artifice which has been hitherto used with so much success to keep alive a spirit of sedition and opposition in the people, will be exerted on the present occasion to entangle and embarrass; but the King trusts that by temper and prudence on the one hand, and by firmness and resolution on the other, you will be able to surmount all the obstacles that can be thrown in your way.

It is impossible to foresee what those obstacles may be. If the General Court should happen to be sitting at the time when the new constitution of the Council is to take place, every advantage will probably be taken that such a situation affords, to create difficulties and throw the business into perplexity; but however that may be, and whatever may be urged, there can be no doubt that a prorogation at least will become absolutely necessary, in order to put an end to any business that may be depending before the old Council. Perhaps circumstances may require a dissolution, but it is much to be wished that, if possible, such a measure may be avoided.

The letters received from Mr. Hutchinson since you sailed from Plymouth, contain an account of the public proceedings down to the 5th of April, at which time it does not appear that any intelligence had been received in the Province of the steps that were taking here. It was, therefore, reasonable to suppose that the conduct and measures of the faction would be, as they actually were, of the same colour and complexion with those they had before pursued.

The impeachment of the Chief Justice seems to have been the favourite object of both Council and Assembly; but as Mr. Hutchinson had, with equal firmness and discretion, defeated that measure by prorogation, it is not necessary for me to say more on so extravagant a proceeding than that it was altogether an unwarrantable assumption of power, to which that Government is not, I conceive, either in the nature or principles of it, in any degree competent.

To what further extravagance the people may be driven, it is difficult to say; whatever violences are committed must be resisted with firmness; the constitutional authority of this Kingdom over its Colonies must be vindicated, and its laws obeyed throughout the whole Empire.

It is not only its dignity and reputation, but its power, nay, its very existence, depends upon the present moment; for should those ideas of independence, which some dangerous and ill-designed persons here are artfully endeavouring to instil into the minds of the King's American subjects, once take root, that relation between this Kingdom and its Colonies, which is the bond of peace and power, will soon cease to exist, and destruction must follow disunion. It is not the mere claim of exemption from the authority of Parliament in a particular case that has brought on the present crisis; it is actual disobedience and open resistance that have compelled coercive measures, and I have no longer any other confidence in the hopes I had entertained that the public peace and tranquillity would be restored, but that which I derive from your abilities, and the reliance I have on your prudence, for a wise and discreet exercise of the authorities given to you by the Acts which I now send you.

The powers contained in the Act for the more impartial administration of justice do, in particular, deserve your attention, for it is hardly possible to conceive a situation of greater difficulty and delicacy than that which a Governour would be in, if reduced to the necessity of exercising his discretion in the case provided for; but it is a case I trust that will never occur, and I will hope that, notwithstanding all the endeavours, equally flagitious and contemptible, used by a few desperate men to create in the people ideas of more general resistance, the thinking part of them will be awakened to such a sense of their true interests, and of the miseries that await a further continuance of these unhappy disputes, as to exert their best endeavours for a preservation of the public peace, and thereby give such effect and countenance to the civil authority as to render any other interposition than that of the ordinary Civil Magistrate unnecessary.

There is another American Bill, for making more effectual provision for quartering of his Majesty's troops, that has passed both Houses, and waits for the Royal assent, which, although of general purport, is founded principally on a case that occurred in the Province of Massachusetts Bay.

You will remember what happened at Boston in 1770, respecting the quartering of the two regiments sent thither from Halifax, and the artifices used by forced constructions of the Act of Parliament to elude the execution of it, and to embarrass the King's service. In order, therefore, to prevent the like in future, the present Bill is adopted, and enclosed I send you a printed copy of it, hoping to be able to send the Act itself by the first ship.

Charlestown, S. C., June 4, * 1774.

America has never seen a more critical period than the present. The Stamp Act, with all its ruinous consequences, portended less evil to this Continent than the present gathering storm.

When I consider the determined resolution of Parliament to enforce their pretended right of internal taxation, and reflect that the free-born Colonists, who have extended the British Empire over this once savage land, will sooner die than surrender the privileges of Englishmen, I tremble for the consequences. My heated imagination anticipates all the horrors of a civil war, and foresees these flourishing Provinces deluged with the unnatural bloodshed of our brethren and fellow-subjects. In this alarming situation of affairs, methinks I see every brow contracted into a serious gloom, and every thinking man earnestly inquiring "what is to be done."

Nothing can be entered upon by honest men with spirit and resolution, till they are first convinced of the justice of their cause. Let us then, without prejudice, inquire whether the present struggles of America are defensible on principles of equity? If we are wrong, let us with honour give up before force exacts a submission; if we are right, let us act like true patriots, and hold it out to the last, preferring one hour of virtuous liberty to a whole eternity of bondage.

* CHARLESTOWN, S. C. June 6. Saturday last being the King's birthday, when his Majesty entered the thirty-seventh year of his age, the same was observed here in the usual way, i. e. the bells were rung - colours displayed - guns, at the forts, fired - the militia were reviewed - and his Honour, the Lieutenant Governour, had company to dine with him in the Council Chamber - but there was not a single house illuminated at night, nor any other demonstration of joy; the people lamenting that so good a Prince should be beset by a Ministry who seem to have studied to alienate, rather than preserve, the affections of his most loyal subjects.

The original source of contention, from which every particular act of opposition has sprung, is reducible to this simple question: Has the Parliament of Great Britain a right to tax America internally? I presume they have not. Two perfect rights can never interfere; if they have a just right to demand our property, we cannot in justice withhold it; and if they have a right to take from us one penny without our consent, for the same reason they have a right to the whole. From which this consequence is demonstrably evident: that we have no property at all, but are the vassals of the British House of Commons, holding all our possessions by their gracious forbearance, who have a right at pleasure, to take what, when, how much, and in any manner, they please. Or, in a word, I may say with Mr. Locke, "what property has any man in that which another has a right to take from him?"

It being proved that the Parliament has no right to tax America internally, it follows, that their claim is founded only in their superior strength. What name do we assign to that man, or body of men, who demands our property without any right, intending to prosecute the claim with an armed force? I blush to mention it, and shall only say, that the man who demands my money with a pistol at my breast is commonly called a robber; and that no proposition in Euclid is more capable of demonstration, than that such a man has as good a right to the money in my pocket as the House of Commons to tax us without our consent.

In this view of the matter, we are justified by the Constitution, by reason, by nature, yea, by God himself, in opposing, by every prudent measure, the payment of every such demand. Heaven approves the generous struggle.

We are only contending for our natural rights, and that liberty wherewith God has made us all free. The cause we are embarked in is good, and if any of the subordinate means used have been rash, the blame of them lies at the door of those who, by oppression, (which will make a wise man mad) have hurried the loyal Americans unadvisedly into them.

We are, therefore, reduced to this dilemma, either to acknowledge ourselves tenants at will to the House of Commons, or resolutely oppose this claim by every prudent measure. What are the prudent measures? I answer, that all the Americans should unite, firmly resolved to stand by one another even to death; one great soul of harmony should animate this whole Continent, and dispose each one to consider an injury offered to any part as offered to himself. Hapless Boston! that firmest bulwark of American liberty, is doomed to be the first victim at the altar of Ministerial vengeance. Shall we stand by indifferent spectators because we were spared? Surely, no! The free-horn soul of every genuine patriot resents the guilty thought, and resolves to stand or fall with these firm defenders of our common rights. To enforce this union more, give me leave to observe, that New-York and Philadelphia are in the same predicament with Boston; and what is Charlestown behind either? Have not all obstructed the operation of one unconstitutional British Act of Parliament? And where is the mighty difference between destroying the tea, and resolving to do it, with such firmness as intimidated the Captains to return? Besides, did not every Province applaud the Bostonians with high commendations of their zeal for American liberty? I humbly hope they will act so far consistent with themselves, as to resent the treatment offered to that town as though it were offered to every other one. The contrary conduct would be ungenerous, cruel, and contrary to the true interest of the whole.

Why are the Bostonians destined for the first sacrifice? Not because they are most guilty; but because the Ministry would fondly divide the Province - divide and destroy - an attempt to punish all at once might unite all. If they ever can subjugate the free spirit of New England, (which may God forbid,) that instant the evil genius of tyranny will begin to stalk over these Provinces with gigantic strides, blasting the fruits of our virtuous industry. Where gay fields now smile, bedecked in the yellow robe of full eared harvest, Soon would-desolation frown over the uncultivated earth. Suns would in vain arise, and in vain would showers descend; for who would be industrious when others would reap the fruit of his labour? After the subjugation of Boston, New-York, and Philadelphia, our turn would be next. Methinks I see our courts of justice removed - our harbour blockaded - navigation stopped - our streets crowded with soldiers, insulting the peaceable inhabitants, and raising provisions to a starving price and, after a little time, the now flourishing Charlestown reduced to a neglected plain.

Rise just indignation! Rise patriotism! and every public virtue! to the aid of our much injured country. Let us convince the world that Britons will be Britons still, in every age and clime. Let us instantly join our sister Colonies and resent the treatment offered by every possible means, whilst our united opposition can avail. Let us heartily unite in some well digested general plan that cannot fail to operate to the early relief of our brethren in Boston, now actually suffering in the common cause of American liberty. Let us begin by abolishing all parties and distinctions - abandoning luxury and pleasure - and establishing economy. Let us nobly determine to make a willing sacrifice of our private interest to this glorious cause this cause of infinite importance. Let us enter into solemn resolutions not to import any British goods, (a very few necessary articles excepted) and determine firmly and strictly to adhere to them till the privileges of Boston are restored - the Tea Duty repealed - and the right of internal taxation given up. Let us, (if we are driven to that extreme necessity, and nothing less can restore us to our Constitutional freedom,) even desist to export - in which case it will be expedient that we determine not to distress each other by suits, and apply to the gentlemen of the law to decline business. Let us endeavour to make the union amongst ourselves, as well as with our sister Colonies, as perfect as human means can render it. "By uniting we stand, by dividing we fall." I foresee many inconveniences that will arise from every measure we can pursue; but I maintain it, they are infinitely short of what would follow on our giving up the point is dispute. If the Parliament's claim of internal taxation be established, either by our consent or by a military force, that moment we are transformed into slaves - all our property at the absolute disposal of the House of Commons.

Death itself is an event devoutly to be wished in comparison of such a state. Let us then act wisely; of two evils choose the least - join with our sister Colonies in a determined proper opposition to tyranny. Resolve rather to die the last of American freemen, than live the first of American slaves.

ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY (MARYLAND) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of a very considerable and respectable body of the Inhabitants of Anne Arundel County, inclusive of those of the City of Annapolis, on Saturday, the 4th day of June, 1774.

Mr. BRICE THOMAS BEALE WORTHINGTON, Moderator.

1. Resolved, unanimously, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the town of Boston is now suffering in the common cause of America, and that it is incumbent on every Colony in America, to unite in effectual means to obtain a repeal of the late Act of Parliament for blocking up the harbour of Boston.

2. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that if the Colonies come into a joint resolution to stop all importations from, and exportations to Great Britain and to West Indies, till the said Act be repealed, the same will be the most effectual means to obtain a repeal of the said Act, and preserve North America and her liberties.

3. Resolved therefore, unanimously, That the inhabitants of this county will join in an Association with the several counties in this Province, and the principal Colonies in America, to put a stop to exports to Great Britain, and the West Indies, after the ninth day of October next, or such other day as may be agreed on, and to put a stop to the imports of goods, not already ordered, and of those ordered that shall not be shipped from Great Britain, by the 20th day of July next, or such other day as may be agreed on, until the said Act shall be repealed; and that such Association be on oath.

4. Resolved, That as remittances can be made only from exports, after stopping the exports to Great Britain and the West Indies, it will be impossible for very many of the people of this Province who are possessed of valuable property, immediately to pay off their debts, and therefore it is the opinion of this meeting the gentlemen of the law ought to bring no suit for the recovery of any debt due from any inhabitant of this Province, to any inhabitant of Great Britain, until the said Act be repealed; and further, that they ought not to bring suit for the recovery of any debt due to any inhabitant of this Province, except in such cases where the debtor is guilty of a wilful delay in payment, having ability to pay, or is about to abscond, or remove his effects, or is wasting his substance, or shall refuse to settle his account.

5. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that a Congress of Deputies from the several counties to be held at Annapolis, as soon as conveniently may be, will be the most speedy and effectual means of uniting all the parts of this Province in such Association as proposed; and that if agreeable to the sense of our sister Colonies, Delegates ought to be appointed from this Province to attend a general Congress of Deputies from the other Colonies, at such time and place as may be agreed on, to effect unity in a wise and prudent plan for the forementioned purpose.

6. Resolved, unanimously, That the inhabitants of this County will, and it is the opinion of this meeting, that the Province ought to break off all trade and dealings with that Colony, Province, or town, which shall decline, or refuse to come into similar resolutions with a majority of the Colonies. *

7. Resolved, That Brice Thomas Beale Worthington,

* QUESTIONS Submitted to the consideration of the Committee for ANNE ARUNDEL County.

1. If the Association takes place on the proposed plan, will not a multitude of artificers and labourers of every denomination be immediately deprived of all means of subsistence? If that be the case will they, if no tender regard be paid to their interest and real importance in society, no refuge be provided for their inevitable distress, have any other resource than AN APPEAL TO HEAVEN AND A STRONG ARM in support of the natural and inextinguishable right of self-preservation? For I assume it as a point granted, that in a common and extreme calamity the barriers erected by positive law to fence and distinguish private property are thrown down, and that every thing relapses into a state of nature.

2. Shall not the landlord be bound, neither to demand payment in money or produce of the tenant, nor to make charge of rent whilst the Association lasts?

3. Will it not be most improvident to suffer the accumulation of interest to swallow up our effects, and spread itself like a rapid and consuming disease to our persons, the moment we have by our efforts in a contest equally interesting to ALL baffled the counsels of a Tyrant Minister? Will it not be strikingly unjust, that the trade of the money-lender alone shall continue to produce its fruits without interruption, to be gathered in season, out of the substance of those who are already stunned and exhausted by the suspension of their respective trades, occupations, and pursuits? Shall not all bonds then on interest, not only lie TO ALL INTENTS AND PURPOSES DEAD during the existence of the Association, but be controuled by suitable and temporary restrictions in the commencement and manner of their operation when it shall expire? And the observance of this be enforced by obligations as solemn as any other article of the Association?

4. If every issue of wealth be effectually stopped up, how shall the annual interest arising on public bonds be discharged? And will not the situation of this Province be truly deplorable, when the period fixed by law for calling in the principal shall arrive, unless some expedient be devised to shield us from the misfortune, without blasting the credit of our Provincial fund?

5. Will not the exceptions of the fourth Resolve, pointing out the conduct which ought to be observed by the gentlemen of the law towards the debtors and creditors residing in this Province, be construed as a banter unbecoming so awful an occasion, unless some standard, some precise rule be set up to give them significance and effect? If as it would seem, the gentlemen of the law are clothed with the power to decide in cases of this moment, shall not the debtor, upon inquisition, be obliged to reveal under oath every the most delicate circumstance, which may contribute to give a complete view of his affairs, and furnish a certain ground to judge of his ABILITY or DISABILITY to PAY? What shall amount to a proof that a debtor is about to ABSCOND or REMOVE HIS EFFECTS? How shall a debtor clearly know the degree of excess which shall subject him to the charge of WASTING HIS SUBSTANCE; since, when property is at stake, some men are so much more ready to take the alarm than others, and what one shall censure as unwarrantable prodigality, another will commend as the laudable exertion of a social heart, and even the secret dispensations of melting charity are, when detected, by some transmuted into culpable profusion? What is meant by SETTLING AN ACCOUNT?

6. Shall the inhabitants of Great Britain be deemed by the gentlemen of the law, totally excluded from the benefit of the exceptions referred to in the preceding section, and yet their effects here be liable to be attached for debts due to the inhabitants of this Province?

June 13, 1774.

CANDOUR

FOURTH SERIES.

25

Charles Carroll, barrister, John Hall, William Paca, Samuel Chase, Thomas Johnson, Jun., Matthias Hammond, Thomas Sprigg, Samuel Chew, John Weems, Thomas Dorsey, Rezin Hammond, and John Hood, Jun., be a Committee to attend a general meeting at Annapolis, and of Correspondence to receive and answer all letters, and on any emergency to call a general meeting, and that any six of the number have power to act.

Ordered, That a copy of these Resolves be transmitted to the Committees of the several counties of this Province, and be also published in the Maryland Gazette.

By order,

JOHN DUCKETT, Clerk of Committee.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED AT NEW-YORK.

Philadelphia, June 4, 1774.

I pity our brethren in Boston; they are very severely punished; but some of their friends here, and I fear with you also, are too warm, and to serve them seem willing to draw us into the same dilemma; but surely this is not the way to serve the general cause; we can be of more use to our brethren when whole than when broken, and I cannot let go my hopes that we may by a joint petition of our rights to the Crown, prevent things from going to extremities, and get Boston restored to the same liberties with the other Colonies; but some wish to push all things into confusion; with them I can never join, while any other expedient it left. Our letter to Boston is a moderate one, yet warm and firm enough. You have no doubt seen it, as a copy was sent to your Committee, who are of our sentiments, and I hope will continue cool.

Hartford, Conn., June 4, 1774.

To the Honourable JONATHAN TRUMBULL, Esq., Governor of the English Colony of CONNECTICUT, in NEW ENGLAND, &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONOUR: In your great condescension graciously still please to consider of me; methinks I stand in need of every help and encouragement attainable. May it please your Honour to grant unto me my humble request.

Your Honour doubtless remembers that I made mention of another recommendation and pass from your Honour, when I was admitted into your presence, humbly desiring that it might be more extensive, not confined to one or two journies, or to one or two years, neither to any particular place, as I shall be going from one Government unto another, sometimes I shall be travelling up and down in this Government, also in Rhode-Island and York Governments, and perhaps also in Boston and Hampshire Governments; and I know not where else, and in thus travelling it is very probable that I shall see many strangers, and your Honour knows that the world is fuller inquiries. Also I would inform your Honour that a recommendation and pass from thee, is a great help to me; it not only causes the gentlemen with whom I have to do, to take more notice of me, but it also recommends me to the respects of my Indian brethren, and thereby I am rendered more useful, or put in a capacity of being much more serviceable to my poor New England brethren, the natives: and not only this, but a recommendation from your Honour gives me favour in the eyes and hearts of the people in general in these parts, and thereby I am less chargeable in my travels. But most noble Governour fearing that I have already wearied your patience, I must draw towards the conclusion. May it please your Honour graciously to grant unto me thy favour, with respect of a recommendation and pass at this time, to save me from further trouble, also to save me from troubling your Honour any more; and not only with respect to this but also with respect of my petition to your Honour and to the Honourable Assembly; if your Honour be pleased to grant me thy favour concerning these things, I shall think myself happy, and would with all my heart cheerfully if it was in my power, make your Honour an ample satisfaction, But your Honour knows my pitiful circumstances. So I end still laying at the feet of your Honour's mercy, and still laying at the feet of the Honourable Assembly's mercy; humbly hoping that my expectations will not altogether perish. I am most noble Governour your Honour's well-wisher and humble Petitioner,

JOSEPH JOHNSON.

An Indian of the Mohegan Tribe. *

To the Honourable. Jonathan Trumbull, Esq., Governour, and at present at Hartford.

THE EARL OF DUNMORE TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Williamsburg, June 6, 1774.

MY LORD: Since the dissolution of the Assembly of Virginia, but before all the members of the House of Burgesses had quitted this city, there arrived an express, despatched from Boston, to the Committee of Correspondence here, as I learn, has likewise been done to all the other Colonies, to excite and encourage the whole to shut up the courts of justice against all English creditors, to join in a general Association against the importing of any British manufactures, or even exporting any of their own produce to Great Britain, and proposing a Congress of Deputies from all the Colonies forthwith.

I am really unable to suggest to your Lordship to what lengths the people of this Colony will be induced to proceed, further than what they have already made manifest by the order of the House of Burgesses, and subsequent Association, the copies of which I have already transmitted to your Lordship; but the part of the late Burgesses remaining in town at the arrival of the Boston messenger, having taken upon themselves to receive despatches, and to enter into a consideration of their contents, and then to summon the inhabitants, all above the age of twenty-one, to appear at an hour they chose to appoint, and to propose to them to agree to all those violent measures above mentioned, which, that they may be more solemnly entered into, and more generally adopted, they have deferred the execution of, to a further consideration on the first day of August next, when all the members that composed the late House of Burgesses are required to attend; these circumstances give too much cause to apprehend that the prudent views, and the regard to justice and equity, as well as loyalty and affection, which is publicly declared by many of the families of distinction here, will avail little against the turbulence and prejudice which prevails throughout the country; it is, however, at present quiet.

* NEW-YORK, December 22. Mr. Johnson, an Indian of the Mohegan tribe, is to preach this evening in the Old Presbyterian Church. in this city, when a collection is to be raised for him, to defray a considerable expense he has been at, in preparing the way for the removal of this tribe and the remains of six other tribes in that vicinity, who are chiefly Christians, unto the Oneida country; an event that prraises the most salutary effects to this Province. His great merit in this affair, and his deserving character in other respects, are certified in the most ample manner, by the Governour of a neighbouring Colony, and he has been encouraged in the prosecution of his design by the kindness of his Honour, our Lieutenant Governour, several gentlemen of the Council, the Mayor of this city, and other principal gentlemen.

MR. PRINTER: May it please you to give the few following lines a place in your next Thursday's paper, which may contribute a little to satisfy the curiosity of your numerous customers, not only in this renowned city, but elsewhere. And in the doing of which you will greatly oblige your humble servant,

JOSEPH JOHNSON,

An Indian of the Mohegan Tribe, in the Colony of Connecticut.

To the Citizens of NEW-YORK: With all humility I take this method, and cheerfully embrace this early opportunity, publicly to return my grateful thanks to the inhabitants of this city, whose generous hearts the Lord hath graciously opened and hath moved with pity to me-ward, and to my poor Nation, and hath made willing liberally to contribute out of their abundance, for my present relief and future encouragement. I thank all those generous, free hearted, and public spirited gentlemen and ladies of this city, who have contributed for my benefit, either ia a public or private manner. I thank all those persons who have treated me with much respect, since my arrival in this city. Give me leave to make known unto the resolution of my heart. My dear friends, if God should see fit to promote me, and in his providence make me to be a man of influence amongst the Nations that inhabit the Western wilderness, it is the purpose of my heart, to exert my uttermost, to cultivate and to establish peace, between his Majesty's loyal subjects and the Indians that border on your extensive frontiers. And it is the purpose of my heart to instruct them in the great tidings of your holy Religion, according to the knowledge that is graciously allowed to me. And give me leave to say, that whatsoever you, my dear friends, have been pleased graciously to contribute for me shall by me be used with prudence, and with discretion. But lastly, I shall ever retain in my mind, with a heart full of iove and gratitude, your great kindness to me-ward. But I end, I am, my kind benefactors, yours, the public's and the whole world's well wisher,

JOSEPH JOHNSON

An Indian of the Mohegan Tribe, in the Colony of Connecticut.
NEW-YORK, December 29, 1774.

In the order of the House of Burgesses, which I before transmitted, your Lordship will observe that the Rev. Mr. Gwatkin, who was the Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy in this College, and is now the principal master of the Grammar School, and who is of a most exemplary good character, and great literary abilities, is appointed to preach the sermon on that occasion; injustice to which gentleman, I think it necessary to let your Lordship know, that his name was made use of entirely without his knowledge, and that he civilly, but with firmness, declined being employed for such a purpose, and which proved no little mortification to the party who dictated the measure.

I am your Lordship's most obedient humble servant,
DUNMORE.

P. S. The paper which is herewith enclosed is just come out of the printing office, and contains Resolutions which the city of Annapolis has entered into, and are the same which I have already mentioned to your Lordship, as proposed for this Colony to join in; but the time that has been set for the reconsideration of them may possibly be sufficient to cool the heat of the party, which is now strenuously endeavouring to establish them. D.

PRINCE WILLIAM (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders, Merchants, and other Inhabitants of the County of Prince William, and town of Dumfries, in the Colony of Virginia, at the Court House of the said County, on Monday, the 6th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1774.

Resolved, And it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting, that no person ought to be taxed but by his own consent, expressed either by himself or his Representatives; and that, therefore, any Act of Parliament levying a tax to be collected in America, depriving the people of their property, or prohibiting them from trading with one another, is subversive of our natural rights, and contrary to the first principles of the Constitution.

Resolved, That the city of Boston, in the Massachusetts Bay, is now suffering in the common cause of American liberty, and on account of its opposition to an Act of the British Legislature, for imposing a duty upon tea, to be collected in America.

Resolved, That as our late Representatives have not fallen upon means sufficiently efficacious to secure to us the enjoyment of our civil rights and liberties, that it is the undoubted privilege of each respective county, (as the fountain of power from whence their delegation arises,) to take such proper and salutary measures as will essentially conduce to a repeal of those Acts, which the general sense of mankind, and the greatest characters in the nation, have pronounced to be unjust.

Resolved, And it is the opinion of this meeting, that until the said Acts are repealed, all importation to, and exportation from, this Colony ought to be stopped, except with such Colonies or Islands in North America as shall adopt this measure.

Resolved, And it is the opinion of this meeting, that the courts of justice in this Colony ought to decline trying any civil causes until the said Acts are repealed.

Resolved, That the Clerk of this Committee transmit copies of these Resolves to both the printers in Annapolis and Philadelphia, to be published in their Gazettes.

Per order, EVAN WILLIAMS, Clerk Com'tee.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN BOSTON.

Philadelphia, June 6, 1774.

'Tis urged by some that Boston ought to pay for the tea destroyed there. This is to give my reasons why they should not pay for it.

1st. Dutied tea was prohibited by the general consent of all North America, for certainly nothing can make goods more perfectly prohibited than a general protest against their importation. If this should want form of law, it surely has all the substance of reason that can be necessary to constitute the most absolute prohibition; and if any merchant sends prohibited goods to any port, he consents to risk the loss of them; his folly only is to be pitied.

2d. I consider that importation of tea, not as a mercantile concern of the India Company, but as a political medium agreed upon by that Company and the Ministry together, to force the Tea Duty upon America against their consent, and therefore the destruction of it was not, in the least degree, a malicious design by the Bostonians to injure the India Company, but a virtuous effort to preserve their own liberties. If a man draws his sword on me to deprive me of life or liberty, and I break his sword, ought I to pay for the sword? If a man shuts me in his house to deprive me of my liberty, and I break the door, ought I to pay for the door? If I lie an anchor in a ship, and one sends a fire ship down to burn me, and I sink the fire ship, ought I to pay for it?

3d. But here is property destroyed which ought to be paid for; then, say I, let those sustain the damage who were the Nameable causes of it, and not, by any means, those who acted from a virtuous necessity, from which they could not be excused, without breach of that duty they owed to their country, to themselves, and their posterity.

4th. An action cannot be good or advisable from which bad consequences and no good ones will necessarily flow upon a whole country. Paying for the tea will be deemed repentance, a submission, a retraction of that virtue by which the liberties of America were asserted and saved, and the grand scheme to destroy them rendered abortive. Virtue relinquished, repented of, and given up with shame, becomes the butt of ridicule for an enemy, and argues a baseness of soul which even a friend must view with contempt.

I beg to be free enough to mention another thing which astonishes me and all your friends, viz: that a number of reputable people of Boston, (some say forty, some sixty,) have humbly addressed Governour Hutchinson, to implore the mercy of the Ministry on poor Boston. I would deny this with great bitterness, but I fear I cannot. I should have thought the late proceedings of Parliament had dumb-founded every tory in America, but could not have imagined that a single one in Boston could have remained unconverted. That sort of poor spirited animals must have wagged their tails, and licked the feet of their despots so long as to have lost the spirit of an ordinary cur, or they could never do this. To kiss the rod is a submission that can never be due to any but a righteous chastiser. Imploring mercy is always a confession of guilt, and to do this without a conviction of guilt is the most abject conduct conceivable. And in the case in point, to be really and sincerely convicted of guilt, is worse; it is, in principle, to give up all the liberties of America. Can a Bostonian compliment a man of Mr. Hutchinson's conduct, whom all America believes to be the great instrument of your calamities? Can a Bostonian implore his intercession with your oppressors; oppressors who have violated the laws of God to wrong you; who have deprived you of the wharfs, landing places, and harbour, which the God of nature, the obligation of civil contract, and the law of the land, will conspire to seal to you as your property and right; who have vacated the obligations of personal covenants, such as are contained in bills of lading, charter parties, &c., and which the laws of Heaven will oblige the conscience of every honest man to fulfil; I say, can the virtue, can the pride of a Bostonian submit to implore the mercy of such oppressors and that too by soliciting the mediation of their capital tool of oppression? I always had an exalted opinion of the virtue of the Bostonians. I indeed knew they might suffer, but never once suspected they could lose their dignity in suffering. Excuse my warm sentiments. If they give wounds they are the wounds of a friend. But I lament to tell you this conduct of a few with you, weakens the hands of your friends, and furnishes occasion to some to say the Bostonians themselves are melting away; our support can never save them whilst they want firmness themselves, and whilst they themselves acknowledge that they suffer for their own faults, and not for the cause of American liberty. Depend on it, it is the design of the Southern Colonies to support Boston with their united strength, to make their cause a common one; but at the same time they greatly rely on your firmness, your prudence, your virtue, and example in the struggle.

LOWER FREEHOLD (NEW-JERSEY) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Township of Lower Freehold, in the County of Monmouth, in New-Jersey, on Monday, the 6th day of June, 1774,, after notice given of the time, place, and occasion of this meeting.

Resolved, That it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting, that the cause in which the inhabitants of the town of Boston are now suffering is the common cause of the whole Continent of North America; and that unless some general spirited measures, for the public safety, be speedily entered into, there is just reason to fear that every Province may in turn share the same fate with them; and that, therefore, it is highly incumbent on them all to unite in some effectual means to obtain a repeal of the Boston Port Bill, and any other that may follow it, which shall be deemed subversive of the rights and privileges of free-born Americans.

And that it is also the opinion of this meeting, that, in case it shall appear hereafter to be consistent with the general opinion of the trading towns, and the commercial part of our countrymen, that an entire stoppage of importation and exportation from and to Great Britain and the West Indies, until the said Port Bill and other Acts be repealed, will be really conducive to the safety and preservation of North America and her liberties, they will yield a cheerful acquiescence in the measure, and earnestly recommend the same to all their brethren in this Province.

Resolved, moreover, That the inhabitants of this township will join in an Association with the several towns in the county, and, in conjunction with them, with the several counties in the Province, (if, as we doubt not, they see fit to accede to the proposal,) in any measures that may appear best adapted to the weal and safety of North America and all her loyal sons.

Ordered, That John Anderson, Esq., Messrs. Peter Forman, Hendrick Smock, John Forman, and Asher Holmes, Captain John Covenhoven, and Doctor Nathaniel Scudder, be a Committee for the township, to join with those who may be elected for the neighbouring townships or counties, to constitute a General Committee, for any purposes similar to those above mentioned; and that the gentlemen so appointed do immediately solicit a correspondence with the adjacent towns.

NORWICH (CONNECTICUT) RESOLUTIONS.

At a very full Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Town of Norwich, in the Colony of Connecticut, legally warned and convened, in the Town House, on the 6th day of June, 1774.

The Hon. JABEZ HUNTINGDON, Esq., Moderator.

Voted, That this meeting be adjourned to the Meeting House, and there immediately opened, that more convenient room may be had for the number of people now assembled.

The meeting was opened at the Meeting House accordingly, when the following Resolves passed, almost Unanimously.

Voted, That we will, to the utmost of our abilities, assert and defend the liberties and immunities of British America; and that we will co-operate with our brethren in this and the other Colonies, in such reasonable measures as shall, in a general Congress, or otherwise, be judged most proper to relieve us from the burdens we now feel, and secure us from greater evils we fear will follow from the principles adopted by the British Parliament respecting the town of Boston.

Voted, That Captain Jedediah Huntingdon, Christopher Leffngwell, Esq., Dr. Theophilus Rogers, Captain William Hubbard, and Captain Joseph Trumbull, be a Standing Committee, for the keeping up a correspondence with the towns in this and the neighbouring Colonies, and that they transmit a copy of these votes to the Committee of Correspondence for the town of Boston.

A true copy of record - attest,

BENJ. HUNTINGDON, Jun.; Town Clerk.

Essex County, N. J., 7th June, 1774.

All the inhabitants of the County of Essex, in New-Jersey, friends to the Constitution, the liberties and properties of America, are hereby notified and desired to meet at the Court House, in Newark, on Saturday, the 11th of June, instant, at two of the clock in the afternoon, to consult and deliberate, and firmly resolve upon the most prudent and salutary measures to secure and maintain the constitutional rights of his Majesty's subjects in America. It is, therefore, hoped, that from the importance of the subject, the meeting will be general.

Signed by order, at a meeting of a number of the Freeholders of the County of Essex, the 7th day of June, 1774.

JOHN DE HART
ISAAC OGDEN.

Marblehead, June 7, 1774.

We, the subscribers, Merchants and Traders of Marblehead, do hereby offer to our oppressed, but much respected brethren of Boston, and other neighbouring towns thereof, during the operation of the Act of Parliament, called the Port Bill, the free use of our stores in this town, reserving only sufficient room for our own goods and merchandise. We likewise assure them of our readiness in seeing to the lading and unlading of their goods in this town, and shall consider ourselves obliged to them for every opportunity of thus saving them expense, and showing how much we sympathize with and respect them. We confidently depend on their patience and resolution, the known characteristics of Bostonians and their neighbours; and hope soon to see them relieved from their distress, and the liberties of America, founded on a permanent basis by an indissoluble Union.

Signed by twenty-eight of the principal Merchants and Traders.

N. B. Such of us as have wharfs do likewise heartily and freely give the use of them to our brethren aforesaid, for landing their goods and merchandise in this place.

PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL.

At a Council held at Philadelphia, on Tuesday, 7th, of June, 1774.

Present, the Honourable John Penn, Esq., Governour, James Hamilton, James Tilghman, Andrew Allen, Esqrs.

The Governour laid before the Board the copy of a Petition from sundry Inhabitants of the Province, to call the Assembly, on occasion of the late Act of Parliament, respecting the port of Boston, which is to be presented to-morrow; and requested their advice as to a proper answer to be given to the same:

Upon which the following Answer was drawn up and approved:

GENTLEMEN; Upon all occasions when the peace, order and tranquillity of the Province require it, I shall be ready to convene the Assembly; but as that does not appear to me to be the case at present, I cannot think such a step would be expedient, or consistent with my duty.

Wednesday, June 8. The Petition was presented, and is in the following words:

To the Honourable JOHN PENN, Esquire, Governour and Commander-in-chief in and over the Province of PENNSYLVANIA &c., &c.

The Petition of sundry Inhabitants of the Province of Pennsylvania, humbly sheweth:

That since the recess of the Assembly of this Province, the proceedings of the British Parliament towards America, and particularly an Act lately passed against the town of Boston, have filled the minds of your petitioners, and others, their fellow-subjects, with deep anxiety and concern; that your petitioners apprehend the design of this Act is to compel the Americans to acknowledge the right of Parliament to impose taxes upon them at pleasure; that the precedent of condemning a whole town or city unheard, and involving all its inhabitants, of every age and sex; and however different in political sentiment or action, in one common ruin, gives universal alarm. Deeply impressed with these sentiments, and at the same time solicitous to preserve peace, order, and tranquillity, we do earnestly entreat the Governour to call the Assembly of the Province, as soon as it can conveniently be done, that they may have an opportunity, not only to devise measures to compose and relieve the anxieties of the people, but to restore that harmony and peace between the mother country and the Colonies, which has been of late so much and so unhappily interrupted. And your Petitioners shall ever pray, &c.

Signed by near nine hundred respectable Freeholders, in and near the City of Philadelphia.

To which his Excellency was pleased to return the Answer approved by the Council on yesterday.

FREDERICK COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Frederick, in Virginia, and gentlemen practising at the bar, held at the town of Winchester, the 8th day of June, 1774, to consider of the best mode to be fallen upon to secure their liberties and properties, and also to prevent the dangerous tendency of an Act of Parliament, passed in the fourteenth year of his present Majesty's reign, entitled, "An Act to discontinue in such manner, and for such time as are therein mentioned, the lading and discharging, lading and shipping of goods, wares, and merchandise at the town and within the harbour of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America, evidently has to invade and deprive us of the same."

The Reverend CHARLES M. THURSTON Moderator.

A Committee of the following gentlemen, viz: the Reverend Charles M. Thurston, Isaac Zane, George Rootes, Angus McDonald, Alexander White, George Johnson and Samuel Beall, 3d, were appointed to draw up Resolves suitable to the same occasion, who, withdrawr for a short time, returned with the following votes, viz; Voted, 1st. That we will always cheerfully pay due submission to such Acts of Government as his Majesty has a right by law to exercise over his subjects, as Sovereign of the British Dominions, and to such only.

2d. That it is the inherent right of British subjects to be governed and taxed by Representatives chosen by themselves only; and that every Act of the British parliament respecting the internal policy of North America, is a daring and unconstitutional invasion of our said rights and privileges.

3d. That the Act of Parliament above mentioned is not only in itself repugnant to the fundamental law of natural justice, in condemning persons for a supposed crime unheard, but also a despotic exertion of unconstitutional power, calculated to enslave a free and loyal people.

4th. That the enforcing the execution of the said Act of Parliament by a military power, will have a necessary tendency to raise a civil war, thereby dissolving that union which has so long happily subsisted between the mother country and her Colonies; and that we will most heartily and unanimously concur with our suffering brethren of Boston, and every other part of North America, that may be the immediate victims of tyranny, in promoting all proper measures to avert such dreadful calamities, to procure a redress of our grievances, and to secure our common liberties.

5th. It is the unanimous opinion of this meeting, that a joint resolution of all the Colonies to stop all importations from Great Britain, and exportations to it, till the said Act shall be repealed, will prove the salvation of North America and her liberties. On the other hand, if they continue their imports and exports, there is the greatest reason to fear that fraud, power, and the most odious oppression, will rise triumphant over right, justice, social happiness, and freedom.

6th. That the East India Company, those servile tools of arbitrary power, have justly forfeited the esteem and regard of all honest men; and that the better to manifest our abhorrence of such abject compliance with the will of a venal Ministry, in ministering all in their power an increase of the fund of speculation: we will not purchase tea, or any other kind of East India commodities either imported now, or hereafter to be imported, except saltpetre, spices, and medicinal drugs.

7th. That it is the opinion of this meeting that Committees ought to be appointed for the purpose of effecting a general Association, that the same measures may be pursued through the whole Continent. That the Committees ought to correspond with each other, and to meet at such places and times as shall be agreed on, in order to form such General Association, and that when the same shall be formed and agreed on by the several Committees, we will strictly adhere thereto; and till the general sense of the Continent shall be known, we do pledge ourselves to each other and our country, that we will inviolably adhere to the votes of this day.

8th. That Charles M. Thurston, Isaac Zane, Angus McDonald, Samuel Beall, 3d, Alexander White, and George Rootes, be appointed a Committee for the purposes aforesaid: and that they, or any three of them, are hereby fully empowered to act.

Which being read, were unanimously assented to and subscribed. *

GOVERNOUR WENTWORTH TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.
Extract.

New-Hampshire, 8th June, 1774.

In my letter, No. 59, I had the honour to write your Lordship that the General Assembly of this Province stood prorogued to the 10th of May, at which time they met and proceeded upon business. I took great pains to prevail on them not to enter into any extra Provincial measures, yet one of the members for Portsmouth read in his place the enclosed letter, No. 1, to the Committee of Correspondence of Portsmouth, but the House then declined considering it. On Friday, 27th of May, it was moved to appoint Committees of Correspondence, and, after a warm debate, carried by a majority of two only; the next morning it was reconsidered, and carried by a majority of one only, and passed, as by the enclosures, Nos. 2 and 3. Immediately after this, the Supply Bill was passed and sent up to the Council: being withheld, as I imagined for time to effect the other measure. I directly adjourned the Assembly, and kept them under short adjournments till this day, in hopes to obtain a suspension of these votes; but finding that there were two letters in town for the Speaker, which, some of those who were most active said, were to appoint a Congress of the Colonies, I considered it to be improper to admit their proceedings, and, therefore, immediately put an end to the Committees, (who have not as yet wrote or acted,) and to the Assembly by a dissolution, in a message, (No. 4, herewith transmitted,) cautiously expressed, in such general terms, as to prevent any misrepresentations. This mode of dissolution, after such short adjournments, which are attended by few members, precluded any meeting of those persons to contrive undesirable measures, or pursue those in their private capacity that were attempted as an Assembly, which was extremely disconcerted, and I hope will counteract the efforts of those who strive to lead this Province into combinations with the Massachusetts Bay. Before the dissolution, all the usual and necessary business of the Province was completed, so that no detriment can arise from my delaying to call an Assembly. I am in expectation that a few weeks will convince those who may be members of the imprudence and error of measures that tend to weaken or subvert the subordination of the Colonies.

* On Monday, the 6th instant, tickets were posted up in different parts of Frederick County, Virginia, signed by the friends of liberty, requesting the gentlemen, merchants, freeholders, and other inhabitants of the county to meet at the Court House, on the ensuing Wednesday, at three o'clock in the afternoon, to consider of the most proper measures to prevent the fatal consequences apprehended from the Act of Parliament mentioned in the votes, and to defend and secure the rights and liberties of America. In consequence of which, (though the notice did not exceed forty-eight hours,) a great concourse assembled at the time and place appointed. The Court House being too small to contain the company, they adjourned to the Church, where the above votes were unanimously agreed to. The general opinion of the people there seems to be, that the Boston scheme of non-importation from Great Britain, and exportation to it, is the only probable means to obtain redress of our grievances, and show great eagerness that it may be universally adopted.

MESSAGE FROM GOVERNOUR WENTWORTH TO THE ASSEMBLY OF NEW-HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the Assembly:

As I look upon the measures entered upon by the House of Assembly to be inconsistent with his Majesty's service, and the good of this Government, it is my duty, as far as in me lies, to prevent any detriment that might arise from such proceedings. I do, therefore, hereby dissolve the General Assembly of this Province, and it is dissolved accordingly.

J. WENTWORTH.

Portsmouth, June 8, 1774.

Williamsburg, June 9, 1774.

An express arrived in town last night from Pittsburg, with letters to his Excellency the Governour, from Captain Conolly, commandant at that place, giving an account that the Shawanese Indians have openly declared their intention of going to war with the white people, to revenge the loss of some of their Nation who have been killed: that they had scalped one of the traders, and detained all the rest who were in their towns; that it was expected the Cherokees would join them, as they had sent a belt last fall to the Northern Nations to strike the white people, Which had been received by the Shawanese and Wabash Indians; that the Six Nations postponed their answer till this spring, and that there is soon to be a Grand Council in the Lower Shawanese town, where about seventy Cherokees, and a number of other Indians are to attend, on the subject of going to war with the English. Sundry parties are now gone out, by order of Captain Conolly, for the protection of the inhabitants, and are to assemble at the mouth of Whaling Creek, in order, if it is judged practicable, to go against the Upper Shawanese town.

The Delawares, who profess to be our friends, informed Captain Conolly that a party of Shawanese were now gone against the settlement, and it is imagined they will fall upon Greenbrier.

All the country about Pittsburg is in a very ruinous and distressed situation, the inhabitants have chiefly fled, and fortified themselves as low as Old Town on Potomac river.

III. TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE BRITISH COLONIES IN AMERICA.

Philadelphia, June 8, 1774.

BRETHREN: These are the words of the Declaratory Act, mentioned in the last letter, "Whereas several of the Houses of Representatives in his Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in America, have of late, against law, claimed to themselves, or to the General Assemblies of the same, the sole and exclusive right of imposing duties and taxes upon his Majesty's subjects in the said Colonies and Plantations; and have, in pursuance of said claim, passed certain votes, resolutions, and orders, derogatory to the Legislative authority of Parliament, and inconsistent with the dependency of said Colonies and Plantations, &c.; therefore be it declared, &c., that the said Colonies and Plantations in America, have been, are, and of right ought to be, subordinate unto, and dependent upon, the imperial Crown and Parliament of Great Britain, and that the King's Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords, spiritual and temporal, and Commons of Great Britain, in Parliament assembled, had, hath, and of right ought to have, full power and authority to make laws and statutes of sufficient force and validity to bind the Colonies and people of America. subjects of the Crown of Great Britain, in all cases whatsoever."

From the crowd of objects, each pressing for attention, that present themselves to the mind of a British American, on reading this Act, I beg leave to select and particularly mention only two that you, collecting them, and taking a just view of your present situations, may feel that and only that resentment, springing from virtue, and guided by wisdom; which the most worthy and the most peaceable men must approve.

The resolutions, &c., mentioned in this Act, were those caused by the Stamp Act. These principal points are firmly asserted by them - the exclusive right of taxation, and the right of trial by jury. The Parliament, well knowing how harsh and jarring it would sound in English ears to say the right of trial by jury was "derogatory to the Legislative authority of Parliament, and inconsistent with the dependency of the Colonies," planted their most direct battery against the right of taxation. Common sense and the experience of all nations, as not a single instance occurs to the contrary, convincing them if that gave way, a general ruin would soon ensue, and all the rest would follow in the train of the chief, like captive nobles attending their conquered Prince.

However, not quite satisfied with the slow work of exterminating them in detail, but improving upon an impartial hint, it was judged fittest, upon the whole, so to consolidate them, that, as if the British Americans had but "one neck," a single stroke might despatch millions, by subjecting us at once to the decrees of Parliament in all cases whatsoever.

Widely different was the Act of the sixth of George the First, chapter 5th, "for the better securing the dependency of the Kingdom of Ireland," &c. By that Act, Ireland was declared "to be subordinate unto, and dependent upon the Imperial Crown * of Great Britain." These words, "and Parliament, are not in it. It is said, indeed, that the King, with the advice and consent of the Lords and Commons of Great Britain, in Parliament assembled, had, and of right out to have, power and authority to make laws and statutes of sufficient force and validity to bind the Kingdom and people of Ireland."

Compare the Acts and you will find the Act for America copied from that of Ireland; but in the last mentioned, the annihilating words, "in all cases whatsoever," are not to be found. The people of Ireland have been for several centuries bound by English statutes, for regulating their trade, and for other purposes and this statute, therefore, only asserted the usual authority over them. Their vitals, the exclusive right of taxation, and the right of trial by jury, have been preserved. If it was the intention of the British Parliament to exercise a "power and authority" over that Kingdom destructive of these rights, it is not expressed, it is not implied. Why were the unlimited words omitted in that Act? Or why, when the Lords and Commons were copying a pattern, which their fathers set them, did they deform the transcript by such Eastern flourishes?

The truth is, the fathers too much revered the English principles, for which they had been upon the point of shedding their blood in placing their Sovereign upon his throne, so flagrantly to violate them - or, if their conduct was not directed by justice, they dared not thus to provoke the brave, generous inhabitants of that ancient Kingdom.

"Are there yet the treasurers of wickedness in the House, and the scant measure that is abominable. The rich men thereof are full of violence."

TO P. P. AUTHOR OF THE LETTERS TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE BRITISH COLONIES IN AMERICA.

SIR: The Declaratory Act, passed by the Parliament at the time they repealed the Stamp Act, was such a violation of the Constitution, such an assumption of new powers, so subversive of liberty, and so destructive of property, that it deserves particular observation. That it has hitherto passed unnoticed is owing to the gratitude and joy with which America received the repeal of the Stamp Act. For the same reason the principal on which the repeal was founded, was suffered to pass without animadversion; and the people who claimed the repeal as a point of equity and right received it with gratitude as a free gift.

The English Constitution, whose object is liberty, has, for the preserving of that liberty, and for the security of property, vested peculiar powers in the different branches of the Legislature, which are to be exercised for the good and safety of the subject. Salus populi suprema est lex. The abuse of these powers, or the attempt of one branch of the Legislature to extend its peculiar powers so as to abridge those of the others, has been the foundation of many civil wars and struggles in Britain.

From the earliest period of the English Constitution, it has ever been deemed the prerogative of the Crown to grant charters to the subjects, and terms of capitulation to conquered countries, who were taken under the Dominion of the Crown. And the statute of quo warranto, eighteenth of Edward First, expressly declares that. "illi qui habent chartas regales, secundum chartas istas et earundem plenitudinem judicentur." On which statute Lord Coke observes, "in the first place that as it was enacted, ex speciali gratia domini regis, 'it binds the King,' and consequently in binding the King must also bind his Parliament; in the second, place, from the words 'earundem plenitudinem,' that this statute is to be construed 'as fully and beneficially for the charters, as the law was taken at the time when charters were granted.'" In the third place says he, "certainly this ancient statute was a direction to the sages of the law for their construction of the King's charters, as it appeareth in our books."

On this foundation rests the Declaratory Act respecting Ireland. When Henry the Second conquered Ireland he granted the Irish peace, and annexed them to his Crown on this condition: "That the Kingdom and people of Ireland should forever be governed by the same mild laws as England was governed." And the statute passed in the thirty-first of Edward Third, confirms and renews this charter, by declaring that his Majesty's subjects in Ireland, being either natives of that Kingdom or English born subjects, only resident there, "sint veri anglici, et sub eisdem degant domino et regimine, et eisdem legibus utantur." And hence the Act of the sixth George First, chapter six, assume no new power, lays no new restrictions upon his Majesty's good subjects of Ireland, nor claims any new right, but simply declares, "that the King's Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords, spiritual and temporal, and Commons of Great Britain, in Parliament assembled, hath full power and authority to make laws of sufficient force and validity to bind the Kingdom and people of Ireland."

Here is no charter violated, no claim of power to deprive them of property, or levy taxes on them without their consent. Their Parliament, their right and trial by jury, and of granting supplies to their King in their own way for the support of Government, administration of justice, and defence of the Kingdom, remain untouched: But the Declaratory Act passed against America, fifth of George Third, in violation of their charters, declares, that the claim of the Houses of Representatives in his Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in America, to the sole and exclusive right of imposing duties and taxes upon his Majesty's subjects the said Colonies and Plantations, is against law; that the votes, resolutions, and orders, passed in pursuance of such claim, are derogatory to the Legislative authority of Parliament; that the said Colonies and Plantations in America have been, are, and of right ought to be, subordinate unto, and dependent upon, the imperial Crown and Parliament of Great Britain, and that the King's Majesty, by and with the advice, &c., hath, and of right ought to have, full power and authority to make laws and statutes of sufficient force and validity to bind the Colonies and people of America, subjects of the Crown of Great Britain, in all cases whatsoever. What is this but the high hand of power to break down the barriers of the Constitution, and make us tenants at will, of our lives, liberty, and property.

There was a time when the Crown held lands in England, "sacra, patrimonia coronæ," the annual rent of which, if now resumed would amount to four millions sterling. These have been conveyed to subjects, and are now held by virtue of charters from the Crown. If the chartæ regales, or chartered rights of the Colonies can be violated and annulled by Parliament, what security can the possessors of those lands have for the estates they enjoy? Let the Parliament try the experiment on their fellow-subjects in Great Britain, and judge of the temper and disposition of the Colonies by the effect such a step will produce among themselves.

"A tax granted by the Parliament of England shall not bind those of Ireland, because they are not summoned to our Parliament; and again, 'Ireland hath a Parliament of her own, and maketh and altereth laws; and our statutes do not bind them, because they do not send Knights to our Parliament. But their persons are the King's subjects, like as the inhabitants of Calais, Gascony, and Guienna, while they continued under the King's subjection,'-- BLACKSTONE, vol. I, p. 101, from the Year Books,

EXTRACT FROM AN ADDRESS SENT BY THE BOSTON COMMITTEE TO THE PEOPLE OF EVERY TOWN IN THE PROVINCE, WITH A PAPER WHICH THEY ARE TO SIGN.

Boston, June 8, 1774.

There is but one way that we can conceive of to prevent what is to be deprecated by all good men, and ought by all possible means to be prevented, viz: the horrors that must follow an open rupture between Great Britain and her Colonies; or on our part, a subjection to absolute slavery; and that is by affecting the trade and interest of Great Britain so deeply as shall induce her to withdraw her oppressive hand. There can be no doubt of our succeeding to the utmost of our wishes, if we universally come into a solemn league not to import goods from Great Britain, and not to buy any goods that shall hereafter be imported from thence, until our grievances shall be redressed. To these, or even to the least of these shameful impositions, we trust in God our countrymen never will submit.

We have received such assurances from our brethren in every part of the Province, of their readiness to adopt such measures as may be likely to save our country, and that we have not the least doubt of an almost universal agreement for this purpose; in confidence of this, we have drawn up a form of a covenant to be subscribed by all adult persons of both sexes; which we have sent to every town in the Province, and that we might not give our enemies time to counteract us, we have endeavoured that every town should be furnished with such a copy on or before the fourteenth day of this month, and we earnestly desire that you would use your utmost endeavours that the subscription paper may be filled up as soon as possible, so that they who are in expectation of overthrowing our liberties, may be discouraged from prosecuting their wicked designs; as we look upon this, the last and only method of preserving our land from slavery without drenching it with blood; may God prosper every undertaking which tends to the salvation of this people. We are, &c.

Signed by Order and in behalf of the Committee of Correspondence for Boston, WILLIAM COOPER, Clerk.

FORM OF A COVENANT SENT TO EVERY TOWN IN MASSACHUSETTS.

We the subscribers, inhabitants of the town of * * * * * having taken into our serious consideration the precarious state of the liberties of North America, and more especially the present distressed condition of this insulted Province, embarrassed as it is by several Acts of the British Parliament, tending to the entire subversion of our natural and charter rights; among which is the Act for blocking up the harbour of Boston. And being fully sensible of our indispensable duty to lay hold on every means in our power to preserve and recover the much injured Constitution of our country; and conscious at the same time of no alternative between the horrors of slavery, or the carnage and desolation of a civil war; but a suspension of all commercial intercourse with the Island of Great Britain, do, in the presence of God, solemnly and in good faith, covenant and engage with each other:

1st. That from henceforth we will suspend all commercial intercourse with the said Island of Great Britain, until the said Act for blocking up the said harbour be repealed, and a full restoration of our charter rights be obtained; And

2d. That there may be the less temptation to others to continue in the said, now dangerous commerce, we do in like manner solemnly covenant, that we will not buy, purchase, or consume, or suffer any person, by, for, or under us, to purchase or consume, in any manner whatever, any goods, wares, or merchandise, which shall arrive in America from Great Britain aforesaid, from and after the last day of August next ensuing. And in order as much as in us lies, to prevent our being interrupted and defeated in this only peaceable measure entered into for the preservation and recovery of our rights, we agree to break off all trade, commerce, and dealings whatever with all persons, who, preferring their own private interest to the salvation of their own perishing country, shall still continue to import goods from Great Britain, or shall purchase of those who do import, and never to renew any commerce or trade with them.

And, whereas the promoting of industry, economy, arts and manufactures among ourselves is of the last importance to the civil and religious welfare of a community: we engage,

3d. That from and after the first day of October next ensuing, we will not by ourselves, or any for, by or under us, purchase or use any goods, wares, manufactures, or merchandise, whensoever or howsoever imported from Great Britain, until the harbour of Boston shall be opened, and our charter rights restored.

And last. As a refusal to come into any agreement which promises the deliverance of our Country from the calamities it now feels, and which like a torrent are rushing upon it with increasing violence, must evidence a disposition inimical to, or criminally negligent of, the common safety, we agree, that after this covenant has been offered to any person, and they refuse to sign it; we will consider them in the same light as contumacious importers, and withdraw all commercial connections with them forever, and publish their names to the world.

Witness our hands, June --, 1774.

ADDRESS OF MERCHANTS AND OTHERS, OF THE TOWN OF BOSTON, TO GOVERNOUR GAGE, PRESENTED AT SALEM, JUNE 8, 1774.

May it please your EXCELLENCY:

We esteem it not one of the least consolations to this Province, in this day of its distress, that his Majesty hath been pleased to appoint to the head of it, a gentleman of your Excellency's known ability, steadiness, and moderation. The long command which you have held in another department in America, in which you have displayed every good quality of the heart and mind, gives us the most favourable hopes of your future administration; and makes us the less regret the parting with our late worthy Governour, whose wise and faithful administration hath given us the most entire satisfaction.

We therefore, merchants, traders and others, of the town of Boston, for ourselves, do now wait on your Excellency to pay you our hearty congratulations on your arrival at the metropolis, to acknowledge our gratitude to our Sovereign for his gracious appointment of you to the head of this Province at this very important conjuncture; and to give you our firm assurances that we will do every thing in our power, in our respective stations, to promote peace and good order, and to make your administration easy and happy.

We cannot well express to your Excellency the distress of mind we feel at the approaching calamity, which will soon overwhelm the town of Boston, particularly the trading part of it, by the operation of a late Act of Parliament for shutting up the harbour.

The real miseries which this will occasion to our fellow-townsmen cannot well be conceived. A mind like your Excellency's, fraught with tenderness and humanity will anticipate our sufferings; and requires a description of the evil, to prompt you to a ready exertion of all your interests to avert or remove it.

We could wish a discretionary power had been lodged with your Excellency to restore the trade to its usual course immediately on the Act being fully complied with; but as the Act stands, being only to be repealed by his Majesty in Council, on your Excellency's favourable representation of us, it will take so much time before it can be effected, as will involve us in unspeakable misery, and, we fear, total ruin. Making restitution to the East India Company for damage done to the persons and property of individuals among us, by the outrage of rash and inconsiderate men, we look upon to be quite equitable; and we, who have ever disavowed all lawless violences; do bear our testimony against them, and particularly against that action which we suppose to be the immediate cause of our heavy chastisement, are willing to pay our proportions whenever the same can be ascertained, and the mode of laying it determined on. As soon as compensation shall be made, and all other terms of the Act complied with, we have no doubt your Excellency will make such favourable representations of our case to his Majesty in Council, as that he may be graciously pleased to restore us to his Royal favour.

We sincerely wish that all your Excellency's endeavours to promote peace and the general tranquillity of the Province may meet with success; and we promise to ourselves that the whole of your administration will be such as may claim the warmest testimonies of gratitude from the people, and the approbation of your Royal master.

Signed by one hundred and twenty-seven of the tants, including those who signed the Address to Governour Hutchinson.

Salem, June 8, 1774.

HIS EXCELLENCY'S ANSWER,

GENTLEMEN You will accept my thanks for your polite Address, and kind congratulations on my arrival in this Province; and be assured that I receive the greatest satisfaction, that so respectable a body have testified an open disavowal of the lawless violences that have been committed in the town of Boston.

I sincerely condole you on the distresses that many must feel on this occasion of shutting up the port, and shall rejoice in being afforded an early opportunity to make such representation as may tend to their relief; but you will believe that no discretionary power is lodged with me.

It is greatly to be wished for the good of the community in general, that those in whose hands power is vested, should use the most speedy method to fulfil the King's expectations, and fix the mode to indemnify the East India Company, and others who have suffered; which could not fail to extricate the citizens of Boston out of the difficulties in which they are involved, with as little delay as the nature of them will admit, and lay a foundation for that harmony between Great Britain and the Colony, which every considerate and good man must wish to see established: and nothing shall be wanting on my part to accomplish an end so desirable.

Salem, June 8, 1774.

MASSACHUSETTS GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The honourable House of Representatives, before they proceeded to business in Salem, on Wednesday, 8th June, 1774, came into the following Resolutions, and ordered the same to be entered on their Journals, viz:

Resolved, That by the Royal Charter of this Province, the power of convening, proroguing, and adjourning the Great and General Court of Assembly from time to time, is vested in the Governour, to be exercised as he shall judge necessary and for the good of the people. Therefore,

Resolved, That it is clearly the opinion of this House, that whensoever the Governour of this Province doth convene or hold the General Assembly at any time or place unnecessarily, or merely in obedience to an instruction, and without exercising that judgment and discretion of his own, with which by Charter he is specially vested for the good of the Province, it is manifestly inconsistent with the letter as well as the intention and spirit of the Charter.

Resolved, That the town of Boston hath, from the earliest-times of this Province, been judged, and still is on various accounts, the most convenient place for holding the General Assembly; and accordingly, ample provision is there made for the accommodation of the said General Assembly, at a very great expense to the people of this Province.

Resolved, As the clear opinion of this House, that the General Assembly cannot be removed from its ancient seat, the Court House in Boston, and held in any other place, without great and manifold inconveniences to the members thereof, and injury and damage of those who have necessary business to transact with the said General Assembly; many of which inconveniences have been clearly stated, and expressed by former Houses of Representatives, as appear by their Journal.

Resolved, That this House can see no necessity for the removal of the General Assembly from its ancient and only convenient place, the Court House in Boston. to the town of Salem; and the removal of the said Assembly from the Court House in Boston without necessity, is at all times considered to be a very great grievance.

On Thursday, June 9, 1774, a Committee of the House of Representatives waited on the Governour with the following Answer to his Speech at the opening of the Session.

"May it please your EXCELLENCY"

"Your Speech to both Houses of the General Assembly, at the opening of this Session, has been read and considered with all due attention in the House of Representatives.

"Your Excellency has therein signified to us, that his Majesty has been pleased, 'to appoint you Governour and Captain General of his Province of Massachusetts Bay;' and that your commission has been read and 'published.' We congratulate your Excellency on your safe arrival, and honour you in the most exalted station in this Province; and confiding in your Excellency that you will make the known Constitution and Charter of the Province the rules of your administration, we beg leave to assure you that nothing on our part shall be wanting that may contribute to render the same easy and happy to yourself, and to aid your Excellency in promoting the prosperity of his Majesty's Government, and the welfare of our Constitution. And we thank your Excellency for the assurances you are pleased to give of your concurrence with us therein.

"It gives us pain to be informed by your Excellency, that you have the King's particular commands for holding the General Court at Salem,' from the first day of this 'instant June, until his Majesty shall have signified his 'Royal will and pleasure for holding it again at BOSTON.' We are entirely at a loss for the cause of this command, as we cannot conceive any public utility arising from it, and both we and our constituents are now suffering the inconvenience of it.

"The removal of the Assembly from the Court House in Boston, its ancient and only convenient seat, has very lately given great discontent to the good people of this Province; and we cannot but think that misrepresentations from persons residing in this Province, have induced his Majesty's Ministers to advise his Majesty to lay your Excellency under an injunction whereby the people are in this instance deprived of the benefit of that discretionary power which is vested in the Governour by Charter, and has been exercised by former Governours, of determining in such cases for the good of the Province.

"We confide, however, in your Excellency's impartiality and justice, that the true state of this Province, and the character of his Majesty's subjects in it; their loyalty to their Sovereign; their affection for the parent country, as well as their invincible attachments to their just rights and liberties, will be laid before his Majesty; and we hope by these means your Excellency will be the happy instrument of removing the displeasure of his Majesty, and restoring harmony, which has too long been interrupted by the artifices of designing men.

"Your Excellency has laid no particular business before us, excepting the supply of the Treasury for the support of Government for the ensuing year, to which we shall give our immediate attention, as also to any other matters your Excellency may please to lay before us, and give that despatch to public business, which the manifold and great inconvenience of our present situation will admit."

In Council. June 9, 1774.

Ordered, That Jeremiah Powell, William Sever, and Jedediah Preble, Esquires, be a Committee to wait on his Excellency the Governour with the following Address, in answer to his Speech at the opening of the present General Court.

THOMAS FLUCKER, Secretary.

To his Excellency THOMAS GAGE, Esq., Captain-General and Governour-in-chief of the Province of the MASSACHUSETTS BAY, &c. &c.

"The Address of the Council of the said Province:

"May it please your EXCELLENCY:

"Your Speech to the two Houses at the opening of this Session has been duly considered by this Board.

"His Majesty having been pleased to appoint you to the Government of this Province, we take this opportunity to wait on you with our congratulations on that occasion.

"Your Excellency has arrived at a juncture when the harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies is greatly interrupted, whereby your station, though elevated, must needs be rendered less agreeable to you than it would have been; but if you should be the happy instrument of restoring in any measure that harmony, and of extricating the Province from their present embarrassments, you will doubtless consider these happy effects as more than a compensation for any inconveniences arising to you from the peculiar circumstances of the times. His Majesty's faithful Council on all occasions will cheerfully co-operate with your Excellency in every attempt for accomplishing those desirable ends.

"We wish your Excellency every felicity; the greatest of a political nature, both to yourself and the Province is, that your administration in the principles and general conduct of it may be a happy contrast to those of your two immediate predecessors. It is irksome to us to censure any one, but we are constrained to say there is the greatest reason to apprehend that from their machinations (both in concert and apart) are derived the origin and progress of the disunion between Britain and the Colonies, and the present distressed state of this Province - a Province to which the latter of them, in an especial manner, owed his best services, and whose liberties and rights he was under every obligation of duty and gratitude to support.

"The inhabitants of this Province claim no more than the rights of Englishmen, without diminution or 'abridgment;' these, as it is our indispensable duty, so it shall be our constant endeavour to maintain to the utmost of our power, in perfect consistence, however, with the truest loyalty to the Crown; the just prerogatives of which your Excellency will ever find this Board zealous to support.

"Permit us, sir, on this occasion, to express the firmest confidence that, under their present grievances, the people of this Province will not in vain look to your Excellency for your paternal aid and assistance; and, as the great end of Government is the good of the people, that your experience and abilities will be applied to attain that end; the steady pursuit of which, at the same time it insures their confidence and esteem, will be a source of the truest enjoyment, self-approbation.

"We thank your Excellency for the assurance you have given 'that you shall with pleasure concur with the 'two Houses to the utmost of your power in all matters 'that tend to the welfare and prosperity of the Province;' and your Excellency may, be assured that we shall contribute every thing on our part to promote measures of so salutary a tendency."

June 14th, 1774. The Committee appointed to present the foregoing Address, waited on his Excellency therewith yesterday, and read as far as that part which reflects on the administration of his Excellency's two immediate predecessors, when he desired the Chairman not to proceed any further, and that he would assign his reasons for refusing to receive it, in a Message to the Council; and on the same day sent by his Secretary the following Message:

"Gentlemen of the COUNCIL:

"I cannot receive an Address which contains indecent reflections on my predecessors who have been tried and honourably acquitted by the Lords of the Privy Council, and their conduct approved by the King.

"I consider this Address as an insult upon his Majesty, and the Lords of his Privy Council, and an affront to myself.

T. GAGE."

ADDRESS OF MERCHANTS AND OTHERS, INHABITANTS OF SALEM, TO HIS EXCELLENCY GOVERNOUR GAGE, ON SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1774.

To his Excellency THOMAS GAGE, Esq., Captain-General, Governour and Commander-in-chief of the Province of MASSACHUSETTS BAY in NEW ENGLAND, and Lieutenant-General of his Majesty's Forces:

May it please your EXCELLENCY:

We, Merchants and others, Inhabitants of the ancient town of Salem, beg leave to approach your Excellency

FOURTH SERIES.

26

with our most respectful congratulations on your arrival in this place.

We are deeply sensible of his Majesty's paternal care and affection to this Province, in the appointment of a person of your Excellency's experience, wisdom, and moderation, in these troublesome and difficult times,

We rejoice that this town is graciously distinguished for that spirit, loyalty, and reverence for the laws, which is equally our glory and happiness.

From that public spirit and warm zeal to promote the general happiness of men, which marks the great and good, we are led to hope under your Excellency's administration for every thing that may promote the peace, prosperity, and real welfare of this Province.

We beg leave to commend to your Excellency's patronage the trade and commerce of this place, which, from a full protection of the liberties, persons, and properties of individuals, cannot but flourish.

And we assure your Excellency we will make it our constant endeavours by peace, good order, and a regard for the laws, as far as in us lies, to render your station and residence easy and happy.

Signed by forty-eight persons.

HIS EXCELLENCY'S ANSWER.

GENTLEMEN: I thank you for this very kind Address, and your obliging congratulations on my arrival at this place. The favourable sentiments you are pleased to entertain of me are extremely flattering, and merit my warmest acknowledgments.

I doubt not that you will continue to cherish that spirit of loyalty and reverence to the laws that has distinguished the ancient town of Salem. And no attention or protection shall be wanting on my part to encourage such laudable sentiments, which cannot fail to increase your trade and commerce, and render you a happy and flourishing people.

HARFORD COUNTY (MARYLAND) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of a very considerable and respectable body of the Inhabitants of Harford County, Maryland, on the 11th of June, 1774.

AQUILA HALL, Chairman.

1st. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting that the town of Boston is now suffering in the common cause of America, and that it is the duty of every Colony to unite in the most effectual constitutional means to obtain a repeal of the late Act of Parliament for blocking up the harbour and port of Boston.

2d. Resolved, That therefore we will join in an Association with the other counties of this Province, on oath, not to export to, or import from, Great Britain, any kind of produce or merchandise after such a day as the Committees of the several counties at their general meeting shall fix, until the repeal of the Boston Port Act.

3d. Resolved, That we will deal with none of the West India Islands, Colony or Colonies, person or persons whatsoever residing therein, who shall not enter into similar resolves with a majority of the Colonies within such time as the General Committees of this Province shall agree, but hold him or them as an enemy or enemies to American liberty.

4th. Resolved, That we will join in an Association with the other counties, to send relief to the poor and distressed inhabitants of Boston, to enable them firmly to persevere in defence of the common cause.

5th. Resolved, That the merchants ought not to advance the price of their goods, but sell them as they intended had not these Resolves been entered into.

6th. Resolved, That the gentlemen of the law ought to bring no suit for the recovery of any debt due from any inhabitant of this Province, to any inhabitant of Great Britain, or this, or any other Colony, until the said Act be repealed, except in such cases where the debtor is guilty of wilful delay in payment, having ability to pay, or is about to abscond or remove his effects, or is wasting his substance, or shall refuse to settle his account by giving his bond on interest, (or security if required) which fact or facts are to be made appear to some neighbouring Magistrate, and certified under his hand.

7th, Resolved, That the following gentlemen, viz: Rev. William West, Messrs. Aquila Hall, Richard Dallum, Thomas Bond, son of Thomas, John Love, Captain John Pacal Benedict Edw. Hall, Benjamin Rumsey, Nathaniel Giles, and Jacob Bond, be a Committee to meet the Committees of the other counties of this Province, to consult and agree on the most effectual means to preserve our constitutional rights and liberties, and to promote the union and hamony between Great Britain and her Colonies, on which their preservation depends. And that the same gentlemen, together with the following, Captain John Matthews, Captain William Smith, Doctor John Archer, Willam Young, Abraham Whitaker, William Webb, Amos Garret, George Bradford, John Rumsey, Jeremiah Sheredine, William Smithson, William Bond, son of Joshua, Isaac Webster, and Alexander Cowan, be a Committee of Correspondence, and on any emergency to call a general meeting, and that any six of them have power to act.

Signed per order, of the Committee.
JOSEPH BUTLER, Clerk.

FREDERICK COUNTY (MARYLAND) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of a respectable and numerous body of the Freemen of the lower part of Frederick County, at Charles Hungerford's tavern, on Saturday, the 11th day of June, 1774.

Mr. HENRY GRIFFITH, Moderator.

1. Resolved, unanimously, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the town of Boston is now suffering in the common cause of America.

2. Resolved, unanimously, That every legal and constitutional measure ought to be used by all America for procuring a repeal of the Act of Parliament for blocking up the harbour of Boston.

3. Resolved, unanimously, That it is the opinion of this meeting that the most effectual means for the securing American freedom, will be to break off all commerce with Great Britain and the West Indies, until the said Act be repealed, and the right of taxation given up, on permanent principles.

4. Resolved, unanimously, That Mr. Henry Griffith, Doctor Thomas Sprigg Wootton, Nathan Magruder, Evan Thomas, Richard Brooke, Richard Thomas, Zadock Magruder, Doctor William Baker, Thomas Cramphin, Jun., and Allen Bowie, be a Committee to attend the General Committee at Annapolis, and of Correspondence for the lower part of Frederick County, and that any six of them shall have power to receive and communicate intelligence to, and from, the neighbouring Committees.

5. Resolved, unanimously, That a copy of these our sentiments, be immediately transmitted to Annapolis, and inserted in the Maryland Gazette.

Signed per order,
ARCHIBALD ORME, Clerk.

ESSEX COUNTY (NEW-JERSEY) RESOLUTIONS,

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Essex, in the Province of New-Jersey, at Newark, in the said County, on Saturday, the 11th day of June, 1774.

This meeting taking into serious consideration some late alarming measures adopted by the British Parliament for depriving his Majesty's American subjects of their undoubted and constitutional rights and principles; and particularly the Act for blockading the port of Boston, which appears to them pregnant with the most dangerous consequences to all his Majesty's Dominions in America; do unanimously resolve and agree:

1. That under the enjoyment of our constitutional privileges and immunities we will ever cheerfully render all due obedience to the Crown of Great Britain, as well as full faith and allegiance to his most gracious Majesty King George the Third; and do esteem a firm dependence on the mother country essential to our political security and happiness.

2. That the late Act of Parliament relative to Boston, which so absolutely destroys every idea of safety and confidence, appears to us big with the most dangerous and alarming consequences; especially as subversive of that very dependence wliich we should earnestly wish to continue, as our best safeguard and protection: And that we conceive every well-wisher to Great Britain and her Colonies is now loudly called upon to exert his utmost abilities in promoting every legal and prudential measure towards obtaining a repeal of the said Act of Parliament; and all others subversive of the undoubted rights and liberties of his Majesty's American subjects.

8. That it is our unanimous opinion, that it would conduce to the restoration of the liberties of America should the Colonies enter into a joint agreement, not to purchase or use any articles of British manufacture; and especially any commodities imported from the East Indies, under such restrictions as may be agreed upon by a general Congress of the said Colonies hereafter to be appointed.

4. That this county will most readily and cheerfully join their brethren of the other counties m this Province, in promoting such Congress of Deputies, to be sent from each of the Colonies, in order to form a general plan of union, so that the measures to be pursued for the important ends in view may be uniform and firm; to which plan when concluded upon we do agree faithfully to adhere. And do now declare ourselves ready to send a Committee, to meet with those from the other counties, at such time and place, as by them may be agreed upon, in order to elect proper persons to represent this Province in the said general Congress.

5. That the freeholders and inhabitants of the other counties in this Province be requested speedily to convene themselves together, to consider the present distressing state of our public affairs; and to correspond and consult with such other Committees, as may be appointed, as well as with our Committee, who are hereby directed to correspond and consult with such other Committees, as also with those of any other Province; and particularly to meet with the said County Committees, in order to nominate and appoint Deputies to represent this Province in general Congress.

6. We do hereby unanimously request the following gentlemen to accept of that trust; and accordingly do appoint them our Committee for the purposes aforesaid, viz: Stephen Crane, Henry Garritse, Joseph Riggs, William Livingston, William P. Smith, John De Hart, John Chetwood, Isaac Ogden, and Elias Boudinot, Esquires.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK.

Norwich, (in England,) June 13, 1774.

What a scene of misery and distress are the pernicious measures of Administration disclosing in this city! The cries of thousands of poor journeymen weavers, and the clamour of their unemployed masters, with all their numerous dependants of combers, dyers, hot-pressers, &c., will ere long reach the ears of the weak, tyrannic Lord that occasioned them, and make his name and memory as odious in Europe as in America. Every manufacturer in the home trade, who, at this time of the year used to receive prodigious orders for coarse camblets, callimancoes, and black and white crapes, from the ware-houses in London for the Colonies, are now entirely at a stand; and when business in the foreign houses decline, our work-houses will be crowded with paupers, and the poor-rates become insupportably high, and numberless families become destitute of bread. It is not many months since a petition was presented to Parliament, by our worthy members, Sir Harbord Harbord, and Edward Bacon, Esquire, setting forth the decay of trade, and the hardships we labour under. But alas! how does a Prime Minister regard the misfortunes he heaps upon others. Instead of protecting and encouraging our commerce, he has taken the most direct means to diminish and destroy it; and for what? To execute his avowed and secret designs, and to gratify his pride, his folly, and his resentment. Because a licentious rabble in Boston destroyed a dutied article, which one of the wisest men in this nation has proved ought not to have been taxed, and which would not have been destroyed, if the ships that carried it had not obstinately persisted in landing it; for that reason, I say, a whole city, a whole Province, must suffer all the dreadful effects of Ministerial vengeance. The worthy magistrate, the innocent merchant, the honest tradesman, the well disposed poor, all, all must be treated with the most unexampled, the most diabolical rigour, for the outrage of a few, have, like the city of London, their humble petitions and just remonstrances ridiculed and disregarded; their Charter violated; their ports blocked up; their trade removed; their inhabitants dragged three thousand miles for trial; and to complete the tragedy and their slavery, a military Governour and troops sent over to enforce the Ministerial mandate. Excellent measures these to stir up a civil war at home; compel the exasperated Americans to take up arms, and to ruin the trade of the mother country. But whatever gratification such measures may afford to a wrong headed, deluded Minister, they are highly offensive to unemployed and impoverished manufacturers, whose business is their dependence and support, and who are too sensible of the loss, not to curse those who would deprive them and their posterity of it. Happy is it for Lord North that he is not a tradesman, lamenting for orders, and distressed for remittances. Unhappy for him that the Kingdom at large condemn his American measures, and are ashamed of his conduct. In a word, pensioners may flatter, and levees may applaud; but it is too clear, that unless he conciliate the esteem of the Colonies by a repeal of the cruel destructive laws he has framed, and restore the trade he has taken away, that he will kindle a flame he will find himself unable to quench, and load himself with the execrations not only of innumerable poor that may be deprived of employment in the manufactory of this city, Birmingham, Sheffield, and Yorkshire, but those of every sensible and spirited person in the Kingdom.

Williamsburg, June 16, 1774.

On Monday evening last, the 13th instant, an express arrived in this city from Hampshire, with letters from Colonel Abraham Hite, residing there, to his Excellency our Governour, which give us fresh assurances of the determined resolution of the Indians to declare war against us. It would be needless to expatiate with respect to the distresses of the inhabitants in many of the back parts of this Colony, as their situation must be sufficiently obvious to every one who has attended to the many late accounts of the barbarity of the Indians towards them. Colonel Hite reports, that he has received intelligence from Cheet River, upon which he can depend, that on the 4th instant some people going to or by the house of one Willam Speir, they discovered him, his wife, and four children murdered and scalped, with a broad-axe sticking in the man's breast, and his wife lying on her back, entirely naked. At another place they found a man's coat, with a number of bullet holes in it; and a child murdered close by the same. The cattle they have likewise killed; in short, the outrages committed by these barbarians are hardly credible; and, we are told, that scarce a day happens but some cruelty or other is committed. Colonel Hite declares, that although he resided there during the two last wars, he never saw greater consternation and distress among the people than is at this time.

Philadelphia, Monday, June 13, 1774.

On Thursday evening last, June 9th, about twelve hundred Mechanics of this city and suburbs, assembled at the State House, to hear a letter and other papers read from the Mechanics of the City of New-York, and to form such resolutions as should be judged proper for their future conduct at this most alarming and critical time, when American liberty is so deeply wounded, and her rights so unjustly invaded by levying taxes on us without our consent, for the purpose of raising a revenue; and for refusing payment of those illegal taxes, blocking up with divers ships of war the port and town of Boston, thereby most unjustly depriving that once flourishing town of its whole trade; the inhabitants of their private property; and the labouring poor of the means of subsisting themselves and families. These proceedings of the parent State against her American children, call aloud upon all Americans to assemble, consult, and determine firmly to pursue such measures for their own and neighbours future security, as shall be judged most likely to avert the present calamity, and secure to them the perfect enjoyment of their liberties and properties upon a fixed and lasting foundation; for which purpose, the Mechanics of this city did propose, and intend at this meeting to form such resolutions to co-operate with the Committee of Merchants, and to strengthen their hands, as will convince the world Americans were born and determine to live free, and that they never will be slaves; that liberty is their birthright: they cannot, they will not give it up. But since the sending out the handbills for calling this great assembly, information was received that the present Committee have sent expresses to all the Southern Colonies for their advice on this alarming occasion, and returns to those expresses are expected in a very few days; that the Committee had determined to call a general meeting of all the inhabitants in the city and county, to be held here next Wednesday, the 15th instant, at three o'clock in the afternoon, then to chose one Grand Joint Committee, to represent the whole inhabitants of this city and county, to correspond with the Committees of the neighbouring Provinces, and to adopt such measures to be pursued by all, as their united wisdom shall direct; wherefore it is judged best at present to omit going into particular resolutions, or appointing a particular Committee to represent the Mechanics, as the grand general meeting is so near at hand.

As it was judged there would not be sufficient time to give proper notice to the county, it was agreed on Saturday last by the Committee and a number of the most respectable inhabitants called to advise on the present occasion, that the general meeting be postponed to Saturday next, at or near the State House, at three o'clock, P. M., at which time and place the inhabitants of this city and county, qualified to vote for Representatives, are desired to attend, in order to take into their consideration certain propositions prepared to be laid before them.

GEORGE CLYMER TO JOSIAH QUINCY, JR.

Philadelphia, June 13, 1774.

DEAR SIR: The business I have been engaged in, almost ever since I had the pleasure of seeing you, has in a great measure prevented me from improving a friendship and correspondence in which I expected the greatest satisfaction.

Knowing how much you have at heart the welfare of your country - the character you sustain, and your circle of connexions - any information from you respecting the true springs and motives of action in your people on many late occasions, would have been extremely agreeable to me, feeling myself much interested in every thing that can affect them.

I have ever been the advocate for the political conduct of the people of Boston, wherever it has been made the subject of conversation; but manners dissimilar to those of many of the more Southern Colonies, and perhaps, some other causes, have most undoubtedly contributed to fix prejudices, which nothing but a clear knowledge of circumstances can possibly remove.

I sincerely believe that fair representations of things would always have freed them from any suspicions of an impatience of good order, and of just authority. Those among us of the most enlarged sentiments, and who have elevated ideas of liberty, are unwilling to censure any irregularities, or even extravagances, which a zeal for her cause may have produced; but narrow minds can scarcely in any case, be brought to approve, where domestic economy and good order seemed to be disturbed. I would willingly hope that the number of such shortsighted censurers are diminished, and that the distress now so unjustly inflicted upon the town of Boston, has fixed their attention more upon the danger which so fatal a precedent-has made common to all the Americans. At present, I believe this to be the case, and that almost every one amongst us sees the necessity of checking the progress that arbitrary power is making.

Would to God your relief could be speedily effected by the means pointed out by the vote of your town; but the minds of men, at least in two of the principal Colonies, cannot yet be brought to combat with the most powerful principle in human nature: I mean self-interest, which must be so generally renounced during a suspension of trade. Many indeed who are not swayed by selfishness, are for offering the olive branch to the mother country, unaccompanied by the threats and menaces implied in that measure; and proposing through a general Congress such terms of accommodation as will leave us the essential rights of Englishmen, and suffering her at the same time to reap those advantages in trade which some suppose she had in contemplation, in first settling these Colonies, notwithstanding the opinion which old charters in many early transactions justify, that the absolute independence of the Colonies was intended. If these two ideas are not to be fairly reconciled in theory, they think, perhaps, a temporary compromise, which should leave any determinate principles out of the question, may be effected. Our people seem bent upon first trying this experiment; the necessity of harmony and perfect unanimity, which all seem sensible of, has reconciled very different interests among us, and by yielding to each other, the Quakers and Presbyterians, and other contending sects, have met on this point.

A measure of this kind seems calculated rather as a general barrier against the encroaching power of Parliament, than to give immediate relief to people in your situation. We all wish, however, that your firmness should remain unshaken, until the remedy to be applied shall have had its operation; but this seems hardly possible. Patriotism, assailed by poverty and want, has seldom stood its ground. The general subscription to be opened here, which I hope will be followed in other places, will show that your neighbours have not absolutely forsaken you in the day of distress; it will in some measure alleviate the wretchedness of the poor, and stifle their clamours for bread. Would to Heaven this proposed charity may be in the least adequate to the occasion, that the hard necessity of complying with dangerous and disgraceful terms might be utterly taken away.

It is said there is a crisis in political, as well as in natural disorders; this may be, when the apprehensions of any great evils shall have made such progress as to incline men to make the strongest and most decisive efforts to avoid them. I believe we are not ripe yet for these efforts; the two bills before Parliament for taking away the peculiar privileges of your Province, and making the soldiery masters of your lives, will probably quicken and mature our resentments, and give us a greater certainty of approaching tyranny.

But I have to ask your pardon for this tedious letter. I expect in a few weeks to see you at Boston, with a brother of Mr. Dickinson's.

I am, dear Sir, your most obedient servant,
GEORGE CLYMER.

Josiah Quincy, Jun.

SOUTH-HAVEN (NEW-YORK) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Parish of South-Haven, in the County of Suffolk, and Colony of New-York, the 13th of June, 1774.

Mr. WILLIAM SMITH, Moderator.

It is voted and agreed, that the Act of Parliament, for blocking up the harbour of Boston, is unconstitutional, and has a direct tendency to enslave the inhabitants of America, and put an end to all property.

And it is also the opinion of this meeting, that if the Colonies all unite, and strictly, adhere to a non-importation agreement from Great Britain and the West Indies, and have no trade with them, we should have great reason to expect in a short time a repeal of that oppressive Act; and for that purpose we do heartily desire that such an agreement may be entered into.

And it is further voted and agreed by this meeting, that the following gentlemen, viz: William Smith, Esquire, Colonel Nathaniel Woodhull, Colonel William Floyd, Mr. Thomas Fanning, Captain Josiah Smith, Captain David Mulford, and Captain Jonathan Baker, be a Standing Committee for this place, to correspond with the Committee of Correspondence in the City of New-York and others; and that they do immediately communicate the above sentiments to them.

Signed by order of the meeting, W. S. SMITH.

Charlestown, S. C., June 13, 1774.

At a Meeting of the General Committee this day, it was Unanimously agreed, That a General Meeting of the inhabitants of this Colony he called, on Wednesday the 6th of July next, at eight o'clock in the morning, at the Exchange, in Charlestown, to consider of the papers, letters, and resolutions, transmitted to the Committee from the Northern Colonies; and also of such steps as are necessary to be pursued, in union with the inhabitants of all our sister Colonies on this Continent, in order to avert the dangers impending over American liberties in general, by the late hostile Act of Parliament against Boston, and other arbitrary measures of the British Ministry: And that public notice thereof be immediately given in the Gazettes."

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK.

Charlestown, S. C., 13th June, 1774.

Circular letters are despatched by express to all the most leading men throughout this Colony, in order to remove some jealousies which have been industriously excited, to acquaint them with the present dangerous situation of every American and his posterity, and to engage their union, assistance, and influence, in their several districts, to attend, either personally or by deputies authorized to declare their sentiments, at a general meeting of Delegates from every part of the Colony, to be held at Charlestown, the 6th of July next.

The Virginia packet, which was particularly addressed to our merchants, is to be immediately returned to them with our thanks for their polite communication, and an intimation that we shall be glad to have, in a private way, their sentiments before the 28th instant, when our Committee are to meet again, agree upon and prepare what should be proper to lay before and recommend to the general meeting on the 6th of July, where we should also be glad to see them.

Even the merchants now seem generally inclined to a non-importation. How much farther we shall go will depend upon the expected advices from the other Colonies, and the spirit and vigour with which they act.

I could wish your Committee had extended its correspondence to Georgia, and beg leave to recommend the doing it still, without delay.

I am particularly desired to request from every Colony the most speedy information of their respective annual exports of unwrought iron, to Great Britain. How many tons each could supply to this Colony - also what quantity of hoes, axes, tools, cutlery, and other articles usually imported from Great Britain, each Colony can supply, &c.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED IN PHILADELPHIA.

Charlestown, S. C., June 14, 1774.

The inhabitants are much alarmed at the arbitrary proceedings of the British Ministry, and our Committee have met, in consequence of the letters received from the Northern Colonies, and are resolved to co-operate with them in any prudent measure which may be thought likely to remedy the grievance. I believe whatever New-York and your city may conclude on, (we place so much confidence in your moderation and firmness,) our town will readily join in with. Our tea remains here entirely unmolested; if the duty is not taken off the present session of Parliament, we shall probably have orders to send it home, wtfich must be a mortifying circumstance, as well to my Lord North as to the India Company. We value ourselves much on having given our sister Colonies so striking an instance of our virtue and opposition to Ministerial schemes; if it is not sent for soon it will be good for nothing. I could wish the town of Boston had taken this legal way of destroying theirs, as it is equally effectual; besides giving a proof to all the world that we are so much attached to the cause of liberty, that there are not even individuals among us who would purchase the baneful herb.

CHARLES COUNTY (MARYLAND) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Inhabitants of Charles County, on the 14th of June, 1774, at the Court House, in Port-Tobacco town, to deliberate on the effect and tendency of the Act of Parliament, for blocking up the port and harbour of Boston.

Mr. WALTER HANSON unanimously chosen Chairman.

1st. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting that the Act of the British Parliament passed to block up the harbour and port of Boston, and suspend the trade and commerce of that town, is a violent attack upon the liberty and property of the inhabitants thereof, and in its consequences tends to render insecure and destroy the rights and privileges of all British America.

2d. That the town of Boston, now suffering under the execution of the said Act, justly demands the most speedy and effectual assistance of every Colony in America to obtain a repeal of the same.

3d. That the inhabitants of this county will join in an Association with the several counties of this Province to put a stop to all imports from Great Britain after the first day of August next, except the articles of medicine, until the said Act be repealed.

4th. That if the said Act of Parliament is not repealed by the 31st day of October, in the year 1775, that then the inhabitants of this county will join with the several counties of this Province, and the principal Colonies in America, to break off all commercial connection with Great Britain and the West Indies.

5th. It is the opinion of this meeting, that a Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies will be the most probable means of uniting America in one general measure to effectuate a repeal of the said Act of Parliament.

6th. That Deputies shall be sent from this county to meet at the City of Annapolis, on the 22d instant, and join with the Deputies appointed by the several counties in a general, rational, and practicable Association for this Province, and to appoint Deputies to attend a Congress of those nominated by the several Colonies, and to adopt any other measures for the relief of the people of Boston, which to them seems fit and reasonable.

7th. That the inhabitants of this county will break off all trade, commerce, and dealings, with that Colony, town, or county, which shall decline or refuse to associate in some rational and effectual means to procure a repeal of the said Act of Parliament.

8th. That the inhabitants of this county will adopt and steadily pursue such measures, as tend to protect and secure the liberties of this county, according to the true principles of the English Constitution, and thereby show themselves loyal and faithful subjects to his Majesty King George the Third.

9th. That Messrs. Walter Hanson, William Smallwood, Josias Hawkins, Francis Ware, Joseph Hanson Harrison, Thomas Stone, George Dent, Gustavus Richard Brown, John Dent, Thomas Hanson Marshall, Daniel Jenifer, Samuel Love, James Forbes, Robert T. Hooe, Philip Richard Fendall, Zephaniah Turner, James Key, and James Craik, or any seven of them, be a Committee of Correspondence, to receive and answer all letters, and, on any emergency, to call a general meeting of the county; and that Messrs. Walter Hanson, William Smallwood, Josias Hawkins, Francis Ware, Joseph Hanson Harrison, Thomas Stone, John Dent, Daniel Jenifer, and Robert T. Hooe, are appointed Deputies for this county to attend the general meeting at Annapolis, the 22d instant.

Signed per order, JOHN GWIN, Clerk.

IV. TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE BRITISH COLONIES IN AMERICA.

Philadelphia, June 15, 1774.

BRETHREN: The intelligence received since the preceding letter was written, seems to render needless every attempt to prove from former transactions, my first intention, if health had permitted, that a regular plan has been invariably pursued to enslave these Colonies, and that the Act of Parliament for the blocking up the port of Boston is a part of the plan. However unprecedented and cruel that measure is, yet some persons among us might have flattered themselves that the resentment of the Parliament is directed solely against the town. The last advices mention two Bills to be passing in Parliament, one changing the chartered Constitution of the Province of Massachusetts Bay into a Military Government; and another empowering Administration to send for and try persons in England for actions committed in that Colony.*

By these instances we perceive that Administration has not only renounced all respect, and all appearance of respect for the rights of these Colonies, but even the plainest principles of justice and humanity. Were the Representatives of the people of Massachusetts Bay called upon to make satisfaction for the damage done to private property in any late tumult there? No. Yet it was known that those Representatives had made ample reparation for the injuries committed on occasion of the Stamp Act. It was known that the like reparation had been made by the Assemblies of New-York and Rhode-Island. In short, it was known, that notwithstanding the incessant pains taken by many Ministers to tease the Colonies by oppressions and insults into madness, yet they have, with difficulty, excited only a few tumults, for which the popular branch of the Legislature in the several Colonies has ever been ready to atone, upon requisitions from the Crown.

Great clamour has been raised at home against Massachusetts Bay, on account of resolutions at some of their own town meetings, and other writings published in that Colony; and better it were that many of them had been suppressed. The truth is, that people, animated by an ardent and generous love of liberty, saw, and peculiarly felt, the projects against the freedom and happiness of America. I know them well; and if ever a State deserved the character, they are a moral, religious, quiet, and loyal people, affectionately attached to the welfare and honour of Great Britain, and dearly valuing their dependence on her. Observant and sensible as they were of the present and approaching evils, Some of them adopted a very imprudent, but what appeared to them a very peaceable and justifiable method, of discouraging Administration from proceeding in such alarming and dangerous measures - that of speaking in a high tone. Words were opposed to injuries; and menaces, never designed for execution, to insults intolerable. What could they do? Their humble petitions were haughtily and contemptuously rejected. The more they supplicated the more they were abused. By their tears, and Heaven knows many they have shed, their persecutions flourished as trees by water poured on their roots. Their very virtue and passionate fondness for concord for their mother country, occasioned this objected error. "Surely," says Solomon, "oppression maketh a wise man mad." A silly man may disregard it. In playing the fool they showed their wisdom. This is the true history of those futile pieces that produced so much solid eloquence in Great Britain.

* By the first of these Bills the Governour is to be invested "with the power of a Justice of the Peace, to call out the military to effect, though the Minister says in his speech: "I shall always consider that a military power, acting under the authority and controul of a Civil Magistrate, is a part of the Constitution." By the second, Americans are to be seized, confined, and carried to England, to be tried, that is, hanged on charges for an act done in a Colony. This is not all. Soldiers and others, who shall commit any offence, such as murdering the Colonists, under the pretence of supporting the authority of Parliament, shall be carried to England to be tried - that is - acquitted. Of the habeas corpus and trial by peers, "stat nominis umbra."

"That the absolute power, claimed and exercised in a neighbouring Nation, is more tolerable than that of the Eastern Empires, is in a great measure, owing to their having united the judicial power in their Parliaments, a body separate and distinct from both the Legislative and Executive, and if ever that Nation recovers its former liberty, 'it will owe it to the efforts of those Assemblies. In Turkey, where 'every thing is centered in the Sultan, or his Minister, despotic power 'is in its meridian, and wears a most dreadful aspect.'" - 5 BLACKSTONE, 269, 270

Riots and weak publications, By a small number of individuals, are sufficient reasons with Parliament to ruin many thousand inhabitants of a truly respectable town, to dissolve charters, to abolish the benefits of the writ of habeas corpus,* and extirpate American liberty - for the principle reaches all. But in England the Press groans with publications, seditious, treasonable, and even blasphemous. The discontented swarm over the Kingdom proclaiming their resentments. Many enormous riots have disturbed the public peace. The Sovereign has been insulted in passing from his Palace to the Parliament House, on the business of the Nation. Is it to be concluded from the facts, that the body of the people is seditious and traitorous? Can his Majesty believe that he is thought by his English subjects in general to be such a Prince as some of them have represented him? Will the two Houses of Parliament acknowledge what has been spoken and written and acted against them in England, expresses the sentiments of the Kingdom? Or will they say the people of England have forfeited their liberty, because some of them have run into licentiousness? Let a judgment be formed in both cases by the same rule. Let them condemn those or acquit us.

Pretences and reasons are totally different. The provocation said to be given by our sister Colony, are but the pretences for the exorbitant severity exercised against her. The reasons are these - the policy, despicable and detestable as it is, of suppressing the freedom of America, by a military force, to be supported by money taken out of our own pockets, and the supposed convenience of opportunity for attaining this end. These reasons are evident from the Minister's speech. The system is formed with art, but the art is discoverable. Indeed, I do not believe it was expected we should have such early and exact intelligence of the schemes agitated against us as we have received. Any person who examines the multitude of invectives published in pamphlets and newspapers in Great Britain, or the speeches made in either House of Parliament, will find them directed against the Colonies in general. The people in that Kingdom have been, with great cunning and labour,† inflamed against the Colonies in general. They are deluded into a belief that we are in a state of rebellion, and aiming directly at a state of independency; though the first is a noxious weed that never grew in our climates, and the latter is universally regarded with the deepest execrations by us - a poison we never can be compelled to touch, but as an antidote to a worse, if a worse can be - a curse that if any Colony on this Continent should be so mad as to aim at reaching, the rest of the body would have virtue and wisdom enough to draw their swords, and hew the traitors into submission, if not into loyalty. It would be our interest and our duty thus to guarantee the public peace. The Minister, addressing the House of Commons, uses several expressions relating to all the Colonies, and calls the stoppage of the port of Boston "a punishment inflicted on those who have disobeyed your authority."

Is it not extremely remarkable, after such a variety of charges affecting all the Colonies, that the statute of vengeance should be levelled against a single Colony? New-

* Both Houses of Parliament resolved two or three years ago, that persons might be sent from any of the Colonies for acts done there and tried in England, under the old statute of Henry the Eighth, made before the Colonies existed. The late Court at Rhode-Island was established on that principle. The intention of Parliament in passing the Bill above mentioned is chiefly to screen persons acting in support of their unconstitutional claims. They have declared they have no doubt but that the thirty-fifth of Henry has established a just and legal mode of cutting American throats.

"I can live, although another, who has no right, be put to live with me; nay, I can live, although I pay excises and impositions more than I do; but to have my liberty, which is the soul of my life, taken from me by power, and to have my body pent up in a jail, (then thrown into a ship of war, transported three thousand miles across the Ocean, to a land of bitter, selfish, furious, and revengeful enemies, there thrust into the jaws of dungeons,) "without remedy by law, and to be "adjudged: O improvident ancestors! O unwise forefathers! to be "so curious in providing for the quiet possession of our laws, and the "liberties of Parliament, and to neglect our persons and bodies, and "let them lie in prison, and that durante bene placito, remediless! "If this be law why do we talk of liberties? Why do we trouble "ourselves with a dispute about law, franchises, property of goods, "and the like? What may any man call his own if not the liberty of "his person? I am weary of treading these ways." - Speech of ROBERT PHILIPS., a member of the wise and moderate Parliament that met in the year 1627.

† Private letters give a further proof of this fact.

York, Philadelphia, and Charlestown have denied freedom of trade to ships sailing under the protection of Acts of Parliament. Will not the House of Commons think the inhabitants of these places "have disobeyed their authority," and that a punishment should be inflicted on them? "Why do we not hear of some measure pursued against those cities? Are they immaculate in the eyes of Administration and Parliament? Has not each of these places done real damage to the East India Company? Has there been even a requisition of compensation for that damage from any of them? Why is there such a profound silence observed with respect to them? Because they are judged by Administration and Parliament more innocent than the Colony of Massachusetts Bay? No. Because Administration and Parliament do us Americans the honour to think we are such idiots that we shall not believe ourselves interested in the fate of Boston, but that one Colony may be attacked and humbled after another, without showing the sense or spirit of beasts themselves, many of which unite against common danger.

Why were the states of Greece broken down into the tamest submission, by Philip of Macedon, and afterwards by the Romans? Because they contended for freedom separately. Why were the States of Spain subdued by the Carthaginians, and afterwards by the Romans? Because they contended for freedom separately. Why were the ancient inhabitants of the Kingdom, that now harasses us, conquered by their invaders? Tacitus will inform us. "Nec aliud adversus validissimas gentes pro nobis utilius, quam quod in commune non consultant. Rarus ad propulsandum commune periculum conventus. Ita dum singuli pugnant omnes vincuntur."*

Why did the little Swiss Cantons and seven small Provinces of the Low Countries so successfully oppose the tyrants, that, not contented with an Empire, founded in humanity and mutual advantages, unnecessarily and arrogantly strove to "lay" the faithful and affectionate wretches "at their feet?" Because they wisely regarded the interest of each as the interest of all.

Our own experience furnishes a mournful additional proof of an observation made by a great and good man, Lord President Forbes. "It is a certain truth," says he, "that all States and Kingdoms, in proportion as they grow "great, wealthy, and powerful, grow wanton, wicked, and "oppressive; and the history of all ages give evidence of "the fatal catastrophe of all such States and Kingdoms, "when the cup of their iniquity is full." Another "truth," as "certain," is, that such "States and Kingdoms never have been, and never will be, checked in the career of their "wantonness, wickedness, and oppression," by a people in any way dependent upon them, but by the prudent, virtuous, and steady unanimity of that people. To employ more words to elucidate a point so manifest, would be the idle attempt of gilding gold.

Surely you cannot doubt at this time, my countrymen, but that the people of Massachusetts Bay are suffering in a cause† common to us all; and, therefore, that we ought immediately to concert the most prudent measures for their relief and our own safety.

Our interest depending on the present controversy is unspeakably valuable. We have not the least prospect of human assistance. The passion of despotism, raging like a plague for about seven years past, has spread with unusual malignity through Europe; "Corsica, Poland" and Sweden, have sunk beneath it. The remaining spirit of freedom that lingered and languished in the Parliament of France, has lately expired. ‡ What Kingdom or State interposed for the relief of their distressed fellow-creatures? The contagion has at length reached Great Britain, Her statesmen emulate the Nimrods of the Earth,

* Nor was any thing more advantageous to us against very powerful nations, than their imprudence in not consulting together for the interest of the whole. Conventions for repelling a common danger were rare. Thus, while each State resisted singly, all were subdued. - TACITUS, in vit. Agric.

† The Act for shutting up the port of Boston orders, "that it shall "not be opened until peace and obedience to the laws shall be so far "restored in the said town of Boston, that the trade of Great Britain, "may safely be carried on there, and his Majesty's duties duly collected," &c. Thus, it appears, if the inhabitants renounce the common cause of the Colonies, the port may be opened - if they adhere to that cause it will remain shut and wish to become "mighty hunters" in the woods of America. What Kingdom or State will interpose for our relief? The preservation of our freedom, and of every attendant blessing, must he wrought out, under Providence, by ourselves. Let not this consideration discourage us. We cannot be false to each other, without being false to ourselves. We have the firmest foundation of union and fidelity - that we wish to attain the same things - to avoid the same things. The friendship of others might be precarious, suspected, deceitful.

‡ By the new modeling their Parliaments:

The infinitely great, wise, and good Being, who gave us our existence, certainly formed us for a state of society. He certainly designed us for such a state of society as would be productive of happiness. Liberty is essential to the happiness of a society, and therefore is our right. The Father of Mercies never intended men to hold unlimited authority over men. * Craft and cruelty have indeed triumphed over simplicity and innocence, in disobedience to his holy laws. The Father of Mercies never intended us for the slaves of Britons. Craft and cruelty, indeed, are striving to brand us with marks infamously denoting us to be their property as absolutely as their cattle. Their pretensions to a right of such power, not only oppose constitutional principles, but even partake of impiety. The sentence of bondage against us is only issued by the frail omnipotence † of Parliament.

"Non sic inflectere sensus

"Humanos edicta, valent." ‡

We cannot question the justice of our cause. This consideration will afford comfort and encouragement to our minds. Let us, therefore, in the first place, humbling ourselves before our gracious Creator, devoutly beseech his

* "To live by one man's will became the cause of all men's misery."- HOOKER'S Eccles. Pol.

"Is not universal misery and ruin the same, whether it comes from the hands of many or of one?" Bishop HOADLY'S Disc. on Gov.

"Of so contrary an opinion was this good man (Hooker) to that of some others, who can never oppose one extreme, without running into another, as bad, if not worse, and think they cannot enough condemn rebellion without giving the divine sanction to tyranny and oppression. This judgment ought likewise to be of the more weight with such as profess the most profound veneration for the memory of Charles the First, and the honour of the old Church of England; because this treatise in which it was to be found was chosen out of many others, by that Prince, to be recommended to his children as the best instructor they could converse with, and was had in such estimation by all churchmen, from the time of its appearance, that it may well pass, not only for his own judgment in particular, but for the judgment of the whole Church of England at that time."- Bishop HOADLY, ibid.

"Would not the unhappiness of this Nation in particular have been the same, whether a late King, alone, or by a former law, has subjected it to the religion of Rome and the maxims of France? And, upon supposition of such an attempt, would not our late deliverance have been as glorious, as great, and justifiable, as much wanted, and as truly beneficial, as it was upon the attempt of the King alone? Would not the invitation of the Prince of Orange, the election and meeting of the persons who made the Convention, and the consequent establishment in the Protestant line, have been as requisite and as useful? Nay, would not the ends of Government have been more effectually answered this way, than by submission to a total dissolution of all happiness at present, and of all hopes for the future? How then can it be said that the ends of Government require that degree of submission upon the one supposition, which they are allowed not to do upon the other, when the same misery and destruction must follow a submission in both cases, and the same universal happiness must in both be the consequence of a just and well managed defence? Or would the ends of Government be destroyed, should the miserable condition of the whole people of France, which hath proceeded from the King's being absolute, awaken the thoughts of the wisest heads amongst them, and move them all to exert themselves, so as that those ends should be better answered for the time to come?"- Bishop HOADLY, ibid.

It was resolved by the House of Commons, that this Bishop, then Mr. Hoadly, and Rector of St. Peter's Poor, London, "for having often strenuously justified the principles on which her Majesty and the Nation proceeded in the late happy revolution, had justly merited the favour and recommendation of the House;" and accordingly addressed Queen Anne, "that she would be graciously pleased to bestow some dignity in the Church on the said Mr. Hoadly for his eminent services both to the Church and State."

"Whatever dishonours human nature, dishonours the policy of a Government which permits it; and a free State which does not communicate the natural right of liberty to all its subjects, who have not deserved by their crimes to lose it, hardly seems to be worthy of that honourable name." - Lord LITTLETON'S History of HENRY II.

"Without goodness power would be tyranny and oppression, and wisdom would degenerate into craft and mischievous contrivance."- Archbishop TILLOTSON'S Sermons.

"Etiamsi non sit molestus dominus, tamen est miserrimum, posse, si velit." CICERO. Even if a Sovereign does not oppress, yet it is a most miserable condition for the Subjects that he has the power, if he has the will.

† 1 Blackstone, 161.

‡ Edicts cannot so bend the common sense of human nature.

divine protection of us his afflicted servants, most unreasonably and cruelly oppressed. Let us seriously reflect on our manifold transgressions, and by a sincere repentance, and an entire amendment of our lives, strive to recommend ourselves to divine favour.

In the next place, let us cherish and cultivate sentiments of brotherly love and tenderness among us. To whom, under the cope of Heaven, can we look for help in these days of "darkness and trouble," but one to another. O my countrymen! Have pity one on another. Have pity on yourselves and your children. Let us, by every tender tie, implore you; let us mutually excuse and forgive each other our weakness and prejudices, (for who is free from weakness and prejudices?) and utterly abolishing all former dissensions and distinctions, wisely and kindly unite in one firm band, in one common cause.

If there are any men, or any bodies of men, on this Continent, who think that an accommodation between us and Great Britain, or that their own particular interest may be advanced by withdrawing themselves from the counsels of their countrymen, I would wish them most deliberately to consider the consequences that may attend such a conduct. What step can possibly be taken more directly tending to prevent an accommodation between us and Great Britain than supplying Administration with proofs of our intestine divisions? What do our enemies so ardently wish for as for these divisions? Has not the expectation of these events encouraged the Ministry to treat us with such unexampled contempt and barbarity? Will not the certainty of these events excite resolution in them to press us, to take every advantage, of a people so industriously studying and labouring to weaken and destroy themselves? Then a Minister may with reason call upon the House of Commons, "Now is our time to stand out - to defy them - to proceed with firmness and without fear - to produce a conviction to all America that we are now in earnest, and that we will proceed with firmness and vigour until she shall be laid at our feet."*

I appeal to every man of common sense, whether any measure will be so likely to induce Administration to think of an accommodation with us, as our unanimity. Must not, therefore, every measure impeaching the credit and weight of this unanimity, in the same degree obstruct all accommodation? Will not every such measure naturally produce haughtiness, perseverance and fresh rigour in our oppressors? Will not these still more enrage us, and place us farther from an accommodation? If the protection and peace we wish to derive from our unanimity be taken from us by the imprudence of our brethren who break that unanimity, or destroy all respect for it in Great Britain, and thereby encourage her to seize what she will certainly think the lucky opportunity for pursuing her blows, what must be the consequence. We held up a shield for our defence. If our brethren have pierced it through, and rendered it useless, their imprudence will, according to the usual course of human affairs, compel us to change the mode of defence, and drive us into all the evils of civil discords.

What advantages can they gain that can compensate to men of any understanding or virtue, for the miseries occasioned by their bad policy. Their numbers will be too small in any manner whatever to controul the sentiments or measures of America. Their conduct never can prevent the exertions of these Colonies in vindication of their liberty. It may by provocations render those exertions more rash and imprudent; but their numbers will be so extravagantly exaggerated, as all facts have been against us, on the other side of the Atlantic, that Great Britain may be deceived, and emboldened into measures destructive to herself and to us. We are now strenuously endeavouring, in a peaceable manner, by this single power, the force of our unanimity, to preserve our freedom. Those who lessen that unanimity detract from its force, will prevent its effect, and must be, therefore, justly chargeable with all the dreadful consequences to these Colonies.

The third important consideration I beg leave to recommend to my countrymen is, to draw such reflections from their situation as will confirm their minds in that manly noble fortitude so absolutely necessary for the maintenance of those inestimable privileges for which they are now contending. The man who fears difficulties arising from the defence of freedom, is unworthy of freedom. God has given the right and the means of asserting it. We may reasonably expect his gracious assistance in the reasonable employment of those means. To look for miracles while we abusively neglect the powers afforded us by divine goodness, is not only stupid, but criminal. We are yet free - let us think like freemen.

* Lord North's Speech

In the last place, I beg to offer some observations concerning the measures that may be most expedient in the present emergency. Other Nations have contended in blood for their liberty, and have judged the jewel worth the price that was paid for it. These Colonies are not reduced to the dreadful necessity. So dependent is Great Britain on us for supplies that Heaven seems to have placed in our hands means of an effectual, yet peaceable resistance, if we have sense and integrity to make a proper use of them. A general agreement between these Colonies of non-importation and non-exportation, faithfully observed, would certainly be attended with success. But is it now proper to enter into such an agreement? Let us consider that we are contending with our ancient, venerable and beloved parent country. Let us treat her with all possible respect and reverence.* Though the rulers there have had no compassion upon us, let us have compassion on the people of that Kingdom. And if, to give weight to our supplications, and to obtain relief for our suffering brethren, it shall be judged necessary to lay ourselves under some restrictions with regard to our imports and exports, let it be done with tenderness, so as to convince our brethren in Great Britain of the importance of a connection and harmony between them and us, and the danger of driving us into despair. Their true interests, and our own, are the same; nor would we admit any notion of a distinction till we know their resolution to be unalterably hostile.

In the mean time, let us pursue the most proper methods for collecting the sentiments of all the British Colonies in North America on the present situation of affairs, the first point, it is apprehended, to which attention should be paid. This may be effected various ways. The Assemblies that may have opportunity of meeting, may appoint Deputies to attend a general Congress, at such time and place as shall be agreed on. Where Assemblies cannot meet, such of the people as are qualified by law to vote in election of Representatives, may meet and appoint, or may request their Representatives to meet and appoint.

When the inhabitants of this extended Continent observe that regular measures are prosecuted for re-establishing harmony between Great Britain and these Colonies, their minds will grow more calm. Prospects of accommodation, it is hoped, will engage them patiently and peaceably to attend the result of the public Councils, and such applications as, by the joint sense of America, may be judged proper to be made to his Majesty and both Houses of Parliament.

"Better is a little with righteousness, than great revenues without right."

LANCASTER (PENNSYLVANIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Borough of Lancaster, at the Court House in said Borough, on Wednesday, the 15th day of June, 1774.

Agreed, That to preserve the constitutional rights of the inhabitants of America, it is incumbent on every Colony to unite, and use the most effectual means to procure a repeal of the late Acts of Parliament against the town of Boston.

* "By justice (saith the Scripture) the Throne is established,' and 'by justice a Nation shall be exalted,' I resemble justice to Nebuchadnezzar's tree, shading not only the palace of the King, and the house of nobles, but sheltering also the cottage of the poorest beggar. Wherefore, if now the blast of indignation hath so bruised any of the branches of this tree, that either our persons, or goods, or possessions, have not the same shelter as before, let us not, therefore, neglect the root of this great tree; but rather, with all our possible means, endearours, and unfeigned duties, both apply fresh and fertile mould unto it, and also water it even with tears, that so those bruised branches may be recovered, and the whole tree prosper again and flourish."- Mr. CRESKELD'S Speech in the Parliament that met in 1727.

That the Act of Parliament for blocking up the port and harbour of Boston, is an invasion of the rights of the inhabitants of the said town, as subjects of the Crown of Great Britain.

That it is the opinion of the inhabitants of this meeting, that the most proper and effectual means to be used to obtain a repeal of the said Act, will be to put an immediate stop to all imports and exports to and from Great Britain, until the same Act be repealed.

That the traders and inhabitants of this town will join and concur with the patriotic merchants, manufacturers, tradesmen, and freeholders of the City and County of Philadelphia, and other parts of the Province, in an Association of solemn agreement to this purpose, if the same shall be by them thought necessary.

That Edward Shippen, Esquire, George Ross, Esquire, Jasper Yeates, Esquire, Matthias Slough, Esquire, James Webb, Esquire, William Atlee, Esquire, William Henry, Esquire, Mr. Ludwick Lauman, Mr. William Bausman, and Mr. Charles Hall, be a Committee to correspond with the General Committee at Philadelphia.

That these sentiments be immediately forwarded to the Committee of Correspondence at Philadelphia.

Signed by order of the said Committee,

EBERHART MICHAEL, Clerk

RHODE-ISLAND RESOLUTIONS.

At the General Assembly of the Governour and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden by adjournment at Newport, within and for the said Colony, on the second Monday in June, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four, and in the fourteenth year of the reign of his most sacred Majesty, George the Third, by the grace of God, King of Great Britain, and so forth. *

This Assembly taking into their most serious consideration several Acts of the British Parliament for levying taxes upon his Majesty's subjects in America, without their consent; and particularly an Act lately passed for blocking up the port of Boston; which Act, even upon the supposition, that the people of Boston had justly deserved punishment, is scarcely to be paralleled in history for the severity of the vengeance executed upon them; and also considering, to what a deplorable state this and all the other Colonies are reduced, when, by an Act of Parliament, in which the subjects of America have not a single voice, and without being heard, they may be divested of property, and deprived of liberty; do, upon mature deliberation, Resolve 1st. That it is the opinion of this Assembly that a firm and inviolable union of all the Colonies, in counsels and measures, is absolutely necessary for the preservation of their rights and liberties; and that, for that purpose, a Convention of Representatives from all the Colonies ought to be holden in some suitable place, as soon as may be, in order to consult upon proper measures to obtain a repeal of the said Acts, and to establish the rights and liberties of the Colonies upon a just and solid foundation.

2d. That the Honourable Stephen Hopkins, and the Honourable Samuel Ward, Esqrs., be, and they are hereby appointed by this Assembly to represent the people of this Colony, in a general Congress of Representatives from the other Colonies, at such time and place as shall be agreed upon by the major part of the Committees appointed, or to be appointed by the Colonies in general.

3d. That they consult and advise with the Representatives of the other Colonies who shall meet in such Congress, upon a loyal and dutiful petition and remonstrance to be presented to his Majesty, as the united voice of his faithful subjects in America, setting forth the grievances they labour under, and praying his gracious interposition for their relief. And that in case a major part of the Representatives of all the Colonies shall agree upon such petition and remonstrance, they be empowered to sign the same in behalf of this Colony.

* The Assembly met at the Court House in Newport, on Monday, June 13, 1774; and on Wednesday adopted those Resolutions, which passed unanimously, except one, to which there were only two or three dissentients.

4th. That they also consult upon all such reasonable and lawful measures as may be expedient for the Colonies, in an united manner, to pursue in order to procure a redress of their grievances, and to ascertain and establish their rights and liberties.

5th. That they also endeavour to procure a regular annual Convention of Representatives from all the Colonies, to consider of proper means for the preservation of the rights and liberties of all the Colonies.

6th. That the Speaker of the lower House transmit as soon as may be, copies of these Resolutions to the present or late Speakers of the respective Houses of Representatives of all the British Colonies upon the Continent.

HENRY WARD, Secretary.

WOODSTOCK (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Dunmore, held at the town of Wroodstock, the 16th day of June, 1774, to consider the best mode to be fallen upon to secure their liberties and properties; and also to prevent the dangerous tendency of an Act of Parliament, passed in the fourteenth year of his present Majesty's reign, entitled, "An Act to discontinue in such manner and "for such time as is therein mentioned the landing and discharging, lading or shipping of goods, wares, and merchandise, at the town and within the harbour of Boston, in the "Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in North America," evidently has to invade and deprive us of the same.

The Reverend PETER MECKLENBERG, Moderator.

A Committee, of the following gentlemen, viz: the Reverend Peter Mecklenberg, Francis Slaughter, Abraham Bird, Taverner Beale, John Tipton, and Abraham Bowman, were appointed to draw up Resolves suitable to the same occasion, who, withdrawing for a short time, returned with the following votes, which had been previously agreed to and voted by the freeholders and inhabitants of the County of Frederick.

1st. That we will always cheerfully pay due submission to such Acts of Government, as his Majesty has a right, by law, to exercise over his subjects, as Sovereign to the British Dominions, and to such only.

2d. That it is the inherent right of British subjects to be governed and taxed by Representatives chosen by themselves only; and that every Act of the British Parliament respecting the internal policy of North America, is a dangerous and unconstitutional invasion of our rights and privileges.

3d. That the Act of Parliament above mentioned, is not only itself repugnant to the fundamental laws of natural justice, in condemning persons for supposed crime, unheard; but, also, a despotic exertion of unconstitutional power, calculated to enslave a free and loyal people.

4th. That the enforcing the execution of the said Act of Parliament by a military power, will have a necessary tendency to raise a civil war, thereby dissolving that union which has so long happily subsisted between the mother country and her Colonies; and that we will most heartily and unanimously concur with our suffering brethren of Boston, and every other part of North America, that may be the immediate victims of tyranny, in promoting all proper measures to avert such dreadful calamities; to procure a redress of our grievances, and to secure our common liberties.

5th. It is the unanimous opinion of this meeting, that a joint resolution of all the Colonies, to stop all importations from Great Britain, and exportations to it, till the said Act be repealed, will prove the salvation of North America and her liberties; on the other hand, if they continue their imports and exports, there is the greatest reason to fear that power and the most odious oppression will rise triumphant over right, justice, social happiness, and freedom.

6th. That the East India Company, those servile tools of arbitrary power, have justly forfeited the esteem and regard of all honest men; and that the better to manifest our abhorrence of such abject compliances with the will of a venal Ministry, in ministering all in their power an increase of the fund of speculation, we will not purchase tea, or any other kind of East India commodities, either imported now, or hereafter to be imported, except salt-petre, spices, and medicinal drugs.

7th. That it is the opinion of this meeting, that Committees ought to be appointed for the purpose of effecting a general Association, that the same measures may be pursued through the whole Continent; that the Committees ought to correspond with each other, and to meet at such places and times as shall be agreed, in order to form such general Association; and that when the same shall be formed and agreed on by the several Committees, we will strictly adhere to, and till the general sense of the Continent shall be known, we do pledge ourselves to each other, and to our country, that we will inviolably adhere to the vote of this day.

Voted, That the Reverend Peter Mecklenberg, Francis Slaughter, Abraham Bird, Taverner Beale, John Tipton, and Abraham Bowman, be appointed a Committee for the purpose aforesaid; and that they or any three of them are hereby fully empowered to act.

THE BRITISH AMERICAN, NO. IV.

Williamsburg, Va., June 16. 1774.

Friends, Fellow-citizens, and Countrymen:

Having, under the above signature, formerly addressed three letters to you, upon the long litigated right of the British Parliament to tax the American Colonies, which were not ill received by the public, I intend through the channel of this paper, to give my sentiments of what ought to be the conduct of the inhabitants of British America in the present alarming state of affairs; and I think it more peculiarly my duty to do so at this time, because, (though one of the Representatives of the Colony of Virginia,) I did not attend the last session of the Assembly; indeed, as I live a very retired life, a great distance from Williamsburg, I did not hear of the Act of Parliament relative to Boston, till after the Assembly was dissolved; but I urge not this in justification, nor even in palliation of my offence, since nothing can excuse a Representative of the people from constantly attending in Assembly; and, as I neither expect, or shall attempt, to be chosen again, I take this, as the only method left me, of atoning to my country for having neglected my duty.

In the course of these letters, after explaining what the real excellence of the Constitution, (so far as relates to the real excellence of the legislation) formerly was; after pointing out how far, and by what means, that Constitution hath been altered, and that excellence almost annihilated; and after considering the connections between the Colonies and the mother country, I shall endeavour to prove that it would be really injurious for Great Britain to enforce, or for the Colonies to submit to, the authority of British Acts of Parliament in America.

That the first aim of America ought to be to prevent, if possible, Great Britain from sinking, which by an unanimously, loyal, cool, steady, and intrepid conduct, which I shall endeavour to point out, it is possible for her to effect. But if the utmost exertion of her virtue should not enable her to accomplish this ever to be wished for end; and Great Britain is in so corrupt a state that she must fall, that America must take care not to fall with her; but by preserving her own liberty, prepare an asylum for such of the inhabitants of the mother country as still retain a love of liberty, or possess a desire of being free.

Having thus given a general idea of the subject intended to be pursued in my future letters to my countrymen in general, I shall conclude this, with some advice to my fellow-citizens, of Virginia in particular. Do not enter into any hasty resolves, that you yourselves upon deliberation condemn; remember that coolness is the true characteristic of an intrepid Spirit. However you may be displeased with the conduct of your late Representatives, keep your resentment to yourselves. Remember that the best of men may be sometimes mistaken; that this is not a time to entertain jealousies, or create dissensions amongst ourselves; and that to irritate by reproachful language will never reform. Reflect that the merchants and manufacturers of Great Britain are our fellow-subjects; that they probably disapprove the conduct of the British Parliament as much as we do; that they are possibly warm in our interests at this moment, and if not, that they are at least entitled to justice at our hands; and that, however, discretion ought to prevent us from increasing, common honesty ought to induce us to discharge, as soon as possible, the debts we have already contracted; that to stop the exportation of our commodities would be so injurious to yourselves, that you ought not to risk it till every other measure has been tried without success; and reserve this as your dernier resort; but above all things, be careful that our honest indignation against the two Houses of the British Parliament does not hurry you into any indiscreet expressions against, or corrupt your loyalty to, your Sovereign, though you owe no obedience to the British Parliament, two branches of it being only your fellow-subjects, and not your masters; yet to your King you have sworn allegiance; his amiable private character entitles him to your highest reverence and esteem; his political character as a Sovereign of the Empire in general, and as supreme head of this Colony in particular, ought to induce you to give him every mark of your warmest loyalty, and most zealous affection to his person. Wait therefore with patience my fellow-citizens a few weeks longer.

The expiration of the Fee Bill, by the sudden dissolution of the Assembly, must shut up the Courts of Justice. No Sheriff is obliged to serve any process, since under a positive Act of Assembly, he can no longer receive any reward; and neglect of duty can no longer be punished, when the equivalent for that duty is taken away; the invasion of the Indian enemy; the immense debt due from the public; and the scarcity of a circulating currency amongst you, are circumstances which will probably induce the Governour to call an Assembly immediately. If he should be careful in the choice of your Representatives, instruct them fully how they are to conduct themselves; rely seriously on their virtue, and expect a constitutional redress of your grievances; nothing but necessity can justify any other. But if the Governour should be restrained by the instructions of a wicked Minister from relieving the distresses of the Colony by calling an Assembly immediately, and writs should not be issued for that purpose before the first day of July, I would then advise the freeholders of each county in the Colony to convene themselves, and choose two of the most able and discreet of their inhabitants to accompany and assist their late Representatives at the meeting in Williamsburg, on the first day of August; and let the whole Colony unanimously support whatever may be then resolved upon.

I do not advise this election of two additional Representatives of each county, because I entertain the smallest doubt of the integrity, zeal, or abilities of the late Representatives to serve their country; on the other hand, I am certain, that a very great majority of the late Assembly may be firmly relied on; but the increase of their numbers will add weight to their counsels, and convince both our friends and enemies that the Colony of Virginia is so unanimously firm in the common cause of America, that no dissolution of your Assembly or change of Representatives, can furnish in future, the smallest hopes of your giving up your liberty, or of your submitting to the arbitrary mandates of a British Parliament.

Williamsburg, Virginia, June 17, 1774.

His Excellency the Governour, with the advice of his Majesty's Council, was this day pleased to order writs to issue for the election of a new Assembly, which is to meet on the 11th of August.

To the Gentlemen, Freeholders, and others, in the County of NEW-CASTLE, upon DELAWARE, who have a vote in the election of Representatives in General Assembly.

The several Acts of Parliament made for these ten years last past, relating to the British Colonies in North America, and their operations upon the property, liberty and lives of the good people of this country, are two well known, and too severely felt, to require any enumeration or explanation - suffice it to mention, that they have taken away the property of the Colonists without their participation or consent; that they have introduced the odious and arbitrary power of excise into the customs; that they have made all revenue causes triable without jury, and under the decision of a dependent party Judge; that they have taken from the Assemblies all freedom of debate and determination, in the instance of suspending the Legislative power of New-York; that they have extended the obsolete and arbitrary Act of thirty-five Henry the Eighth, for trial of treason and misprison of treason, to the depriving the subjects of a fair trial in the proper country, and exposing him to the most grievous exertions of tyranny and injustice; that they have maintained a standing army in time of peace, above the controul of civil authority; and that they have not only declared that they can make laws to bind us in all cases whatsoever, but, to Crown all, have actually deprived the great and lately flourishing town of Boston, of all trade whatsoever, by shutting up their port and harbour with a formidable fleet and army; and, it is not doubted, have new-moulded the Charter of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay; and virtually indemnified all officers of the customs, the navy and army, and others acting by their command, from all murders and other crimes which they may commit upon the loyal, brave and free people of that Province. These are no phantoms arising from a heated brain, but real facts, not exaggerated.

It is impossible that any people, impressed with the least sense of constitutional liberty, should ever patiently submit to these enormous grievances, and accordingly we find our brethren and fellow-subjects in most of the Colonies are deliberating and resolving upon such measures as are thought to be most likely to recover our lost rights and privileges.

Shall the people of this large and wealthy county, heretofore the foremost on many occasions, particularly in the time of the detestable Stamp Act, to oppose all attempts to deprive them of their personal security and private property, be now inactive and silent? Forbid it liberty, let humanity forbid it.

You are therefore most earnestly requested to meet together at the Court House, in the town of New-Castle, on Wednesday, the 29th inst., at two o'clock in the afternoon, to consider of the most proper mode of procuring relief for our dear countrymen, and brethren of Boston, the redressing the beforementioned grievance, the restoring and securing our invaded property and expiring liberties - and establishing, on a constitutional bottom, the wonted, and by us so much desired, peace, friendship, and love between Great Britain and these Colonies. It is expected that none who have a due regard to their country, posterity, or themselves, will be absent.

A FREEMAN.

June 17, 1774.

EASTHAMPTON (SUFFOLK CO. NEW-YORK) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Inhabitants of the town of East-hampton, in the County of Suffolk, legally warned by the Trustees of said town, the 17th of June, 1774.

ELEAZER MILLER, Esq., Moderator.

1st. Voted, That we will, to the utmost of our abilities, assert, and in a lawful manner defend, the liberties and immunities of British America; that we will co-operate with our brethren in this Colony in such measures as shall, from time to time, appear to us the most proper, and the best adapted to save us from the burthens we fear, and in a measure already feel, from the principles adopted by the British Parliament respecting the town of Boston in particular, and the British Colonies in North America in general.

2d. Voted, That a non-importation agreement through the Colonies is the most likely means to save us from the present and further troubles.

3d. Voted, That John Chatfield, Esq., Colonel Abraham Gardiner, Burnet Miller, Stephen Hedges, Thomas Wickham, Esq., John Gardiner, Esq., and Captain David Mulford, be a Standing Committee for keeping up a Correspondence with the City of New-York, and the towns of this Colony; and, if there is occasion, with other Colonies; and that they transmit a copy of these votes to the Committee of Correspondence for the City of New-York.

Voted unanimously, not one contrary vote.

BURNET MILLER, Town Clerk.

MASSACHUSETTS HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The late Honourable House of Representatives of this Province, having finished all the ordinary public business of importance that had been before them, on Friday, June 17, 1774, came into the following Resolutions; present, one hundred and twenty-nine members, and only twelve dissentients, * viz:

In the House of Representatives, June 17, 1774.

This House having duly considered, and being deeply affected with the unhappy differences which have long subsisted, and are increasing, between Great Britain and the American Colonies, do resolve, that a meeting of Committees, from the several Colonies on this Continent is highly expedient and necessary, to consult upon the present state of the Colonies, and the miseries, to which they are, and must be reduced, by the operation of certain Acts of Parliament respecting America; and to deliberate and determine upon wise and proper measures to be by them recommended to all the Colonies, for the recovery and establishment of their just rights and liberties, civil and religious, and the restoration of union and harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies, most ardently desired by all good men.

Therefore, resolved, That the Honourable James Bowdoin, Esq., the Honourable Thomas Cushing, Esq., Mr. Samuel Adams, John Adams, and Robert Treat Paine, Esquires, be and they are hereby appointed a Committee on the part of this Province, for the purposes aforesaid, any three of whom to be a quorum, to meet such Committees or Delegates from the other Colonies, as have been or may be appointed, either by their respective Houses of Burgesses or Representatives, or by Convention, or by the Committees of Correspondence appointed by the respective Houses of Assembly, to meet in the City of Philadelphia, or any other place that shall be judged most suitable by the Committee on the first day of September next and that the Speaker of the House be directed, in a letter to the Speakers of the Houses of Burgesses or Representatives in the several Colonies, to inform them of the substance of these resolves.

Whereas, this House, taking into consideration the many distresses and difficulties to which the American Colonies, and this Province in particular, are and must be reduced by the operation of certain late Acts of Parliament, have determined that it is highly expedient that a Committee should be appointed to meet, as soon as may be, the Committees that are or shall be appointed by the several Colonies on this Continent, to consult together upon the present state of the Colonies, and to deliberate and determine upon wise and proper measures to be by them recommended to all the Colonies for the recovery and establishment of their just rights and liberties, civil and religious, and the restoration of that union and harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies, most ardently desired by all good men. And the Honourable James Bowdoin, Esquire, the Honourable Thomas Cushing, Esquire, Mr. Samuel Adams, John Adams, and Robert Treat Paine, Esquires, are appointed a Committee on the part of this Province, for the purposes aforesaid; any three of whom to be a quorum, to meet such Committees or Delegates from the other Colonies as have been or may be appointed, either by their respective Houses of Burgesses or Representatives, or by Convention, or by Committees of Correspondence appointed by the respective Houses of Assembly, to meet in the City of Philadelphia, or any other place that shall be judged most suitable by the joint Committees, on the first day of September next. And whereas this House did resolve, that there be paid to said Committee, out of the public Treasury, the sum of five hundred pounds, to enable them to discharge the important trust to which they are appointed; they, upon their return, to be accountable for the same. And said Resolve was sent up to the Honourable Board for their concurrence, who accordingly concurred in the Resolve of the House;

* The following is said to be a true list of the names of eleven of the gentlemen who voted AGAINST a Congress; the remaining one is at present uncertain - Colonel Worthington, Colonel Murray, Colonel Jones, Major Ingersol, David Thatcher, Esq., Abijah White, Esq., Colonel Bacon, Colonel Day, Captain Hayward, of Easton, Mr. Samuel Field, and Barnabas Freeman.

but his Excellency the Governour declined his consent to the same. Wherefore this House would recommend, and they do accordingly hereby recommend to the several towns and districts within this Province, that each town and district raise, collect and pay, to the Honourable Thomas Cushing, Esquire, of Boston, the sum of five hundred pounds, by the fifteenth day of August next, agreeable to a list herewith exhibited, being each town and district's proportion of said sum, according to the last Province tax, to enable them to discharge the important trust to which they are appointed; they, upon their return, to be accountable for the same.

Whereas the towns of Boston and Charlestown are at this time suffering under the hand of power, by the shutting the harbour by an armed force, which, in the opinion of this House, is an invasion of the said towns, evidently designed to compel the inhabitants thereof to a submission to taxes imposed upon them without their consent. And whereas it appears to this House, that this attack upon the said towns, for the purpose aforesaid, is an attack made upon this whole Province and Continent, which threatens the total destruction of the liberties of British America.

It is, therefore, Resolved, As the clear Opinion of this House, that the inhabitants of the said towns ought to be relieved; and this House do recommend to all, and more especially to the inhabitants of this Province, to afford them speedy and constant relief, in such way and manner as shall be most suitable to their circumstances, till the sense and advice of our sister Colonies shall be known. In full confidence that they will exhibit examples of patience, fortitude and perseverance, while they are thus called to endure this oppression for the preservation of the liberties of their country.

Whereas this, and his Majesty's other Colonies in North America, have long been struggling under the heavy hand of power, and our dutiful petitions for the redress of our intolerable grievances, have not only been disregarded and frowned upon, but the design totally to alter the free Constitution of civil Government in British America, and establish arbitrary Governments, and reduce the inhabitants to slavery, appears more and more to be fixed and determined. It is, therefore, strongly recommended by this House, to the inhabitants of the Province, that they renounce altogether the consumption of India teas, and, as far as in them lies, discontinue the use of all goods and manufactures whatever, that shall be imported from the East Indies and Great Britain, until the public grievances of America shall be radically and totally redressed. And it is also further recommended to all, that they give all possible encouragement to the manufacturers of America. And it is moreover strongly recommended to the inhabitants aforesaid, that they use their utmost endeavours to suppress pedlars and petty chapmen, (who are of late become a very great nuisance,) by putting in execution the good and wholesome laws of this Province for that purpose.

June 17, 1774. His Excellency the Governour, having directed the Secretary to acquaint the two Houses that it was his pleasure the General Assembly should be dissolved, and to declare the same dissolved accordingly, the Secretary went to the Court House, and finding the door of the Representatives Chamber locked, directed the Messenger to go in and acquaint the Speaker that the Secretary had a Message from his Excellency to the Honourable House, and desire he might be admitted to deliver it. The Messenger returned, and said he had acquainted the Speaker therewith, who mentioned it to the House, and their orders were to keep the door fast.

Whereupon the following Proclamation was published on the stairs leading to the Representatives Chamber, in presence of several members of the House, and a great number of other persons, and immediately after in Council:

PROVINCE OF MASSACHUSETTS BAY,

By the GOVERNOUR.--A Proclamation: for Dissolving the General Court.

Whereas the proceedings of the House of Representatives, in the present session of the General Court, make it necessary for his Majesty's service that the said General Court should be dissolved:

I have, therefore, thought fit to dissolve the said General Court, and the same is hereby dissolved accordingly, and the members thereof are discharged from any further attendance.

Given under my hand, at Salem, the 11th day of June, 1774, in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign.

T. GAGE.

By his Majesty's command, T. FLUCKER, Secretary.
GOD save the King.

BOSTON (MASSACHUSETTS) RESOLUTIONS.

At a legal and very full Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the town of Boston, by adjournment, at Faneuil Hall, June 17, 1774.

The Honourable JOHN ADAMS, Esquire, Moderator.

Upon a motion made, the town again entered into the consideration of that article in the warrant, viz: "To consider and determine what measures are to be taken on the present exigency of our public affairs, more especially relative to the late edict of a British Parliament for blocking up the harbour of Boston, and annihilating the trade of this town;" and after very serious debates thereon,

Voted, (with only one dissentient,*) That the Committee of Correspondence be enjoined forthwith to write to all the other Colonies, acquainting them that we are not idle; that we are deliberating upon the steps to be taken on the present exigencies of our public affairs; that our brethren, the landed interest of this Province, with an unexampled spirit and unanimity, are entering into a non-consumption agreement, and that we are waiting with anxious expectation for the result of a Continental Congress, whose meeting we impatiently desire, in whose wisdom and firmness we can confide, and in whose determination we shall cheerfully acquiesce.

Agreeably to order, the Committee of Correspondence laid before the town such letters as they had received in answer to the circular letters wrote by them to the several Colonies, and also the seaport towns in this Province, since the reception of the Boston Port Bill; and the same being publicly read, †

* The town meeting was as full and respectable as ever was known; their unanimity and firmness was never exceeded; not one, though often called upon, had any thing to offer in favour of paying for the tea, in compliance with the Boston Port Bill; all appeared disposed to stand the utmost efforts of tyranny, rather than make a free surrender of the rights of America. The speeches made on the state of American affairs would do honour to any assembly.

The Solemn League and Covenant for a non-consumption of British merchandise, is an axe at the root of the tree; by coming into it we establish our own manufactures, save our money, and finally our country from the destruction that threatens it.

† BOSTON, June 20, 1774. The present aspect of public affairs is highly favourable to the liberties of America; the whole Continent seems inspired by one soul, and that soul a vigorous and determined one. Virginia is all in motion; and Maryland has made amazing progress for the short space since they have taken this fresh alarm from the Boston Port Bill. Meetings of towns, counties, and by Delegates of the whole Province, either have been held, or are going rapidly on. Besides the doings of Annapolis and Baltimore, those of Chester are deserving of our warmest acknowledgments. Subscription papers have been set on foot in that county, and considerable sums already subscribed for the relief of our poor in this devoted town. Philadelphia is following the generous example, as well as the Jersies, New-York and Connecticut. New-Jersey is very forward, and are on the point of choosing their Deputies for the Congress by a very regular method, viz: Of meeting in towns and neighbourhoods, sending Deputies from those meetings to County meetings, and others from those to Provincial one. Committees of Correspondence are not now confined to the Province of Massachusetts Bay. Lord North's Administration is become so important that nearly every subject of the Empire feels himself deeply interested in it, and insists upon being acquainted with the very minutia of all his plans.

The zeal, firmness and unanimity of our late House of Representatives, and the steady support they received from the Honourable his Majesty's Council, does honour to the good sense and patriotism of the parties, who at this trying season committed the conservation of their inestimable, and now much endangered rights, into such worthy hands. Some exceptions we must allow there have been; but ignorance, ambition for the fancied honours of commissions, civil and military, and rank cowardice respecting the event of contending to blood for our rights, daily giving way to the better information abounding through all ranks of people, afford us the Comfortable hope, that in a little time our House of Representatives shall emulate that of Virginia, in which gentleman lately from thence says, there was not so much as a lukewarm member, much less a dissentient from the cause of his country.

We hear that the patriotic inhabitants of Philadelphia have generously voted to give the poor of this town fifteen hundred barrels of flour, five hundred of which, it is said, may be soon expected.

Voted, unanimously, That our warmest thanks be transmitted to our brethren on the Continent, for that humanity, sympathy and affection with which they have been inspired, and which they have expressed towards this distressed town at this important season.

Voted, unanimously, That the thanks of this town be, and hereby are, given to the Committee of Correspondence, for their faithfulness in the discharge of their trust, and that they be desired to continue their vigilance and activity in that service.

Whereas the Overseers of the Poor in the town of Boston are a body politic, by law constituted for the reception and distribution of charitable donations for the use of the poor of the said town, Voted, That all grants and donations to this town, and the poor thereof, at this distressing season, be paid and delivered into the hands of said Overseers, and by them appropriated and distributed, in concert with the Committee lately appointed by this town for the consideration of ways and means of employing the poor.

Voted, That the Town Clerk be directed to publish the proceedings of this meeting in the several newspapers.

The meeting was then adjourned to Monday, the 27th June, instant.

Attest,

WILLIAM COOPER, Town Clerk.

ADDRESS FROM THE MERCHANTS AND FREEHOLDERS OF THE TOWN OF SALEM, PRESENTED TO HIS EXCELLENCY GOVERNOUR GAGE, ON SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1774.

May it please your Excellency:

We, who are Merchants and Freeholders in the town of Salem, beg leave to present you our dutiful respects on your apPOINTMENT to the Government of this Province. The universal tribute of thanks and applause paid you for the wisdom, mildness, and exact regularity of your conduct in another command, cannot fail to excite the most just expectations that this Province will enjoy the happy fruits of your benignity.

We are deeply affected with a sense of our public calamities; but the miseries that are now rapidly hastening on our brethren in the capital of the Province greatly excite our commiseration; and we hope your Excellency will use your endeavours to prevent a further accumulation of evils on that already sorely distressed people.

By shutting up the port of Boston some imagine that the course of trade might be turned hither, and to our benefit; but nature, in the formation of our harbour, forbids our becoming rivals in commerce to that convenient mart. And were it otherwise, we must be dead to every idea of justice, lost to all the feelings of humanity, could we indulge one thought to seize on wealth and raise our fortunes on the ruin of our suffering neighbours. But so far from receiving a benefit, we are greatly injured by the shutting up the harbour of Boston, as it deprives us of a market for much the largest part of our West India imports; and there is not a town in the Province but will feel the ill effects of it. Permit us then, sir, to apply to your clemency and justice to afford us every alleviation in your power, and to procure for us every possible relief from this extensive mischief.

We account it the greatest unhappiness that this Province, which has ever been foremost in loyalty to the Kings of Britain in its efforts to defend their Territories and enlarge their Dominions - should be the first to feel our Sovereign's severest displeasure. Our fathers fled from oppression, braved every danger, and here began a settlement on bare creation. Almost incredible are the fatigues and difficulties they encountered to subdue a dreary wilderness filled with savage beasts, and yet more savage men; but by their invincible resolution they rose superior to them all; and by their astonishing efforts greatly facilitated the settlement of the other British Colonies in America. Yet, sir, we speak it with grief, the sons are checked and dishonoured for exhibiting proofs of their inheriting some portion of that spirit which, in their fathers, produced such astonishing effects.

A happy union with Great Britain is the wish of all the Colonies. It is their unspeakable grief that it has in any degree been interrupted. We earnestly desire to repair the breach. We ardently pray that harmony may be restored. And for these ends, every measure compatible with the dignity and safety of British subjects we shall gladly adopt.

We assure your Excellency we shall make it our constant endeavour to preserve the peace and promote the welfare of the Province; and hereby we shall best advance the interest of our Sovereign.

In these times the Administration of Government must be peculiarly arduous and difficult; but yours we wish may be as easy as the nature of things will possibly admit, and the event happy; and that your public labours may be crowned with the noblest reward, the voluntary, disinterested applause of a whole free people.

Signed by one hundred and twenty-five persons.

HIS EXCELLENCY'S ANSWER.

GENTLEMEN: I thank you for the obliging expressions towards me, contained in your Address, and be assured it will always afford me sincere pleasure to be of use to the inhabitants of this town, or any individuals in the Province.

I feel, as well as you, the inconveniences that the inhabitants must suffer from shutting up the port of Boston; and should be glad they would co-operate with my endeavours to extricate themselves from them; but, without their assistance, I can take no step towards their relief; I am sorry that the people of that capital should have given such repeated provocations to the King and the British Nation, as to force them to take the present measures in support of their authority. Great Britain is equally desirous as yourselves of a happy union with this, as well as every other Colony, and inheriting the spirit of her ancestors, finds it necessary to support her rights, as the supreme head of her extended Empire. She strives not to check that spirit which you say you inherit from your fathers, but to inculcate that due obedience to the King, in his Parliament, which your fathers acknowledged.

Salem, June 18, 1774.

CAROLINE COUNTY (MARYLAND) RESOLUTIONS.

At a very full Meeting of respectable Inhabitants of Caroline County, at Melvill's Warehouse, on Saturday, the 18th day of June, 1774, by adjournment from Wednesday, the 8th of the same month.

CHARLES DICKINSON, Esq., in the Chair.

1st. Resolved, That the inhabitants of this county are by duty and inclination firmly attached to his most sacred Majesty King George the Third, to whom they owe all due obedience and allegiance.

2d. That it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting, that the Boston Port Act is principally grounded on the opposition made by the inhabitants of that town to the Tea Duty; that the said town of Boston is now suffering in the common cause of British America, and that it is the duty of every Colony thereof, to unite in the most effectual means to obtain a repeal of the late Act of Parliament for shutting up the port of Boston.

3d. That it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting, that if the Colonies come into a joint resolution to forbear all importations whatsoever from Great Britain, (except such articles as are absolutely necessary,) until the Acts of Parliament for shutting up the port of Boston, and for levying a duty on America, for the express purpose of raising a revenue, shall be repealed, it will be the means of preserving the liberties of North America.

Resolved, therefore, That the inhabitants of this county are disposed firmly to unite with the inhabitants of this Province and the other Colonies in North America, in an Association and agreement to forbear the importation of all manner of goods and merchandise from Great Britain, during the continuance of the said Acts of Parliament, (except such as may be judged proper to be excepted by a general Association,) and that all orders for importation (except for articles before excepted) ought to cease.

4th. That it is against the opinion of this meeting that the Colonies go into a general non-importation from, or non-exportation to Great Britain, but should both or either of these measures be adopted, they will acquiesce therein.

5th. That it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting, that the Courts of Justice be kept open; but should a non-exportation agreement be generally come into, in that case it is the opinion of this meeting that the Courts of Justice be shut up.

6th. That it is the opinion of the inhabitants of this county, that this Province ought to break off all trade and dealings with that Colony, Province, or town, which shall refuse or decline to come into similar resolutions with a majority of the Colonies.

7th. That it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting, that delegates be appointed from this Province to attend a General Congress of Delegates from the other Colonies, at such time and place as shall be agreed on, in order to settle and establish a general plan of conduct for the important purpose aforementioned.

8th. That Thomas White, William Richardson, Isaac Bradly, Nathaniel Potter, Benson Stainton, and Thomas Goldsborough, be a Committee to attend a general meeting at Annapolis. And that the same gentlemen, together with Charles Dickinson, Richard Mason, Joshua Clark, Henry Dickinson, Dr. William Molleson, Charles Blair, William Haskins, Philip Fidernan, William Hopper, the Reverend Mr. Samuel Keene, the Reverend Mr. Philip Walker, Henry Casson, and Benedict Brice, be a Committee of Correspondence to receive and answer all letters, and, on any emergency, to call a general meeting, and that any seven of the number have power to act.

9th. That this paper be considered as an instruction to the Deputies nominated for this county to meet at the City of Annapolis for the purpose of forming a general Association, in which they are not to come into any engagement whatever, but upon condition that the Colonies in general shall come into a similar measure.

10th. That a copy of these proceedings be published in the Maryland Gazette, to evince to the world the sense they entertain of the invasion of their constitutional rights and liberties.

Signed per order,

HENRY DOWNS, Jun., Clerk.

CITY AND COUNTY OF PHILADELPHIA (PA.) RESOLUTIONS.

At a very large and respectable Meeting of the Freeholders and Freemen of the City and County of Philadelphia, in the Province of Pennsylvania, held on Saturday, June 18, 1774.

T. WILLING, and JOHN DICKINSON, Esqs., Chairmen.

Resolved, 1st. That the Act of Parliament for shutting up the port of Boston, is unconstitutional, oppressive to the inhabitants of that town, dangerous to the liberties of the British Colonies, and that, therefore, we consider our brethren at Boston as suffering in the common cause of America.

2d. That a Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies in North America, is the most probable and proper mode of procuring relief for our suffering brethren, obtaining redress of American grievances, securing our rights and liberties, and re-establishing peace and harmony between Great Britain and these Colonies, on a constitutional foundation.

3d. That a large and respectable Committee be immediately appointed for the City and County of Philadelphia, to correspond with the sister Colonies, and with the several counties in this Province, in order that all may unite in promoting and endeavouring to attain the great and valuable ends mentioned in the foregoing resolution.

4th. That the Committee nominated by this meeting shall consult together, and, on mature deliberation, determine, what is the most proper mode of collecting the sense of this Province, and appointing Deputies for the same to attend a general Congress; and having determined thereupon, shall take such measures, as by them shall be judged most expedient for procuring this Province to be represented at the said Congress, in the best manner that can be devised for promoting the public welfare.

5th. That the Committee be instructed immediately to set on foot a subscription for the relief of such poor inhabitants of the town of Boston, as may be deprived of the means of subsistence by the operation of the Act of Parliament, commonly styled the Boston Port Bill, the money arising from such subscription to be laid out as the Committee shall think will best answer the ends proposed.

6th. That the Committee consist of forty-four persons, viz: John Dickinson, James Pemberton, Edward Pennington, John Nixon, Thomas Willing, George Clymer, Samuel Howell, Joseph Read, John Roberts, (miller,) Thomas Wharton, Jun., Charles Thomson, Jacob Barge, Thomas Barclay, William Rush, Robert Smith, (carpenter,) Thomas Fitzimons, George Roberts, Samuel Ervin, Thomas Mifflin, John Cox, George Gray, Robert Morris, Samuel Miles, John M. Nesbit, Peter Chevalier, William Moulder, Joseph Moulder, Anthony Morris, Jun., John Allen, Jeremiah Warder, Jun., Reverend Dr. William Smith, Paul Engle, Thomas Penrose, James Mease, Benjamin Marshall, Reuben Haines, John Bayard, Jonathan B. Smith, Thomas Wharton, Isaac Howell, Michael Hillegas, Adam Hubley, George Schloffer, and Christopher Ludwick, to whose approved integrity, abilities, and sincere affection for the interest of this immense Empire, their constituents look up for the most propitious events.

The Speech of the Reverend WILLIAM SMITH, D. D., Provost of the College at PHILADELPHIA, at the very numerous meeting of the Freeholders and Freemen of that City and County, on the 18th of JUNE, previous to the election of the Committee of forty-four very respectable and truly patriotic citizens.

GENTLEMEN: The occasion of this meeting has been fully explained to you, and sundry propositions read, which are now to be offered separately for your approbation or disapprobation. But before you proceed to business, it has been thought proper to submit a few things to your good judgment with respect to the order and decorum necessary to be observed in the discussion of every question.

It need not be repeated to you, that matters of the highest consequence to the happiness of this Province, nay, of all British America, depends upon your deliberations this day - perhaps nothing less than whether the breach with the country from which we descended shall be irreparably widened, or whether ways and means, upon constitutional ground, may not yet be devised, for closing that breach, and restoring that harmony from which, in our better days, Great Britain and her Colonies derived mutual strength and glory, and were exalted into an importance that, both in peace and war, made them the envy and terror of the neighbouring nations.

While subjects such as these are agitated before us, every thing that may inflame and mislead the passions should be cast far behind us.

A cause of such importance and magnitude, as that now under our deliberation, is not to be conducted to its true issue by any heated or hasty resolves, nor by any bitterness nor animosities among ourselves, nor even perhaps by too severe a recapitulation of past grievances; but requires the temperate and enlightened zeal of the patriot, the prudence and experience of the aged; the strength of mind and vigour of those who are in their prime of life; and, in short, the united wisdom and efforts of all, both high and low, joining hand in hand, and setting foot to foot upon the firm ground of reason and the Constitution.

Whenever party distinctions begin to operate we shall give cause of triumph to those who may be watchful as well as powerful to abridge us of our native rights. There ought to be no party, no contention here, but who shall be firmest and foremost in the common cause of America. Every man's sentiments should be freely heard and without prejudice. While we contend for liberty with others, let us not refuse liberty to each other.

Whatever vote is known to be now passed upon full deliberation, and by the unanimous voice of this great city and county, will not only be respected through all America, but will have such a weight as the proudest Minister in England may have reason to respect; but if it is known to be a divided vote, or adopted hastily on some angry day, it will only be injurious to our own cause.

What I have in charge to request of you is this - that if, on any point, we should have a difference of sentiments, every person may be allowed to speak his mind freely, and to conclude what he has to offer, without any such outward marks of approbation or disapprobation, as clapping or hissing; and that if any division should be necessary, (which it is hoped may not be the case this day,) such division may be made in a manner desired by the Chairmen, and with all possible order and decorum.

CHESTER COUNTY (PENNSYLVANIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of a respectable body of the Freeholders, inhabitants of the County of Chester, on Saturday, the 15th of June, 1774, the following Resolutions were deliberately and unanimously agreed on, viz:

1. That it is an absolute right, inherent in every English subject, to have the free use, enjoyment and disposal of all his property either by himself or Representatives; and that no other power on earth can legally divest him of it.

2. That we apprehend the Act of Parliament for shutting up the port of Boston, (until his Majesty's duties be duly collected, &c.) is highly arbitrary and oppressive to the inhabitants of that town, and in its consequences may endanger the liberties of all the British Colonies in America.

3. That the two Bills mentioned in the last advices from London to be passing in Parliament, one changing the chartered Constitution of the Province of Massachusetts Bay into a military Government, and the other empowering the Governour, or Lieutenant Governour to send any person or persons to England to be tried for actions committed in that Colony, are subversive of every idea of liberty, and serve as a prelude to the fate of each chartered British Colony on this Continent.

4. That a Congress of Deputies from the said Colonies is the most probable and proper mode of procuring relief for our suffering brethren; obtaining redress, and preserving our natural rights and liberties, and the establishing peace and mutual confidence between the mother country and her Colonies on a constitutional foundation.

5. That we will concur and join with our brethren of the City and County of Philadelphia in desiring the Speaker of the honourable House of Representatives of this Province, to write to the several members of Assembly, requesting them to meet in the City of Philadelphia on any day not later than the first of August next, to take into their serious consideration our very alarming situation; to appoint Deputies to attend at a general Congress for the Colonies, at such time and place as shall be agreed on.

As the notice of this meeting was but short, it is agreed that a general meeting be fixed on Saturday, the 525th instant, at the dwelling house of Jacob James, at the sign of the Turk's Head, in Goshen, at one o'clock, P. M., in order to choose a Committee of Correspondence, and to resolve on such other modes or propositions as may be most likely to attain redress of those grievances that the Colonies now groan under; at which time and place all those who are entitled to vote for members of Assembly, and wish well to their posterity and American liberty, are requested to attend, and give their advice on this alarming crisis.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM GOVERNOUR FRANKLIN TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Burlington, June 18, 1774.

MY LORD: I have just received a copy of some resolves entered into at a meeting of a number of freeholders and inhabitants of the county of Essex, in this Province, on Saturday last, which I think it my duty to transmit to your Lordship. The meeting was occasioned it seems by an advertisement, requesting the attendance of the inhabitants on that day, and published in one of the New-York papers, and signed by two gentlemen of the law; who reside in that county. I have likewise had an application made to me by some of the members of the House of Representatives, to call a meeting of the General Assembly in August next, with which I have not, nor shall not comply, as there is no public business of the Province which can make such a meeting necessary. It seems now determined by several of the leading men, in most, if not all the counties in this Province, to endeavour to follow the example of the freeholders in Essex. Meetings of this nature, there are no means of preventing, where the chief part of the inhabitants incline to attend them. I as yet doubt, however, whether they will agree to the general non-importation from Great Britain, which has been recommended. - Their principal aim seems to be to bring about a Congress of Deputies from all the Colonies, as proposed by Virginia; and that that Congress should not only apply to his Majesty for the repeal of the Boston Port Act, but endeavour to fall upon measures for accommodating the present differences between the two countries, and preventing the like in future.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED AT PHILADELPHIA.
Fort Pitt, June 19, 1774.

The 16th instant, a friendly Indian, who had been reconnoitering the woods with Captain M'Kee, was fired upon by one of Conolly's militia, but luckily made his escape. The same day, Mr. Richard Butler, and Mr. Alexander Blain, two of the principal traders, arrived here from the Shawanese towns, with ten canoes loaded with peltry. They were escorted to this place by three of the Shawanese. All the rest of the traders are coming by land with near two hundred horses loaded with peltry, and are expected here in a few days.

Mr. Butler brought a speech from the Shawanese, of which Captain M'Kee desired him to acquaint Conolly, and likewise to apply to him for a protection for the Shawanese, who escorted our traders, which Conolly absolutely refused, saying, he could not speak to them, as he looked upon them as enemies.

Yesterday two Delaware Indians arrived at Colonel Croghan's, from Newcomers town, with an account that the traders had got as far as that town four days ago, with their horses and peltry on their way home. This morning Conolly sent out a party of forty armed men to Colonel Croghan's to cut off the three Shawanese who had so faithfully escorted our traders and their property to this place. The traders, with the assistance of Colonel Croghan, got the Indians put over Alleghany river; paid them a quantity of goods; delivered to them a speech, and parted in the greatest friendship. Conolly's party returned this evening, and both he and they are much enraged at being disappointed in the execution of their murderous purpose. He immediately put up advertisements threatening every person who shall either harbour, trade, or correspond with any of the Shawanese or Mingoes at this place, with the severest punishment.

I forgot to mention that Colonel Croghan, after being two days on his journey to Virginia, was turned back by the country people, who gathered about him, expressing their dissatisfaction at his leaving this place, and alleging that he was flying for fear of a war.

We have an account of Logan's being returned to the Shawanese towns; and that he took with him thirteen scalps. There has been no mischief done by the Indians in this fork of the river yet, which gives us the greatest reason to believe that the Stroke is aimed at the Virginians only.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED AT NEW-YORK.

Boston, June 19, 1774.

On our return from Salem, our rejoicing was full on the interesting advices we received from all quarters. Those worthy members of society, the Tradesmen, we depend on under God, to form the resolutions of the other ranks of citizens in Philadelphia and New-York. They certainly carry all before them here. The yeomanry in our country towns are another effectual support.

A covenant is handing about among them, and signed by thousands, not to purchase any British manufactures imported after the 31st of August next. This will insure a non-importation in this Province, whether the merchants are pleased to come into it or not. However, there seems to be no disposition at all in the body of the trade here to counteract the minds of their countrymen.

The last has been an important week with us. The tools of power suspecting things were not going to their minds in the General Court, endeavoured to influence the city to come into some measures for the payment of the tea. They had cabal after cabal, and conceited they had extended their influence so far, that one of the most plausible of them in a meeting of the Tradesmen, held last Wednesday, ventured to recommend the measure to their consideration. Some smart altercations ensued, and it clearly appeared, that it was almost an unanimous sentiment to suffer the last extremities of oppression, rather than the least shadow of concession should be extorted from them. Still more averse were they to making any proposals to their oppressors.

On Friday came on the adjourned town meeting, which was attended by such numbers, that the Hall could not hold them, when to anticipate every pretence of a willingness in the people to pay for the tea, it was observed, that as that scheme had been much recommended both by speaking and writing, it was therefore requested, that if any gentleman had any thing to offer on the subject, he would speak freely, that a matter of such importance might be fairly discussed in the presence of the general body of the people. But not a man ventured to appear in defence of propositions fit only to be whispered in a conclave of addressers, composed of despicable or interested persons - though there were among them, a few persons deserving of better company, who had been unhappily drawn in to side with them.

Thus Administration, notwithstanding the terror of their fleets and armies already investing us, and hourly expected, have the mortification to find, that in neither the General Assembly of the Province, nor this general meeting of the capital, not so much as a single symptom of inclination appeared of complying with their demand, though enforced with a distressing blockade.

I was yesterday informed that our Attorney General, who is also Judge of the Admiralty for Nova Scotia, and a notable instrument of the British Administration, was a few days past at Salem, flattering the members on whom he could hope to make any impression with the advantages of making a concession, even the least, respecting the payment for the tea; and, it is said, that the Ministerial party are now talking of a private subscription for that purpose. If they choose to do so silly a thing, we cannot help it; but it certainly will be but a poor triumph to the Minister, if he may even be enabled to pretend that a few of his own tools have lent their names to cover his defeat.

I am credibly informed the soldiers desert in considerable numbers. Eighty have left the regiment at the Castle; and a schooner sent up into one of our rivers, has lost all her hands. Two soldiers of the new-comers, having gone off, the officers are in great perplexity how to proceed with them. They say, should they send privates after them, it would be sending the hatchet after the helve; and should they go themselves, and even come up with them, they might certainly expect a rescue.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE PROVINCE OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

Charlestown, June 20, 1774.

MY DEAR COUNTRYMEN: I cannot but hope that the late Act for intimidating America, by the punishment of Boston, will open your eyes, and arouse you from your lethargy. It seems then that we are now to submit to every imposition of our fellow-subjects, however arbitrary and cruel, or we are to be dragooned into it. You find the Parliament, not contented with a claim to the right of taxing us without our consent, now rise higher in their demands, and assume the power of breaking all our Charters, giving and granting our wharfs and shore-lands, and, in short, they plainly claim the power of making the King absolute in America. I shall make a few strictures on the Act of Parliament, and leave you to judge whether there ever was an Act of so base and poisonous a nature, stolen by the vilest Ministry from the most abject Senate.

It begins by setting forth the cause of this strange and arbitrary measure, and what is it? Why, forsooth, because divers ill-affected persons had fomented and raised dangerous commotions and insurrections in the town of Boston, in which commotions and insurrections certain valuable cargoes of tea had been destroyed, &c., &c. It is not pretended - it could not be pretended, that the town of Boston, as such, was concerned in these riots - but some ill-minded persons; and what is the consequence? That grave and omnipotent body, instead of enabling his Majesty to prosecute and bring to justice those ill-minded persons, proceed to pass an Act to ruin, if possible, a whole town, and with them, a whole Province; in the most cruel and unjust manner to distress and destroy not less than forty thousand people more than can be supposed to have had a hand in the riot. And not only them, but virtually to confiscate, not merely the wharfs and quays of Boston, but all the shore-lands round that great bay comprehended between Nahant and Alderton Points, so that the navigation, upon which multitudes (out of the town of Boston, as well as in it, must subsist, is violently taken from them. It is the happiness of all God's creatures, that in him omnipotence and justice are joined; it is like to be the curse of America if the Parliament is allowed to be almighty; that it has neither justice nor mercy. If the Parliament is to have the absolute government of us, we have here a specimen of what we are to expect. If a few ill-minded persons were to take upon them to make water against the door of a custom house officer, or of a cellar where the tea is lodged, Upon the same principle all in Charlestown might be laid in ashes.

But let us advert to the principle of the Act. By the first and second clauses of it, all the wharfs, quays, landings, and water lots of that great bay between Nahant and Alderton Points, which are the subsistence of many thousand people, are condemned, and little better than confiscated, as no goods are either to be landed upon them or shipped from them by any vessel down to the size of a common wherry; and thus under the penalty not merely of the forfeiture of the vessels and cargoes, with the horses, carriages, cattle, and every utensil concerned in carrying goods so landed, but of a fine, three times the value of such goods at the highest price of them, upon any person that shall so much as aid or abet; these fines not to be recovered in a common court of law, where you might have a chance for justice upon a trial by jury, but in a Court of Admiralty, that monster of oppression! where the King; who is to receive the fine, is both judge and jury. Upon which clauses I would only ask, when was the Parliament of Great Britain vested by the Americans with a right to their wharfs and landings? If the money in our pockets is really represented in Parliament, as the framers of the Stamp Act seemed to imagine, when did ever the Americans give one inch of their lands into the power of their fellow-subjects in England? Are our lands then - all our estates, nay, our peace, and life itself, to lie at the pleasure of any Minister who is knave enough to bribe an English Parliament.

As though this was not enough, and our Ocean itself must not be free to our ships, by the next clauses no ship or vessel of any size is to be permitted, upon any pretence, or any exigency, to come into the bay; no, not so much as to hover off and lie in the Ocean. A league of the sea is abridged, not suffered to be sailed upon by mariners; nay, vessels of any Nation coming there, though by accident or ignorance, (as no sufficient time is given to spread the intelligence,) are subjected to the caprice of any wretch who commands those worse than Spanish guarda costas, to be assigned to whatever port he thinks fit, and if not obeyed in six hours, to be forfeited, cargo and all.

Dip farther into this production of Hell and you find that not so much as a wood-boat can enter - not a market-boat can enter - not a market boat bring a few cabbages or bushels of corn to support sixty thousand people, but it must first enter at Salem (twenty miles the straightest way by land, but by sea a much greater distance) to obtain a permit, and even not then without an insolent officer and armed men on board. This seems designed to starve the town, or at least to raise the price of provisions, so as to force that capital of America to yield, and by that means to discourage all future struggles for liberty.

To force the officers on the station to be faithful and to deter any one of them who might otherwise listen to the native suggestions of an English heart, five hundred pounds sterling fine is imposed upon the one who shall so much as connive at the smallest breach of the Act.

It is impossible that by the first of June intelligence of this measure should have spread even through America, and yet, on that day, all charter parties are rendered void that have been made for that port, by which the freighters on many vessels must be ruined.

But to crown the whole, my countrymen, and to show you what treatment you are to expect by tame submission to that many-headed tyrant, this oppression is to be continued until all the demands of the East India Company are satisfied, and all the imaginary injuries received by the Commissioners in certain times past from the mob, are redressed. By whom? by the town of Boston; by the innocent as well as the riotous, and how? As a town they can do nothing, unless they tax every individual inhabitant. But when is it to be supposed that satisfaction is made? Why, when the Governour, who, by office, if not by inclination, is supposed to be a mere tool of arbitrary power, shall be brought to certify that it is done. But suppose this satisfaction is made, is all then over? No. They have been so kind, after this, as to subject the immense property of so many thousand people, not to the future adjudications of another Parliament: they supposed it possible that another Parliament might be shocked with horror with the crime; they supposed that the ancient English soul, but now fled to America, might have fortitude to stand it out for a time; they, therefore, put it out of the power of a future Parliament, by leaving it to the King. The Minister did not choose to put the delightful carnage out of his own hands; that Minister, who contemptuously refused satisfaction from the merchants at home, determined to keep the matter in his own power, thereby violating the first rights of Englishmen, by which our property should be sacred as well as our lives.

But have the Parliament been content, then, to throw the town of Boston wholly into the King's hands until satisfaction is made? No. To complete the massacre of American liberty, they have, in defiance of all law and justice, put it into the King's power to judge and determine, for ever hereafter, what use shall be made, or not be made, of those immense estates in water lots, which surround one of the most extensive bays in America. They have, in effect, given and granted to his Majesty all the wharfs and landings in Boston, and around the harbour, through all generations; for, if it must be wholly at the King's pleasure whether I shall make a wharf or landing on my land or not; or, if I do, whether I shall make any use of it, the nature of the property is wholly altered. that my land which I cannot improve as I please, or on which I am not allowed to land goods even that have paid the duty? Shall we be thus given, by our brethren, into the hands of the King, to do with our estates as he sees proper?

Compared to this Act, what are all the clauses of Parliamentary power heretofore made? The design of this is threefold. First, to establish a precedent of Parliamentary right even to dispose of our lands. Secondly, to promote a new wharf office for the support of a thousand more bloodsuckers in America; and, thirdly, to give the King power to punish, by these wretches, any wharf holder who shall hereafter prove patriotic, or have the honesty to espouse the cause of his oppressed country. Thus you find the property of thousands of Americans, not merely taxed by aliens, but effectually taken out of their hands, and every one of their grants by which the possessors now hold them, the waters, water courses, landings, and every other appurtenance, rendered null and void. No right is too sacred to be violated by a Minister who has a Parliament at his nod. What an aspect has this upon the landholders in America? What are you to expect from such a precedent as this? Have not the Parliament as good a right to pass an Act that rice and indigo shall be made only in such parts of this country as the King shall direct? For my part, I should not be surprised even to see an edict restricting the malting of these articles to the Colony of Georgia, and imposing heavy fines upon those who should presume to make them here. And all this is done against the sanctity of a most solemn Charter, granted expressly to secure certain rights and privileges to a people not only beyond the power of Parliament, but beyond the power of the King himself, the Crown having pledged its faith, not to be recalled, never to violate those privileges. And now, when, upon the faith of such solemn agreement, a country is subdued, and cities built, an insolent Minister, taking affront at the opposition of a favourite scheme of oppression, shall, by a word, overset the whole, we are now threatened with the loss of all the Charters in Ame- rico, if we do not submit. At this rate, what security have we of our lives, liberties, and all we hold dear? Was it ever known that the Parliament did give and grant the landed property of any country or town in England into the King's power for ever? No, this is what no Parliament ever thought it had a right to do, even in the country which it represents. But what they cannot do in England, they undertake to do here. Indeed, if we are to be governed by English Parliaments, we must expect that they will lay upon us what they would not venture to lay upon their own constituents. They have actually now voted away certain property of Americans, which they dare not do of the English themselves. No Minister could have the boldness to propose such a thing with the City of London.

This, ye base advocates for Parliamentary power in America, this is the blessed fruit of your doctrines, The matter now speaks for itself, and it is out of your power to disguise it. And now, whether supported by place or pension, or only formed to slavish principles by connection and interest, I call upon you to vindicate these proceedings. It has often been to me a wonder, that any set of men who breathe American air can find it in their hearts to wish America enslaved, and their children to grow up under chains; that any set of men, nourished by its bread, and drawn from the kennel of obscurity by American bounty, should advocate the cause of American thralldom. I have often been astonished that, in the midst of a free and spirited people, there should be found a wretch so insolent as to hold up his head in company and sneak act against the rights of an injured and oppressed country. These intestine enemies are more to be feared than the arms of Britain herself. Mark every man, my dear countrymen, who on this occasion slyly attempts to divide you, or weaken your zeal; withdraw your countenance and support from him; give it to those who merit it, and set him down as a traitor.

A CAROLINIAN.

Charlestown, S. C., June 20, 1774.

Letters from the Southern parts of North Carolina assure us, that the inhabitants there will go as far in defence of American liberty as can be expected; and recommend, if a Congress should be deemed the first step necessary to be taken, that subscriptions, or rather collections, be set on foot throughout the Continent, to raise and remit a sum of money to the community in Boston, for the relief of the most distressed of our suffering brethren there, who must stand in equal need of such assistance as if their town had been destroyed by fire. And we have the pleasure to learn, that the inhabitants of this Province generally, seem ready to contribute their mite as soon as proper persons are named to receive what their benevolent hearts shall induce them to offer.

FREDERICK COUNTY (MARYLAND) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Inhabitants of Frederick County, Maryland, held at the Court House in said County, on Monday, the 20th of June, 1774.

Mr. JOHN HANSON, Chairman.

1st. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting that the town of Boston is now suffering in the common cause of America, and that it is the duty of every Colony in America to unite in the most effectual means to obtain a repeal of the late Act of Parliament for blocking up the harbour of Boston.

2d. That it is the opinion of a great majority of this meeting, that if the Colonies come into a joint resolution to stop all imports from, and exports to, Great Britain and the West Indies; till the Act of Parliament for blocking up the harbour of Boston, as well as every other Act oppressive to American liberty, be repealed, the same may be the means of preserving to America her rights, liberties, and privileges.

3d. That therefore this meeting will join in an Association with the several counties in this Province, and the principal Colonies in America, to put a stop to all exports to, and imports from, Great Britain and the West Indies, shipped after the 25th day of July next, or such other day as may be agreed on, until the said Act shall be repealed; and that such Association shall be upon oath.

FOURTH SERIES.

4th. That we, the inhabitants of Frederick County, will not deal, or have any connections with that Colony, Province or town, which shall decline or refuse to come into similar resolutions with a majority of the Colonies.

5th. That no suit shall be commenced, after the stop shall be put to imports and exports, for the recovery of any debt due to any person whatsoever, unless the debtor be about to abscond, or, being applied to, shall refuse to give bond and security.

6th. That Messrs. John Hanson, Thomas Price, George Scott, Benjamin Dulany, George Murdock, Philip Thomas, Alexander C. Hanson, Baker Johnson, and Andrew Scott, be a Committee to attend the general Congress at Annapolis, and that those gentlemen, together with Messrs. John Cary, Christopher Edelen, Conrad Grosh, Thomas Schley, Peter Hoffman, and Archibald Boyd, be a Committee of Correspondence to receive and answer letters, and on any emergency to call a general meeting, and that any six shall have power to act.

Ordered, That these Resolves be immediately sent to Annapolis, that they may be printed in the Maryland Gazette. Signed by order, ARCHIBALD BOYD, Clerk of the Committee.

JOHN DICKINSON TO JOSIAH QUINCY, JUN.

Fairhill, June 20, 1771.

DEAR SIR: I sincerely thank you for your kind letter, and the present attending it. This, without flattery, I think highly valuable, and it gives me inexpressible pleasure to find myself addressed in so friendly a manner by a gentleman I so heartily wish to call a friend.

As far as I have been able to collect the sense of the Colonies, they are very unanimous in the measure you mention of a Congress. You, and your worthy fellow-sufferers, would receive a glimpse of joy, amidst your distresses, to know with what sympathy the inhabitants of this Province consider your case. What never happened before, has happened now. The country people have so exact a knowledge of facts, and of the consequences attending the surrender of the points in question, that they are, if possible, more zealous than the citizens who lie in a direct line of information. Doubt not that every thing bears a most favourable aspect. Nothing can throw us into a pernicious confusion, but one Colony's breaking the line of opposition, by advancing too hastily before the rest. The one which dares to betray the common cause, by rushing forward, contrary to the maxims of discipline established by common sense, and the experience of ages, will inevitably and utterly perish.

May God Almighty bless you, and my beloved brethren of Boston and Massachusetts Bay. My heart is full. The time will come, I trope, when I may congratulate them on a more stable security of their liberty than they ever yet have enjoyed. I am, sit, with truth, your very affectionate and very humble servant,

JOHN DICKINSON.

J. Quincy, Jun.

P.S. Our country people appear to me to be very firm. They look to the last extremity with spirit. It is right they should, if they will submit their resentment to the guidance of reason.

Boston, June 20, 1774.

I have read with attention several pieces in the public papers, the authors of which seem to acknowledge the injustice and cruelty of the Act of Parliament, which immediately distresses Boston, and is evidently intended to enslave America; and they propose a submission to tyranny in order to be relieved from it, since, "On the side of the oppressor is power." This is certainly an important question, and deserves our most serious attention; and, after mature deliberation, many important reasons appear against paying for the tea, or any submission to the present tyranny.

1. The tea was sent here for the wicked purpose of enslaving the Colonies, and the people were under the necessity of destroying it to prevent the evils which were intended by our enemies; therefore it was a just act of self-defence.

2. The India Company were criminal in sending their dutied tea to America, as they knew it tended to fix an unrighteous revenue, and enslave their American brethren; therefore, in reason and justice, they ought never to receive a farthing for their noxious tea, but are bound by the ties of justice and honour to make a compensation to the people here for the injury they have received from the Company by means of sending the tea. It is probable that America will suffer (unless a kind Providence should defeat the Ministerial design) millions by this injurious plan which the India Company have adopted, and according to the rules of equity they ought to make good the damage; and will any one say that this people ought to pay for the tea?

3. All the Colonies are now considered as one body politic, whose general liberty and interest is inseparable, and therefore no concessions to arbitrary power must be made, nor any important steps taken by one Colony without consulting the whole in Congress; and for this reason we ought to wait for the meeting of the Congress that we may be assisted by the joint wisdom of the Colonies.

4. As to the probability of obtaining relief, without a mean submission to tyranny, I apprehend it is very great, for the Act is such a flagrant violation of all the principles of justice and humanity, that every good man in the Nation will exert his influence to have this reproach wiped, away as soon as possible. The Nation will be alarmed with the various calamities which this Act will bring upon them, by stopping their trade with America, and the measures that our States General may adopt. They will be alarmed with the apprehension of a French and Spanish war. And in this great shifting scene of political affairs, it cannot be supposed that France, who for many important reasons wants a free trade with America, will remain a silent spectator; she will doubtless think it a good opportunity to open her ports to the Americans, and endeavour by all means to gain their trade and friendship, and these considerations will induce Britain to do us justice.

AN AMERICAN.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM CAVE CUMBERLAND,
DATED JUNE 21, 1774.

I have had no accounts of my brother since he left Fort Pitt, nor is there any news or word of any of the traders of the Shawanese towns. What is come of them God only knows, but all accounts from that quarter is very bad. We have received accounts this day by express, that one Captain McClure, a Virginian, is killed, and another man deadly wounded by a party of Indians, which was out near Redstone. All the poor people who was settled over Alleghany Mountain, are either moved off, or gathered in large numbers, and making places of defence to secure themselves. All those misfortunes, and the lives trod property of the unhappy people who are among them, are owing to the barbarous murder, no other name can I give it, committed by Cresap and one Greathouse, with their men, on a few Indians who resided on, or lived near, the mouth of Yellow Creek.

NORTHAMPTON COUNTY (PENN.) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Justices, the Gentlemen of the Bar, Grand Jury, and principal Inhabitants of the County of Northampton, held at Easton, on the 21st day of June, 1774.

GEORGE TAELOR, Esquire, in the Chair.

It being considered that it was necessary for all the countie.# of this Province to join with their brethren of Philadelphia in expressing their sentiments upon the present interesting occasion, relative to the oppressive Acts of Parliament lately passed in Great Britain, tending to destroy the liberties of North America, it was unanimously resolved as follows :

1st. That the Act of Parliament for shutting up the port and harbours of Boston, is an Act of the highest oppression, and a violation of the liberties of America.

2d. That as we consider the inhabitants of the said town as suffering in the common cause of American freedom, we will assist them to obtain redress by every legal act in our power.

3d. That it is our opinion the most constitutional and effectual method for obtaining such redress is, by having a general Congress of Committees, to be composed and chosen out of the members of the different Assemblies of each Colony.

4th. That a Committee be formed in this county, consisting of six persons, namely, William Edmunds, George Taylor, Lewis Gordon, John Okeley, Peter Kachlein, and Jacob Orndt, Esquires, to correspond with our brethren in Philadelphia, and the other counties of this Province, and to co-operate with them in such measures as shall be judged most proper for the general good.

5th. That the Committee be desired to receive the subscriptions of such charitable persons in this county who shall incline to support the distressed and suffering inhabitants of the town of Boston. And, Resolved, That it is the duty of every inhabitant of this county to contribute, according to his circumstances, to relieve their suffering brethren. The moneys raised by such subscription to be disposed of for the use of the inhabitants of the said town of Boston, in such way as the Committee shall think fit.

6th. That William Edmunds, Esquire, the Representative in Assembly for this county, be required by his brethren of the Committee of Correspondence. now appointed, to attend and meet the other Representatives of Assembly of this Province, in case the Speaker of the House shall think proper to call them together upon this deeply interesting and alarming occasion; and that it is the opinion of his constituents here, that he do give his attendance accordingly.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN ENGLAND
TO ONE IN NEW-YORK, DATED JUNE 22, 1774.

The Colonies must be in some confusion on account of the measures taken by the Ministry and Parliament in England, with the town of Boston, to bring it to obedience; and if they succeed in their scheme there, the other principal places of trade must not think to escape the snare laid for them; for most certainly the one is but a prelude to the other. Therefore, I hope the prudent conduct of the Colonies, in conjunction with each other, will be able to defeat the machinations of their enemies, both here and among themselves. Bad as things are or may be with you, I seem to foresee worse times here. You are at a great distance from the source of mischief, but we are near it, and circumscribed within narrow bounds, an Island of small extent in comparison with the large Continent of North America. If you are persecuted in the city, you can flee to the country; but we, on this side, have no country to screen us from the oppressions of the great. Our only object for an asylum, is to flee to you on the other side of the Atlantic for shelter. Therefore make room for us; for the time is at no great distance when such a refuge will be wanting for as many as can find the means of transporting themselves. Another war, in my opinion, (not of mine only, but of many others,) will shake the foundation of this Kingdom; and the enormous debt hanging over it, must crush it whenever the public credit sinks, and will ruin many thousands of families, whose whole fortunes are vested in the funds, whence their subsistence flows; and when this source fails, what can such families do, but, in despair, seek one where it may be found, which for Protestants and Englishmen can only be with you? This Nation is already taxed to the utmost stretch of invention. Nor even now, in time of peace, has any one been eased, that was in time of the last war, except the land tax, which was then four, and is now only three shillings in the pound. The poor tax, in many places, is near double the land tax, and will be still heavier, if you, on your side, should come to an agreement for non-importation; thence the numbers of the poor must multiply greatly, and many families, now in easy circumstances by means of their industry, will be reduced to poverty. The landed interest, in most parts of England, have lately advanced their estates to near a third more than they were but a few years past; by means of which the occupiers of those estates have, in more than a just proportion, advanced the produce thereof, which renders every article of provisions now a third dearer than it was no longer than since the late war, yet the price of labour has not been advanced. Therefore, judge how the poor here are able to subsist, if persons in better circumstances are not able to support themselves as formerly.

In England we have the show of liberty without the reality; the shadow without the substance. Our Parliament, for the most part, are creatures of the Ministry, who enable them to carry every thing before them, right or wrong, and are, by insensible degrees, leading the Nation into a state of slavery, which is not discerned by the bulk of the people, who seldom look further than the present time; but the more judicious look further, and can see that chains are forging for them, to be made use of at a proper period. When they have obliged you Americans to submit to the yoke prepared for you, a much heavier will soon after gall the necks of the people here. By the Quebec Bill, now passed, it is easy to be seen what Government is aiming at; nothing less than despotism. Upon the whole, there is reason to believe, that if any liberty for Englishmen is to remain, it must be in the North American Colonies, where, I hope, the inhabitants will have virtue enough to exert their utmost strength to secure it to themselves and their posterity. Let their reliance for the securing this blessing be on the Lord, in whom there is strength and wisdom, and by no means to place their dependance on an arm of flesh.

WESTMORELAND COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a respectable Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Westmoreland, assembled, on due notice, at the Court House of the said County, on Wednesday, the 22d of June, 1774.

The Reverend Mr. THOMAS SMITH, Moderator.

Several papers, containing the Proceedings of the late House of Burgesses of this Colony, and the subsequent determinations of the late Representatives after the House was dissolved, together with extracts of several Resolves of the Provinces of Massachusetts Bay, Maryland, &c., being read, the meeting proceeded seriously to consider the present dangerous and truly alarming crisis, when ruin is threatened to the ancient constitutional rights of North America, and came to the following Resolves:

1st. That to be taxed solely in our Provincial Assemblies, by Representatives freely chosen by the people, is a right that British subjects in America are entitled to, from natural justice, from the English Constitution, from Charters, and from a confirmation of these by usage, since the first establishment of these Colonies.

2d. That an endeavour to force submission from one Colony to the payment of taxes not so imposed, is a dangerous attack on the liberty and property of British America, and renders it indispensably necessary that all should firmly unite to resist the common danger.

3d. It is the opinion of this meeting, that the town of Boston, in our sister Colony of Massachusetts Bay, is now suffering in the common cause of North America, by having its harbour blocked up, its commerce destroyed, and the property of many of its inhabitants violently taken from them, until they submit to taxes not imposed by their consent; and therefore this meeting resolve:

4th. That the inhabitants of this county will most cordially and firmly join with the other counties in this Colony, and the other Colonies on this Continent, or the majority of them, after a short day, hereafter to be agreed on, to stop all exports to Great Britain and the West Indies, and all imports from thence, until, as well the Act of Parliament, entitled "An Act to discontinue, in such manner and for such time as are therein mentioned, the landing and discharging, lading, and shipping of goods, wares, and merchandise, at the town and within the harbour of Boston, in "the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America," as the several Acts laying duties on America for the purpose of raising a revenue, and all the Acts of the British Legislature made against our brothers of Massachusetts Bay, in consequence of their just opposition to the said Revenue Acts, are repealed; and it is the opinion of this meeting, that such a non-importing and non-exporting plan should be quickly entered upon, as well on the evident principle of self-preservation, as to relieve our suffering countrymen and fellow-subjects in Boston, and to restore between Great Britain and America that harmony so beneficial to the whole Empire, and so ardently desired by all America.

5th. It is the opinion of this meeting that the gentlemen of the law should not (as long as the non-exportation agreement subsists) bring any writ for the recovery of debt, or to push to a conclusion any such suit already brought, it being utterly inconsistent with a non-exportation plan that judgment should be given against those who are deprived of the means of paying.

6th. That so soon as the non-exportation agreement begins, we will, every man of us, keep our produce, whether tobacco, corn, wheat, or any thing else, unsold, on our own respective plantations, and not carry, or suffer them to be carried, to any public warehouse or landing place, except of grain; where the same be so done, an oath being first made that such grain is for the use of, or consumption of, this or any other Colony in North America, and not for exportation from the Continent whilst the said agreement subsists. And this is the more necessary to prevent a few designing persons from engrossing and buying up our tobacco, grain, &c., when they are low in value, in order to avail themselves of the very high price that those articles must bear when the ports are open, and foreign markets empty.

7th. This meeting do heartily concur with the late Representative body of this country, to disuse tea, and not purchase any other commodity of the East Indies, except saltpetre, until the grievances of America are redressed.

8th. We do most heartily concur in these preceding Resolves, and will, to the utmost of our power, take care that they are carried into execution; and that we will regard every man as infamous who now agree to, and shall hereafter make a breach of, all or any of them, subject however to such future alterations as shall be judged expedient, at a general meeting of Deputies from the several parts of this Colony, or a general Congress of all the Colonies.

9th. We do appoint Richard Henry Lee, and Richard Lee, Esquires, the late Representatives of this county, to attend the general meeting of Deputies from all the counties; and we desire that they do exert their best abilities to get these our earnest desires, for the security of public liberty, assented to.

10th. And as it may happen that the Assembly now called to meet on the 11th of August, may be prorogued to a future day, and many of the Deputies appointed to meet on the 1st of August, trusting to the certainty of meeting in Assembly on the 11th, may fail to attend on the first, by which means decisive injury may arise to the common cause of liberty, by the general sense of the country not being early known at this dangerous crisis of American freedom, we do, therefore, direct that our Deputies now chosen fail not to attend at Williamsburg, on the said 1st of August; and it is our earnest wish that the Deputies from other counties be directed to do the same, for the reasons above assigned.

11th. That the Clerk do forthwith transmit the proceedings of this day to the press, and request the Printers to publish them without delay.

By order of the meeting,

JAMES DAVENPORT, Clerk.

MARYLAND CONVENTION

At a Meeting of the Committees appointed by the several Counties of the Province of Maryland, at the City of Annapolis, the 22d day of June, 1774, and continued by adjournment from day to day, till the 25th day of the same month; were present:

For ST. MARY'S County - Colonel Abraham Barnes, Messrs, Henry Greenfield Sothoron, Jeremiah Jordan.

For KENT County. - Messrs. William Ringgold, Thomas Ringgold, Joseph Nicholson, Jun., Thomas Smyth, Joseph Earle.

For QUEEN ANNE'S County. - Messrs. Turbut Wright, Richard Tilghman Earle, Solomon Wright, John Brown, Thomas Wright.

For PRINCE GEORGE'S County - Messrs. Robert Tyler, Joseph Sim, Joshua Beall, John Rogers, Addison Murdock, William Bowie, B. Hall, son of Francis, Osborn Sprigg.

For ANNE ARUNDEL County, and the City of ANNA-POLIS. - Charles Carroll, Esquire, (barrister,) Messrs. B. T. B. Worthington, Thomas Johnson, Jun., Samuel Chase, John Hall, William Paca, Matthias Hammond, Samuel Chew, John Weems, Thomas Dorsey, Rezin Hammond.

For BALTIMORE County and BALTIMORE Town. - Captain Charles Ridgely, Messrs. Thomas Cockey Deye, Walter Tolley, Jun., Robert Alexander, William Lux, Samuel Purviance, Jun., George Risteau.

For TALBOT County. - Messrs. Matthew Tilghman, Edward Lloyd, Nicholas Thomas, R. Goldsborough, 4th.

For DORCHESTER County. - Messrs. Robert Goldsborough, William Ennalls, Henry Steel, John Ennalls, Rob't Harrison, Col. Henry Hooper, Mr. Matthew Brown.

For SOMERSET County - Messrs. Peter Waters, John Waters, George Dashiell.

For CHARLES County.--Messrs. William Smallwood, Francis Ware, Josiah Hawkins, Joseph Hanson Harrison, Daniel Jenifer, John Dent, Thomas Stone.

For CALVERT County. - Messrs. John Weems, Edward Reynolds, Benjamin Mackall, (attorney.)

For CECIL County. - Messrs. John Veazy, Jun., William Ward, Stephen Hyland.

For WORCESTER County. - Messrs. Peter Chaille, John Done, William Morris.

For FREDERICK County. - Messrs. Thomas Price, Alexander Contee Hanson, Baker Johnson, Andrew Scott, Philip Thomas, Thomas Sprigg Wootton, Henry Griffith, Evan Thomas, Richard Thomas, Richard Brooke, Thomas Cramphin, Jun., Allen Bowie, Jun.

For HARFORD County. - Messrs. Richard Dallum, John Love, Thomas Bond, John Paca, Benedict Edward Hall, Jacob Bond.

For CAROLINE County. - Messrs. Thomas White, William Richardson, Isaac Bradley, Nathaniel Potter, Thomas Goldsborough.

MATTHEW TILGHMAN, Esq., in the Chair,
John DOCKETT, chose Clerk.

It being moved from the Chair to ascertain the manner of dividing upon questions, it was agreed that on any division each county have one vote, and that all questions be determined by a majority of counties.

The Letter and Vote of the town of Boston, several Letters and Papers from Philadelphia and Virginia, the Act of Parliament for blocking up the port and harbour of Boston, the Bill depending in Parliament subversive of the Charter of Massachusetts Bay, and that enabling the Governour to send supposed offenders from thence to another Colony, or England, for trial, were read, and after mature deliberation thereon:

1st. Resolved, That the said Act of Parliament, and Bills, if passed into Acts, are cruel and oppressive invasions of the natural rights of the people of the Massachusetts Bay, as men, and of their constitutional rights as English subjects; and that the said Act, if not repealed, and the said Bills, if passed into Acts, will lay a foundation for the utter destruction of British America, and, therefore, that the town of Boston and Province of Massachusetts Bay, are now suffering in the common cause of America.

2d. Resolved, That it is the duty of every Colony in America to unite in the most speedy and effectual means to obtain a repeal of the said Act, and also of the said Bills, if passed into Acts.

3d. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that if the Colonies come into a joint resolution to stop all importations from, and exportations to, Great Britain, until the said Act, or Bills if passed into Acts, be repealed, the same will be the most speedy and effectual means to obtain a repeal of the said Act or Acts, and preserve North America and her liberties.

4th. Resolved, Notwithstanding the people of this Province will have many inconveniences and difficulties to encounter by breaking off their commercial intercourse with their mother country, and are deeply affected at the distress which will be thereby necessarily brought on many of their fellow-subjects in Great Britain, yet their affections and regard to an injured and oppressed sister Colony, their duty to themselves, their posterity, and their country, demand the sacrifice - and, therefore, that this Province will join in an Association with the other principal and neighbouring Colonies, to stop all exportations to, and importations from, Great Britain, until the said Act and Bills, if passed into Acts, be repealed; the non-importation and non-exportation to take place on such future day as may be agreed on by a general Congress of Deputies from the Colonies - the non-export of tobacco to depend and take place only on a similar agreement by Virginia and North Carolina, and to commence at such time as may be agreed on by the Deputies for this Province and the said Colonies of Virginia and North Carolina.

5th. Resolved, That the Deputies of this Province are authorized to agree to any restrictions upon exports to the West Indies which may be deemed necessary by a majority of the Colonies at the general Congress.

6th. Resolved, That the Deputies from this Province are authorized, in case the majority of the Colonies should think the importation of particular articles from Great Britain to be indispensably necessary for their respective Colonies, to admit and provide for the Province such articles as our circumstances shall necessarily require.

7th. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the merchants and others, venders of goods and merchandise within this Province, ought not to take advantage of the above Resolve for non-importation, but that they ought to sell their goods and merchandise that they have now, or may hereafter import, at the same rates they have been accustomed to do within one year last past; and that if any persons shall sell any goods which he now has, or hereafter may have, or may import, on any other terms than above expressed, no inhabitant of this Province ought, at any time thereafter, to deal with any such person, his agent, manager, factor, or storekeeper, for any commodity whatever.

8th. Resolved, unanimously, That a subscription be opened in the several counties of this Province, for an immediate collection for the relief of the distressed inhabitants of Boston, now cruelly deprived of the means of procuring subsistence for themselves and families, by the operation of the said Act for blocking up their harbour, and that the same be collected by the Committees of the respective counties, and shipped by them in such provisions as may be thought most useful.

9th. Resolved, unanimously, That this Committee embrace this public opportunity to testify their gratitude and most cordial thanks to the patrons and friends of liberty in Great Britain for their patriotic efforts to prevent the present calamity of America.

10th. Resolved, That Matthew Tilghman, Thomas Johnson, Jun., Robert Goldsborough, William Paca, and Samuel Chase, Esquires, or any two or more of them, be Deputies for this Province, to attend a general Congress of Deputies from the Colonies, at such time and place as may be agreed on, to effect one general plan of conduct, operating on the commercial connection of the Colonies with the mother country, for the relief of Boston and preservation of American liberty; and that the Deputies of this Province immediately correspond with Virginia and Pennsylvania, and through them with the other Colonies, to obtain a meeting of the general Congress, and to communicate, as the opinion of this Committee, that the 20th day of September next, will be the most convenient time, and the City of Philadelphia the most convenient place, for a meeting, which time and place, to prevent delay, they are directed to propose.

11th. Resolved, unanimously, That this Province will break off all trade and dealings with that Colony, Province, or town, which shall decline or refuse to come into the general plan which may be adopted by the Colonies.

12th. Resolved, That the Deputies for this Province upon their return, call together the Committees of the several counties, and lay before them the measures adopted by the general Congress.

Ordered, That copies of these Resolutions be transmitted to the Committee of Correspondence for the several Colonies, and be also published in the Maryland Gazette.

Per order,

JOHN DUCKETT,

Clerk of the Committee.

Philadelphia, June 22, 1774.

Of the several modes of appointing Deputies for a general Congress, their nominanon by Representatives met in a Legislative capacity would, perhaps, be most generally approved.

If that mode cannot be pursued, the next most advisable, it appears to me, would be, for the freemen, qualified to vote for members of Assembly in the several Colonies, to choose a certain number of Delegates, who should compose a Provincial Convention in each Colony, and therein nominate some of their body, as Deputies to represent that Colony at a general Congress.

We are now entering upon a contest that may be continued for a long time; and we cannot be too early in giving all regularity and stability to our proceedings. The whole people are oppressed - they must relieve themselves: and therefore they must act. Nothing should be taken for granted, in a cause of such magnitude. - It is building on a sandy foundation. It is not to be presumed that the body of the people in any Colony will give their full and free assent to a single measure of their Representatives assembled as private men. Met in legislation, they form a constitutional body, and thence their proceedings derive their force. Ceasing to be that, their authority reverts to the people of which they are only a part. In emergencies demanding public exertions, a supposed or implied assent of the people is not an assent to be regarded or depended on. They must be represented actually - not "virtually." When they have chosen Representatives for the usual business of the Province; the law says, the acts of those Representatives are the acts of their constituents. When the law will not say this, is it to be inferred? And is the inference to be so extensive as to justify a conclusion of such vast consequence, that the constituents who appointed men for common affairs to be transacted in one way, freely and fully assent to their conduct in new affairs of the utmost importance, and transacted in another way? Why should such an influence be made? Where is the necessity for it? Cannot an appeal be made to the people? Their sentiments taken - be from themselves, and not guessed at? If they have not wisdom and virtue enough to become agents in promoting their own temporal salvation, it is in vain for others to attempt it.

The welfare of America depends on each Colony knowing what portions of this wisdom and virtue there are among us. Let us put the cause on its true bottom. If those freemen of counties, cities, boroughs, and townships, qualified to vote at usual elections, and residing in Colonies where the Assemblies met in Legislative capacities, cannot in time appoint Deputies, meet, and proceed respectively in the same mode that is practised in choosing Representatives for their Assemblies, to elect persons for the express purpose of forming Provincial Conventions, to consider on the present alarming situation of public affairs, and to concert the most effectual means for redressing grievances and re-establishing peace and harmony between Great Britain and these Colonies, on a constitutional foundation, the sentiments and resolutions of this Continent, from one end of it to the other will be perfectly known. Then a broad and strong foundation will be laid for future measures. Until these sentiments and resolutions are thus known, those who consult together have nothing firm under them. Does any man suspect the prudence of the public spirit of any counties, or other districts? That is one good reason for adopting this mode. Let the truth be known. Let the real friends of freemen and their country understand their countrymen. Let them not be deceived in an opinion that the unanimity of sentiments and force of resolutions are greater than they are. Let us not collect the sense of this country, and of that district by "virtual representations," and rely on their zeal by unproved supposition. If there are counties or districts, who choose to lessen the weight of our common country, by taking themselves out of the scale in which "the universal property, liberty, safety, happiness, and prosperity of America," are now weighing against the opposite scale of tyranny, let them instantly declare themselves. Such discoveries never can do less harm than at this time.

Upon the whole, the success of measures calculated for the relief of these Colonies, wholly depends upon the unanimity of the people. The people, therefore, should be consulted in the most particular manner that can be imagined. The result of that consultation will be the evidence to be relied on; and that evidence should be direct in point.

Besides other advantages arising from the plan proposed, this will be one very considerable: the Representatives for each county will naturally form a Standing Committee for that county, to correspond with the Standing Provincial Committee, appointed by the Provincial Convention, to act in their behalfs, as the Convention cannot be kept continually assembled. The business of the Provincial Committee, then, will be to correspond with the other Colonies, and with the County Committees. The County Committees may request every small district within the county, whether called township, hundred, &c., to choose one person to represent that township, hundred, &c., and may convey intelligence to each of these persons by letters, or by stated meetings. Thus a most regular plan might be solidly established throughout this Continent, for communicating needfid information to the individuals of the smallest districts in every county, (a point absolutely necessary,) and of receiving their sentiments; and both these offices would be performed by persons the most acceptable to them. Unless some such plan as this, is framed, it requires not the spirit of prophecy to foresee that the affairs of this Continent will inevitably be confusedly conducted, to an unfortunate issue.

LETTER FROM THE GENERAL ASSOCIATION OF CONGREGATIONAL MINISTERS IN CONNECTICUT, TO THE CLERGYMEN IN BOSTON, Mansfield, June 22, 1774.

REVEREND AND DEAR SIR: We, your brethren of the Colony of Connecticut, met by delegation from the several counties, in general Association at our annual meeting, cannot but feel deeply impressed with the present melancholy threatened situation of America in general, and the distressed state of the town of Boston in particular, suffering the severe resentment of the British Parliament, by which the subsistence of thousands is taken away. We readily embrace this opportunity to manifest our hearty sympathy with you in your present distresses. We consider you as suffering in the common cause of America - in the cause of civil liberty; which, if taken away, we fear would involve the ruin of religious liberty also. Gladly would we contribute every thing in our power for your encouragement and relief; however, our situation enables us to do little more than to express our sincere and affectionate concern; and with fervent addresses, to commend your cause, and the cause of America - the cause of liberty, and above all, the cause of religion, to the Father of Mercies, who can easily afford effectual relief - who has the hearts of all at his disposal, and can turn them as he pleases. We feel deeply sensible what a heavy load must lie upon the minds of the Ministers of Boston; enough to sink their spirits, unless armed with vigorous Christian fortitude and resolution. In hopes it may afford you some consolation, we assure you of our sincere condolence and unremitting prayers in your behalf; and that we shall, in every way suitable to our character and station, use our influence with the good people of this Colony to concur in every proper measure calculated to afford relief to America in general, and to the distressed town of Boston in particular.

We pray that the Ministers of Boston may be inspired by the great Head of the Church with wisdom sufficient for their direction in such a critical day as the present; and that God would give them and their people, firmness, unanimity, patience, prudence, and every virtue, which they need to support them under their heavy trials, and enable them to stand firm in the glorious cause of liberty, and express such a temper, and exhibit such an example, as shall be well pleasing to God, and recommend them to the favour and compassion of their fellow-men. We earnestly pray that God would humble us all under a deep sense of our numerous transgressions and criminal declensions; show us the absolute necessity of repentance and reformation; humble us under his mighty hand; and pour out a spirit of fervent supplication on you, on us, and all his people in this land; and we cannot but hope the united prayers of America may obtain that audience in Heaven, which will ensure salvation to us.

Signed by order of the General Association,

BENJAMIN THROOP, Moderator.

TO the Reverend Charles Chauncy, D. D., and the other Ministers of the town of Boston.

COPY OF AN ANSWER TO A LETTER FROM THE GENERAL ASSOCIATION IN CONNECTICUT, TO THE ASSOCIATED PASTORS IN BOSTON; PREPARED, BUT NOT SENT, THROUGH THE CONFUSION OF THE TIMES.

Boston, 1774.

REVEREND AND DEAR BRETHREN: Your very affectionate and obliging letter of June 24th, 1774, was communicated to us at a time when we greatly needed the encouragement and support of our Christian friends.

You justly suppose that when Boston is treated with such unprecedented cruelty, and involved in the deepest distress, a heavy load must lie upon the Ministers of Religion in that unhappy town. We have consoled ourselves with the thought, that we are suffering in the common cause of America - in the cause of civil liberty, with which religious liberty hath a very close connection. All circumstances seemed to make it evident that we were not mistaken in this view of things. It gives us the highest satisfaction to find that the sentiments of others are conformable to our own; especially to know that this is the opinion of so wise and venerable a body as the General Association of Connecticut.

We sincerely thank you for your tender sympathy with us under our sufferings, and the very kind and obliging manner in which you express it.

We present our particular acknowledgments for the great consolation you afford in the assurance you give us of your sincere condolence and unremitting prayers in our behalf; and that you will, in every way suitable to your character and station, use your influence with the good people of your Colony to concur in every proper measure calculated to afford relief to America in general, and to the distressed town of Boston in particular. We trust God hath heard your prayers, and the prayers of other friends to religion, and to America, and by his all-powerful influence, hath supported our brethren in this town, under their heavy trials, enabled them to stand firm in the glorious cause of liberty; and hath given some degree of that firmness, unanimity, patience, and prudence, which you so fervently implore for them in this critical day.

We owe much to our brethren in the other Colonies for the very generous assistance we have received. Such were the difficulties to which great numbers were reduced, by the almost total stagnation of our trade, that it must have been impossible for this town to have subsisted to this day, if the inhabitants had not been favoured with such kind and generous relief from abroad.

The Colony of Connecticut distinguished themselves not only by the largeness of their donations, but by the seasonableness of their supplies, which were received and applied for the purpose of supporting those who were suffering by means of the cruel Bill that shut up our port, while the other Colonies, by reason of their distance, were not able to afford such immediate help.

We think ourselves obliged on this occasion to testify, that your charities have been most faithfully applied to the purpose for which they were sent. The gentlemen who have undertaken this trust, are of the first character for probity and universal goodness. They generously employ a very great part of their time in this benevolent work, without the prospect of any reward but what ariseth from the pleasure of doing good, and of the approbation of their great Master and Lord.

While we think we have a right to complain to Heaven and Earth of the cruel oppression we are under, we ascribe righteousness to God. We deserve every thing from him, and he punishes us less than our iniquities deserve. We earnestly entreat the continuance of your addresses to Him who heareth prayer, that He would humble, pardon, and bless us.

Our own distresses by no means employ all our attention. We are more deeply affected with the general danger of our country, than with our own difficulties. We encourage ourselves in that glorious Being, who hath ever been the hope of his Israel, and the Saviour thereof in time of trouble, and who hath so often and so wonderfully appeared for this people. We are sinful and degenerate, but we trust there are many who have not forsaken God, and for whose sake he will not forsake us. If there had been ten righteous found in Sodom, the city had not been destroyed. And will not God have regard to the many thousands in this land, and who walk uprightly before him, and who continually implore his favour to their distressed country?

The surprising union of the Colonies at this day affords the strongest ground of encouragement; and their spirited measures cannot, according to a human view of things, fail of success sooner or later. We are sensible at the same time, that all depends on him who is the great Governour of the world. It is an inexhaustible source of comfort, that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. To him we refer all, in full confidence that he will do all things well.

We devoutly wish you the presence of the great Head of the Church in all your labours for the honour of God, and the good of men, and are,

With the sincerest gratitude and respect, your brethren, &c.

DEAR SIR: According to your desire, I send you a copy of the Letter which was prepared in answer to that which was so kindly sent from the Association in Connecticut. It was owing to the forgetfulness of our dear brother Howe, that it was not finished and forwarded. It was read by most of the brethren; but as it was not formally voted, it may be not best to take notice of it as an answer to yours. You may use it as you think proper, I send it in compliance with your desire, and it will, at least, show that we are not wholly unmindful of the affectionate regard expressed to us, though we have not made the return we ought to have done. I am sir, your brother and servant,

ANDREW ELLIOT.

ADDRESS OF THE JUSTICES OF THE COUNTY OF WORCESTER, IN MASSACHUSETTS, TO GOVERNOUR GAGE, PRESENTED JUNE 22, 1774.

To his Excellency THOMAS GAGE, Captain-General and Governour-in-chief in and over the Province of MASSACHUSETTS BAY, in NEW ENGLAND.

May it please your EXCELLENCY:

The Justices of the Court of General Sessions of the Peace, and Justices of the Inferior Court of Common Pleas, held at Worcester, within and for the County of Worcester, on the second Tuesday of June, 1774, beg leave, at our first session, after your safe arrival, to congratulate your Excellency thereon, and also on your appointment to the most important office of First Magistrate in this Province, in full confidence from the amiable character your Excellency has obtained in your other important departments in America, you will ever delight in promoting the good of this Government.

We find a peculiar difficulty in expressing the distress of our minds relating to the unhappy circumstances of this Province at this time, and can with sincerity say, that we have no doubt, from your well known character, you will do all that is within your power to extricate us out of our distresses, in every way consistent with the true interests of Great Britain and her Colonies, which we bold inseparable. And we do bear our testimony against all riots, combinations, and unwarrantable resolves, which we apprehend have been the unhappy occasion of many of our troubles; and as there are now circulating through this Province certain inflammatory pieces, signed by order of the Committee of Correspondence of the town of Boston; and in this county, by order of certain persons calling themselves a Committee of Correspondence of the town of Worcester, directed to the several towns in the county, stimulating the people to break off all connections with Great Britain, which have still a tendency to alienate the affections of the people of this Province and county from the mother country, and create discord and confusion, we do assure your Excellency that we will do every thing in our power to discountenance such proceedings, and support the execution of the laws, and render your Excellency's administration successful and prosperous.

HIS EXCELLENCY'S ANSWER

GENTLEMEN: I return you my most sincere and hearty thanks for your very affectionate and truly patriotic Address. Your disavowal of the malevolent labour of a desperate faction, who, by raising groundless fears and jealousies, and using every sort of artifice and fraud, endeavour to delude and intimidate the people, and create in them an aversion and enmity towards their brethren in Great Britain, is a proof that you hold sentiments the most friendly to your country.

May your designs to discountenance such proceedings meet with all the success that every real patriot must hope and wish for; and I will, at all times, be ready to advance so laudable a work, which alone can give peace and happiness to the Province, and restore the union so necessary to be cemented with the Kingdom of Great Britain.

Williamsburg, June 23, 1774

By letters from Fort Pitt, (since rebuilt, called Fort Dunmore,) of the 7th instant, there is advice that two days before a family on the west side of the Monongahela, consisting of a man, woman, and six children, were killed and scalped by a party of Indians, with many circumstances of cruelty; and that a man has been killed near Grave Creek, on the Ohio. The day following another man was killed on the Monongahela by the Indians.

EXTRACT FROM THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE TOWN OF WINDHAM, IN CONNECTICUT.

June 23, 1774.

We cannot close this meeting without expressing our utmost abhorrence and detestation of those few in a devoted Province, styling themselves Ministers, Merchants, Barristers and Attorneys, who have, against the sense and opinion of this vast Continent, distinguished themselves in their late fawning, adulating Address to Governour Hutchinson, the scourge of the Province which gave him birth, and the pest of America. His principles and conduct, evidenced by his letters, and those under his approbation, are so replete with treason against his country, and with the meanest of self-exaltation, as cannot be palliated by art, nor disguised by subtlety.

We esteem those Addresses a high-handed insult on the town of Boston, and the Province of Massachusetts Bay in particular, and all the American Colonies in general. Those styled Merchants may plead their profound ignorance of the constitutional rights of Englishmen, as an excuse, in some degree. But for those who style themselves Barristers and Attorneys, they have either assumed a false character, or they must, in some measure, be acquainted with the constitutional rights of Englishmen, and those of their own Province. For them to present such an Address is a daring affront to common sense, a high insult on all others of the profession, and treason against law. And from that learned profession, who are supposed to be well acquainted with the English Constitution, and have the best means, and are under the greatest advantages to defend the rights of society, and who have been famed as the greatest supporters of English liberties, for any of them to make a sacrifice of their all to this Pagod of vanity and fulsome adulation, is mean, vile, and unpardonable, and cannot be accounted for upon any other principles but those of their master, who would sacrifice his country to be the independent head of a respectable Province, and the few leaders of this infamous law band, would, it seems, give their aid and support therein to obtain the first places in this new Kingdom. The addressing Clergy we leave to the reproaches of their own consciences, but lament to find they are the first in their ignominious homage to their idol.

RICHARD HENRY LEE TO SAMUEL ADAMS.

Chantilly, Va., June 23, 1774.

SIR: I did myself the pleasure of writing to you, from this place, before my departure for our Assembly, in May last, and again, from Williamsburg, immediately after our dissolution, enclosing the order for a fast, which produced that event; and an account of the subsequent conduct of the members after the political death inflicted on them. The day before we were dissolved I had prepared a set of resolutions, the two last of which were thus expressed:

"Resolved, That the blocking up, or the attempting to "block the harbour of Boston, until the people there shall "submit to the payment of the taxes imposed upon them "without the consent of their Representatives, is a most "violent and dangerous attempt to destroy the constitutional liberty and rights of all British America."

"Resolved, That * * * * * be appointed Deputies from this House, to meet at * * * * * such "Deputies from the other Colonies as they shall appoint, "there to consider and determine on ways the most effectual to stop the exports from North America, and for the "adoption of such other measures as may be most decisive "for securing the rights of America against the systematic "plan formed for their destruction."

I have not a remaining doubt that these resolutions would have been agreed to had they been proposed. I was prevented from offering them by many worthy members, who wished to have the public business first finished, and who were induced to believe, from many conversations they had heard, that there was no danger of a dissolution before it had happened. It seems Government were alarmed at the spirit which the order for a fast denoted, and, fearing the consequences, interposed a dissolution. The consequent conduct of the members was surely much too feeble, in opposition to that very dangerous and alarming degree to which despotism had advanced. So thinking, I did propose to the dissolved members the plan of a general Confess, but they made a distinction between their then state, and that when they were members of the House of Burgesses.

Most of the members, and myself among the rest, had left Williamsburg before your message from Boston had arrived. Twenty-five of them, however, were assembled to consider of that Message, and they determined to invite a general meeting of the whole body on the 1st of August, to consider the measure of stopping the exports and imports. Since that an Indian invasion of our frontier has compelled the calling a new Assembly, for which purpose, writs, returnable to the 11th August, are now out, at which time it is thought the House will meet; when, I think, there is no manner of doubt they will directly adopt the most effectual means in their power for obtaining a redress of grievances. In the mean time, the sense of some counties is taking, and two have already declared their desire to stop the commercial intercourse between Great Britain and the West Indies, and this Colony. It seems very clear to me that there will be a general agreement. Do you not think, that the first most essential step for our Assembly to take, will be an invitation to a general Congress, as speedily as the nature of things will admit, in order that our plan, whatever it may be, may be unanimous, and therefore effectual? I shall be in Williamsburg the 1st of August, and shall continue there until the meeting of Assembly on the 11th. It will be exceedingly agreeable to me to know your sentiments fully on this most important subject. I am sure it will be of real consequence to the cause of liberty that your Committee of Correspondence write fully your sentiments to ours at the same time. It will be well so to time the matter, as that your letters may be in Williamsburg before the 1st of August, at which time a meeting of the late Representatives will take place, notwithstanding the return of the writs to the 11th instant.

I hope the good people of Boston will not lose their spirits under their present heavy oppression, for they will certainly be supported by the other Colonies; and the cause for which they suffer is so glorious, and so deeply interesting to the present and future generations, that all America will owe, in a great measure, their political salvation to the present virtue of Massachusetts Bay.

I am, sir, with very singular regard, your most obedient and humble servant,

RICHARD HENRY LEE.

To Samuel Adams, Esquire, Boston.

SAMUEL ADAMS TO RICHARD HENRY LEE.

Boston, 1774.

SIR: I have lately been favoured with three letters from you, and must beg you to attribute my omitting to make due acknowledgments till this time, to a multiplicity of affairs to which I am obliged to give my constant attention. The unrighteous and oppressive Act of the British Parliament for shutting up this harbour, though executed with a rigour beyond the intent even of its framers, has hitherto failed, and will, I believe, continue to fail of the effect which the enemies of America flattered themselves it would have. The inhabitants still wear cheerful countenances; far from being in the least intimidated, they are resolved to undergo the greatest hardships, rather than submit in any instance to the tyrannical Act. They are daily encouraged to persevere by the intelligence they receive from their brethren, not of this Province only, but every other Colony, that they are considered as suffering in the common cause, and the resolution of all to support them in the conflict. Lord North had no expectation that we should be thus sustained; on the contrary, he trusted that Boston would be left to fall alone. He has therefore made no preparation for the effects of an union.

From the information I have had from intelligent persons in England, I verily believe the design was to seize some persons and send them home; but the steadiness and prudence of the people, and the unexpected union of the Colonies, evidenced by liberal contributions for our support, has disconcerted them, and they are at a loss to know how to proceed further. Four regiments are encamped on our Common, and more are expected; but I hope the people will by circumspect behaviour, prevent their taking occasion to act, The Port Bill is followed by two other Acts, one for regulating the Government of this Province, or rather totally to destroy our free Constitution, and substituting an absolute despotic one in its stead; the other for the more impartial administration of justice; or, as some term it, screening from punishment any soldier who shall murder an American for asserting his rights. A submission to these Acts will doubtless be required and expected; but whether General Gage will find it an easy thing to force the people to submit to so great and fundamental a change of Government, is a question I think worth his consideration. Will the people of America consider these measures as an attack on the Constitution of an individual Province, in which the rest are not interested, or will they view the model of Government prepared for us as a system for the whole Continent? Will they as unconcerned spectators, look on it to be designed only to lop off the exuberant branches of democracy in the Constitution of this Province, or as part of a plan to reduce them all to slavery. These are questions, in my opinion, of great importance, which I trust will be thoroughly weighed in a general Congress. May God inspire that intended body with wisdom and fortitude, and unite and prosper their counsels.

The people of this Province are thoroughly sensible of the necessity of breaking off all commercial connection with a country whose political Councils tend only to enslave them. They, however, consider the body of the Nation as kept in profound ignorance of the nature of the dispute between Britain and the Colonies, and are taught to believe that we are a perfidious and rebellious people. his with reluctance they come into any resolutions, which must distress those who are not the objects of their resentments; but they are urged to it by motives of self-preservation; and are, therefore, signing an agreement in the several towns, not to consume any British manufactures, which shall be imported after the last day of August next, and that they may not be imposed upon; they are to require an oath of these of whom they purchase goods. It is the virtue of the yeomanry we are chiefly to depend upon. Our friends in Maryland talk of withholding the exportation of tobacco; this was hinted to us by the gentlemen of the late House of Burgesses of Virginia, who had been called together after the dissolution of the Assembly. This would be a measure greatly interesting to the mother country.

Should America hold up her own importance to the body of the Nation, and at the same time agree to one general Bill of Rights, the dispute might be settled on principles of freedom, and harmony be restored between Great Britain and the Colonies.

I am, with great regard, your friend and servant,
SAMUEL ADAMS.

Richard Henry Lee, Virginia.

Charlestown, S. C., June 24, 1774.

Many generous and charitable persons in this Colony, being desirous to send, and we the subscribers having been requested to receive, donations for the relief of our distressed brethren in Boston, now suffering for the common cause of America, under the late most cruel, arbitrary, and oppressive Act of the British Parliament, for the shutting up of that port - in order that so laudable, and at the same time necessary a mark of our real sympathy and union with our sister Colonies, may not appear to have the least slight shown to it: Give this public notice, that whatever shall be sent to us, or either of us, for that purpose, shall be faithfully, and as expeditiously as possible forwarded to the direction of gentlemen of known probity, public spirit, and honour in Boston, for the benefit of such poor persons whose unfortunate circumstances, occasioned by the operation of that unconstitutional Act, may be thought to stand in most need of immediate assistance.

DANIEL HORRY,	PAUL TRAPIER,
JAMES PARSONS,	WILLIAM ELLIOTT, of
WILLIAM WILLIAMSON,	Beaufort,
MILES BREWTON,	JOHN NEUFVILLE,
LEVINUS CLARKSON,	CHARLES ELLIOTT,
THOMAS LYNCH,	CHARLES PINCKNEY,
THOMAS FERGUSON,	CHRIST. GADSDEN.

N. B. Any rice that shall be sent to Mr. Gadsden's wharf, for the above purpose, shall be there landed, shipped, and (if occasion) stored without a farthing charge.

SPOTTSYLVANIA COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

We, the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Spottsylvania, being assembled on this 24th day of June, to advise and consult with our late Representatives (agreeable to their invitation) on the present state of British America, and having taken under our most serious consideration several Acts of the Parliament of Great Britain made during the present reign, respecting America, particularly one Act wherein a duty on tea is made payable in America, for the purpose of raising a revenue, and three other Acts of the last session of the present Parliament, respecting the Province of Massachusetts Bay, are of opinion:

That the said several Acts of Parliament are uneconomical, arbitrary, and unjust, manifestly calculated for the destruction of the rights of America, and the British Constitution in general, and ought to be opposed by all well-wishers, as well of the mother Country as of the Colonies, whose interests are mutual, and ought ever to be considered as inseparable.

That the levies of Parliament are the free gift of the people, granted by their Representatives, who, as they must necessarily contribute thereto, and oftentimes in a manifold proportion, the Constitution presumes will not be over-lavish of the people's money.

That the Legislation of Great Britain, and all free Governments, is founded on the essential principle, that the Representatives must be affected by the laws of their making equally with their constituents.

That the Colonies, since their separation from Great Britain having no representation in the British Parliament, and having Parliaments of their own, under the authority of the same King, adequate to all purposes of legislation, the British Parliament can have no power of making laws for the government of the Colonies, but in such cases wherein the authority of the Colony Assembly does not extend.

Resolved, therefore, That we owe all due obedience to our most gracious Sovereign George the Third, lawful and rightful Sovereign of Great Britain, France, Ireland, and of this Colony of Virginia; that we will, with our lives and fortunes, support and maintain the honour of his Crown, the happiness of his illustrious House, and prosperity of his Dominions in general; and that we will in our Assembly (whereof we boast our most gracious Sovereign as the head) recommend and advise all such laws as shall be necessary for the internal Government of this Colony, and for the advancement of his Majesty's glory in general, as the ability of his loyal subjects here will admit of.

Resolved, further, That we owe no obedience to any Act of the British Parliament that is, or shall be made, respecting the internal police of this Colony, and that we will oppose any Such Acts with our lives and fortunes.

Resolved, That the said Acts of the British Parliament respecting the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, and the town of Boston, tending to enforce obedience to the aforesaid unconstitutional Act, imposing a duty upon tea, for raising a revenue in America, ought to be considered as an attempt against the rights and liberties of America in general, and that the same ought to be opposed by the people of this Colony.

Resolved, That the most effectual method of opposing the said several Acts of Parliament will be to break off all commercial connection with Great Britain till the said Acts shall be repealed. We, therefore, cordially approve the proposed meeting of the late House of Burgesses, on the 1st of August next, and authorize and request you, George Stubblefield and Mann Page, Esquires, our late Burgesses, to, represent us, the freeholders and other inhabitants of this county, at such meeting, there to consult with the other Deputies of the several counties in this Colony, and adopt such measures as shall seem best to answer the general tendency of the foregoing Resolutions, hereby engaging, on our parts, to conform thereto, and support the same to the utmost of our power.

EXTRACTS OF LETTERS RECEIVED AT PHILADELPHIA,
DATED PITTSBURGH, JUNE 24, 1774.

Since our last, of the 19th, Conolly sent out an armed party to waylay the road about six miles from town, who fell upon a party of carriers, abused them and searched their lading, among which they found one load of powder, sent up by Mr. Joseph Spear, for the use of the distressed inhabitants of this county, of which Conolly's party robbed them, and carried it to the fort. When the master carrier applied to Conolly for a receipt, he would give him none, but was beat and abused in a most cruel manner for asking it, by one Aston, who is a Captain of his appointment.

We have certain accounts that the three friendly Indians, who so faithfully escorted the traders and their party to this place, were waylaid on their return home, near the mouth of Beaver Creek, by one of the two parties which Conolly sent out in the night after them, and who fired upon them and shot one of the Indians through the body, and then run off, it is said, like brave fellows! The other two Indians assisted their wounded companion, and got off with him, without any further damage than the loss of part of the presents they had received from our traders for their fidelity. The party of Conolly's consisted of twelve men, and an officer. Yesterday Captain McKee's servant, one William Herbert, was shot dead by one of Conolly's centinels, as he went into the fort, through the sally-port; but we believe this to be an accident.

The principal inhabitants are harassed in a manner that cannot be borne. They are under the very worst kind of military Government. For surely there can be no law in Virginia, (supposing their laws to extend here,) which can empower any person whomsoever to seize upon the property of another and apply it to his own use without, or even against, the owner's consent. Yet this is done every day about Pittsburgh. Do they want provisions - it is only ordering out a party to shoot down the first they met with of any kind. It is true, if any owner appears, they are appraised, and he gets a certificate - but what is he better? He must take a journey of two hundred and fifty miles to Staunton, to get it allowed by Court, and he must take another of the same distance to get his money; and all this to a poor man for perhaps the only cow he has in the world, and on the milk of which an infant family is depending. Is not this sporting with people's property in a more wanton and cruel manner than is done in the most despotic Governments on earth? It would indeed be greater kindness not to mock them with the hopes of satisfaction.

FOURTH SERIES.

BERGEN COUNTY (NEW-JERSEY) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Bergen, in the Province of New-Jersey, convened agreeable to advertisement, at the Court House of said County, on Saturday, the 25th of June, 1774.

PETER ZABRISKIE, Esquire, Chairman.

This meeting being deeply affected with the calamitous condition of the inhabitants of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in consequence of the late Act of Parliament for blocking up the port of Boston; and considering the alarming tendency of the Act of the British Parliament for the purpose of raising a revenue in America,

Do Resolve, 1st. That they think it their greatest happiness to live under the Government of the illustrious House of Hanover, and that they will steadfastly and uniformly bear true and faithful allegiance to his Majesty King George the Third, under the enjoyment of their constitutional rights and privileges.

2d. That we conceive it to be our indubitable privilege to be taxed only by our own consent, given by ourselves, or by our Representatives; and that we consider the late Acts of Parliament, declarative of their right to impose internal taxes on the subjects of America, as manifest encroachments on our national rights and privileges as British subjects, and as inconsistent with the idea of an American Assembly, or House of Representatives.

3d. That we will heartily unite with this Colony in choosing Delegates to attend at a general Congress from the several Provinces of America, in order to consult on and determine some effectual method to be pursued for obtaining a repeal of the said Acts of Parliament, which appears to us evidently calculated to destroy that mutual harmony and dependence between Great Britain and her Colonies, which are the basis and support of both.

And we do appoint Theunis Dey, John Demarest, Peter Zabriskie, Corriellius Van Voorst, and John Zabriskie, Junior, Esquires, to be a Committee for corresponding with the Committees of the other counties in this Province, and particularly to meet with the other County Committees at New-Brunswick, or such other place as shall be agreed on, in order to elect Delegates to attend the general Congress of Delegates of the American Colonies for the purposes aforesaid.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM GOVERNOUR GAGE TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Salem, 26th June, 1774.

MY LORD: The General Court met here on the 7th instant, and, after the enclosed Protest, proceeded to business, and sent me the enclosed Address. During the short sessions several private Bills, and a Tax Bill, were passed.

A Committee of the House sat for some days, keeping their business very secret; but, giving out, they were upon moderate and conciliating measures. They made their Report, I am informed, on the 17th instant, when the door was ordered to be locked; but their proceedings getting abroad, I sent the Secretary to dissolve them. They would not admit him, and he was obliged to do it by Proclamation on the outside of the door. I transmit your Lordship the Resolves they have passed.

The Council sent me the enclosed libel on my predecessors in this Government, in an Address; on which account I refused to receive it, sending them the reasons for my refusal, which I also send your Lordship. If the dissolution will be productive of good, or not, remains to be known; but the contrivers of all the mischief in the town of Boston, I am informed; are now spiriting up the people throughout the Province to resistance, as well to the Port Bill, as to three other Acts daily expected, rough draughts of which were printed here about the 4th instant; and the Speeches made upon them in the House of Commons, published in the newspapers: Sensible and well affected people have told me, they have no doubt that their intention is to try to raise the Province to arms; but I hope they respect and fear too much; and, however prone their inclinations may be to so wicked a project, I trust they want power to effect it.

In Boston the greatest pains have been, and are taking, to oppose all measures tending to open the port, by flattering the people with assistance from the other Provinces, promises of collections, and presents to enable them to subsist, and the happy effects of a general Congress, which, they make no doubt, will force Great Britain into their own terms. On the other hand, several gentlemen, who, through fear of the tyranny under which they have lived, dared not to act or speak, encouraged now by the late resolutions of Government, have ventured to step forth, and are endeavouring to persuade the people to comply with the Act of Parliament, as the only means to save their town from ruin. Till they are pinched, and find they are deceived in their hopes of support, by presents and collections, the affair will probably rest in this situation; but the Act must certainly, sooner or later, work its own way.

They will not agree to non-importation either at New-York or Philadelphia, or even in this Province, though I believe a Congress, of some sort, may be obtained; but when or how it will be composed is yet at a distance, and, after all, Boston may get little more than fair words. I got the consent of Council to my nomination of Mr. Justice Brown, of the Inferiour Court of Essex County, to succeed the late Judge Ropes, as Judge of the Superiour Court, and he is appointed and sworn in accordingly.

The fourth and forty-third regiments encamped on Boston Common the 14th and 15th instant, The latter came into the harbour the 1st instant, but their tents having, by mistake, been put in the transports of the fourth regiment, they were obliged to wait for them. Their arrival has given Spirits to the friends of Government, and we are looking out for the troops from Ireland; three companies, from thence, of the fifth regiment, are arrived, and the remainder may be daily expected.

Charlestown, S. C., June 27th, 1774.

They write from Georgia that the Mortar, a principal Head-man or Chief of the Creek Indians, had sent down three Indians to Augusta with a peace talk, which was delivered at Colonel Barnard's, requesting that the trade might again be opened. Mr. Graham, a trader, was attacked by some of the friends or relations of the Mad Turkey, lately murdered at Augusta, but by the assistance of some Chickasaw Indians which Mr. Graham had with him for his protection, they were prevented from doing any mischief. The last Indian trader that arrived from Augusta from the Creek Country says that Emistisiquo, and the other Indians who were lately at Savannah, had delivered their talk at the Coweta Town, and that there-upon the leader of the murdering gang, with one or two more, had left the place, whether through fear, or to do more mischief, is uncertain. Scouts are ordered out from every company of militia in and about Augusta, &c., to scour the woods, make discoveries, and give timely notice to the inhabitants to provide for their safety in case of danger.

The last accounts from the Indian country informs us that the Creeks had appointed a general meeting of all the chief men and warriors of their Nation, to be holden on the 24th of last month. They were greatly distressed by the trade with them being stopped; and it is expected that the result of their deliberations at the said meeting, will be to give such satisfaction for the late murders as has been demanded. At the same time, it is confidently asserted, that the Cherokees have engaged to join the Creeks in case of war.

At a Meeting of the Committee of Correspondence for Norfolk and Portsmouth, in Virginia, held at the Court House, on Monday, the 27th day of June, 1774.

Present, Matthew Phripp, Samuel Kerr, James Taylor, William Harvey, Paul Loyal, Alexander Skinner.

Voted, That the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County and Borough of Norfolk be earnestly requested to attend at the Court House of the said county, on Wednesday, the 6th day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, that the late Burgesses may collect their sentiments previous to the meeting appointed to be held at Williamsburg, on the 1st day of August next.

WILLIAM DAVIS, Clerk.

As late Burgesses for Norfolk County and Borough, we heartily concur in sentiments with the Committee of Correspondence, and propose to attend at the time appointed.

THOMAS NEWTON, Jun.,
JAMES HOLT,
JOSEPH HUTCHINS.

MORRIS COUNTY (NEW-JERSEY) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of a respectable body of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Morris, in the Province of East New-Jersey, at the Court House in Morristown, in the said County, on Monday, the 27th June, 1774.

JACOB FORD, Esquire, Chairman.

1st. Resolved, That George the Third is lawful and rightful King of Great Britain and all other his Dominions and countries, and that as part of his Dominions it is our duty not only to render unto him true faith and obedience, but also with our lives and fortunes to support and maintain the just dependence of these his Colonies upon the Crown of Great Britain.

2d. That it is our wish and desire, and we esteem it our greatest happiness and security to be governed by the laws of Great Britain, and that we will always cheerfully submit to them as far as can be done, consistently with the constitutional liberties and privileges of freeborn Englishmen.

3d. That the late Acts of Parliament for imposing taxes for the purpose of raising a revenue in America, are oppressive and arbitrary, calculated to disturb the minds and alienate the affections of the Colonists from the mother country; are replete with ruin to both, and consequently that the authors and promoters of said Acts, or of such doctrines of the right of taxing America being in the Parliament of Great Britain, are, and should be deemed enemies to our King and happy Constitution.

4th. That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the Act of Parliament, for shutting up the port of Boston, is unconstitutional, injurious in its principles to the general cause of American freedom, particularly oppressive to the inhabitants of that town, and that, therefore, the people of Boston are considered by us as suffering in the general cause of America.

5th. That unanimity and firmness in the Colonies are the most effectual means to relieve our suffering brethren at Boston, to avert the dangers justly to be apprehended from that alarming Act, commonly styled the Boston Port Bill, and to secure the invaded rights and privileges of America.

6th. That it is our opinion, that an agreement between the Colonies not to purchase or use any articles imported from Great Britain or from the East Indies, under such restrictions as may be agreed upon by the general Congress hereafter to be appointed by the Colonies, would be of service in procuring a repeal of those Acts.

7th. That we will most cheerfully join our brethren of the other counties in this Province; in promoting an union of the Colonies, by forming a general Congress of Deputies to be sent from each of the Colonies; and do now declare ourselves ready to send a Committee to meet with those from the other counties at such time and place as by them may be agreed upon in order, to elect proper persons to represent this Province in the said Congress.

8th. That it is the request of this meeting that the County Committees when met for the purposes aforesaid, do take into their serious consideration the propriety of setting on foot a subscription for the benefit of the sufferers at Boston, under the Boston Port Bill, above mentioned, and the money arising from such subscription to be laid out as the Committees so met shall think will best answer the ends proposed.

9th. That we will faithfully adhere to such regulations and restrictions as shall be by the members of said Congress be agreed upon, and judged most expedient for avoiding the calamities, and procuring the benefits, intended in the foregoing resolves.

10th. It is our request that the Committee hereafter named, do correspond and consult with such other Committees as shall be appointed by the other counties in this Province, and particularly that they meet with the said County Committee, in order to elect and appoint Deputies to represent this Province in a general Congress.

11th. We do hereby desire the following gentlemen to accept of that important trust, and accordingly do appoint them our Committee for the purposes aforesaid: Jacob Ford, William Windes, Abraham Ogden, William De Hart, Samuel Tuthill, Jonathan Stiles, John Carle, Philip V. Cortland, and Samuel Ogden, Esquires.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK.
Huntington, (on Long Island,) June 27, 1774.

As the opinion of every part of this Colony is requisite to form a general idea of the dispositions of the people, I think it of some advantage to the cause, that the earliest intelligence should be communicated, have therefore enclosed the Resolves of this town, copied verbatim from the original now in my hands, signed by Mr. Israel Wood, President, chosen Moderator.

The profound attention of the people, on the business of the day being opened, and the unanimity that prevailed in the passing of these Resolves, indicate a serious attachment to the cause, and a firmness of resolution to support it; for I am credibly informed that there never was so numerous a meeting, and not a dissenting voice or hand to every single Resolve. Tuesday next is the day appointed for holding a General Committee of the county, at the County Hall, to open a correspondence with the New-York Committee, &c.

HUNTINGTON, (SUFFOLK CO., NEW-YORK) RESOLUTIONS,

At a General Town Meeting, on the 21st day of June, 1774, the Inhabitants of Huntington came into the following Resolutions:

1st. That every freeman's property is absolutely his own, and that no man has a right to take it from him without his consent, expressed either by himself or his Representative.

2d. That, therefore, all taxes and duties imposed on his Majesty's subjects in the American Colonies by the authority of Parliament, are wholly unconstitutional, and a plain violation of the most essential rights of British subjects.

3d. That the Act of Parliament lately passed for shutting up the port of Boston, or any other means or device, under colour or pretext of law, to compel them, or any other of his Majesty's American subjects, to submit to Parliamentary taxations, are subversive of their just and constitutional liberty.

4th. That we are of opinion that our brethren of Boston are now suffering in the common cause of British America.

5th. That, therefore, it is the indispensable duty of all the Colonies upon this Continent to unite in some effectual measures for the repeal of the said Act for shutting up the port of Boston, and every other Act of Parliament whereby they are taxed for raising a revenue.

6th. That it is the opinion of this meeting, the most effectual means for obtaining a speedy repeal of the said Act's will be to break off all commercial intercourse with Great Britain, Ireland, and the English West India Colonies.

7th. And we hereby declare ourselves ready to enter into these or such other measures as shall be agreed upon by a general Congress of all the Colonies; and we do recommend to the general Congress to take such measures as shall be most effectual to prevent such goods as are at present in America, from being raised to an extravagant price.

And, lastly, We do choose and appoint Colonel Platt Conkling, John Sloss Hobart, Esq., and Mr. Thomas Wickes, for a Committee for this town, to act in conjunction with the Committees of the other towns in the county as a General Committee for the county, to correspond with the Committee of New-York. Signed, ISRAEL WOOD, President.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM CAPTAIN JOHN CONOLLY TO A GENTLEMAN IN PHILADELPHIA.

Fort Pitt, June 27, 1774.

The inhabitants in general are fled from this place, and the country is in great confusion. I understand a party of Shawanese warriors were about to set out to annoy our settlements towards Red Stone, and I have detached one hundred active militia, under the command of good officers, to fall in with them if possible, and expect to hear of a skirmish between them every hour. I have sent down the appraisment of the King's boats, which I was obliged to tear up in the hurry to lash the pickets. You will observe the necessity of keeping some of the Royal Irish here, in order to protect so valuable a part of his Majesty's property.

PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL

At a Council held at Philadelphia, on Monday, 27th of June, 1774, Present: The Honourable John Penn, Esquire, Governor, William Logan, James Tilghman, Richard Peters, Andrew Allen, Benjamin Chew, Edward Shippen, Jun., Thomas Cadwallader, Esquires.

The Governour laid before the Board several Letters he received by different expresses from Westmoreland, all informing him of sundry murders committed on the frontiers of this Province by the Indians, and representing the great distress and confusion of the inhabitants of that country from the apprehensions of an Indian war; which being read and duly considered, it was the opinion and advice of the Board, that writs be issued for convening the Assembly on the 18th July next, which was done accordingly.

That a letter he wrote by the Governour to Sir William Johnson, acquainting him with the intelligence received of these hostile transactions and troubles, and to request his interposition with the Six Nations to use their influence and endeavours with the Shawanese and Delawares to prevent further hostilities on their part, and to assure them of the sincere intentions of this Government to continue their pacific dispositions towards all our Indian brethren. That a Letter he wrote to Lord Dunmore, on this subject, to complain of Dr. Conolly's oppressive and tyrannical conduct at Pittsburgh, and the dangerous tendency his military operations, &c., have to involve the Colonies in a general Indian war. That a letter he wrote to Captain St. Clair, advising him of the above measures; that the Governour approves of what has been done by him, and the inhabitants, for preventing the desertion of the people, and requesting him to use his endeavours to encourage the people to stand their ground; and Mr. Tilghman, Mr. Allen, and Mr. Shippen, are appointed a Committee to prepare draughts of the said letter.

It appearing, by the letters received, that the people in Westmoreland were in great necessity of ammunition, the Board advised the Governour to order a further supply immediately to be sent to them.

Mr. Tilghman and Mr. Allen laid before the Board a Report of their proceedings in Virginia, pursuant to the commission and instructions of the 7th of May last, given to them to treat with the Earl of Dunmore, Governour of that Province, concerning the several matters therein contained, together with copies of their several letters to his Lordship, and his original letters to them, which passed in the course of their negotiation at Williamsburg; all which were ordered to be entered on the minutes of Council, and follow in these words, viz:

The Report of James Tilghman and Andrew Allen, Commissioners appointed by the Honourable John Penn, Esquire, Governour of Pennsylvania, to treat with the Right Honourable the Earl of Dunmore, Governour of Virginia, on sundry public matters mentioned in the commission, and the Governour's instructions, bearing equal date therewith.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONOUR: In pursuance of your Honour's commission, and your instructions attending it, we sat out on our journey on Thursday the 12th of May, 1774, and on Thursday, the 19th, we arrived at Williams- burg and went to Lord Dunmore's. He was not then at home. We waited on him next morning to pay our respects, and to know when it would be agreeable to him to have our business laid before him. Saturday morning at ten o'clock was appointed to wait upon him on the occasion. We met him at his house, and informed him our business was to apply to him to join the Proprietaries of Pennsylvania in a petition to the Crown to appoint Commissioners to settle and run the lines of Pennsylvania to the westward, and in the mean time to agree with his Lordship upon some line of jurisdiction to remedy the inconveniences of the present clashing jurisdictions between Virginia and Pennsylvania, and to prevent them for the future. To the first he readily agreed, and said he had already written to Lord Dartmouth on the subject, pointing out the necessity of settling the boundaries, but he informed us that the Colony of Virginia would not bear any part of the expense. As to the other point, his Lordship answered that he should be glad if our propositions, relating to a line of jurisdiction, were stated in writing, that he might be the better able to consider them and give us an answer, and desired to have a sight of any draughts or papers we had which might illustrate the matter. This request we promised to comply with as soon as possible, and on Monday the 23d, at ten o'clock, we sent our written proposals, copies of which, and of the several other letters which passed from us to Lord Dunmore in the course of the negotiation, as also his original letters to us, are hereunto annexed, numbered in proper order, and to which we beg leave to refer. and request that they may be taken as part of our Report.

We have the honour to be, with great regard, your Honour's most obedient humble servants,

JAMES TILGHMAN,
ANDREW ALLEN.

To the Honourable John Penn, Esq.
Philadelphia, June 17, 1774.

JAMES TILGHMAN AND ANDREW ALLEN TO LORD DUNMORE,
No. 1.

Williamsburg, May 23, 1774.

MY LORD: In compliance with your Lordship's request we are now to state in writing our proposal of a line or lines, to ascertain, for the present, the jurisdictions of the Colonies of Virginia and Pennsylvania. And we would beg leave first to observe, that by the terms of the Royal grant, the Province of Pennsylvania is to extend five degrees of longitude from its eastern boundaries, which are the river Delaware and the twelve mile circle of New-Castle. And we do presume, that all the settlements to the westward, under grants from Pennsylvania, are within that extent. But in order to ascertain that matter, and to prevent for the future such disagreeable differences and disquiets as have of late unhappily subsisted between those Colonies by the clashing of their jurisdictions, we would propose that as accurate a survey as may serve the present purpose, be, with all convenient speed, taken by Surveyors to be appointed by the Governments of Virginia and Pennsylvania, of the courses of the river Delaware, from the mouth of Christina Creek, or near it, where the line run between Maryland and Pennsylvania, by Messrs. Mason and Dixon, intersects the said river, to that part of the said river which lies in the latitude of Fort Pitt, and as much further as may be needful for the present purpose. That the line of Dixon and Mason be continued to the end of five degrees of longitude from the river Delaware, and from the end of the said five degrees, a line or lines corresponding to the courses of the Delaware, be run to the river Ohio, as nearly as may be, at the distance of five degrees from the said river Delaware in every part. And that the said line of Dixon and Mason, continued from the western extent of Maryland to the end of five degrees of longitude from the Delaware and the said line or lines, similar to the courses of the Delaware, be taken, deemed and reputed to be lines of jurisdiction between the Colonies of Virginia and Pennsylvania, until the boundaries of Pennsylvania can be settled, and run, and marked by Royal authority for which purpose your Lordship has been pleased to consent to a joint application with the Proprietaries of Pennsylvania to the Crown. That these lines of jurisdiction shall be established for the good purpose only of quieting the disturbances which at present subsist between the two Colonies, without any prejudice to the Crown, or the Proprietors of Pennsylvania, to the southward of the said line of Dixon and Mason, continued as far as the fortieth degree of north latitude, (all which land the Proprietaries of Pennsylvania claim,) until the limits of Pennsylvania can be finally settled as aforesaid.

And we would further propose to your Lordship, that until the said lines of jurisdiction can be run, the jurisdiction of Virginia be suspended at Fort Pitt and the country thereabouts, as the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania was unquestionably first extended and executed in that part of the country, as we think we can clearly satisfy your Lordship.

If these proposals, or the maps we send with them, should not be sufficiently clear and explicit, we shall be ready at any time to attend your Lordship in order to explain.

We have the honour to be your Lordship's most obedient and most humble servants,

JAMES TILGHMAN,
ANDREW ALLEN.

To his Excellency the Right Honourable the Earl of Dunmore, Governour and Commander-in-chief of the Colony and Dominion of Virginia.

LORD DUNMORE TO JAMES TILGHMAN AND ANDREW ALLEN.
No. 2.

Williamsburg, 24th May, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: Having considered your proposals of a boundary line or lines, to ascertain, for the present, the jurisdiction of the Colonies of Virginia and Pennsylvania, and the terms of the Royal grant, I am of opinion that the latter cannot admit of the construction which you give to them, or that it could possibly be the intent of the Crown that the western bounds of your Province should have the very inconvenient, and so difficult to be ascertained shape, as it would have, if, as you say, it were to correspond with the course of the river Delaware; but I think, from the words of the grant, rather that your western boundary should be determined by a meridian line at five degrees of longitude from the river Delaware, to be computed from that point upon it which is at the extent of the forty-second degree of latitude and the line drawn from that point to the aforesaid meridian, is your north bounds; and your south bounds should be a straight line westward from the circle drawn at twelve miles distance from New-Castle, northward and westward unto the beginning of the fortieth degree of latitude, until that straight line westward intersect the meridian above mentioned, which is the limits of longitude mentioned in the Royal grant, and no other, as it appears to me.

Conformably to this, I am willing to agree to a temporary line, that may serve to ascertain the jurisdiction of both Colonies, and quiet the disturbances which subsist, and prevent them in future; but if you are already determined not to depart from the proposals now given in to me, I must inform you that it will be in vain to treat any further upon the subject, as it would be utterly impossible for me, in compliance with my duty, to suspend the jurisdiction of Virginia at Fort Pitt, and the country thereabouts, which you make yourselves, following your own construction of the Royal grant, to be only five or six miles within your limits; and if that should not, but the other which I have given, be the true construction, then Fort Pitt, by the river Delaware running very much eastwardly towards your northern bounds, will probably be at least fifty miles without your limits, which would be a concession, I really think, too great for me to make, whether it be or not for you to ask.

I must also inform you, that I am clearly of opinion, that were it possible I could admit your own construction of the Royal grant, and your own surveys and observations, your ascertaining your claim under the former has been done too late, and your ascertaining your boundary by the latter has consequently been to no purpose; for if the lands described by the Royal grant, at the time of the grant being passed, were clearly within the undoubted limits of his Majesty's Dominions, which is also a question, yet still Fort Pitt, and the country thereabouts, for want of the Proprietors of Pennsylvania supporting their claim, and ascertaining their boundary in due time, was suffered to be claimed and possessed by an enemy, from whom it was conquered by his Majesty's arms, and by whom it was confirmed to his Majesty in a treaty; consequently, therefore, no legal title, as it appears to me, can be set up to any of that territory, but under a grant of the Crown, subsequent to such possession, conquest, &c.

As to your idea of the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania having been first extended and exercised in that part of the country: it was indeed the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania having been extended and exercised, not only there where you have extended your claims, but even to a hundred miles beyond any that you have yet pretended to, that has given occasion to the inhabitants over whom your jurisdiction was exercised, and who think themselves, according to the general sense of Virginia, subject to the jurisdiction only of the latter, to apply to this Government for protection and redress, which this Government, in duty, could not refuse them, as far as its legal powers extend. But I am so far from thinking, as you suggest, that the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania having been first extended and exercised in that country, is a reason that should induce the Government of Virginia to suspend its jurisdiction there, that in my opinion the latter is entitled to some apology from the former for attempting a measure without the participation that ought to have the sanction of both, as his Majesty had not given his to it.

I mention not these circumstances for the purpose of engaging in a dispute with the Proprietors of Pennsylvania, or of throwing obstacles in the way of an accommodation which I am sensible it is the interest of both Colonies, and the duty of the Governours of them, to facilitate; but with the design of making it appear that I have not, upon very slight grounds, rejected proposals for settling the disputes and differences subsisting between the two Colonies, and which require no less titan that every thing which is contended for (depending on such a variety of contingencies) on the part of Pennsylvania, should be given up on the part of Virginia immediately.

I cannot but think that you entertain an erroneous opinion of the boundaries of your Province, as described in the Royal grants, but even if not, that your proposals are unreasonable, and that the sincerity of your desire to settle all disputes between Pennsylvania and Virginia would appear less doubtful, if you had observed in your proposals an equitable regard to the pretensions of this Government, especially as nothing thereby can prejudice the legal title of your Government: therefore, unless you are authorized to agree to a plan that favours as much the sentiments of this, as of your own Government, I see no accommodation that can be entered into previous to his Majesty's decision, which I shall not fail to join my application for the obtaining as soon as possible.

I am, gentlemen, your most obedient humble servant,

DUNMORE.

James Tilghman and Andrew Allen, Esquires.

JAMES TILGHMAN AND ANDREW ALLEN TO LORD DUNMORE.

No. 3.

Williamsburg, May 25, 1774.

MY LORD: We are honoured with your Lordship's answer of yesterday, to our proposals of a boundary line or lines, to ascertain, for the present, the jurisdiction between the Colonies of Virginia and Pennsylvania, to which your Lordship will be pleased to indulge us in a reply which we are induced to make, from a persuasion that if we can be so happy as to support the principles upon which we founded our proposals, or to point out just objections to your Lordship's reasoning, we may still come to such an understanding as may answer the good purposes for which we waited on your Lordship. We thought the western boundary of Pennsylvania, when clearly understood, ought to be one of the lines of jurisdiction. Your Lordship is of the same sentiment, by offering to make what you conceive to be our western bounds, the line of jurisdiction, but you are pleased to differ with us in the construction of the grant. If we have a just apprehension of your Lordship's meaning, you suppose that a meridian line drawn from the end of five degrees of longitude from Delaware, at the beginning of the forty-third degree of latitude, ought to determine the western boundary of Pennsylvania. We are at a loss to conceive from what expression of the Charter your Lordship can collect that the western boundary of Pennsylvania should be a meridian line, or why that meridian should be drawn rather from the north than the south boundary of the Province. The Charter expresses that the Province shall extend five degrees of longitude from its eastern boundary. The eastern boundary is the Delaware in general; but if the western bounds are to be determined by a meridian line, the Province will extend in some parts more, and in others less than five degrees of longitude from its eastern boundary. This we conceive to be against the terms of the grant, which we are of opinion cannot be satisfied by any other than a line or lines corresponding with the courses of the Delaware, and this is the only construction we have ever heard made of that part of the Charter.

Your Lordship, after expressing a doubt, whether that part of the country now in dispute was within the King of England's Dominions, at the time of making the Pennsylvania grant, is pleased to contend "That, though it were possible for you to admit our construction of the Royal grant we contend for, should be within the limits of Pennsylvania, according to such construction, yet Fort Pitt, and the country thereabouts, for want of the Proprietors of Pennsylvania supporting their claim, and ascertaining their boundaries in due time, was suffered to be claimed and possessed by an enemy, from whom it was conquered by his Majesty's arms, and by whom it was confirmed to his Majesty, in a treaty, and consequently, that no legal title can be set up to any of that territory, but under the grant of the Crown, subsequent to such possession, conquest, &c."

Not to enter in a discussion of the facts of claim and possession by an enemy, and conquest by his Majesty's arms, and the enemy's confirmation, or the effect of them upon the right of his Majesty's subjects, which we think needless, we shall only observe, that your Lordship's argument militates equally against Virginia, as against Pennsylvania, since there has been no new grant that we know of subsequent to such possession, conquest, &c.; and that therefore, in our opinion, your Lordship ought not upon your own principles, to have extended the jurisdiction of Virginia to Fort Pitt, and the country thereabouts. Your Lordship seems to allow that there was a prior exercise of jurisdiction on the side of Pennsylvania, and you urge this as a reason of your interposition, and are pleased to think that Virginia is entitled to an apology from the Government of Pennsylvania for thus exercising a jurisdiction, without the sanction of the Crown's participation. Were it undeniably true, that the Government of Pennsylvania had knowingly extended their jurisdiction beyond the limits of the Charter, we should be far from vindicating such a conduct. And we are certain, that if any of our officers have acted officially, beyond the known limits of the Province, they will be censured, rather than supported, by the Government. But, assured as we are, that Fort Pitt must be within our Charter limits, we cannot be induced to think that our Government were improper in exercising their jurisdiction there; and we are inclined to be of opinion, that if your Lordship, when an application was first made to you, to take that place under the Government of Virginia, had thought fit to have given the least intimation of your designs to the Governour of Pennsylvania, much of the disagreeable consequence which has followed, would probably have been prevented.

We are really concerned, to find that our conceptions of the extent of Pennsylvania are so very different, but we are not without hope, that your Lordship will, upon reconsidering the subject, be of opinion that your construction is liable to the objections we have made. And, although we are satisfied that we shall be supported in ours, yet we are not so tenacious of our first proposals, as to adhere strictly to them, while we have any hopes that a reasonable departure from them will produce so desirable an effect as the settlement of harmony and peace between the two Colonies. And for that valuable purpose, we shall be willing to recede so far from our Charter bounds, as to make the river Monongahela, front the line of Dixon and Mason downward, the western boundary of jurisdictional, which would at once settle our present disputes, without the great trouble and expense of running lines, or the inconvenience of keeping the jurisdictions in suspense. This we assure your Lordship, is the farthest we can go in point of concession, and if your Lordship is determined to adhere to your proposal of a meridian line, or indeed to insist upon retaining the jurisdiction of Fort Pitt, or the lands to the eastward of the Monongahela, we can treat no farther. But, we cannot quit the subject, without expressing our concern that your Lordship should entertain a doubt of the sincerity of our desire to settle all disputes between Virginia and Pennsylvania, as we are not conscious of having done any thing that could give your Lordship so unfavourable an impression. And we beg leave to assure your Lordship, that nothing less than a most sincere wish and desire to restore peace and harmony, and to settle our disputes, with a due regard to the just pretensions of both Colonies, could have actuated our Government to send us hither, or could have induced us to undertake a journey of such length, and so very inconvenient to us. We think the proposals we have made, contain the most reasonable concessions, and it will give us real concern, should your Lordship's ideas be so different from ours, that the desired accommodation cannot be effected. We thank your Lordship for your ready consent to join our Proprietors in an application to the Crown to settle our bounds, and have the honour to be, with great regard, your Lordship's most obedient, and most humble servants,

JAMES TILGMAN,
ANDREW ALLEN.

His Excellency Lord Dunmore.

LORD DUNMORE TO JAMES TILGHMAN AND ANDREW ALLEN.

No. 4.

Williamsburg, May 26, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: I perceive you have fallen into the error, that from my having alleged the reasons which induced me to think your first proposal improper for me to comply with, I would enter into a discussion at length, of all the points of the claim of the Proprietors of Pennsylvania, which I must assure you, was in no wise my design, nor can I by any means consent to. I must, nevertheless, repeat here, that I think, from the words of your grant, that a meridian line, (which is sufficiently described in my answer to your first proposal,) is the line that should determine your western boundary; and the reason very plain, that this meridian should be drawn rather from the north, than the south, because the grant directs that the survey shall begin at a point on the south part of the boundary, and proceed northward, as far as three and forty degrees of latitude, and it being usual, in like cases, always to proceed, consequently from thence, extend five degrees of longitude; and not return to the south point to draw it from thence, which cannot any way be inferred, no more than it can be supposed that it was inconsiderately intended the grant should extend five degrees of longitude from every part of the river Delaware, which would make a line so difficult if not impossible to trace upon the land.

That you should think the circumstances, which I cannot but be of opinion, must render the parchment boundary of Pennsylvania, whatever it were, insufficient now to determine the limits of the Province, needless to be considered, is a point which must be perfectly indifferent to me, for the reason I have given in the first part of this letter; but your idea is a mistaken one, but leads you to conclude that the same circumstances militate equally against Virginia, as against Pennsylvania; there being no less important a difference than that the one acts for the King, and the other against him. The jurisdiction of Virginia cannot be exercised over any country, but for the immediate benefit, as well as interest of his Majesty, to whom that jurisdiction secures the quitrents, and every advantage which his Majesty had proposed to draw from the granting of his unappropriated lands, but which, I presume, is not meant to be urged in vindication of the encroachments of Pennsylvania. But in the present instance, however, Virginia has interfered only, as you know before, in compliance with the request and formal petition of a numerous body of inhabitants, who, thinking themselves, from the general opinion, settled within the limits of this Government, applied to the authority thereof, to be protected against the usurped jurisdiction of Pennsylvania, which Virginia did not think itself at liberty to refuse but which it granted, nevertheless without the least design of refusing obedience to whatever decision his Majesty may be pleased to make thereupon, the tenor of which attempt, proceeding and determination, make another essential consideration, and which renders, I am inclined to believe, the case of Virginia in this dispute, impossible to be assimilated, as you would endeavour, to that of Pennsylvania.

Your interpretation of my first letter, to infer I have allowed there was a prior exercise of jurisdiction on the side of Pennsylvania, obliges me to recall to your view, the transaction in Governour Dinwiddie's time, and to inform you, if you are ignorant of it, of a requisition from General Gage to this Colony, as that to which, by the public opinion, the territory belonged, to appoint a Magistrate at Fort Pitt, where there then was none, and which Magistrate was accordingly appointed, which, while it proves the prior exercise of jurisdiction to have been, not on the side of Pennsylvania, but on that of Virginia, as these were acts of public notoriety, and undertaken under the authority of public exigence; they prove also, still more the impropriety of Pennsylvania's having exercised their jurisdiction at all, in that district, without other authority than their own opinion, and motive than their private advantage, and the title still stronger of this Government to an apology for it.

You proceed to intimate that you are certain if any of your officers have acted officially beyond the known limits of the Province, they will be censured, rather than supported; I really think I shall be justified in questioning this assertion; for, although much pains, as is pretended, have been taken to ascertain your boundary, it would seem very strange; I think impossible, that even this very boundary is immediately unknowingly exceeded, I am warranted to say, by near a hundred miles, and yet, I have not heard of the dispensation, even of that gentle punishment you mention, though we know of one of your officers being supported and justified, in terms not very decent, in a violent act, that has been the cause of whatever disturbances or disputes subsist between the two Colonies. Nor can I think, that if I had, upon application first made to me to take the country in dispute, under the Government of Virginia, intimated my design to the Governour of Pennsylvania, (which I rather believe you mention by way of recrimination) it would have had the effect you say, for there is surely as great a necessity for preventing all disagreeable consequences now, as there was then, and the pretensions of both parties were, I suppose, the same then, as now. And what were your proposals to reconcile them? Why in your first you propose that every thing in dispute shall be given unto Pennsylvania And in your second that Virginia shall be content, without having any thing given up to it - at least, I can find nothing given up by your proposal of the Monongahela, &c. What else therefore, can I conclude from both the proposals, but that no real intention is meant to avoid the great and reciprocal inconveniences of a doubtful boundary, which otherwise would, I conceive, as it was not intended to be final, have been in a manner that could justify this Government, in general with the people, for any departure from the conceived opinion of the limits of the Colony; and myself, in particular with his Majesty, for entering into any agreement that may eventually affect his fight.

I join with you in concern that we should differ so widely in conception of the extent of Pennsylvania, as it affects Virginia, but must confess that your objections have not altered my opinion of the construction of your grant, notwithstanding you are so confident of being supported in yours. However, I am less anxious about the issue of these different opinions, than I am about the effects of them, in the mean time. Your proposals amounting in reality to nothing, could not possibly be complied with, and your resolution, with respect to Fort Pitt, (the jurisdiction over which place, I must tell you, at all events, will not be relinquished by this Government, without his Majesty's orders) puts an entire stop to further treaty, and makes me sincerely lament that you have put it out of my power to contribute to re-establish the peace and harmony of both Colonies, and to evince my good intentions as well towards the one, as the other.

I am, gentlemen, your most obedient and humble servant,
DUNMORE.
James Tilghman and Andrew Allen, Esquires.

JAMES TILGHMAN AND ANDREW ALLEN TO LORD DUNMORE,
No. 5.

Williamsburg, May 27, 1774.

MY LORD: Since your Lordship is determined, as you are pleased to say, at all events, not to relinquish your jurisdiction over Fort Pitt, a period is put to our treaty; and we can only, with your Lordship, lament the continuance of those reciprocal inconveniences of clashing and disputed jurisdictions, which we are conscious of having done every thing that could be reasonably expected of us to prevent. And we have only to add our thanks for the polite attention your Lordship has been pleased to show us, and the despatch you have given to our business. We intend to leave town to-morrow, but before our departure, we shall do ourselves the honour to wait on your Lordship, for your commands to the northward, where we shall be ready to render your Lordship any service in our power.

We have the honour to be, with great regard, your Lordship's most obedient and most humble servants,

JAMES TILGHMAN,
ANDREW ALLEN.

His Excellency the Earl of Dunmore.

Memorandum, Tuesday, June 28, 1774.

The Committee appointed to draw up the Letters, agreed on yesterday, laid their draughts before the Governour, which being approved by him, were fairly transcribed, and ordered to be despatched without delay. The said Letters follow in these words, viz:

Philadelphia, June 28, 1774.

SIR: By the repeated accounts which I am daily receiving from Pittsburgh, and other parts of our western frontier, there seems little room to doubt but the mutual hostilities which have unhappily taken place between some of the inhabitants of Virginia, and the Western Indians, particularly the Shawanese, will end in a general war, unless some prudent measures are speedily taken to prevent it.

The occasion of this unfortunate breach, as well as the particulars of the murders which have been committed on both sides, have no doubt been communicated to you by the deputy agent for Indian affairs at Pittsburgh. It will, therefore, be only necessary for me to inform you in general, that a great part of the settlers in our back country have fled from their habitations, and that the panic is daily increasing to such a degree that there is just reason to apprehend a total desertion of that country.

I have been induced, from a representation of the distresses of these people, to issue writs to call our Assembly, to meet at Philadelphia, on the 15th of next month, to enable me to afford them the necessary relief.

As it is of the utmost consequence that this affair should be properly represented to the Six Nations, and that they should, if possible, be induced to become mediators between us and the Shawanese and the Delawares, I must request you will take such measures as you shall think most proper to satisfy them that any injuries which the Shawanese may have received, and may consider as a provocation for the hostilities committed on their part, were by no means done by the orders or consent of this Government, but that on the contrary, we have been ever sincerely disposed to preserve peace and friendship with them, and are now very willing, notwithstanding what has happened, to listen to terms of accommodation, and to renew our friendship, and forget every thing that is past. Your interposition and influence in this matter may very possibly have the most salutary effects.

If a rupture can be prevented it appears to me it must be through the Six Nations; however, I submit the matter entirely to your consideration. And am, sir, with great regard, your most obedient and humble servant,

JOHN PENN.

Sir William Johnson, Baronet.

GOVERNOUR PENN TO LORD DUNMORE,

Philadelphia, June 28, 1774.

MY LORD: I am very unhappy to find myself under the necessity of writing to your Lordship on so disagreeable a subject as an Indian war, which is now like to become general, unless the Governments of Virginia and Pennsylvania, by some prudent and timely interposition, may happily prevent the further progress of hostilities, which have unhappily taken place. I have taken the best measures in my power to keep the settlements from breaking up, and have called the Assembly upon the occasion, in order that every proper step may be taken, either to compose the differences between his Majesty's subjects and the Indians, or to defend the frontiers, if pacific measures should fail.

I have so many complaints of the behaviour of Doctor Conolly, that I am obliged to wish your Lordship to make some inquiry into his conduct, which, if my information be true, is extremely oppressive and tyrannical, with respect to our people; and what is still worse, there is great reason to fear his military operations may have a dangerous tendency to involve the Colonies in general in an Indian war. He seizes upon the property of the people, without reserve, and treats the persons of our Magistrates with the utmost insolence and disrespect, and with menaces not only of imprisoning them, but even of pulling down their houses, and it is said, he has sent out, or is to send out, parties against the Indians, with orders to destroy all they meet with, whether friend or foe. These matters may be exaggerated, but I cannot doubt but that Mr. Conolly has afforded some grounds for these complaints; and although your Lordship has been pleased to claim the jurisdiction of Pittsburgh, and the country thereabouts, I would fain hope that you would not encourage Mr. Conolly in such exorbitances and outrages as are laid to his charge.

I have the honour to be your Lordship's most obedient humble servant,

JOHN PENN,

To the Right Honourable the Earl of Dunmore, Governour and Commander-in-chief of his Majesty's Province of Virginia.

GOVERNOUR PENN TO ARTHUR ST. CLAIR.

Philadelphia, June 28, 1774.

SIR: The accounts which you have transmitted of the temper of the Indians, and the murders they have already perpetrated, are truly alarming, and give every reason to apprehend that we shall not long be exempt from the calamities of a savage war. The desertion of that country in consequence of the panic which has seized the inhabitants, on this occasion, must be attended with the most mischievous effects, and prove ruinous to the immediate sufferers, and distressing to the Province in general. Every measure, therefore, should be attempted to stop the progress of this evil, and to induce those who have already gone off, to return to their habitations; and, I must rely on you to exert all your prudence and activity for this purpose. The steps which have been already taken appear to me very proper, and I have no doubt, but that you will continue your endeavours to restore the drooping spirits of the people, and inspire them with a resolution to stand their ground, at least till they are satisfied of the intentions of the Indians towards this Province. You may assure them that Government sensibly feels the distresses of their situation - that it will be attentive to their interests, and afford them every assistance and protection in its power to give. With this disposition, I have issued writs for convening the Assembly, on the 18th of next month; and shall immediately on their meeting, lay this matter before them, and have reason to expect that such measures will be adopted as may effectually enable the Government to extend to them a relief, adequate to its wishes, and their wants. In the mean time I shall give orders for such further supply of ammunition to be sent up as will be sufficient for the present occasion.

I have wrote to Sir William Johnson, informing him of the intelligence we had received of these transactions, and requesting his interposition with the Six Nations, to use their influence with the Shawanese and Delawares, to prevent further hostilities on their part, and to assure them of the sincere intentions of this Government to continue their pacific disposition towards all our Indian brethren. I have also wrote to Lord Dunmore, complaining of Conolly's outrageous and tyrannical behavior at Pittsburgh, and representing the dangerous tendency his military operations may have to involve the Colonies in a general Indian war. I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

JOHN PENN.

To Arthur St. Clair, Esquire, at Ligonier, in Westmoreland County.

P.S. My Commissioners who attended Lord Dunmore, could not induce him to come into any reasonable temporary line of jurisdiction, and therefore things must remain in the disagreeable situation of interfering jurisdictions. In this unhappy situation I am satisfied, you and the other Magistrates will act a prudent part. It is impossible in such a case to give particular directions. With respect to the keeping up the rangers you have raised for the security of the inhabitants, I shall recommend it to the Assembly to defray the expense that shall accrue in that necessary measure; and I cannot have the least doubt, that they will approve of what has been done on this occasion, as also the continuance of the same forces, until their sentiments can be known.

CORRESPONDENCE LAID BEFORE THE COUNCIL.

